

1700018463

MORRIS HARVEY COLLEGE

CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA

ANDREW S. THOMAS

MEMORIAL LIBRARY

CALL NUMBER

220.7

G793b

v.3

ACCESSION

1660

DATE DUE

~~JUL 20 '62~~

~~DEC 1 '72~~

DEC 1 '74

LIBRARY

M. H. R.

LIBRARY

OCT 23 '76

GAYLORD

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

THE BIBLICAL ENCYCLOPEDIA

A COLLECTION OF NOTES

EXPLANATORY, HOMILETIC AND ILLUSTRATIVE

FORMING A

COMPLETE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

ESPECIALLY DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF

MINISTERS, BIBLE STUDENTS AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS

By JAMES COMPER GRAY

AND

REV. GEORGE M. ADAMS, D. D.

DISCARD

THE OLD TESTAMENT

VOL. III

CONTAINING ECCLESIASTES TO MALACHI INCLUSIVE.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
F. M. BARTON
706-712 CAXTON BUILDING

220.7
G793L
v.3

Copyrighted 1903
BY
F. M. BARTON

Introduction.

Title. Heb. Koheleth; Gk. Ecclesiastes, which in English is equivalent to "The Preacher." The Hebrew title is from the initial word of the book. Author. Unknown. The author indeed assumes the character of Solomon, but this is evidently a matter of literary form. At the close of the book (xii. 9-12), he seems to lift the mask from his face and shows us who he really is. "Although he has written in a feigned name, and, without asserting it, has so moulded his phrases, at least in the earlier chapters of his work, as to suggest to his readers that he is, if not Solomon himself, at least Solomon's mouthpiece, attributing the garnered results of his experience to one greater than himself, that they may carry the more weight—just as Browning speaks in the name of Rabbi Ben Ezra, for instance, or Fra Lippo Lippi, or Abt Vogler, borrowing what he can of outward circumstance from the age and class to which they belong, and yet really uttering his own thought and emotion through their lips—he now confesses that he is no king of an age long past, but a rabbi, a sage, a teacher, a master, who has both made some proverbs of his own and collected the wise sayings of others who had gone before him, in order that he might carry some little light and comfort to the sorely bested men of his own generation and blood. In short, he has exercised his right as a poet, or 'maker,' to embody the results of his wide and varied experience of life in a dramatic form, but is careful to let us know, before he takes leave of us, that it is a fictitious or dramatic Solomon, and not Solomon himself, to whom we have been listening throughout."—Expos. Bible. This was a very common method at that day and was well understood. The idioms and style of the Hebrew, and the public and social conditions revealed in the book are convincing evidence that the work belongs to a period long after the time of Solomon. Biblical scholars now almost universally agree in this conclusion. Perhaps the most probable date to which the book can be assigned is during the Persian period in the fourth century B. C. Scope and design. "Be godly, and concerning everything else be tranquil."—Luther. "The great design of this book is evidently to show the utter insufficiency of all earthly pursuits and objects, as the chief end of life, to confer solid happiness, and then to draw men off from apparent good to the only real and permanent good—the fear of God and communion with Him. 'Vanity of vanities, all is vanity,' is its first lesson; 'Fear God and keep His commandments,' is its last."—Angus. "As for the design of the book, no one now doubts that it sets before us the search for the summum bonum, the quest of the Chief Good. Its main immediate intention was to deliver the exiled Jews from the misleading ethical theories and habits into which they had fallen, from the sensualism and the scepticism occasioned by their imperfect conception of the Divine ways, by showing them that the true good of life is not to be secured by philosophy, by the pursuit of pleasure, by devotion to traffic or public affairs, by amassing wealth; but that it results from a temperate and thankful enjoyment of the gifts of the Divine bounty, and a cheerful endurance of toil and calamity, combined with a sincere service of God and a steadfast faith in that future life in which all wrongs will be righted and all the problems which now task and afflict us will receive a triumphant solution."—Expos. Bible. "Its subject is the vanity of all that is human and earthly, and by contrast and implication the steadfastness and importance of the unseen. The writer desires, in the first place (virtually, though not expressly), to comfort his countrymen under their present depressed circumstances, to teach them not to set their hopes on earthly success, or to fancy that their own efforts could secure happiness, but to make the best of the present, and to receive with thankfulness the good that God sends or permits. He also urges the avoidance of externalism in religion, and shows wherein true devotion consists. And, in the second place, he warns against despair or reckless license, as though it mattered not what one did, as if there were no higher Power that regarded; he solemnly asserts his faith in an overruling providence, though we cannot trace the reason or course of its working; his conviction that all is ordered for the best; his unswerving faith in the life everlasting and in a future judgment, which shall remedy the seeming anomalies of this present existence. In all the problems of life, in all the disappointments and difficulties that meet our best and noblest efforts, there is nothing to cling to, no anchor on which to rest, but the fear of God and obedience to His commands. Whatever happens, or however things may seem to go contrary to one's wishes and aspirations, amid the outward prosperity of the wicked and the humiliation of the good, he triumphs in the assurance that he knows certainly that it shall be well with them that fear God (ch. viii. 12).”—Pulpit Com.

Synopsis.

(According to Mr. Holden. Adopted by Horne.)

PART I.

THE VANITY OF EARTHLY CONDITIONS, OCCUPATIONS, AND PLEASURES.

- Sect. 1. Vanity of earthly things.....i. 2.
Sect. 2. Labor unprofitable, life transitory
i. 3—11.
Sect. 3. Vanity of laborious study...i. 12—18.
Sect. 4. Luxury and pleasure vanity...ii. 1—11.
Sect. 5. Human learning but vanity
ii. 12—17.
Sect. 6. Human labor vanity.....ii. 18—23.
Sect. 7. Sensual enjoyments empty
ii. 24—26.
Sect. 8. A time for all things.....iii. 1—14.
Sect. 9. Vanity of human pursuits
iii. 15—17.
Sect. 10. Life and death.....iii. 18—22.
Sect. 11. Vanity increased by oppression
iv. 1—3.
Sect. 12. Vanity of prosperity.....iv. 4.
Sect. 13. Vanity of folly.....iv. 5, 6.
Sect. 14. Vanity of covetousness.....iv. 7, 8.
Sect. 15. Dominion and empire vanity
iv. 9—16.
Sect. 16. Divine worship may be vain
v. 1—7.
Sect. 17. Murmuring at injustice vain
v. 8, 9.
Sect. 18. Vanity of riches.....v. 10—20.
Sect. 19. Vanity of avarice.....vi. 1—9.

PART II.

THE NATURE, EXCELLENCE, AND BENEFICIAL EFFECTS OF WISDOM OR RELIGION.

- Sect. 20. What is the chief good...vi. 10—12.
Sect. 21. The praise of character.....vii. 1.
Sect. 22. Benefits of affliction....vii. 2—10.
Sect. 23. The excellence of wisdom
vii. 11—14.
Sect. 24. An objection and the answer
viii. 15—viii. 7.
Sect. 25. Wickedness and wisdom.viii. 8—13.
Sect. 26. An objection and the answer
viii. 14—ix. 1.
Sect. 27. An objection and the answer
ix. 2—x. 17.
Sect. 28. Banefulness of sloth.....x. 18.
Sect. 29. The power of wealth.....x. 19.
Sect. 30. Speaking evil of dignities....x. 20.
Sect. 31. Charity and benevolence.xi. 1—10.
Sect. 32. Early piety.....xii. 1—7.
Sect. 33. The conclusionxii. 8—14.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1—3. (1) Preacher, Heb. koheleth, better, Debater. The Hebrew writer apparently coined the word, because he wanted a substantive which exactly expressed the idea of one who desired to present himself in that character and not as a teacher. He claimed only to be a member, one of many, of the great Ecclesia of those who think.—Cam. Bib. in Jerusalem, the description “king in Jerusalem” is in apposition with “the Preacher” not with “David.” It is noticeable that the name of Solomon is not mentioned as it is in the titles of the other two books ascribed to him (Prov. i. 1; Song of Sol. i. 1). (2) Vanity, Heb. hebel, found thirty-nine times in this book. That wh. fails to satisfy. vanity of vanities,^a Heb. idiom for the very highest degree of vanity. Comp. “holy of holies,” “song of songs,” all, all sorts, every earthly thing. (3) profit,^b The word for “profit,” not meeting us elsewhere in the Hebrew of the O. T., occurs ten times in Ecclesiastes. Its strict meaning is “that which remains,”—the surplus, if any, of the balance-sheet of life. It was, probably, one of the words which the commerce of the Jews, after the Captivity, had brought into common use. under the sun,^c just as we speak of this “sublunary world,” so “under the sun” is the characteristic designation of the earth throughout this Book.

Vanity (vs. 2).—I. This estimate was made by a competent judge. II. Given in unqualified terms. III. Abundantly endorsed by the historical Scripture. IV. Assented to by all who have finished their course.—Stems and Twigs.

Worldly pleasure unsatisfying.—Lord Chesterfield, at the close of his life, confessed that his life had been as joyless as it had been selfish and hollow. “I have recently read Solomon with a kind of sympathetic feeling. I have been as wicked and as vain, though not as wise as he; but now I am old enough to feel the truth of his reflection, ‘All is vanity and vexation of spirit.’” Repartees sparkled on his dying lips, but all was dreary within, all was darkness ahead. The fame for which he lived expired before himself: and now truth declines to write his epitaph, and virtue has no garlands for his grave.—J. Hamilton. Goethe, the greatest of German poets, whose long life was one success, said: “They have called me a child of fortune, nor have I any wish to complain of the course of my life. Yet it has been nothing but labor and sorrow; and I may truly say, that in seventy-five years I have not had four weeks of true comfort. It was the constant rolling of a stone that was always to be lifted anew.” One cannot read the posthumous memoirs of Chateaubriand, without being struck with the illusive nature of worldly honors and pleasures. Contemporary applause was not wanting to cheer the craving spirit of this scholar and statesman. The author of the “Genius of Christianity” and the ambassador of France at the Court of London could not complain that honor was denied him. He says, “I know not in history a reputation that would tempt me: and were it necessary to stoop to pick up from my feet and for my own advantage the greatest glory the world could offer, I would not give myself the trouble.”—Anec. Illus. of O. T.

4—7. (4) generation, lit. a generation goeth, and a generation cometh: Man is only a pilgrim on earth; he soon passes away, and his place is occupied by others. earth . . ever,^a it is not absolutely permanent, but its continuance contrasts with the changing races on it. (5) sun, etc., the sun to the Hebrew seemed to be constantly changing and to labor without any results. Abraham in the Rabbinic legend is represented as looking upon the setting sun and saying, “The God whom I worship must be a God that does not set.” hasteth, Heb. panteth.^b The author evidently had no idea of the circular form and movement of the earth. (6) whirl-eth,^c etc., the whole verse gains in poetic emphasis by a more literal rendering, “It goeth to the south, and it circlith to the north, circling, circling goeth the wind, and on its circlings returneth the wind.” The iteration and order of the words seem to breathe the languor of one who was weary with watching the endless and yet monotonous changes.—Cam. Bib. circuits, or veerings. The word is not used in the modern

^a “The theme of Ecclesiastes is the vanity of all earthly things a part from God.” — Wordsworth.

^b From a word signifying to hang over, overflow, remain over and above.

^c “He writes with this design, that we may not dote upon this life, wh. is under the sun, but may earnestly desire that life wh. is not blighted by that vanity wh. is under the sun, but is enlightened by that truth wh. came from Him who made the sun”—St. Augustine. Ps. xxxix. 5, 6, 11, lxxi. 9, cxliv. 4; Ro. viii. 20, 21.

“The men who place spiritual principles deep in the heart of humanity have attained the greatest sovereignty beneath the Supreme Majesty. To gain a soul is to enhance the glory of our royal diadem.” — Hom. Com.

“This speech of Solomon’s is the speech of every soul, when being spoiled of those things which are here, she goeth to that life which is hoped for.” — Gregory Nyssenus.

^a Ps. civ. 5, cxix. 90.

^b Comp. Ps. xix. 5.

“The metaphor applies rather to the rising sun, which seems laboriously to mount up to the meridian, than to the setting sun.” — Fausset.

^c The N. and S. winds are the two prevailing winds in Palestine and Egypt.

^d "Not only what is most stable in creation, as the earth, and what is most glorious, as the sun, but also what seems to be most free, viz., the wind and the rivers, are bound by the same chain of lifeless continuity." — Wordsworth.

"Our eye cannot trace or follow the wandering courses of the wind,—nor can we trace the ways of God through human history." — Hom. Com.

Wild "as winds that sweep the deserts." — Dryden. "As the winds, raging and impetuous." — Duffey. "As winds and fighting seas." — Thomson.

• "Man cannot express all the things in the world which undergo this ceaseless, changeless cycle of vicissitudes." — Fausset.

^f "The abundance of phenomena, wh. presses on eye, ear, and the remaining senses, is endless." — Hitzig. Pr. xxvii. 20.

^g "All things under the sun are only reproductions or modifications of things which already exist, and were created at the beginning." — Wordsworth.

^h Elohim is the God of nature, Jehovah the God of the covenant.

"Do you feel that you have lost your way in life? Then God himself will show you your way. Are you utterly helpless, worn out, body and soul? Then God's eternal scientific sense. (7) not full, bec. the waters are drawn up as clouds, and sent back to refresh the earth.^d

The stability of nature.—I. As it appears to our senses. II. As it appeals to our reason. The stability of all things about and above us: 1. Gives us time to study the nature and the causes of things, and enables one generation to hand down the results of its researches to another, so that we are constantly accumulating knowledge. 2. Gives us proof of unity of God. 3. Assures us of the mighty power of the great Author of nature, who is seen to be strong to sustain and preserve and renew. III. As it affects our life. IV. As it dwarfs our individual career. V. In the light of the spiritual and the eternal. 1. The worth of spiritual life is not determined by its duration. 2. Moreover, holy human life upon the earth leads on and up to the life which is eternal.—Clarkson.

Verse 7.—In this verse the streams are described as returning on their sources; but there is no allusion here, as we might suppose, to the tides, —and indeed tidal rivers are comparatively rare,—or to the rain which brings back the water evaporated from the surface of the streams and of the sea. The reference is, rather, to an ancient conception of the physical order of nature held by the Hebrew as by other races, according to which the ocean, fed by the streams, sent back a constant supply through subterranean passages and channels, in which the salt was filtered out of it; through these they supposed the rivers to return to the place whence they came. The ruling sentiment of these verses is that, while all the natural elements and forces, even the most variable and inconstant, renew their strength and return upon their course, for frail man there is no return; permanence and uniformity characterize them, while transitoriness and instability mark him for their own. They seem to vanish and disappear; the sun sinks, the winds lull, the streams run dry; but they all come back again: for him there is no coming back; once gone, he is gone for ever.—Exp. Bib.

8—11. (8) full of labour, Stuart, "All words grow weary, no man can utter them;" i. e., language would fail to tell the whole. ^e eye... hearing, i. e. for man there is no present satisfaction. ^f (9) no new thing, no new source of pleasure. Life is a round of the same duties, cares, and pleasures. Things may seem new to individuals, they are not new in themselves. ^g (10) old time, Heb. ages. (11) no remembrance, and therefore things may be thought new wh. really have been before, a new element in the pessimism into which the writer has fallen. "Our considering old things as new is bec. of the continual extinction of the remembrance of former things."

All things new.—If it is impossible that the Book of Ecclesiastes should be written over again in the Christian ages, the reason is that the fuller and sublime revelations made by the Son of God incarnate have enriched human thought and life beyond all calculation. There is no comparison between the comparative poverty of knowledge and of life, even under the Mosaic economy in ancient times, and "the unsearchable riches of Christ." None can exhaust the treasures of knowledge and wisdom, the possibilities of consecrated service and spiritual progress, distinctive of the Christian dispensation. Christianity is emphatically a religion of newness. It is itself the new covenant; its choicest gift to man is the new heart; it summons the disciples of the Redeemer to newness of life; it puts in their mouth a new song; whilst it opens up in the future the glorious prospect of new heavens and a new earth. God comes in the Person of His Son to this sin-stricken humanity, and His assurance and promise is this: "Behold, I make all things new."—Thomson.

12, 13. (12) Preacher, as vs. 1. oppressed by his profound sense of the vanity of the life which man lives amid the play of permanent natural forces, Coheleth sets out on the search for that true and supreme Good which it will be well for the sons of men to pursue through their brief day.—Exp. Bib. (13) gave my heart, the phrase, so expressive of the spirit of an earnest seeker, is eminently characteristic of this book and meets us again in ver. 17, chaps. vii. 25, viii. 9, 16. wisdom, as was natural in so wise a man, he turns first to wisdom. He gives himself diligently to inquire into all the actions and toils of men. He will ascertain whether a larger acquaintance with their conditions, a deeper insight into the facts, a more just and complete estimate of their lot, will remove the depression which weighs upon his heart.—Exp. Bib. travail, work regarded as causing care, and anxiety, and effort. God, Heb. Elohim^a. The name Jehovah does not occur in this book. exercised, or disciplined.

The mark of a true preacher (vs. 13).—I. He is a man of study—seeking and searching in order to know. II. He is a man of varied knowledge—"all things." III. He studies heartily, not perfunctorily. IV. He discerns the truth that travail is for the discipline of the sons of men.

Talent without principle.—An affecting illustration of the truth of Solomon's remark is furnished in the history of Combe, the unhappy author of Dr. Syntax in Search of the Picturesque. "We find," says a reviewer, "this improvident man, and all within a few years, figuring as a boy at Eton, a scholar at Oxford, a student in the Temple, with a very handsome independent fortune; a barrister pleading with success; a man of fashion intimately associating with lords and ladies, and calling himself (from his courtly dress and splendid liveries) 'The Duke,' and then an outcast spendthrift; a private soldier; a novice in a French monastery, playing the monk to get his bread for the time being; a strolling player; a gentleman's servant; and a waiter at an inn at Swansea. It was after all these metamorphoses that he turned himself into an author. His last scene of all was the King's Bench, where he wrote Syntax and some other works; and there he died, after an imprisonment (for debt) of twenty years.

14, 15. (14) works. sun, the actions and lives of men, not the occurrences of nature. vexation of spirit, lit. windy effort. A feeding on wind.^a It expresses, with a bold vividness, the sense of emptiness which accompanies unsatisfied desire. (15) crooked, etc., prob. a proverbial sentence. Man has no power to alter conditions fixed by God, however unsuitable he may regard them.^b "Human labor and human knowledge cannot regenerate mankind."

Crooked things straightened (vs. 15).—I. We are all born with crooked hearts. This may be proved from the Bible, and without the Bible. II. Like the tree or the clay, our hearts are having something done with them. III. The importance of keeping straight while we are being educated. IV. How are we to get straight? Get Jesus to help us. Help ourselves.—R. Newton.

Vanity of worldly greatness.—The great Wolsey, after he had climbed the highest round of ambition's ladder, in the evening of life bitterly exclaimed, "Would that I had served my God as faithfully as I have served my king! He would not have abandoned me in my old age." The illustrious statesman, William Pitt, the favorite of king and people, "died," says Wilberforce, his friend, "of a broken heart." On his dying bed he is stated to have said, "I fear I have neglected prayer too much to make it available on a death-bed." Still more distressing was the closing scene of Sheridan's career. He who had stood on the pinnacle of glory, and gained the most flattering distinctions, writes in old age to one of his friends, "I am absolutely undone and broken-hearted." Misfortunes crowded on him, and his last moments were haunted by fears of a prison. Forsaken by his gay associates, dispirited, and world-weary, he closed his eyes in gloom and sorrow. Sir Walter Scott thus gives his dirge of life. Referring to his departure from Abbotsford, he writes:—"When I think what this place now is, and what it has been not long ago, I think my heart will break. . . . Some new object of complaint comes every moment; sicknesses come thicker and thicker; friends are fewer and fewer. The recollection of youth, health, and powers of activity, neither improved nor enjoyed, is a poor strain of comfort. The best is, the long halt will arrive at length and close all." "Save me from the horrors of a gaol," were almost the dying words of the poet Burns. Campbell, who wrote The Pleasures of Hope, speaks in this melancholy strain:—"I am alone in the world. My wife and the child of my hopes are dead. My only surviving child is consigned to a living tomb,—a lunatic asylum. My last hopes are blighted. As for fame, it is a bubble that must soon burst. Earned by others, shared with others, it was sweet; but at my love is ready and willing to help you up, and revive you. Are you wearied with doubts and terrors? Then God's eternal light is ready to show you your way. God's eternal peace ready to give you peace. Do you feel yourself full of sins and faults? Then take heart; for God's unchangeable will is, to take away those sins, and purge you from those faults."—Charles Kingsley.

^a Ho. xii. 1.

^b "Man cannot alter what is (apparently) unjust in God's arrangement of the world, nor make or regard its failures perfect; hemmed in within the narrow limits of the world as it is constituted, he is not able to perform the most important thing that he above all things should be able to do."—Hitzig. Ec. vii. 13.

"Worldly things do not feed our souls, but rather the hunger of our souls."—St. Bernard.

Look at the convolvulus. The delicate-looking flower, with a slender stalk that loves to climb up very high, should suggest to us how weak and feeble man should forget those things that are beneath, and aspire after a crown of glory.

"We are not responsible for results. What is success in our estimation may be failure from God's standpoint. Peter was filled with the Holy Ghost and lifted three thousand people into the kingdom. Stephen was filled with the Holy Ghost and was stoned to death. One was as great a triumph as the other. In the thought of God."—J. Willbur Chapman.

* Lit. vaunting extravagance.

b "We become more sensible of our ignorance and impotence, and, therefore, sorrowful, in proportion as we discover more of the scheme of providence in the government of the world; every discovery serving to convince us that more remains concealed of wh. we had no suspicion before."—Bp. Butler.

Ec. xii. 12; 1 Co. iii. 18—20.

"The deeper our vision the more clearly we perceive the imperfections among the children of men, and that usually produces unrest in the mind."—Hansen. Aristotle says, "We are more naturally disposed towards those things which are wrong, and more easily carried away to excess than to propriety of conduct." And Hume, "We naturally desire what is forbidden, and often take a pleasure in performing actions merely because they are unlawful."

age, to my own solitary experience, it is bitter. Left in my chamber alone with myself, is it wonderful my philosophy at times takes flight; that I rush into company; resort to that which blunts but heals no pang; and then, sick of the world and dissatisfied with myself, shrink back into solitude?" Poor Campbell! What a change would have passed over him if he had exchanged his philosophy for Christianity,—if he had known the pleasures of Christian hope,—if, in the realised presence of the invisible Jesus, and His unutterable sympathy, he had found "the balm of Gilead," to heal, not to blunt, the pangs of his wounded spirit!—Bullock.

16—18. (16) communed, entered into counsel with myself. Lo, I am come to great estate, the verb in the Hebrew is connected closely with what follows and speaks not of outward majesty, but of "becoming great" in wisdom. So taken we may read, "I became great and increased in wisdom more than all." experience, the knowledge was not merely theoretic. (17) madness^a and folly, things in wh. many men appear to find satisfaction. He wanted his experiences to include all sides of human life. (18) much grief,^b German prov., "Much wisdom causeth headache." So Cicero, "Sickness seems to me to be the lot of the wise of heart."

The bliss of ignorance and folly of wisdom (vs. 18).—I. The more one knows of himself, the more sad he will be at his sinfulness. II. Or of God, the more sad that he began to serve Him so late, and has served Him so poorly. III. Or of the world, the more sad that its conquest by science should be so slow. IV. But the opposite is also true, that with increase of knowledge comes increase of joy. V. And the joy outweighs the grief. VI. The greatest joy of all is to know God, and Jesus whom He has sent.

Melancolia.—In his celebrated engraving of "Melancolia," Albert Dürer has with wonderful skill depicted this mood of intellectual depression. He represents a winged figure, that of a woman seated by the seashore and looking intently into the distance, with bent brows and proud, pensive demeanor. Her thoughts are absorbed in sombre meditation, and her wings are folded. A closed book is in her lap. Near her stands a dial-plate, and above it a bell, that strikes the hours as they pass. The sun is rapidly nearing the horizon-line, and darkness will soon enshroud the earth. In her right hand she holds a compass and a circle, emblematic of that infinity of time and space upon which she is meditating. Around her are scattered the various implements of art, and the numerous appliances of science. They have served her purpose, and she now casts them aside, and listlessly ponders on the vanity of all human calculations. Above her is an hour-glass, in which the sands are running low, emblematic of the shortness of the time yet left for fresh schemes and efforts. In like manner the Preacher found that on the moral side increase of knowledge meant increase of sorrow. Knowledge of the true ideal only made him the more conscious of the distance we are from it, and of the hopelessness of our efforts to reach it. The further the research is carried, the more abundant is the evidence discoverable of our moral nature being in a condition of disorder. We find that conscience too often reigns without governing, that natural appetites and desires refuse to submit to her rule, that often motives and feelings which she distinctly condemns, such as pride, envy, selfishness, and cruelty, direct and animate our conduct. All schools of philosophy have recognized the fact of moral disorder in our nature. It is, indeed, unfortunately too evident to be denied or explained away.—J. Willcock.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—3. (1) I will prove thee with mirth, the self-communing of the man talking to his soul, like the rich man in Luke xii. 18, 19, in search of happiness, leads him to yet another experiment. He will lay aside philosophy and try what pleasure will do, and live as others live. The choice of Faust in Goethe's great drama, presents a striking parallel in the world of creative Art. The fall of Abelard is hardly a less striking parallel in the history of an actual life. Consciously or unconsciously (probably the former) the Debater has passed from the Hebrew and the Stoic ideals of wisdom to that of the school of Epicurus.^a—Cam. Bib. (2) laughter, the unrestrained cheerfulness attending sensual enjoyment. mad, it puts men beside themselves, out of their own self-control. (3) unto wine, or the pleasures of the table, rich feasting and abundant drinking. acquainting, etc.,^b not abandoning himself to indulgence, but carefully observing its influence upon him. But he became the victim of his dangerous experiments.

The vanity of pleasure—an experiment in three stages.—I. The way of sensuous enjoyment (vss. 1, 2). 1. The investigation was vigorously conducted. 2. The result has been clearly recorded. II. The way of banqueting and revelry (vs. 3). This path had been and still is: 1. Much traveled. 2. Appallingly fatal. 3. Perfectly avoidable. III. The way of culture and refinement (vss. 4-11).—Whitelaw.

The drunkard's conversion.—An aged Christian gave a visitor of the poor the following account of his conversion. He said that previous to the Lord's meeting with him he was a notoriously wicked character, and among many other vices he was much addicted to drinking to excess. On a certain occasion he had what he termed "broken out," and had been in a state of intoxication for, I think he said, a fortnight. When the effects of the liquor left him, and he began to come to himself, his spirits sank unusually low, and guilt and remorse preyed on his mind so much that he was driven to despair, and felt himself so miserable that he determined on the rash act of putting an end to his existence. He accordingly procured a rope to hang himself. At that time his wife, who was a truly pious woman, was at chapel. A thought came into his mind that he should like his wife to know his fate soon after he was dead. This induced him to go round the back of the chapel to seek for a convenient place to commit the fatal deed, expecting that when the congregation came out he should be found dead, and that his wife would be informed. When passing the back of the chapel, with the rope in his pocket, the sound of the minister's voice caught his ear, and induced him to go and look in at the door. At the instant the minister was preaching in a very animated manner on the efficacy of the blood of Christ to cleanse the guilty conscience, stated that the Saviour was able and willing to save the vilest rebels, and then gave a most pressing invitation to the chief of sinners. These sentences so penetrated his heart that they produced feelings which are easier conceived than described. When the service was over he went home, fell on his knees, and cried for mercy. His wife was astonished at first at the wonderful change; but, on inquiry, she found the Lord had answered her prayer in behalf of her husband.

The disappointment of sensuality.—

My days are in the yellow leaf;
The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone!

The fire that on my bosom preys
Is lone as some volcanic isle;
No torch is kindled at its blaze—
A funeral pile.

The hope, the fear, the jealous care,
The exalted portion of the pain
And power of love I cannot share,
But wear the chain.

—Byron.

4-6. (5) gardens, etc., paradises, parks, or pleasure-gardens.^c (6) pools, "the so-called Solomon's pools lie S. of Bethlehem, upon the usual route from Hebron to Jerusalem, and about six miles from the Holy City." An adjoining hill still bears the name of the "Little Paradise."

Pools of Solomon.—"If," says Dean Stanley, "Hebron and Bethlehem are special memorials of David, there is one spot between the two which calls to mind in a lively form the works of the peaceful reign which succeeded. In the long green vale of Urtâs, unusually green amongst

^a "I will try whether thou wilt feel contented and happy in this new object of thy experience, viz., in cheerful sensual enjoyment."

"Mirth is the entertainment of the fancy, and though it comes short of the solid delights of the rational powers, yet it is to be preferred before those that are merely carnal and sensual. Some distinguish man from the brutes, not only as animal rational, a rational animal, but as animal risible, a laughing animal." — Mat. Henry.

^b "He acted not as a sensual voluptuary, but rather as a philosophical experimenter." — Wordsworth.

"In the world, feasting comes first and fasting afterwards; men first glut themselves, and then loathe their excesses; they take their fill of good, and then suffer; they are rich that they may be poor; they laugh that they may weep; the poor shall be rich, the lowly shall be exalted, those that sow in tears shall reap in joy, those that mourn shall be comforted, those that suffer with Christ shall reign with Him." — J. H. Newman.

^c "There was, about 50 stadia from Jerusalem, a certain place called Ethana, very pleasant in fine gardens, and abounding in rivulets of water, whither he (Solomon) was wont to go every morning, sitting on high in his chariot." — Josephus.

"Every great man is always being helped by everybody, for his gift is to get good out of all things and all persons." —Ruskin.

^a "On account of their natural fidelity, slaves born in the house were regarded as a very valuable possession." —O. Zockler.

^b 2 Sa. xix. 35.

"Like flakes of snow that fall unperceived upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one other. As the snow gathers together, so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change; no single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character." —Jeremy Taylor. "Life, like a dome of many-colored glass, stains the white radiance of eternity." —Shelley. "Thriftless ambition, that will ravin up thine own life's means." —Shakespeare.

^a My profit, my advantage.

^b 1 Ti. vi. 6-11; 1 Jno. ii. 15-17. "The Fortunate Islands, which anyone may talk of, are but mere dreams, not lying anywhere under the sun's light." —Jermin.

"When Garrick showed Dr. Johnson his fine house, gardens, statues, pictures, etc., at Hampton Court, what ideas did they awaken in the mind of that great man? Instead of a flattering compliment that was expected, 'Ah! David! David!' said the Doctor, 'these are the the rocky knolls of Judæa, Solomon 'planted him vineyards and made him gardens and a "paradise," and planted trees in them of all kinds of fruits, and made him reservoirs of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees.' From these gardens probably came, in part at least, the imagery of the Canticles; and in these, probably more than anywhere else, the wise king cultivated his knowledge of trees, from the transplanted cedar to the native hyssop. The great reservoirs still remain; and the huge square hill in its neighborhood, by Europeans called 'the Frank Mountain,' is known to the Arabs only as the 'Jebel el Fureidis,' the 'Mountain of the Little Paradise,' evidently from its vicinity to the gardens of the Wâdy Urtâs."

7-9. (7) got, or bought: distinguished fr. those born in the house.^a Those born in the house, the sons of the handmaids rose into more confidential service. great and small cattle, i. e. oxen and sheep. all . . . before me, comp. David's flocks and herds (1 Chro. xxvii. 29, 31). (8) peculiar treasure, that for wh. each district or kingdom was specially famous. singers, the common luxury of Eastern courts.^b They sang and played whilst the guests were at the table. The mention of women shows that the singers meant are those that figured at state banquets. (9) my wisdom, "the thought expressed seems to be, as in verse 3, that the seeker, though he plunged into the pleasures of a sensual life, was never altogether their slave. They were for him experiments which he watched as with an intellectual impartiality. Like Goethe, he analysed his voluptuousness, and studied his own faculties of enjoyment."

Earth's treasures unsatisfying.—A ship, bearing a hundred emigrants, has been driven from her course and wrecked on a desert island, far from the tracks of man. There is no way of escape; but there are means of subsistence. An ocean unvisited by ordinary voyagers circles round their prison; but they have seed, with a rich soil to receive, and a genial climate to ripen it. Ere any plan has been laid, or any operations begun, an exploring party returns to head-quarters, reporting the discovery of a gold mine. Thither instantly the whole party resort to dig. They labor successfully, day by day, and month after month. They acquire and accumulate large heaps of gold. But spring is past, and not a field has been cleared, nor a grain of seed committed to the ground. The summer comes, and their wealth increases; but the store of food is small. In harvest they begin to discover that their heaps of gold are worthless. When famine stares them in the face, a suspicion shoots across their fainting hearts that the gold has cheated them. They rush to the woods, fell the trees, dig the roots, till the ground, sow the seed. It is too late! Winter has come; and their seed rots in the ground. They die of want in the midst of their treasures. This earth is the little isle, eternity the ocean round it; on this shore we have been cast. There is a living seed, but gold mines attract us; we spend spring and summer there, winter overtakes us toiling there, destitute of the bread of life, forgetting that we ought to "seek first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto us."—Arnot.

10, 11. (10) whatsoever, etc., from such a life the idea of self-denial, even of self-control, was absolutely excluded. my portion,^a this temporary joy and rejoicing was all the portion he gained, and he felt that it was not worth the labor. (11) Then I looked, the pursuit of pleasure was as unsatisfying as the pursuit of knowledge. Like others who have trodden the same path he had to confess that all was vanity and feeding on wind. no profit, no permanent satisfying profit.^b

Pleasure.—1. The way of pleasure, however inviting, is not the way of safety or the way of peace. 2. While it cannot impart happiness to any, it may lead to everlasting misery and shame. 3. The pursuit of pleasure is not only incompatible with religion, but even at the best its sweets are not to be compared with religion's joys.—Whitelaw.

Worldly things unsatisfying.—The worm at the core.—There was a rich man at the court of King Herod; he was his high chamberlain, and was clothed in costly apparel, and lived in the greatest state and magnificence. And there came to him from distant lands a friend of his youth, whom he had not seen for many years. Anxious to do him honor, the high chamberlain made a great feast, and invited all his friends. The tables were laden with the most delicate viands on dishes of gold and silver, and many costly vessels filled with wines of all kinds. The rich man sat at the head of his table; on his right hand sat the friend who had come from distant lands; and they ate, and drank, and were satisfied. Then said the stranger to the king's high chamberlain, "I have never seen such magnificence as this in my native land." And he praised all he saw, and esteemed his friend the happiest of men. But the rich man, the king's high chamberlain, took an apple from off a golden dish; the apple was large and smooth, and rosy as the cheek of a sleeping infant; and as he handed it to his friend he said, "Behold this apple, it lay upon a golden dish, and it is lovely to look upon." And the stranger, the friend of his youth, took the apple and cut it through; but, alas! at its core was a worm! Then the stranger gave a glance towards his host. But the high chamberlain looked down and sighed.—Krummacher.

12—14. (12) after the king,^c the verse is obscure, and has been very variously rendered. So (1) the LXX., following another text, gives "What man will follow after counsel in whatsoever things they wrought it;" (2) the Vulgate, "What is man, said I, that he can follow the King, his Maker;" and (3) many modern interpreters, "What can the man do that comes after the king, whom they made long ago?" i. e. Who can equal the time-honored fame of Solomon?—Cam. B. (13) wisdom . . folly,^a this is his conclusion, Even wisdom that brings sorrow is better than the mirth of fools. (14) in his head, In Prov. xvii. 24 we have the opposite of the same thought: "The eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth," darkness, the dimness brought on by self-indulgences. one event, death.

"One dark black night awaits us all;
One path of death we all must tread."

—Horace, Od. i, 28, 15.

Eyes and no eyes.—The Russian proverb says of the non-observant man, "He goes through the forest and sees no firewood." Dr. Johnson once said, "Some men will learn more in the Hampstead stage than others in the tour of Europe." Sir Isambard Brunel took his first lessons in forming the Thames Tunnel from the tiny ship-worm. He saw how the little creature perforated the wood with its well-armed head, first in one direction and then in another, till the archway was complete, and then daubing over the roof and sides with a kind of varnish; and by copying this work exactly, on a large scale, Brunel was at length enabled to accomplish the work.—S. Smiles.

15—17. (15) why . . wise? "he puts the question—To what end, with what design, has he been so excessively wise, or, as it may be, wise over-much (ch. vii. 16)? His wisdom has, as it were, recoiled upon himself—it taught him much, but not content; it made him keen sighted in seeing the emptiness of human things, but it satisfied not his cravings."—Pul-Com. vanity, the arrangement that the wise is no better off in relation to death than the fool. (16) no remembrance, no perpetual memorial of those who have lived their lives prudently. He here speaks in a very sad and melancholy frame. The scribes and doctors, the artists and the poets of one age are forgotten in the next, and only here or there can any man be bold to say with Bacon that he commits his memory "to the care of future ages." as the fool, R. V., "And how doth the wise man die even as the fool!" How is it that there is no difference? see 2 Sa. iii. 33; Ps. xlix. 10. (17) hated life, he felt weary of life wh. had so little real result and fruitage. The term used indicates disgust, weariness, antipathy.

Disgust with life (vs. 17).—I. Rid the text of several false meanings which it may seem at first sight to countenance. We may be disgusted with life—I. Through melancholy; 2. Misanthropy; 3. Discontent; 4. Ennui. II. Proceed to justify the sense given.—W. Stevens.

18—20. (18) man . . after me, he could not retain what he might gain. The fruit of his labors another would reap. But we need not regard this fact in so melancholy a way.^a (19) wise, to make good use of it. a fool,^b to squander it all away. So often the sons of the rich scatter, in frivolities, all that the parents have laboriously gathered. (20) Therefore I went about, in the phrase "I went about," literally, "I turned," we have, things which make a death-bed terrible!" —J. Whitecross. "A man's life is an appendix to his heart."—South.

^c "What is any man that in this study of wisdom and folly shall come after me, who from my position have had such peculiar advantages for carrying it on?"—Spk. Com.

^a "The real strength of life is in wisdom alone, whilst folly is vain, empty, and unsubstantial."—Elster.

"The baffled trial needs not be repeated." —Mat. Henry.

"The thing that seems Mere misery, under human schemes, Becomes, regarded by the light Of love, as very near or quite As good a gift as joy before." —Robert Browning.

"In the morning we carry the world like Atlas; at noon we stoop and bend beneath it; and at night it crushes us flat to the ground." —Beecher.

"Learn of me," says the philosopher, "and ye shall find restlessness." "Learn of me," says Christ, "and ye shall find rest."—Anon.

^a "One hope alone was left to the disappointed worldling, the perpetuation of his name and riches, laboriously gathered, through his successor." —Fausset.

^b Ps. xxxix. 6.

"Worldly riches are like nuts; many clothes are torn in getting them, many a tooth broke in cracking them, but never a belly filled with eating them." — Venning.

"It is one of the vanities of wealth that a man knows not to what use it will be put by his successor."

* There is a common saying in the North of England to this effect, "The first generation buys the carriage, the second rides in the carriage, and the third pawns the carriage."

"The God-stayed imagination has no space for the trials and perplexities of this world. It meets them with a victorious indifference that is the wonder of the tempest-tossed worldling. Yet when the believer bears witness to the source of his marvelous peacefulness, his words find too often only deaf ears and stony hearts; and those whom he would help to the same source of comfort keep struggling along until they go down." — Anon.

"To eat and drink, and let one's soul be merry, is the triad of sensual life, wh. is sometimes used, in a bad sense, of vicious excess and indulgence, and again in a good or morally unprejudicial sense." — O. Zockler.

as it were, the attitude of one who looks behind him on the road on which so far he has traveled. The retrospect was so dreary that it made the prospect drearier still.

Folly of amassing wealth for children (vss. 18, 19).—I. It takes from children the expectation and the purpose to succeed in life by their own efforts. II. It deprives children of the education and discipline of self-reliance. III. It educates children in the radical error that they are not to do service in the world, but are to be served. IV. It brings evil to parents as well as children. V. Society suffers from this evil, as, in consequence of it, it is deprived, in a great measure, of the active services of the children of the rich. VI. This evil prevents united effort among the rich for the industrial welfare of the community in which they live.—W. Clift.

Life.—

Our life is scarce the twinkle of a star
In God's eternal day. Obscure and dim
With mortal clouds, it yet may beam from him,
And darkened here, shine fair to spheres afar.
I will be patient, lest my sorrow bar
His grace and blessing, and I fall supine;
In my own hands my want and weakness are;
My strength, O God, is thine!

—Bayard Taylor.

21-23. (21) in equity, R. V., "skilfulness," not laboured therein, it seems to be a rule of life that some are to gain, and others are to spend.* (22) hath man, i. e. the man himself, whose life is so brief after the fruits of his life-labors are won. vexation, worry of his business and his struggle. Here perhaps, "corroding care" would best convey the meaning. (23) his travail, or toil. The penalty of sin is not toil, but anxious toil, toil in the "sweat of the face." not rest. night, the planning and scheming even preventing sleep.

In much wisdom is much sadness.—Père Lacordaire has a fine passage on this theme. "Weak and little minds find here below a nourishment which suffices for their intellect and satisfies their love. They do not discover the emptiness of visible things because they are incapable of sounding them to the bottom. But a soul which God has drawn nearer to the Infinite very soon feels the narrow limits within which it is pent; it experiences moments of inexpressible sadness, the cause of which for a long time remains a mystery; it even seems as though some strange concurrence of events must have chanced in order thus to disturb its life: and all the while the trouble comes from a higher source. In reading the lives of the Saints, we find that nearly all of them have felt that sweet melancholy of which the ancients said that there was no genius without it. In fact, melancholy is inseparable from every mind that looks below the surface and every heart that feels profoundly. Not that we should take complacency in it, for it is a malady that enervates when we do not shake it off; and it has but two remedies—Death or God."

24-26. (24) nothing better, etc., the point of the verse seems to be in the last clause. Let a man live in comfort and peace, but remember that for this he is dependent on God. (25) more than I, R. V., margin, "For who can eat or who can have enjoyment apart from him," i. e. without the divine blessing. (26) travail, "the words point to a further perception of a moral order in the midst of the seeming disorders of the world. The fruitless labor of the sinner in heaping up his often ill-gotten gains is not altogether wasted. His treasure passes into hands that make a better use of it than he has done."

The use of appetite (vs. 24).—I. Man must labor in order to eat. II. He must eat in order to live. III. What is thus a necessity, is also a pleasure. IV. The pleasure of the palate a God-ordained incentive to toil, and reward of it. V. All this is also true of soul-nourishment. "Blessed are they who hunger," etc.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1-4. (1) season,^b "The sentiment is, that the when and where of all actions and occurrences are ordained of God. They are not within the power of man to control."—Stuart. (2) be born, he thus impressively sets forth the fickleness and mutability of everything on earth. (3) to kill, judiciously, or in defensive war. (4) dance, the expression of gladness and rejoicing. The author does not here assert that everything is pre-determined, and so teach fatalism. He is but weary with the ceaseless and orderly change fr. one thing to its opposite, wh. he observes all around him.

A time to die (vs. 2).—I. It is the time of parting—of finally parting with our dear brother. II. This is a season of weeping. III. This weeping, parting season is also replete with instruction. 1. It is here we feel that our nature is social; 2. It is here that we learn that our nature is mortal; 3. It is here, too, that we learn that our nature is sinful; 4. It also confirms our faith in the validity and value of our common Christianity.—Studies for the Pulpit.

Order.—We are to understand, then, that there is a spirit of Order in creation, and that God wishes our life to be rhythmic and musical, not tumultuous and self-disappointing: a place for everything and everything in its place; a time for everything and everything done in its time. This is not mere machinery, it is not stiffness or pedantry; it is the very perfection of ease and enjoyment: it entails the least possible waste, it divides all burdens equally, it makes the wheels of life go steadily and correctly. We have lost the spirit of Order. The human race has lost its marching step, and we now go each at his own pace, wildly, confusedly, blindly. Our march is no longer a piece of music: it is an ungainly waddle; it is a jerk and rush, as if the spirit of panic had displaced the spirit of peace.—J. Parker.

5-8. (5) stones, it seems most simple to see herein intimated the operation of clearing a vineyard of stones, as mentioned in Isa. v. 2; and of collecting materials for making fences, wine-press, tower, etc." refrain, or be far from. (6) get, the getting or the losing refer primarily, we can scarcely doubt, to what we call property. There are times when it is better and wiser to risk the loss of all we have rather than to set our minds on acquiring more. (7) rend, as in seasons of mourning.^b (8) hate, in the usual Bible sense, wh. we can only express by "loving less," or "being indifferent to."

The time for speech (vs. 7).—I. When one has something to say suited to the hearer and the occasion. II. When one is unruffled in temper and calm in mind. III. When the occasion and the audience minister the opportunity. IV. No time but is fit for the speech of prayer.

Time for all things.—Time is the gift of God, a boon of inestimable value. What pity it should be abused or trifled with! I say not that it is to be wholly employed in meditation and devotion. That man mistakes religion who, under a notion of exalted piety, turns his back on the world, and retires into obscurity. There is a time for everything under the sun. A time for prudent consideration about our temporal interests; a time for honest labor, to procure a subsistence, and to acquire a competence; a time for food and sleep; a time for recreation and amusement. We may enjoy what God has given us, as well as labor for it.—S. Stennett.

A time for everything.—

There's a time to get, and a time to give, and a time to throw away;
There's a time to do a kindly deed, and that time is to-day.

There's a time to sing and a time to mourn, a time for joy and sorrow;
There's a time to love; but the time to hate might better be to-morrow.

There's a time to sleep and a time to wake, a time for work and play;
But the time to speak an evil thought passed by us yesterday.

—Frank A. Waugh.

^b "He shows that all things on earth ebb and flow in a restless vicissitude, and are succeeded by their contraries, and that nothing under the heaven 'continueth' in one stay, and that it is only things spiritual and Divine wh. are not affected by the mutations of time."—St. Jerome.

"There is no music in the life that sounds with Idiot laughter solely; there's not a string attuned to mirth but has its chord in melancholy."—Thos. Hood.

"Mortality is a huge time-piece wound up by the Almighty Maker; and after he has set it a-going nothing can stop it till the Angel swears that time shall be no longer."—J. Hamilton.

^a Isa. v. 2, lxix. 10.

^b 2 Sa. 1. 2, 11, etc.

The worldling is like the hinder wheel of a carriage, ever following after the front wheel of happiness, but never overtaking it.

"O the strong buckler of a circumstance! O the most faithful foundation of stability! For many being well settled with a stable heart, yet unawares have fallen by the error of a wandering tongue.—St. Ambrose.

"Each lawless thought will mar the plan. Each wasted day will stint the man. Wouldst thou excel? Let purpose run A thread of gold from sun to sun!" — James Buckham.

c "After reviewing the works of man in a new light, viz., as works ordained by God, and parts of His great design, he repeats his question as in ch. i. 3." — Spk. Com.

"Eternity casts upon the whole course of time the shadow of mystery. We have enough light to work by, but not enough for complete revelation."

"God is continually punishing men by that which is the natural result of their own misconduct in violating the natural laws which he has established." — Am. Com.

a "The meaning of the vs. is that there is a connection between events past, present and future; and this connection exists in the justice of God who controls all." — Spk. Com.

"It is an unspeakable comfort to the oppressed that their cause will be heard over again." — Mat. Henry.

9—11. (9) profit, "the long induction is completed, and yet is followed by the same despairing question as that of ch. i. 3, asked as from a standpoint that commands a wider horizon." — Cam. B. But Stuart thinks this question is asked in order to bring in the answer in vss. 10, 11.. (10) sons of men, Stuart, "I have considered the task wh. God hath given to the sons of men," etc. All these things proceed from divine arrangements. (11) in his time, R. V. "in its time." world .. heart, Stuart, "he hath put intelligence in their heart, without which no man," etc. In their proper season all his arrangements are fitting and he enables men to find this out by the intelligence bestowed upon them. find out, fully, or perfectly. We are always studying to know more of God; never exhausting the mysteries of creation or Providence.

The beautiful.—If we look long and far, we shall see that, though many things have an ugly aspect at first sight, God "has made everything beautiful in its time." The light and warmth of summer are good to see and feel; but is not the cold of winter invigorating? and what is more beautiful to the sight than the untrodden snow? The returning life of spring is welcome to all hearts; but are not the brilliant hues of autumn fascinating to every eye? Youth is full of ardor, and manhood of strength; but declining years possess much richness of gathered wisdom, and there is a dignity, a calm, a reverence, in age which is all its own. There is a joy in battle as well as a pleasantness in peace. Wealth has its treasures; but poverty has little to lose, and therefore little cause for anxiety and trouble. Luxury brings many comforts, but hardness gives health and strength. Each climate upon the earth, every condition in life, the various dispositions and temperaments of the human soul,—these have their own particular advantage and compensation. Look on the other side, and you will see something that will please, if it does not satisfy.—Clarkson.

12—15. (12) good, profit, vs. 9. Lasting, satisfying good. rejoice, with the measure of present joy that is attainable. do good, Ps. xxxiv. 15, xxxvii. 3. "Doing good is a principal condition of human happiness." (13) eat, etc., as ch. ii. 24. (14) I know that whatsoever God doeth. We ask whether we are brought face to face with the thought of an iron destiny immutably fixing even the seeming accidents of life, and excluding man's volition from any share in them, or whether the writer speaks of an order which men may, in the exercise of their freedom, transgress. And the answer is that the Debater, while he recognises man's freedom, has come to see a purpose and an order even in those accidents.—Cam. Bib. fear, with the reverence that is kin with dependence. (15) that .. been, as ch. i. 9. requireth .. past, "seeketh again that wh. is driven away." Past things are not lost. In the Divine order they are sure to turn up again.^a

The way to front our destiny.—I. By a cheerful acceptance of our Providential lot. 1. To fret and worry ourselves is useless. 2. A rebellious temper hinders the course of true happiness. 3. The power to enjoy the good of this life is the gift of God. II. By a practical recognition of the high claims of duty. 1. Doing good brings a man into sympathy with the Supreme Disposer of all things. 2. Whatever else may be mysterious our present duty is always clear. 3. The faithful discharge of duty is the only foundation for solid joy. III. By an acknowledgment of the inflexible rule of the Divine Government. 1. God's counsels are for ever. 2. God's counsels are so certain that they are not complicated with our human distinctions of time. IV. By recognizing the righteous ends contemplated by the Divine Government. 1. To tame and subdue the heart of man. 2. To vindicate the wrongs of His people.—Hom. Com.

16—18. (16) place of judgment, seat of the authorized judge. wickedness, the special wickedness of corrupt decisions determined by bribes. righteousness, innocence or virtue, as applied to the individual man. (17) God shall judge, in view of the injustice that prevails in earthly tribunals, Kokeleth takes comfort in the thought that there is retribution in store for every man, when God shall award sentence according to deserts. God is a righteous Judge, strong and patient, and his decisions are infallible. Future judgment is here plainly stated, as it is at the final conclusion (ch.

xi. 14).—Pul. Com. time there, i. e. with God, comp. Gen. xlix, 24. (18) concerning the estate, etc., R. V., "It is because of the sons of men, that God may prove them, and that . . . themselves are but as beasts." beasts, no better than the beasts without the grace of God.^b

Fragments of time.—As in money, so in time, we are to look chiefly to the smallest portions. Take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves. Take care of the minutes, and the hours and years will take care of themselves. Gold is not found in California for the most in great masses, but in little grains. It is sifted out of the sand in minute particles, which, melted together, produce the rich ingots that excite the world's cupidity. So the spare pieces of time, the shreds, the odds and ends of time put together, may form a very great and beautiful work. Oh, the preciousness of moments! no gold or gems can be compared to them. Yet all have them; while some are thereby enriched and others leave themselves in poverty. The wealth of time is like gold in the mine—like the gem in the pebble—like the diamond in the deep. The mine must be worked—the pebble ground and polished—the deep fathomed and searched.—Stoughton.

19, 20. (19) that, more accurately, "chance are the sons of men; chance is the beast; one chance is to both of them." one breath, the word is the same as the "spirit" of verse 23, and seems deliberately chosen with reference to the record of Gen. ii. 7. The writer asks, What after all was that "breath of life?" Was there not a like "breath of life" in every beast of the field?—Camb. Bib. no preeminence, in respect of the uncertainty and the peril of death. The expression must be strictly limited to its connection. (20) one place, the "place" thus spoken of is not the Sheol of the Hebrews or the Hades of the Greeks, which implied, however vaguely, some notion of a shadowy disembodied existence, for the souls of men as distinct from those of brutes, but simply the earth as at once the mother, the nourisher, and the sepulchre of every form of life.—Cam. Bib. The doubt suggested here about the spirit of man is not answered for the present, but is fully answered in xii. 7. dust, Ge. iii. 19.

Death.—Where are they who founded this goodly city? who possessed these fair houses, and walked these pleasant fields, who created these stately temples, who kneeled in these seats, who preached out of this place, but thirty years ago? Our fathers have summoned us, and we must summon our children to the grave.—H. Smith.

21, 22. (21) that goeth, better, "whether it goeth." It is evidently the question of the bitterly sceptical man. Of the future of the spirit of beasts nothing whatever has been revealed to us. (22) rejoice, he returns from consideration of moral mysteries to the simple conclusion he has already twice reached.^a who shall bring, etc., make the best of what is now at your command, for your (earthly) future is uncertain.

Cheerful piety.—You often hear of the Puritans, and this has formed our adjective, Puritanical. I imagine there is a good deal of mistake about the Puritans in this matter of recreations. I can scarcely think that they would have done the noble work they accomplished had they been the kind of men this term includes. We are certainly told of John Owen, the prince of the Puritans, and the vice-chancellor of Oxford University, that "he delighted in manly exercises, in leaping, throwing the bar, bell-ringing, playing the flute, and similar amusements." These Puritans, you may rely upon it, were far more genial men than their enemies represented. It is the little nature that can only be grave; it is the little nature that can only be funny. A great nature has room in his soul for both the serious and the pleasant.—W. Guest.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

I—3. (1) oppressions, violence; refusals of justice; governmental and social tyrannies. He sees the tears of the oppressed and sighs at their hopelessness: "Oh, the pity of it! the pity of it!" We can see in this new element of despair, that which was the beginning of a better life.

^b "Every man that minds his body only, and not his soul, makes himself no better than a brute, and must wish, at least, to die like one." —M. Henry.

"As there is a time for every purpose and work, so there will be a time when all things shall be ripe for Divine judgment." —Hom. Com.

"That is said to be vain which vanissheth." —Arrowsmith.

"Uncurb'd ambition, unresisting sloth, and base dependence, are the fiends accurst." —Mason.

"The lowly origin and destiny of the material part of our nature should be—a motive for humility—a rebuke to arrogance—a reason for seeking the imperishable." —Hom. Com.

^a Ec. ii. 24, iii. 13.

This life is like an inn, in which the soul spends a few moments on its journey.

"Only the moment that we live in life is our possession. Every hour lived sinks irrevocably into the sea of the past; the future is uncertain. Therefore is he a fool who lets the present slip by unused, wastes it in vain amusement, or grieves with useless lamentations." —Wohlfarth.

^b "If religion were not taken into account, to die as soon as possible would be desirable, so as not to suffer, or witness, oppressions." — Fausset.

^c "For dreadful is that gloomy vale; and then the dark descent so deep, that none can reach the steep." — Anacreon.

^d Comp. Job iii. 10, x. 18; Ec. vi. 3; Je. xx. 14; Mat. xxvi. 24.

"All religion and all ethics are summed up in justice." — Conway.

"If we would add richest luxury to our own banquet, we must send a portion to the poor, and if we would know how rich and free, and mighty we are, we should go and exchange places for a time with the oppressed and the sore in heart." — J. Parker.

^a Horace complains that every ancient hero found by bitter personal experience, that envy of heroism is only quenched by the hero's death.

^b Is. ix. 20, xlix. 26.

"A good man and a wise man may at times be angry with the world, at times grieved for it; but be sure no man was ever discontented with the world who did his duty in it." — Southey.

"What so foolish as the chase of fame! How vain the prize! how impotent our aim! For what are men who grasp at praise

The man was passing, to use modern terms, from egoism to altruism, thinking more of the misery of others than of his own enjoyment.—Cam. B. no comforter, on the supposition that this present life was all to them. God is the comforter of the oppressed; but apart from Him, their life-condition seems hopeless." (2) praised the dead,^c as Job iii. 13-21. (3) better is he, etc., R. V., "better than them both did I esteem him which hath not," etc.^d

Comfort (vs. 1).—I. Men have need of sympathy, especially under certain circumstances. II. Here is a sad case supposed; the oppressed and sad, without human comfort. III. We are reminded of the Divine Father,—the God of all consolation. IV. And of the words of Jesus,—"I will not leave you comfortless." V. And of the work of the Holy Spirit,—the Comforter.

Xerxes and Artabanus.—Xerxes, in his invasion of Greece, conceived the wish "to look upon all his host." A throne was erected for him on a hill near Abydos, sitting on which he looked down and saw the Hellespont covered with his ships, and the vast plain swarming with his troops. As he looked, he wept; and when his uncle Artabanus asked him the cause of his tears, he replied: "There came upon me a sudden pity when I thought of the shortness of man's life, and considered that of all this host, so numerous as it is, not one will be alive when a hundred years are gone by." This is one of the most striking and best known incidents in the life of the Persian despot; but the rejoinder of Artabanus, though in a far higher strain, is less generally known. I quote it here as an illustration of the Preacher's mood. Said Artabanus: "And yet there are sadder things in life than that. Short as our time is, there is no man, whether it be here among this multitude or elsewhere, who is so happy as not to have felt the wish—I will not say once, but full many a time—that he were dead rather than alive. Calamities fall on us, sicknesses vex and harass us, and make life, short though it be, to appear long. So death, through the wretchedness of our life, is a most sweet refuge to our race."—Herodotus in Exp. Bib.

4-6. (4) every right work, i. e. every work wh. seems right bec. it proves successful. Success is man's imperfect and unworthy test of right. for this, i. e. for his success.^a So even men's successes are not all blessing to them. (5) fool, etc., as Pr. vi. 10, xxiv. 33. The man who, without aim or insight, leads a half brutish life and folds his hands in the attitude of indolence. eateth . . . flesh, i. e. "he is a self-tormentor, never satisfied, his spirit preying on itself."^b (6) handful, lit. what fills the hollow of a hand. quietness, the restfulness of honest labor. both hands, or fists grasping tightly. Better take this vs. as an answer to the feverish jealousy and indulgent idleness of prev. vss.

The golden mean.—1. The comparison made by the wise man in this passage is a rebuke to envy. Who can tell what, if his two hands were filled with earthly good, he might, in consequence of his wealth, be called upon to endure of sorrow and of care? 2. On the other hand, this comparison is an encouragement to contentment. A handful is sufficient; and a quiet heart, grateful to God and at peace with men, can make what others might deem poverty not only endurable but welcome. It is God's blessing which maketh rich; and with it he addeth no sorrow.—Thomson.

Envy insatiable.—Mr. Badman's envy was so rank and strong, that if it at any time turned its head against a man, it would hardly ever be pulled in again. He would watch ever that man to do him mischief, as the cat watches over the mouse to destroy it; yea, he would wait seven years, but he would have an opportunity to hurt him; and when he had it, he would make him feel the weight of his envy. This envy is the very father and mother of a great many hideous and prodigious wickednesses. It both begets them, and also nourishes them up till they come to their cursed maturity in the bosom of him that entertains them.—Bunyan.

7, 8. (7) vanity, in one of its particular forms. (8) second, the gaze of the seeker now falls on another picture. That which strikes him as another example of the vanity of human efforts is the frequent loneliness of the worshiper of wealth. He is one, and he has no companion, often none bound to him by ties of blood, yet he labors on, as though he meant to be the founder of a dynasty. "He heapeth up riches and knoweth not who shall gather them," Ps. xxxix. 6.—Cam. Bib.

Vanity universal.—Wherefore bethink thyself at length, O deluded world! and write over all thy school-doors, "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom;" over all thy court-gates, "Let not the mighty man glory in his might;" over all thy exchanges and banks, "Let not the rich man glory in his riches." Write upon thy looking-glasses Bathsheba's motto, "Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain;" upon thy mews and artillery-yards, that of the Psalmist, "God delighteth not in the strength of a horse; He taketh not pleasure in the legs of a man;" upon thy taverns, inns, and ale-houses, that of Solomon, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise;" upon thy magazines and wardrobes, that of our Saviour, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal." Write upon thy counting-houses that of Habakkuk, "Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that loadeth himself with thick clay!" thy playhouses, that of Paul, "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God;" thy banqueting houses, that of the same holy Apostle, "Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both them and it;" yea, upon all thine accommodations, that of the Preacher, "Vanity of vanities: all is vanity and vexation of spirit."—Arrowsmith.

9—12. (9) good reward, in their common joy while sharing the fruits of their labor. "A man without a companion is like a left hand without a right." (10) fall, he turns from the isolation of the avaricious to the blessings of companionship. The special illustration appears to be drawn from the experience of two travelers. If one slips on a steep path the other is at hand to raise him. (11) warm alone? here again the experience of travel comes before us. Sleeping on a cold and stormy night, under the same coverlet, or in Eastern houses, with their unglazed windows and many draughts, two friends kept each other warm, while one resting by himself would have shivered in discomfort. (12) threefold cord, it differs from the previous illustration in suggesting the thought of a friendship in which more than two persons are joined. Three was the typical number for completeness, because the rope of three strands was the strongest cord in use.

Christian union.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler sketches this scene at a Christian Convention in Brooklyn: "The Convention closed by joining hands, and singing, 'Say, brother, will you meet us?' I saw one of Dr. Storrs' deacons and a Quaker and a Methodist standing with clasped hands, and flanked by a Baptist and a Presbyterian clergyman. It reminded me of the time when we college students, standing thus in the chemical lecture-hall, the electric current leaped from the charged battery through the whole circle in an instant."

13, 14. (13) Better, in the sense of happier. child, R. V., "youth." who . . . admonished, who is so stiff and settled in his ways and opinions that he cannot be advised. (14) For out of prison, etc., R. V., "For out of prison he came forth to be king; yea, even in his kingdom he was born poor." These verses are prob. suggested by some instance known to the writer, of a foolish king repelling the affections of his subjects, who turn to his successor. Stuart thinks Jeroboam is the youth ("child").

Youth and age.—Age does not always bring wisdom, which is the gift of God, sometimes—as in the case of Solomon—conferred in early life. True excellence and honor are not attached to age and station. Wisdom, modesty, and trustworthiness may be found in lowly abodes and in youthful years. Character is the supreme test of what is admirable and good.—Thomson.

15, 16. (15) I considered, etc., R. V., "I saw all . . . sun that they were with the youth; the second, that stood," etc. second child, if we take the word "second" in its natural meaning, the clause may point to the wise young ruler of the previous verse, as succeeding (i. e. coming second to) the old and foolish king.—Cam. B. (16) come after, i. e. the sublime, but bubbles on the rapid stream of time, that rise and fall, that swell, and are no more? born and forgot, ten thousand in an hour." — Young.

"Even diligence must be restrained by rules. It should not degenerate into an unreasonable passion."

"Crates threw his gold into the sea, saying, 'I will destroy thee, lest thou destroy me!' If men do not put the love of the world to death, the love of the world will put them to death." — Venning.

"Strong alone, but stronger with others." — Ger. Proverb.

"A single drop of water is insignificant, but united with the rest, in the ocean, it becomes an immense power. Society makes man sublime." — Hom. Com.

"We were made for one another, and to break up society into mere individualities is to commit a species of homicide. Every life waits for some other life." — Parker.

"Christianity calls upon us to make our old age into an aspect of youth. There is to be no old age in the sense of spiritual exhaustion, or moral decrepitude, or misanthropic isolation; old age is to be equivalent to increase of kingliness and bounty and holy influence." — Parker.

a Comp. Yakob Khan brought out of prison to succeed Shere Ali in the rule of Afghanistan, and again a prisoner.

^b The popularity of kings is notoriously short-lived.

"There is no kind of sinners more inconvincible and incurable than the worldly-minded. It is a rule without exception,—those sins which have the greatest appearance of reason, and the least of sensuality, are the most plausible and prevailing."—Bates.

"While men in power and authority have the people flocking about them, honoring and acknowledging them, they should be taken up with the thought of a change, and consider the people as walking with the man that shall come up in their stead, courting him; and themselves as shortly to fall one way or other."—Nisbet.

"Give thy mind to what thou art going to do."—Spk. Com.

^a 1 Sa. xv. 22.

"The habit of an excess of words causes the speech to degenerate into vain and senseless twaddle."—O. Zockler.

Pr. x. 19.

"Remember at whose throne you are kneeling; and be not verbose, but let your words be few and emphatic, as of one who is favored with an audience from Heaven's King."—J. Hamilton.

^b De. xxiii. 22—24.

next generation after that which sets up the youthful king.^b This is added as the crowning stroke of the irony of history. The reign which begins so brightly shares the inevitable doom, and ends in darkness, and murmuring and failure. The popular hero of the hour finds himself slighted even in life, and is forgotten by the next generation. The glory of the most popular and successful king shares the common doom and is but as a feeding upon wind.—Cam. Bib.

The neglected king.—The scene depicted of the ignominy into which the worthless old king falls, and the enthusiasm with which the new one is greeted, reminds one of Carlyle's vivid description of the death of Louis XV. and the accession of his grandson. The courtiers wait with impatience for the passing away of the king whose life had been so corrupt and vile; he dies unpitied upon his loathsome sick-bed. "In the remote apartments, dauphin and dauphiness stand road-ready; . . . waiting for some signal to escape the house of pestilence. And, hark! across the Œil-de-Bœuf, what sound is that—sound terrible and absolutely like thunder?" It is the rush of the whole court, rushing as in wagger, to salute the new sovereigns: "Hail to your Majesties!" The body of the dead king is unceremoniously committed to the grave. "Him they crush down and huddle underground; him and his era of sin and tyranny and shame; for behold! a New Era is come; the future all the brighter that the past was base" ('French Revolution,' vol. i. ch. iv.) The same kind of picture has been drawn by Shakespeare, in 'Richard II.' act. v. sc. 2, where he describes the popularity of Bolingbroke, and the contempt into which the king he displaced had sunk. Yet, according to the Preacher, the breeze of popular favor soon dies away, and the hero is soon forgotten. "They also that come after him shall not rejoice in him." The dark cloud of oblivion comes down and envelops in its shade both those who deserve to be remembered, and those who have been unworthy of even the brief popularity they enjoyed in their lifetime. "Who knows," says Sir Thos. Browne, "whether the best of men be known, or whether there be not more remarkable persons forgot than any that stand remembered on the known account of time?"—J. Willcock.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1—3. (1) Keep . . God, to "keep the foot" is to be careful of the conduct, to remember what you are about, whither you are going. The precept implies that he who gives it had seen the need of it. Men went to the place where they worshiped with little thought that it was indeed a Bethel, or "house of God." hear,^a another translation is "for it is better to obey than to offer the sacrifice of fools." (2) rash, the rule follows the worshiper from the threshold into the Temple-court and tells him how he is to act there. We are reminded of our Lord's warning against "vain repetitions," after the manner of the heathen (Matt. vi. 7). few, so, careful, studied, and becoming. (3) multitude of business, wh. oppressing the mind keeps it active all the night. multitude of words, often the saying is true, "The more words the less sense."

Reverence for the sanctuary (vs. 1).—I. State the duty. 1. Our duty as we enter public worship; 2. As we are engaged in it. II. Enforce the duty. 1. Impropriety of conduct in public worship is foolish; 2. Is sinful; 3. Is dangerous.—G. Brooks.

Unprofitable speech.—Madame Antoinette Sterling, when asked to go on the operatic stage, replied, "I cannot. I stand by every word I utter when I sing, and I feel I must to the death. It is not alone song with me—melodious sounds; it is the lesson inculcated: hope in the future, bright joys to come, the mercy of an all-wise God. I would not sing a wicked or a frivolous word before an audience for anything on earth."—Francis Hay.

4—7. (4) vowest,^b even if thou didst it hastily, show thy manliness in paying it, whatsoever it may cost thee. pay, Ps. lxvi. 13, 14, cxvi. 14. (5) not vow, the point which the Teacher seeks to press is obviously the optional character of vows. They form no part of the essentials of religion; but to make them, and then delay or evade their fulfilment, is to tamper with veracity and play fast and loose with conscience, and so is fatally injurious.—Camb. Bib. (6) mouth . . sin, prob. refers to the thoughtless utterance of the rash vow. comp. James's Ep. for snares of the tongue. the angel, R. V., marg. "the messenger" either the priest to whom the man comes, excusing his failure to bring the promised offering, or poss. the angel who is supposed to record all our actions. error,^c our relig. acts should be so serious and so thoughtful, that this should be felt as an unreasonable and wicked excuse. (7) dreams, vs. 3. The superstitious man who puts his faith in dreams is impractical and unreal; the garrulous man who is rash in his vows, and in prayer thinks to be heard for his much speaking, displeases God and never secures his object.

Religious vows (vs. 4).—I. Men are apt to make vows to God—I. When in trouble; 2. When conscience-smitten under the Gospel; 3. When alarmed by the near prospect of death. II. Men are apt to forget the vows they have made. 1. They yield to temptation; 2. Passing events obliterate the impression; 3. Forgotten vows were probably made in self-reliance; 4. Men should imitate the Psalmist. Ps. lxxvi. 13, 14.

Promising and performing.—The broken bowl.—Sir William Napier, when taking a long country walk in the neighborhood of Bath, met a little peasant girl, who was crying bitterly, with a broken bowl in her hand. Sir William inquired the cause of her tears, and encouraged by his kind face and voice, she told her tale; how she had broken the bowl which had held her father's dinner, and was afraid now to go home, for she knew her mother would be very angry, and would punish her. But a sudden idea seemed to strike her, and looking up in Sir William's face, she exclaimed, "But 'ee can mend it, cannot 'ee?" "No, but he could give her sixpence to buy another." He pulled out his purse, and was dismayed to find it quite empty. He told the child, however, that if she came to the same place at the same hour next day, he would be sure to meet her and to bring a sixpence with him, and that she must tell her mother this. On reaching his home, however, Sir William found a note from a friend at Bath, inviting him to dinner next day, to meet a gentleman whom he particularly wished to see. He recollected with regret his promise to the little girl, and considered whether it might not be possible to combine the two. But he soon saw this could not be done, and refused the tempting dinner invitation, saying he had "a pre-engagement." "I could not disappoint the child," he said to his daughters; "she trusted in me so implicitly."

8—II. (8) oppression of the poor, from the follies of the religious life we pass to the disorders of the political. As in ch. iv. 16, the thinker looks on those disorders of the world, "the poor man's wrong, the proud man's contumely," and teaches others how he has learnt to think of them. matter, marg. will or purpose: i. e. at what seems a strange permission of God. Be sure that those in higher office will sooner or later take notice, and be quite sure that God will overrule it all.^a higher, etc., or trans. "superior watcheth superior, and superiors again watch over them." (9) profit of the earth, Stuart, "Moreover, an advantage of a land in all this, is a king to a cultivated field;" the writer contrasts the misery of the Oriental government of his time with the condition of Judah under the model kings who gave themselves chiefly to the development of the resources of the country by agriculture. (10) loveth silver, has the lust of acquisition, wh. nothing can satisfy.^b (11) eat them, the fact is one which has met the gaze of the moralists of all countries. A large household, numerous retainers, these are but so many elements of trouble.

Verse 9.—A very striking illustration of the teaching here given is afforded in an incident which took place at Heidelberg in the reign of Frederic I. (1152—1190). This prince invited to a banquet all the factious barons whom he had vanquished at Seckingen, and who had previously ravaged and laid waste great part of the palatinate. Among them were the Bishop of Mentz and the Margrave of Baden. The repast was plentiful and luxurious, but there was no bread. The warrior-guests looked around with surprise and inquiry. "Do you ask for bread?" said Frederic, sternly; "you who have wasted the fruits of the earth, and destroyed those whose industry cultivates it? There is no bread. Eat, and ^c "It was a thoughtlessness that I made the vow at all." Such an excuse is not weak only, but wicked. Yet this is a characteristic evasion of superficiality and levity in religious matters.

"The worth of prayer is not gauged by its dimensions. A mere cry, if prompted by earnest desire, is more to God than the most elaborate petition. What quantity of electric fluid is requisite in order to send a telegraphic message from England to the United States? Very little." — Stevenson.

"Do not fear the power of the world. When a blind man runs against you in the street, you are not angry with him. You say, 'He is blind, poor man, or he would not have hurt me.' So you may say of the world, when they speak evil of Christ, 'They are blind.' — McCheyne.

^a "There is coming a capital judgment at last, and an earnest of it in partial punishment of sinners meanwhile." — Fausset.

^b 1 Ti. vi. 9, 10.

"We lose what on ourselves we spend; We have as treasure without end Whatever, Lord, To Thee we lend Who giveth all."

"It's no in titles nor in rank, It's no in wealth like Lon'on Bank, To purchase peace and rest." — Burns.

a "Fears for his wealth, and an overloaded stomach, without laboring, will not suffer the rich oppressor to sleep." — Fausset.

b Ps. xlix, 17; 1 Ti. vi. 7.

"If thou art rich, thou art poor,
For, like an ass whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee."
—Shakespeare.

"Riches oftentimes make to themselves wings and fly away; and truly, many a time the undue sparing of them is but letting their wings grow, which makes them ready to fly away, and the contributing a part of them to do good only clips their wings a little, and makes them stay the longer with their owner." — Abp. Leighton.

c "In order to enjoy the good that there is in the riches of this world, it is necessary that one have a perfect rule over them, i. e. that in the use of them he may at all times act in accordance with the Divine purpose." — Hansen.

"A cheerful spirit is a great blessing; it makes the yoke of our employments easy, and the burden of our afflictions light." — Mat. Henry.

Ec. xi. 9.

be satisfied; and learn henceforth mercy to those who put the bread into your mouths."—Mrs. Jameson.

12—17. (12) labouring man, one who toils, with his hands, in the fields. He has no cares, and is weary enough to thoroughly enjoy his slumbers.^a (13) kept, not distributed, so as to become a blessing to others. Hoarded up. (14) evil travail, unsuccessful speculations. a son, late in life perhaps. (15) naked, "the words so closely resemble those of Job i. 21 that it is natural to infer that the writer had the history in his mind as an example of a sudden reverse of fortune. In both, earth, as the mother of all living, is thought of as the womb out of which each man comes (Ps. cxxxix. 15) and to which he must return at last, carrying none of his earthly possessions with him."^b (16) sore evil, he tries all his life to keep, and then at death must lose. (17) he eateth in darkness, the words are a natural figure of a cheerless life with no "sweetness and light" in it (comp. Mic. vii. 8).

Anxieties of the rich.—In many parts of the East there are not any banks for money, or public offices, in which the affluent can deposit their riches; consequently the property must be kept in the house, or concealed in some secret place. Under these circumstances, it is no wonder that a man having great wealth should live in constant dread of its being stolen. There are those who have large treasures concealed in their houses, gardens, or fields; and, the fact being known, they are closely watched, whenever they pay special attention to any particular place or object. The late king of Kandy, after he was taken prisoner, and on his voyage to Madras, was much concerned about some of his concealed treasures, and yet he would not tell where they were. So great is the anxiety of some, arising from the jewels and gold which they keep in their frail houses, that they literally watch a great part of the night, and sleep in the day, that their golden deity may not be taken from them. I knew a man who had nearly all his wealth in gold pagodas, which he kept in a large chest in his bedroom. Neither in body nor in mind did he ever wander far from the precious treasure; his abundance hindered him from sleeping; and for a time it seemed as if it would hinder him from dying; for when that fatal moment came, he several times, when apparently gone, again opened his eyes, and again gave another look at the chest; and one of the last offices of his hands was to make an attempt to feel for the key under his pillow!—Roberts.

18—20. (18) good, etc., if a man has little, let him be content with that little. If he has much, let him enjoy it without excess, and without seeking more. (19) this is the gift of God, the words indicate a return to the sense of dependence on Divine bounty, which we have seen in ii. 24, iii. 13. (20) much remember, or think on; anxiously ponder over. Thankful to God for present good, he enjoys it, and leaves in God's hands the rest. God answereth him, approving of his acts, and giving him the joy of a quiet conscience.^c

The nobleman's jewels.—A rich nobleman was once showing a friend a great collection of precious stones, whose value was almost beyond counting. There were diamonds, and pearls, and rubies, and gems from almost every country on the globe, which had been gathered by their possessor by the greatest labor and expense. "And yet," he remarked, "they yield me no income." His friend replied that he had two stones, which cost him but five pounds each, yet they yielded him a very considerable annual income. And he led him down to the mill, and pointed to the two toiling grey millstones. They were laboriously crushing the grain into snowy flour, for the use of hundreds who depended on this work for their daily bread. Those two dull homely stones did more good in the world and raised a larger income than all the nobleman's jewels. So it is with idle treasure everywhere. It is doing nobody any good. While poor souls are dying of thirst, the money is hoarded and hid away which might take the water of life to them.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1, 2. (1) common, better, "it lies heavy on men." (2) for his soul, here the picture is that of a man who has all outward goods in abundance, but he just lacks that capacity for enjoyment which is (as in ch. v. 20) the "gift of God," and he dies childless and a stranger becomes the heir. We are reminded of the aged patriarch's exclamation, "I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus" (Gen. xv. 2). a stranger, an alien, in whom he has no interest.

III-health, ill-ease (vs. 2).—I. We have here an illustration of a not uncommon lot in life—great wealth, etc., with little power for enjoyment. II. We are reminded that enjoyment is often marred by the misuse of what seems to provide the opportunity. III. It is suggested that this is in accordance with laws of health, and of moral government, which none can break with impunity. IV. We infer that life should be ordered by the will of God.

The poor rich.—You pass a stately mansion, and as the powdered menials are closing the shutters of the brilliant room, and you see the sumptuous table spread and the fire-light flashing on vessels of gold and silver, perhaps no pang of envy pricks your bosom, but a glow of gratulation for a moment fills it. Happy people who tread carpets so soft, and who swim through halls so splendid! But, some future day, when the candles are lighted and the curtains drawn in that self-same apartment, it is your lot to be within; and as the invalid owner is wheeled to his place at the table, and as dainties are handed round of which he dares not taste, and as the guests interchange cold courtesy, and all is stiff magnificence and conventional inanity—your fancy cannot help flying off to some humbler spot with which you are more familiar, and "where quiet with contentment makes her home."—J. Hamilton.

3-5. (3) beget an hundred children, a case is put, the very opposite of that described in the preceding verse. Instead of being childless the rich man may have children, and children's children; may live out all his days. What then? Unless his "soul be filled with good," unless there is the capacity for enjoyment, life is not worth living. Still, as before, "it were good never to have been born." days . . be many, Knobel trans. "and be a great man all his years." no burial,^a i. e. no honorable burial,^b through the absence of all filial esteem for the mean and miserly man. untimely birth, wh. involves never experiencing life at all. (4) he, R. V., "it," i. e. the untimely birth of vs. 3.^c (5) this . . other, i. e. than the avaricious man, who neither knows rest in life or in death.

Daniel Dancer.—This man was remarkable for a miserly disposition. Lady Tempest, the only person who had the least influence over him, one day prevailed on him to purchase a hat (having worn his own for thirteen years) from a Jew for a shilling; but to her great surprise, when she called the next day, she saw that the old chapeau still covered his head. On inquiry, it was found that, after much solicitation, he had prevailed on old Griffiths, his servant, to purchase the hat for eighteenpence, which Mr. Dancer bought the day before for a shilling. He generally, in severe weather, lay in bed to keep himself warm; to light a fire he thought expensive, though he had £3,000 per annum, besides immense riches. He never took snuff, for that was extravagant, but he always carried a snuff-box. This probably he would fill in the course of a month by pinches obtained from others. When the box was full, he would barter the contents for a farthing candle at a neighboring greengrocer's; this candle was made to last until the box was again full, as he never suffered any light in his house except while he was going to bed. He seldom washed his face and hands but when the sun shone forth, then he would betake himself to a neighboring pool, and use sand instead of soap; when he was washed he would lie on his back and dry himself in the sun, as he never used a towel, for that would wear, and, when soiled, the washing was expensive. Fine gold.—I remember once seeing an old merchant, at whose house I was visiting, sitting by himself against the wall. The

"When shall we learn that he who multiplieth possessions multiplieth troubles, and that the one single use of things which we call our own, is that they may be his who hath need of them?" —Thos. Hughes.

"There is a burden of care in getting riches, fear in keeping them, temptation in using them, guilt in abusing them, sorrow in losing them, and a burden of account at last to be given up concerning them." — Matthew Henry.

"There is no self-denial deserving the name that is not willing to give up any privilege of the palate or the passions rather than endanger the least or lowest of God's children." — Bishop Huntington.

^a "For a corpse to lie unburied was a circumstance in itself of peculiar ignominy and shame." — Spk. Com.

^b Isa. lili. 9; Je. xlii. 19.

^c He is a type of the driftless existence of him who makes riches the chief good.

"The wealth of the Cretans consists in health, vigor and courage, domestic quiet, concord, public liberty, plenty of all that is necessary, and contempt of all that is superfluous; a habit of industry, an abhorrence of idleness, an emulation in virtue, submission to the laws, and a reverence of the gods." — Fenelon.

"Worldly wealth is the devil's bait; and those whose minds feed upon riches, recede, in general, from real happiness, in proportion as their stores increase; as the moon when she is fullest of light is farthest from the sun." —Burton.

"Till the soul of man close with, and rest upon, that infinite soul — satisfying good, God reconciled to them in Christ, give it never so much of other things, the appetite will still cry, give, give; the con- sideration where- of should com- vince men that they are miser- able who seek satisfaction in those things wherein it is impossible to find it." —Nisbet.

"A man cannot with the great- est riches make his part good against the ar- rests of sickness or death, but must yield to his fate." —Mat.
Henry.

"One would only be justified in esteeming wealth in case he knew the fu- ture, and had it in his power. The merest chance can sud- denly rob one of all that has been gathered with pain and toil. A great catastro- phe may come, and sweep every- thing away as a flood. The prac- tical result, therefore, is that one should strive after the true riches." — Hengstenberg.

room was filled with guests; music and dancing and merry laughter were all around; but there sat the old man, taking no heed, with his head against the wall. Fearing he was ill, I asked his son about him, and he answered—"He is only thinking about money; he is always like that." — Buxton.

6—8. (6) thousand years, etc., the weariness of life carries the thinker yet further. Carry it to the furthest point conceivable, and still the result is the same. The longer it is, the fuller of misery and woe. The man goes to the same place,—to the dark, dreary world of Sheol,—as the abortive birth, with nothing but an accumulated experience of wretchedness.—Cam. Bib. (7) for his mouth, for self-preservation and enjoyment. eating and drinking being taken as a type of the proper use of earthly blessings. (8) knoweth . . . living, in a modest and contented style.

The Marred Image.—I saw once, lying side by side in a great workshop, two heads made of metal. The one was perfect; all the features of a noble, manly face came out clear and distinct in their lines of strength and beauty; in the other, scarcely a single feature could be recognized; it was all marred and spoiled. "The metal had been let grow a little too cool, sir," said the man who was showing it to me. I could not help thinking how true that was of many a form more precious than metal. Many a young soul that might be stamped with the image and superscription of the King, while it is warm with the love and glow of earthly youth, is allowed to grow too cold, and the writing is blurred, and the image is marred.—Canon Teignmouth Shore.

9, 10. (9) Better, something like the proverb, "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." sight . . . eyes, to enjoy what we actually see, i. e. present opportunities, is better than the cravings of a limitless desire. (10) That which hath been, etc. Stuart, "Th. wh. is, was long ago called by name, and it was known, because he is man, th. he is unable to contend with him who is stronger than he." The folly of striving ag. the arrangements of Providence.

The insatiableness of desire.—I. It consumes the labor of all. II. It affects the characters of all. 1. Intellectual gifts do not argue the absence of desire. 2. Material poverty does not guarantee the absence of desire. III. It disappoints the hopes of all. Lessons. 1. The danger of self-indulgence. 2. The difficulty of keeping the lower nature in subjection. 3. The propriety of preferring present and possible to future and perhaps impossible enjoyments.—Pul. Com.

11, 12. (11) things, those detailed in the previous ch. better, for all the things he seeks so earnestly, and calls so good. (12) good, "Who knows?" was the sceptic's question, then as at all times. After all discussions on the supreme good, some pointing to pleasure, and some to virtue, and some to apathy, who can give a definite and decisive answer? Life remained after all vain, and not worth living. vain life, or life of his vanity.^a Life.—O life, I have enjoyed thee! Not every draught from thy fountain has had a bitter taste; truly, not all upon earth is vanity, if we enjoy not the creature alone, but, in the creature, enjoy also the Creator. But that which sweetens thee do I indeed take with me; and that is, the friendship of my God, which has flowed to me through all created things, as through so many channels. Earthly channels may fail, but He knows how to provide new ones. Gone, gone, is life's enjoyment and sweetness, when we seek them in the creature only; while, on the other hand, they are ever present to those who, in the good things of this life, recognize the hand that bestows them. Thus, every day becomes a treasury and the poorest life may become a rich one. No, I do not look back upon it as mere vanity; but now, when in the silence of my chamber I survey all the past, my heart is filled with a joy which is too great for it to contain.—Tholuck.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

1. good name, or good reputation; as Pr. xxii. 1. "There are three crowns: of the law, the priesthood, and the kingship; but the crown of a good name is greater than them all."—Talmud. In the Heb. there is a play upon the similar words shem, a name, shemen, ointment.^b better, more to be desired.^c ointment, scent, or oil, which is in general use and highly valued in hot climates. day of death, etc., comp. Phil. i. 23. The author by this sentence commends a serious disposition; one that takes into consideration the ending of life.^d "To the man with a good name death is the entrance on a better life."

A good name better than precious ointment.—I. More difficult of acquisition. II. More honorable in possession. 1. An article of greater value in itself. 2. An index of true wealth. 3. A mark of higher dignity. III. More satisfying in enjoyment. IV. More diffusive in influence. V. More enduring in continuance. VI. More blessed in its issue. Lessons.—1. Seek this good name. 2. Cherish it above all earthly distinctions. 3. Guard it from getting tarnished. 4. Walk worthy of it.—Pul. Com. The day of death and the day of birth.—1. The latter begins a life at the longest brief (Ps. xc. 10); the former a life which shall never end (Luke xx. 36). II. The latter ushers into a field of toil (Ps. civ. 23); the former into a home of rest (Rev. xiv. 13). III. The latter admits into a scene of suffering (Job v. 7; xiv. 1); the former in a realm of felicity (Rev. vii. 16). IV. The latter introduces a life of sin (Gen. viii. 21; Job xiv. 4; Ps. li. 5; lviii. 3; Rom. v. 12); the former an existence of holiness (Jude 24; Rev. xxi. 27). V. The latter opens a state of condemnation (Rom. v. 18); the former a state of glory (2 Cor. iv. 17). Lessons.—I. The secret of living well—keeping an eye on the day of one's death (Deut. xxxii. 29; Ps. xc. 12). 2. The secret of dying happily—living in the fear of God (Acts xiii. 36; Phil. i. 21).—Whitelaw.

2, 3. (2) house of mourning, a house where there is mourning for the dead.^a The words manifestly record a personal experience, and lead us to think of the writer as having learnt to "visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction" (Jas. i. 27), and having found that there was some "profit" at least in this. that . . . men, viz., the death wh. they are taking into consideration in the house of mourning.^b lay . . . heart, seriously ponder it and try to learn wise lessons from the brevity of life. (3) Sorrow, not here grief, but rather seriousness.^c laughter, regarded as the expression of thoughtless and boisterous merry-making. sadness, etc., comp. Ps. xc. 12; 2 Cor. vi. 10. "In sadness of countenance there may be a good (cheerful) heart." "There is a moral improvement rising out of sorrow which is not gained from enjoyment however blameless."

Thanks—

How can I count thy mercies up?
What boisterous seas hast thou made calm
What sad sighs changed to joyous psalm;
And what rich wine has filled my cup!
My day and night, my work and rest,
Even my sorrows, thou hast blessed.

Thou gavest, and I took my share
Of pain and trouble, grief and tears,
But ever through the stormiest years
My peace was greater than my care.
Unworthy I! And yet I pray,
O Lord, accept my thanks to-day.

—Marianne Farningham.

4-6. (4) wise, like goes to like. The impulse of the fool takes him to that which promises enjoyment; that of the wise leads him to that which has the promise of a higher wisdom and therefore of a more lasting gain. fools, inconsiderate men, but always in Scripture with the idea of

^b The Heb. words of the sentence are Tob shem mishmen tob.

^c "The honor of virtue is really more valuable and desirable than all the wealth and pleasure in this world." — Mat. Henry.

"The awe and veneration which a good name inspires is the homage which society pays to virtue." — Hom. Com.

^d "A good and reputable name, wh. secures an ideal existence with posterity, is more valuable than all sensual pleasure." — Elster.

^a "In the cemeteries in the neighborhood of Cairo are many private burying grounds, each one belonging to one family; and if the owners be of sufficient wealth, they have erected within them a house of mourning. To this the females of the family repair twice a year, and remain there for three or more days and nights." — Gadsby.

^b The Lord Jesus taught us that times of feasting may be sanctified by giving His presence at the marriage feast in Cana.

^c Comp. godly sorrow, 2 Cor. vii. 10.

^d Illus. fr. case of Rehoboam, 1 Ki. xii. 6—15.

• “Our boat-man’s boy always had to go on shore, and gather sticks, thorns, doura straw, rubbish—anything he could lay his hands upon, for boiling the men’s pot. But these dried thorns, etc., though they make a great noise for a time, soon burn out, and are then quiet enough.”—Gadsby.

a “Sometimes in Egypt bribes are taken from both plaintiff and defendant; and the decision is given in favor of him who pays the highest.”—Lane.

b “Fair beginnings (like Solomon’s) are often belied by what comes after.”—Wordsworth.

“In a subordinate sense this prov. is one of practical and political prudence, and recommends quickness of despatch, and is a warning against tedious prolixity and desultory speaking.”—Lord Bacon.

“It is better quietly to wait the course of an affair until its issue, and not to judge and act until then, than to proceed rashly, and with passionate haste, and bring upon oneself its bad consequences.”—O. Zockler.

c Col. i. 11; He. vi. 12, 15; Jas. v. 7, 8.

“Self-mastery is the basis of sanity. To rule our own spirits, to wilfulness, leading to wickedness. (5) rebuke, etc.,^d comp. Pr. xiii. 18, xv. 31, 32. (6) crackling, etc., noisy for a very brief time.” There is a play of words in the Hebrew, which Wright expresses by translating “Like the noise of the nettles under the kettles.” “Quickly blazing up, and quickly consumed.”

The disguised blessing.—To have a chastened spirit, to have the heart which has been taught of God great spiritual realities, to have had an enlarging and elevating vision of the things which are unseen and eternal, to have been impressed with the transiency of earthly good and with the excellency of “the consolations which are in Christ Jesus,” to be lifted up, if but one degree, toward the spirit and character of the self-sacrificing Lord we serve, to have had some fellowship with the sufferings of Christ,—surely this is incomparably preferable to the most delicious feast or the most hilarious laughter. To go down to the home that is darkened by bereavement or saddened by some crushing disappointment, and to pour upon the troubled hearts there the oil of true and genuine sympathy, to bring such spirits up from the depths of utter hopelessness or overwhelming grief into the light of Divine truth and heavenly promise,—thus “to do good and to communicate” is not only to offer acceptable sacrifice unto God, but it is also to be truly enriched in our own soul.—Pul. Com.

7. oppression, Ps. lxii. 10. Perhaps here the pressure that is put on a wise man, as, for instance, with bribes. By this pressure he may be made mad or foolish enough to turn aside from the right. Some think the reference is to the exercise of tyrannical power by the wise. gift, or bribe. De. xvi. 19.^a heart, i. e. the right intentions of the heart.

The mischief of oppression and bribery.—I. Justice is the only solid foundation for society. II. Oppression, extortion and venality on the part of rulers are incompatible with justice and the public good. III. The special result of corruption and oppression is the furtherance and prevalence of folly and unreason. IV. The duty of all upright men to set their faces against such evil practices.—Thomson.

8—10. (8) Better is the end, bec. the painful uncertainties and toils are over.^b Of course, if a thing is evil in itself, the gnome is not true; we must limit our meaning to good things, or assume that the end must be a good one. patient in spirit, comp. N. T. Greek word, makrothumia, long suffering.^c proud, impatient, hasty, self-confident. (9) angry, better, sensitive, easily offended. resteth, comp. Eph. iv. 26. “A fretful, irritable disposition is mainly found in fools.” (10) former.. better, this question is still often asked, esp. as men grow old. Such complaints are in fact (and this is the link which connects this maxim with the preceding) but another form of the spirit which is hasty to be angry, as with individual men that thwart its wishes, so with the drift and tendency of the times in which it lives. The wise man will rather accept that tendency and make the best of it.

Patience and pride (vs. 8).—I. A patient spirit is more noble than a proud spirit. 1. It sees farther; 2. Is more generous; 3. Suffers less humiliation. II. A patient spirit is more advantageous than a proud spirit. 1. It produces wise counsel; 2. It maintains strong and lasting friendships; 3. It ensures constant co-operation in any good work; 4. It brings about influence and honor for its possessor. III. The patient spirit is more Christlike than the proud. See Jesus—i. Before the proud; 2. With the proud.—Stems and Twigs.

A hasty temper.—La Fontaine, chaplain of the Prussian Army, once preached a very earnest and eloquent sermon on the sin and folly of yielding to a hasty temper. The next day he was accosted by a major of the regiment with the words: “Well, sir! I think you made use of the prerogatives of your office to give me some very sharp hits yesterday.” “I certainly thought of you while I was preparing the sermon,” was the answer; “but I had no intention of being personal or sharp.” “Well, it is of no use,” said the major; “I have a hasty temper, and I cannot help it, and I cannot control it; it is impossible.” And still adhering to this opinion, after some further conversation he went his way. The next Sabbath La Fontaine preached upon self-deception, and the vain excuses which men are wont to make. “Why,” said he, “a man will declare that it is impossible to control his temper, when he very well knows that were the provocation to happen in the presence of his sovereign, he not only could, but would, control himself entirely. And yet he dares to say that the continual presence of the King of kings and Lord of lords impose upon him neither restraint nor fear!"—Anec. illus. of O. T. Texts. J. Bradford and J. Wesley.—Joseph Bradford was for some years the traveling companion of Mr. Wesley, for whom he would have sacrificed health and even life, but to whom his will would never bend, except in meekness. "Joseph," said Mr. Wesley, one day, "take these letters to the post." B. "I will take them after the preaching, sir." W. "Take them now, Joseph." B. "I wish to hear you preach, sir; and there will be sufficient time for the post after service." W. "I insist upon your going now, Joseph." B. "I will not go at present." W. "You won't?" B. "No, sir." W. "Then you and I must part." B. "Very good, sir." The good men slept over it. Both were early risers. At four o'clock the next morning the refractory helper was accosted with, "Joseph, have you considered what I said—that we must part?" B. "Yes, sir." W. "And must we part?" B. "Please yourself, sir." W. "Will you ask my pardon, Joseph?" B. "No, sir." W. "You won't?" B. "No, sir." W. "Then I will ask yours, Joseph." Poor Joseph was instantly melted: smitten as by the word of Moses, when forth gushed the tears, like the water from the rock. He had a tender soul; and it was soon observed when the appeal was made to the heart instead of the head.

11, 12. (11) with an inheritance. R. V., "Wisdom is as good as an inheritance; yea, more excellent is it for them that see the sun;" i. e. the living. (12) defence, lit. "shadow." Those who have wisdom are as well defended as those that have money; and, beyond this, wisdom has its own special advantages. giveth life, animates him. Money may be a blessing on a man's circumstances: wisdom is an additional blessing to the man himself.*

Wisdom and wealth. I. The great power of wealth. 1. What it cannot do. (1) Purchase salvation for the soul (Ps. xlix. 6, 7). (2) Impart happiness to the mind (Luke xii. 15). (3) Secure health for the body (2 Kings v. 1; Luke xvi. 22). 2. What it can do. (1) Defend the body against want and disease, at least partially. (2) Protect the mind against ignorance and error, also again to a limited extent. (3) Shield the heart, once more in a measure, from such anxieties as spring from material causes. II. The greater power of wisdom. 1. It can do things that wealth can. Nay, without it wealth can effect little. (1) It can often do much without wealth to avert want and disease from the body. (2) It can effectually dispel from the mind the clouds of ignorance and error. (3) It can help to keep anxiety altogether from the heart, to sustain the heart in bearing it when it does come, and to direct the heart how most speedily and effectually to get rid of it. 2. It can do things that wealth cannot. It—in its highest form, the fear of the Lord (ch. xii. 13), the wisdom of God (1 Cor. ii. 7), the wisdom which is from above (Jas. iii. 17),—can "preserve the life of him that hath it:" (1) the soul's life, by imparting to it the gift of God, which is eternal life; (2) the mind's life, by flooding it with the light of truth; and (3) the body's life, by communicating to it here on earth length of days and by restoring it at the resurrection to a condition of immortality.

13, 14. (13) work of God, orderings of Divine Providence.^b To "consider the work of God" intelligently is one application of the wisdom which has been praised in verses 11, 12. In so considering, the mind of the Debater goes back to verse 10, and he bids men accept the outward facts of life as they come. If they are "crooked," i. e. crossing and thwarting our inclinations, we cannot alter them.—Cam. B. straight, etc., for the mystery of Providence is that some things appear to us to be made crooked. (14) joyful, prosperous times are sent for our gladdening, and it is proper to rejoice in them. consider, bec. adverse times are just as truly sent to lead to seriousness and review. one . . other i. e. wisely proportioned them, and fitted them together in every life.^c

Themes for the day of adversity (vs. 14).—I. Some themes for saints in the day of adversity. 1. Consider who sends the adversity; 2. Why it is sent; 3. What you have in the day of adversity; 4. What you shall hold every thought, desire and passion in us to its responsibility before reason and conscience, is the only way to maintain that mental and spiritual soundness which gives us the right to be at large as free and responsible beings." — Sunday - School Times.

"The gate is low through which we pass into the distinctions and honors of the kingdom of God."

"That will break a proud man's heart which will not break a humble man's sleep." — Mat. Henry.

* "Rosenmuller and others understand this to mean that wisdom preserves life in safety, or renders life calm and happy; but a deeper meaning is elicited by comparing these words with those of our Lord, 'The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life' (Jno. vi. 63, and see Mat. iv. 4)."—Spk. Com.

Pr. viii. 11, xvi. 16; 2 Ti. iii. 15.

"Wisdom can do without wealth better than wealth can do without wisdom."

^b "Consider that every work of God is wise, just and good, and there is an admirable beauty and harmony in His works, and all will appear at last to have been for the best." — Mat. Henry. De. viii. 2, 5; Ro. viii. 28.

^c "This mixture of good and evil days is by the Div. prov. so proportioned, that it sufficiently justifies the dealings of God towards the sons of men, and obviates all our discontent and murmuring against Him."—Bp. Bull.

"When we are at home with God, in the 'secret place of the Most High,' our painful perplexity subsides in the presence of His love and comfort. The darkness of our sojourn here is but the shadow of His wings."—Leale.

"The suggestion that these vss. are intended to advocate a middle course between sin and virtue is at variance with the whole tenor of the book."—Spk. Com.

"Poss. the author is delivering a precept against straining any one virtue to extremes."—Wordsworth.

"We shape ourselves the joy or fear Of which the coming life is made, And fill our future's atmosphere With sunshine or with shade."

"The tissue of the life to be

We weave with colors all our own. And in the field of destiny We reap as we have sown."—Whittier.

a Pr. x. 27; Ps. 1v. 23; Job. xv. 32. xxi. 16. "A hare and tortoise engaged to run a race; be after the day of adversity; 5. What you need now to glorify God. II. Some themes for sinners in the day of adversity. Consider—1. The joys you have had; 2. What you deserve; 3. Whence your adversity comes; 4. The infinitely greater adversity of lost souls; 5. That Jesus is willing to save in this day of adversity.—Stems and Twigs.

The religion of humanity.—The so-called religion of humanity is simply an international Confucianism, and the theosophy which promises greater things than Christianity itself, if we will only drop the dogma of a personal God, is a religious philosophy already discredited amongst nine-tenths of the populations which have tried it. This attempt to vivify and popularize in our midst an ethic of the East which has a name to live, but has been dead for more than a thousand years, is like an attempt to resuscitate the mummy of Thotmes the Second by hot blankets, smelling salts, and artificial respiration. We do not get our Messiahs in that way. Social duties shorn of their spiritual sanctions, obligation with its central mystery eliminated, hero worship without any sense of the mystic qualities which are the life breath of the purest forms of heroism, will give us a wizened, unprogressive, ideal-proof mandarindom rather than a sublime kingdom of God in which tears are dried, the curse unknown, and knowledge flowing in tides overpassing those of the mighty sea.—British Weekly.

15, 16. (15) All things, i. e. all sorts of things. days . . vanity, such as he gives account of in previous chapters, when he was trying all possible experiences. just, etc., this mysterious association of righteousness and misfortune can be seen in every age. It was the bewilderment of Asaph and of Job. (16) righteous over much, "a warning against the strictly exact but hypocritical and external righteousness of the predecessors of the Pharisees in those days. Do not think thou canst grasp and apprehend these mysteries." destroy thyself, the primary meaning of the verb in the form used here is that of "being amazed, stunned, astonished," and may have been chosen to express the besotted and bedazed spiritual pride which St. Paul paints by the participle "puffed up" in 1 Tim. iii. 5. and which was but too commonly the accompaniment of fancied excellence in knowledge or in conduct.—Cam. B.

Righteous over much (vs. 16).—I. What is the real import of this passage? The thing condemned here is evidently not having too much righteousness, but estimating our righteousness more highly than we ought, and priding ourselves in, and boasting of that which we really do not possess. II. What all of us should learn from the subject before us. 1. The importance of obtaining proper views of our own righteousness; 2. Rightly to appreciate the righteousness of Christ.—W. Snell.

Temptations.—The moral life is beset by visible concrete foes. They are not hobgoblins and will-o'-the-wisps. They are neither creatures of our own fancy nor intangible entities of the air about us. They are realities lying athwart the daily path. The poison of obscene literature creeps into the remotest hamlet. The next man you meet and with whom you establish a fellowship may prove a dangerous companion leading you on to recklessness and ruin. The college banquet with its good cheer and comradeship may offer one youth the temptations which another, differently bred, finds in the brilliantly lighted saloon. It is not the submerged tenth, alone, to whom the earliest steps in righteousness are steps up and away from the tangible things that pollute and enslave. Every one who chooses the moral life must count on the presence of such foes, not only at the outset, but all along his Christian pilgrimage.—Howard A. Bridgman.

17, 18. (17) over much wicked, maliciously wicked. All are wicked from frailty, some are wicked in willfulness. Such cannot escape the due penalties. die . . time, sinful indulgence surely shortening life. (18) take . . this, i. e. this counsel. And the "fear of God" is the only sufficient security from both extremes, of self-righteousness and self-indulgence.

The warning despised.—A minister in the neighborhood of Birmingham recently stated, in one of his discourses, the following fact. A deacon of a Christian church was walking, one Sabbath day, to the house of God, when he saw a young man, with whom he had some slight acquaintance, come out of an inn and mount his horse. "Can you tell me, deacon," said he, jocosely, "how far it is to hell?" The deacon paused, reflected for a moment, then replied, "It is not far off. You may come to it sooner than you expect." The young man laughed, put spurs to his horse, and was soon out of sight. The deacon walked gently on, and as the road made a turn saw a crowd before him. Coming up to the spot, he saw the young man to whom he had just before spoken the words of warning, lying a corpse upon the ground. His horse had become restive and unmanageable, and thrown his rider, who, falling on his head, was killed upon the spot.—Bib. Treas.

19, 20. (19) strengtheneth, etc., Pr. xxi. 22, xxiv. 5; Eccl. ix. 13—16. Wise statesmen may do more than generals. (20) For, R. V. "surely," just, a perfectly righteous, or perfectly wise, see vs. 16. sinneth not, comp. Ro. iii. 9—18; 1 Jno. i. 8. Even the just man sinneth and therefore needs wisdom. A Greek proverb runs thus, "Erreth at times the very wisest man."

Dying like a Christian.—Anne de Montmorency, constable of France, having been mortally wounded at an engagement, was exhorted by those who stood around him to die like a good Christian, and with the same courage which he had shown in his lifetime. To this he most nobly replied in the following manner: "Gentlemen and fellow soldiers! I thank you all very kindly for your anxious care and concern about me; but the man who has been enabled to endeavor to live well for fourscore years past can never need to seek now how to die well for a quarter of an hour. But observe, my having been enabled to endeavor to live well, is not the ground of my dependence; no, my sole dependence is on Jesus Christ. It is by the grace of God, through Him, that I now am what I am."—Whitecross.

Conqueror—

Bright and glorious shines the crown
Of the monarch of the field
Who has conquered every foe
And was never known to yield.
Brighter glows the nobler crown
Of the man who in the strife
Bravely fights and conquers self
On the battle-field of life.

J. E. D.

21, 22. (21) take, etc., counsel based on the consideration that all are sinners. Many things will be said by imperfect folk which you will be wiser not to hear or heed. Do not be curious to hear how people judge thee. "A warning against idle curiosity, and latent desire of praise." (22) curse others, spoken evil of. The sense of our own frailty should ever make us considerate toward others.

Verse 21.—The wise man who remembers his own mistakes and offences will judge leniently of others, and not punish them as offenders for their occasional hasty words. Indifference to idle praise or idle blame becomes the possessor of true wisdom. For him, to use St. Paul's words, "It is a very small thing to be judged of man's judgment" (1 Cor. iv. 3). An idle curiosity to know what others think of us or say of us is the source of constant mortification. We expect praise, and forget that others are as frivolous and hasty in their criticism of us as we have been of our criticism of them. The servant who waits on us, and from whom we expect special reverence, would probably, if we could hear him without his knowledge, say much about us that would surprise and mortify us. Let us therefore not be too eager to hear our character analyzed and discussed. Some excuse may be found for the motto of the old Scottish family which expresses this indifference to the opinion of others in the most pointed form: "They say. What say they? Let them say."

23, 24. (23) proved, or found out. This is some of the fruit of his dearly-bought experience. wise, he wanted to be perfectly, absolutely wise. "Practical rules of life he might gain, and had mastered, but essential, absolute wisdom was beyond mortal grasp. Man's knowledge but the hare, depending on the swiftness of his foot, delayed in starting off upon the proposed race so long that the tortoise reached the goal, and won the prize through its perseverance, though slow in its motion."—John Bate.

"The true heroes of our race are spiritual men, who have felt and dared to utter great truths. Other heroes have conquered enemies, yet have themselves been vanquished by deadlier foes! Spiritual men alone have conquered all. 'The good fight of faith,' is the only one that leads to any satisfactory and permanent result." — Hom. Com.

"The man of one book is always formidable; but when that one book is the Bible, he is irresistible." — W. M. Taylor.

"Christ's mastery of you will give you self-mastery." — T. L. Cuyler.

b "As therefore thou, being far from perfectly 'just' thyself, hast much to be forgiven by God, do not take too strict account, as the self-righteous do, of words spoken against thee by others." — Fausset.

"Pompey showed his wisdom and magnanimity when the papers of his enemy Sertorius were brought to him, by ordering them all to be burnt." — Ld. Bacon.

^a Ro. xi. 33.

"The books wh. once we valued more than the apple of the eye we have quite exhausted. What is that but saying that we have come up with the point of view which the universal mind took through the eyes of one scribe; we have been that man, and have passed on." —Emerson.

^c "Thevenot says there is a custom amongst the Arabs, in some parts, of sending out, in a way where travelers are expected, a handsome woman, in tears, and with her hair dishevelled. The passing traveler pities her, takes her behind him on his beast; then she throws a cord about his neck and strangles him, or holds him until the robbers come." —Gadsby.

Comp. 1 Kl. xi. 1—8; Pr. ii. 16—19, v. 3, etc.

^a Both Burckhardt and Lane give the women of Cairo a sad character for immorality; and no wonder, considering the surroundings in which they are educated, and the evil influence of the system of polygamy.

^b "Man has visibly lost his way, and feels in himself some relics of a happy state fr. wh. he is fallen, and wh. he cannot recover. He seeks it everywhere with restlessness, and unsuccessfully in impenetrable darkness." —Pascal.

and capacity are limited." 24) That . . far off, R. V., "That which is is far off," viz., the very innermost essence of wisdom.^b

We know in part.—Our study of the mysteries of God, man, and nature, is not altogether barren of results. We are able to "know in part." We gather a few facts, and by a kind of prophetic insight, frame those portable and convenient statements of them called hypotheses and laws. But even the wisest must confess that the ultimate mystery is as far off as ever. There are some fixed stars whose distance is so great, that when observed from the extremes of the diameter of the earth's orbit, they show no change of direction; thus affording no data for the calculation of their distances. If we could get nearer to them, then we should discover how far off they are. He who has approached the nearest to the great secrets of God and this universe, is most of all conscious how distant he is from absolute wisdom.—Hom. Com.

25, 26. (25) the reason, to get an insight into the inner meaning and purpose of things good and bad. "The right estimation of things." know the wickedness, R. V. "know that wickedness is folly, and that foolishness is madness." (26) I find, etc., Pr. xxii. 14.^c It might, perhaps, be pleaded in reference to this verse that the writer speaks of one class of women only, probably that represented in the pictures of Prov. ii. or vii., but the next verses make the condemnation yet more sweeping. pleaseth God, the God-fearing and just man.

Wickedness of folly.—To know the wickedness of folly, the wickedness and foolishness of madness, seems equivalent to knowing the worst species of it. In his own wild career he had come in contact with folly, and he had himself wrought folly of many sorts. And now, comparing all these one with another, so as to ascertain to which of them the pre-eminence of evil should be assigned, this was the conclusion at which he had arrived. These terribly significant words point plainly to the same seducer of whose base and destructive arts so startling a picture is given in Chap. vii. of the Book of Proverbs.—Buchanan. Good and evil.—That which is truly good is more clearly seen when we consider the evil that is contrary to it. The beauty of holiness, and excellency of saving knowledge, is illustrated, and best seen, when the deformity of sin, the madness and unreasonableness of those courses which natural men take to come at their imaginary happiness, are compared therewith.

27—29. (27) one by one, "the words remind us, on the one hand, of Diogenes the Cynic, with his lantern, looking for an honest man at Athens, and answering, when asked where such men might be found, that good men were to be found nowhere, and good boys only in Sparta; and on the other, of Jeremiah's search to see 'if there were any in Jerusalem that sought after God.' (Jer. v. 1—5)." (28) one man, "whose good qualities satisfy expectations." woman, etc., it appears that, at the present day, the immodesty, ignorance, and degradation of the women in Eastern harems is painful to contemplate.^a (29) upright, Ge. i. 27. inventions,^b tricks, conceits, evil artifices. No reference is intended to scientific inventions and discoveries.

None good.—The Preacher's finding was incorrect if designed as a universal negative, in the sense that, while in a thousand men, taken at random, one might be found good, in a thousand women similarly taken not one could be found entitled to be so characterized. The best refutation of such woman-hating utterances is to point to "the numerous examples of noble women mentioned in Old Testament Writ, and of the devoted heroines of New Testament days, "whose names stand forth conspicuously side by side with those of men, in the muster-roll of the noble army of martyrs."—Whitelaw.

Back, then, complainer, loathe thy life no more,
Nor deem thyself upon a desert shore,

Because the rocks the nearer prospect close.

Yet in fallen Israel are there hearts and eyes,

That day by day in prayer like thine arise;

Thou knowest them not, but their Creator knows.

Go, to the world return, nor fear to cast

Thy bread upon the waters, sure at last

In joy to find it after many days.—Keble.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1-3. (1) Who . . man? whatever be the outward circumstances, the Preacher intimates that the wise man has the best of it. interpretation, has some insight into the meaning of things. a face to shine, lit. "illuminates his face." The word paints with a wonderful vividness the almost transfiguring effect of the "sweetness and light" of a serene wisdom, or of the joy that brightens a man's countenance when he utters his Eureka over the solution of a long-pondered problem. boldness, R. V., "hardness of his face is changed." Stuart, "but haughtiness disfigureth his face." (2) oath of God, oath of allegiance taken at the king's accession. Kings were regarded as God's anointed. "An oath of God is an oath made with an appeal to God as witness." (3) hasty . . sight, do not in sudden anger break away from allegiance. stand not, i. e. do not persist in. whatsoever, etc., the Eastern king is independent and uncontrolled.

A wise man's superiority.—In what does it consist? I. In penetration of intellect. In particular he has insight into: 1. The secrets of nature. 2. The events of history. 3. The wonders of revelation. 4. The mysteries of grace. II. In elevation of character. "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine." The wise man's face shines because of three things: 1. The light of truth in his understanding. 2. The light of purity in his heart. 3. The light of life in his conscience.—Whitelaw.

Transformation.—We must all of us have known cases in which true piety and wisdom, such as is learned from Christ, have had this refining and transforming influence; persons of little ordinary education or culture, to whom religion has given really new intellectual power, and whose tranquillity and peace of spirit has given an air of heavenly serenity to their whole bearing and manner. And, indeed, in every case a holy disposition of mind has a refining effect upon those who cherish it. The face is an index to the character, and if the emotions that are expressed upon it are pure and worthy, they cannot fail in time to transform it in some measure—to tone down what may have been its natural harshness, and to banish from it all traces of coarse and sensual passions. An example of religion giving intellectual power, or rather of drawing out the faculties which but for it would have remained unexercised, we may see in the life of John Bunyan. The genius which is so marvellously displayed in his works, and which gives him a high place in the literature of his country, would never have shown itself but for the wonderful change in his life, when, from being a profane, careless, godless fellow, he became a true-hearted servant of Christ.—J. Willcock.

Face medicine.—A Hindoo trader in Kherwara market once asked Pema, "What medicine do you put on your face to make it shine so?" Pema answered, "I don't put anything on." "No; but what do you put on?" Nothing. I don't put anything on." "Yes, you do. All you Christians do; I have seen it in Agra, and I've seen it in Ahmedabad and Surat, and I've seen it in Bombay." Pema laughed, and his happy face shone the more as he said, "Yes, I'll tell you the medicine; it is happiness of heart."—Ch. Miss. Gleaner.

4, 5. (4) What doest thou? the despot stands, or thinks he stands, as much above the questionings and complaints of his subjects, as the Supreme Ruler of the Universe does above those of men in general. (5) feel . . thing, be influenced by no seditious or rebellious schemes. time and judgment, for influencing the king, and securing the due modification of his schemes. There is no intended reference here to the doctrine of a general judgment.

Divine Right.—As is well known, both the words of the Preacher, and the teaching of St. Paul in the thirteenth chapter of Romans, have been taken as laying down the rule of passive obedience for all subjects in all circumstances. However cruel the despot, the duty of subjects to a "Can solve the problem of God's dispensations with a nation."—Wordsworth.

b "In presence of a king it is proper to appear modest and yet firm, to show ourselves neither over timid nor obstinate towards him."—Ewald.

"Many a poet, and seer, and martyr, and reformer, and woman of the finest fibre has at times had a face that has looked like porcelain with a light behind it."—Joseph Cook.

"The beauty of the human face divine" lies in its expression. The light of wisdom within beams in the countenance, imparting to it the attractive aspect of intelligence and sensibility. It is a mild and lovely light. It does not dazzle and overpower by the studied brilliance of self-display, but with soft and gentle radiance inspires delight, and wins affection; for of genuine wisdom, self-diffident humility is the invariably associate. Such wisdom gives to the countenance the expression both of dignity and grace."—Wardlaw.

"As for my death, I bless God I feel and find so much inward joy and comfort to my soul, that if I were put to my choice whether I would die or live, I would a thousand times rather choose death than life, if it may stand with the holy will of God."—Edward Deering.

a "A heavy misfortune visits him as a well-deserved punishment, and he falls a victim of his foolish effort to struggle against the Divinely-sanctioned ordinances of this world." — O. Zoekler.

"The trivial round, the common task, Will furnish all we ought to ask, Room to deny ourselves, a road To bring us daily nearer God." — John Keble.

a This entire clause from vs. 2 prob. concerns disobedience and disloyalty towards authority.

If the Church of Christ on earth were but what its name professes, soon would the weary world see where all its wants would find supply, and turn to him for whose love it is that it faints, and is so wretched and woebegone. — Pul. Com.

a "Their being at last overtaken by death and oblivion, shows their lot also to be vanity." — Spk. Com.

Wordsworth refers in illustration to the death of Jeroboam.

b "They see not the smoke of the pit, therefore they dread not the fire." — South.

"Because a vicious man escapes at present, he is apt to draw false conclusions from it, and from the delay of God's punishments in this life, either to conceive them at so remote a obey him implicitly, and to make no attempt to deprive him of his power, has been held by many to be clearly laid down by the Word of God. And great stress has been laid upon the fact that the ruler of the civilized world, when St. Paul wrote the Epistle to the Romans, was Nero, one of the most infamous and cruel tyrants who ever wore the purple. In England during the seventeenth century, when the question of the prerogative of the sovereign and the rights and duties of subjects engaged the attention of all, these portions of Scripture were often interpreted to teach that the king's will was by right, and by the authority of God's Word, above all charters and statutes and acts of parliament, and that no misuse of his power could justify rebellion against him. But those who took up this ground forgot or ignored the fact that kings have duties towards their subjects, that coronation oaths bind them to keep the laws; and that St. Paul, in the very same place in which he commands subjects to obey, describes the kind of rule which has an absolute claim upon their allegiance.—Pul. Com.

6, 7. (6) misery of man, i. e. of the man who, neglecting to take the right time and the right way, opposes the king's will, and so rouses the king's anger. (7) when, better, "how." He does not wisely estimate the consequences of his rebellious action.

Life and death.—Death was to the Romans the end of sensation and pleasure; yet, instead of regarding the emblems of it with aversion, they rather sought in them a higher relish for present enjoyment. A skeleton was not infrequently introduced among the guests at festive parties, with the exhortation,—"Vivamus dum licet esse bene"—"Let us enjoy life while we may." It is related of the Egyptians, by Herodotus and others, that in order to prevent irregularities at their convivial meetings, and to give some check to excessive mirth, they were used to bring into the room after supper, when they began their wine, the image of a dead man carved in wood, or a coffin, probably containing the embalmed remains of some ancestor of the family. This spectacle was presented to each of the company by a person whose office it was to pronounce distinctly the following words: "Look upon this, and be merry; for such as this, when dead, shalt thou be."—J. Watts.

8, 9. (8) to retain the spirit, the word for "spirit" may mean either "the wind" or the "breath of life" in man. Taking the former, man is powerless to control the course of the wind, so is he powerless to control the drift of things that is bearing him on to his inevitable doom. no discharge, seldom any for the soldier when called to the battle; none for the man when called to die. So man is wholly dependent on God. His life is wholly in God's hands. There may, however, still be reference to the anger of the king, wh. commands the execution of the over-bold servant and will by no means change his purpose. (9) to his own hurt, should be, "to his hurt"; i. e. to the injury of the subject.

The contemplation of human life (vs. 9).—I. This contemplation of human life should be with reference to God. II. With reference to the object of forming a true estimate of human nature. III. With reference to the illustration and confirmation of religious belief. IV. With reference to the faithful correction of ourselves. V. Think of what men are doing under the sun, and what they will be doing, ere long, somewhere else.—J. Foster.

10, 11. (10) and so I saw the wicked, etc., a very difficult passage. Stuart translates: "And then I saw the wicked buried, for they had departed, even from a holy place [Jerusalem] did they go away [were borne out to burial]; and then they were forgotten," etc. The sentiment is: The triumphing of the wicked is short. They die and are forgotten. (11) speedily, immediately upon the sentence being pronounced. Long-suffering patience is presumed on by those whose hearts are evil. "A very common reason for the increase of crime and wickedness." Ro. ii. 4, 5; 2 Pe. iii. 8, 9.

The abuse of Divine forbearance (vs. 11).—I. Sin is deservedly called an evil work; it degrades and defiles the soul; there is a sentence recorded against it. II. Sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily; if it were, this would cease to be a state of probation—God would be the destroyer rather than the governor of the world. III. The depravity of man turns Divine clemency into presumption. 1. Nothing can be more vile or base than this abuse; 2. Be assured nothing will be more fatal.—W. Jay.

Judgment of God.—We may see a rough image of this suspension of the Divine vengeance against sin, and of the real terrors of that suspension, which only a timely repentance can avert, in the mountain torrent swollen by the melting of the winter's snow. At first a sudden fuller flow announces to the inhabitants of the valley that the thaw has commenced. But the increasing of the waters suddenly ceases, not to the contentment, but to the alarm of the inhabitants of the valley below. It inspires their fears and arouses their energies. Instantly they sally out with axe and hook and cord. Mark how eagerly they climb the rugged slippery hill. They know that the present quietude of the torrent tells of future disaster. It is a plain indication to them that some tree has floated down the current, and by the whirling of the waters in the narrow channel has been forced athwart the stream; that there is being rapidly constructed a natural dam, behind which the flood will gather, and seethe, and swell, and rage, with ever-increasing fury, until it carries all before it, and bursts with devastating volume and force on the farms and fields, below, and the purpose of those men who are hastening upwards is to let out the flood before it has assumed these dangerous proportions. In like manner the guilty and impenitent have as little reason to be at ease, "because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily."—R. A. Bertram.

12, 13. (12) prolonged, with a Divine patience and long-suffering that may seem to be inexplicable. which fear before him," not mere repetition but as it were, "when I say 'God-fearing' I mean those that do fear God in reality as well as name." (13) a shadow," where there is but a brief sunset, the shadows pass very swiftly. feareth . . . God, the underlying teaching of this book is that it is every way better, for this life, to fear and serve God. "Honorable age is not that which standeth in length of time nor that which is measured by the number of years." See ch. xii. 13.

Five fears (vs. 12).—There is—I. The fear caused by an awakening conscience. II. The fear of anxiety. III. A fear which works caution. IV. The fear of jealousy. V. The fear which is felt when we have had Divine manifestations.—Spurgeon.

Thy loving kindness.—

Not always the path is easy;
There are thickets hung with gloom,
There are rough and stony places,
Where never the roses bloom.
But oft when the way is hardest,
I am conscious of One at my side,
Whose hands and whose feet are wounded,
And I'm happy and safe with my Guide.

Beter than friends and kindred,
Better than love and rest,
Dearer than hope and triumph,
Is the name I wear on my breast.
I feel my way through the shadows,
With a confident heart and brave,
I shall live in the light beyond them,
I shall conquer death and the grave.

Often when tried and tempted,
Often, ashamed of sin,
That, strong as an armed invader,
Has made wreck of the peace within,
That wonderful loving kindness,
Patient and full and free,
Has stooped for my consolation,
Has brought a blessing to me.

distance, or perhaps so uncertain, that, though he has some doubtful misgivings of the future, yet he hopes, in the main, that his fears are greater than his danger." — Sterne.

a Ps. xxxvii. 11, 18—20; Is. xli. 10, 11.

b Job xiv. 2; Ps. cxi. 11, cix. 23.

"When the Orientals wish to pay you a very high compliment, they say, 'May your shadow never decline,' or incline rather, it should be. That is—'May you live for ever;' for if the shadow does not incline, life must continue." — Gadsby.

"Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell The dear Lord ordereth all things well!"
—J. G. Whittier.

"In vain do they talk of happiness who never subdued an impulse in obedience to a principle. He who never sacrificed a present to a future good, or a personal to a general one, can speak of happiness only as the blind do of colors." — Horace Mann.

"The mind naturally makes progress, and the will naturally clings to objects; so that for want of right objects it will attach itself to wrong ones." — Pascal.

c Ps. lxxiii. 14.

"Since the unequal distribution of human destiny points to the future character of all earthly occurrences and conditions, we must so much the more enjoy present happiness, and profit by it with a contented mind."—O. Zockler.

"The equality of result for the evil and just is only an external and partial one. To those whom God loves everything must be for the best, and the final issue separates the evil from the good."—Hengstenberg.

I believe:—
Because my brother said That since the fowls are fed,
Who sow not,
neither reap;
And since when lilies sleep
And toil not,
neither spin,
They wake apparelled in Far finer robes than kings:
It must be each day brings From God, who takes such heed,
All which his children need."
—Helen Hunt
Jackson.

a Ps. cxlvii. 5;
Ro. xi. 33.

"There is no fuller statement in Ecc. of the incapacity of every man with his finite understanding to comprehend the plans and operations of the Infinite and Eternal God."—Spk. Com.

Therefore my lips shall praise thee,
Therefore, let come what may,
To the height of a solemn gladness
My song shall arise to-day.
Not on the drooping willow,
Shall I hang my harp in the land,
When the Lord himself has cheered me,
By the touch of his pierced hand.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

14, 15. (14)* just .. wicked,* a modern writer, we feel, would have pruned, condensed, and avoided such a repetition of himself. We are dealing, however, with "Thoughts" like Pascal's Pensées, rather than with a treatise, jotted down, it may be, day by day, as has been said before, on his tablets or his papyrus, and there is, as has been said before, something significant in the fact that, wherever the thinker turns, the same anomalies stare him in the face.—Cam. Bib. (15) mirth, or a bright and cheerful enjoyment of present things. "He would have us cheerfully to enjoy what God has given us in the world, to be content with it, and to make the best of it." abide with him, a man may keep a cheerful disposition under all changes of outward circumstances.

A misunderstood providence and a mistaken judgment.—I. The misunderstood providence. 1. The providence is undeniable. 2. It is inevitable. 3. It is mysterious. 4. It is symbolic. 5. It is misunderstood. II. The mistaken judgment. 1. The judgment is wrong. 2. The reason is doubtful. Learn: 1. To trust God even in the darkest and most mysterious providence. 2. To rejoice in God rather than in any of his creatures.—Whitelaw.

Facetiousness.—Such facetiousness is not absolutely unreasonable or unlawful which ministereth harmless divertisement and delight to conversation (harmless, I say,—that is, not intrenching upon piety, not infringing charity or justice, not disturbing peace). For Christianity is not so tetrical, so harsh, so envious, as to bar us continually from innocent, much less from wholesome and useful pleasure, such as human life doth need or require. And if jocular discourse may serve to good purposes of this kind; if it may be apt to raise our drooping spirits, to allay our irksome cares, to whet our blunted industry, to recreate our minds, being tired and cloyed with graver occupations; if it may breed alacrity, or maintain good-humor among us; if it may conduce to sweeten conversation and endear society, then it is not inconvenient or unprofitable. If for those ends we may use other recreations, employing on them our ears and eyes, our hands and feet, our other instruments of sense and motion; why may we not as well to them accommodate our organs of speech and interior sense? Why should those games which excite our wits and fancies be less reasonable than those whereby our grosser parts and faculties are exercised? Yea, why are not those more reasonable, since they are performed in a manly way, and have in them a smack of reason; seeing also they may be so managed, as not only to divert and please, but to improve and profit the mind, rousing and quickening it, yea, sometimes enlightening and instructing it, by good sense conveyed in jocular expression?—J. Barrows.

All's well.—

The year's at the spring
And day's at the morn;
Morning's at seven;
The hillside's dew-pearled;
The lark's on the wing;
The snail's on the thorn;
God's in his heaven—
All's right with the world!

—Browning.

16, 17. (16) business, with special reference to the anxious search of men after happiness, and after the perfect knowledge. seeth sleep, or enjoyeth sleep. Extreme anxiety and care will prevent sleep. The preacher prob. gives his own personal experience. (17) cannot find out,* so as to explain all the irregularities and mysteries. "From it [the knowledge of our ignorance] we may learn with what temper of mind a man ought to inquire into the subject of religion, namely, with what expectation of finding difficulties, and with a disposition to take up and rest satisfied with any evidence whatever which is real. A man should beforehand expect things mysterious, and such as he will not be able thoroughly to comprehend or go to the bottom of."—Bp. Butler. "Our ignorance is the proper answer to many things wh. are called objections against religion."

Lessons from verses 16, 17.—I. The fact that the thoughtful man is baffled in his endeavor to comprehend God's ways, and to comprehend human life and destiny. II. This is just what is to be expected from a consideration of (1) man's finite nature, and (2) God's infinite wisdom. III. The profitableness of this arrangement. 1. It tends to raise our thought of God to a juster elevation. 2. It calls forth (1) humility, (2) submission, and (3) faith. 3. It makes the future infinitely interesting and attractive. What we know not here we shall know hereafter. Now we know as in a mirror, dimly; then, face to face.

God is good.—

Thou who sendest sun and rain,
Thou who sendest bliss and pain,
Good with bounteous hand bestowing, Evil, for thy will allowing,— Though thy ways we cannot see,
All is just that comes from thee.—Bayard Taylor.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1-3. (1) in the hand of God, i. e. they are wholly dependent on Him, they are not able to control, and shape as they please, their own life. no man knoweth, etc., R. V., "whether it be love or hatred, man knoweth it not; all is before them." love or hatred,^a i. e. as things are, no man knows by the outward events of his life whether he is the object of God's favor or displeasure. all . . . before them, i. e. all that shall happen, all that shall shape their destiny in the future, is obscure and unknown, and beyond their control. (2) All . . . alike to all, this is only superficially true. It is only true of the common earthly conditions. (3) heart . . . evil,^b the pessimism of the thinker returns once more upon him, and he falls into the strain which we have heard before in chs. ii. 14-16, iii. 19, v. 15, vi. 12. The great leveller comes and sweeps away all distinctions, and there is no assured hope of immortality. Life is "evil" even while it lasts, and death is the same for all, when the curtain drops on the great drama.—Cam. B.

A prayer.—

Dear Lord, if mine shall be a hidden way,
To toil unseen, unknown, my lot,
For grace to crave not men's applause I pray;
To work, to watch, to trust, to doubt thee not.
Thy promise, Lord, fulfil to me;
"My grace shall still suffice for thee."

Dear Lord, if mine shall be an honored place,
If I shall stand in public view,
Still greater, then, my need of thy free grace
To keep me humble, Lord, and ever true.
Fulfil thy promise, then, to me;
"My grace shall still suffice for thee."

Dear Lord, wherever thou shalt lead the way,
To service far, or service near,

"Wait, nor against the half-learned lesson fret, Nor chide at old belief as if it erred.
Because thou canst not reconcile as yet
The worker and the word."
—Jean Ingelow.

a "Hatred in Scrip. is not always to be understood rigorously. It frequently signifies no more than a lesser degree of love."—Cruden.

b "Men incline to say, 'If it must be a short life, then let it be a merry one.'
So they say when no light of the life to come shines upon the life that now is."—R. Tuck.
Ecc. viii. 11.

"A characteristic of the first disciples was that they promptly obeyed the Master's call. It will be a good year for any one who, hearing Christ's invitation to yet nobler, richer, and more beautiful life, will rise at once and go after him."—
Anon.

c Is. xxxviii. 18, 19; Comp. Ps. vi. 5, xxx. 9. lxxviii 11, cxv. 17; Ecc. ix. 10.

d 1 Sa. xxiv. 14.

e Pr. xxx. 30.

"The meanest beggar alive has that comfort of this world, and does that service to it which the greatest prince, when he is dead, is utterly incapable of."—Mat. Henry.

f Job xiv. 10—14.

g Wordsworth thinks that Sol. here adopts the language of the worldly libertine. "If this is thy estimate of human destiny, and if thou wilt confine thy view to the perishable things of this life, then take up with the language of those who say, 'Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die.'" a Ge. xxvii. 25; Ps. civ. 15.

b The constant fellowship of one kindred spirit is an important element in the enjoyment of the earthly life.

c Wordsworth, following Hengstenberg and Ewald, gives a singular turn to this passage, "Let might be right with thee. Care nothing for God or man, but use thy strength according to thy will." He regards the counsel as addressed to worldly politicians.

d "Harvest days are busy days. And we must make hay while the sun shines."—Mat. Henry.

I pray for grace to follow day by day,—
To follow trusting, and forgetting fear.
Thy promise, Lord, fulfil to me;
"My grace shall still suffice for thee."

—E. C. Anderson.

4—6. (4) joined . . living, i. e. who still lives on the earth. Dread of death as the ending of the earthly life is expressed even by O. T. saints.^c dog, in O. T. a metaphor of the vilest persons.^d lion, regarded as the noblest of the animals.^e The vilest and meanest creature possessed of life is better than the highest and mightiest which has succumbed to death. (5) know . . die, and while this may distress, it also gives opportunity for amendment, and impulse to goodness. a reward, of even living long in the memories of those who knew them. The dead are soon forgotten. (6) perished, ended and done. It was all earthly, and from earth they have passed. under the sun, the writer confines his attention to the connections of the dead with this world, he tells nothing of their future state.^f The thought of the state of the dead stands on nearly the same level as that of the elegy of Hezekiah (Is. xxxviii. 9-20).

Life is everything.—I. An earnest student is better than a dead weight of learning. II. An awakened conscience is better than unconsecrated genius. III. One living soul is better than a stagnant Church. IV. One living Church is better than a large community that has lost its spiritual energy.—Clarkson.

7, 8. (7) Go, etc.,^g in this passage the writer renews the advice of ch. viii. 15. Cheerfully and contentedly accept your present lot and get as much good as you can out of it. wine, used as a symbol and producer of joy.^h accepteth thy works, the works are the eating and drinking just mentioned. By the constitution of man's nature, and by the ordering of Providence, such capacity of enjoyment is allowable, and there need be no scruple in using it.—Pul. Com. (8) always white, the kind of garments suitable to joyousness and festivity. no ointment, oil and perfumes were used on festive occasions not only among Eastern nations, but by Greeks and Romans; in time of distress or grief the anointing of the body was neglected.

Customs of modern Arabs.—The customs of the Arabs in almost every detail have remained unchanged. Thus in dress, nomadic habits, goods, the anointing with oil, they retain the habits and formalities of the distant past, and the present is but the exact picture of those periods which are historically recorded in the Old Testament. "Let thy garments be always white, and let thy head lack no ointment."—Sir S. Baker.

9, 10. (9) the wife, thy one wife.^b A possible commendation of the advantages of monogamy over polygamy. for that, etc., reverting to his idea that the enjoyment of life is all that is now possible to man. (10) with thy might,^c i. e. earnestly: put all your heart into it.^d "In accordance with what has been already said, and to combat the idea that, as man cannot control his fate, he should take no pains to work his work, but fold his hands in resigned inaction, Koheleth urges him not to despair, but to do his part manfully as long as life is given, and with all the energies of his soul carry out the purpose of his being." no work, comp. Jno. ix. 4. device, or plan. Comp. the Christian view of the grave, now that "life and immortality have been brought to light."

Words to a worker.—I. The worker described: man. 1. Furnished with capacities for work. 2. Located in a sphere of work. 3. Appointed to the destiny of work. 4. Impelled by a desire of work. II. The worker counselled: 1. To do the duty that lies nearest. 2. To do every duty with energy. 3. To do each duty from an impulse of individual responsibility. 4. To do all duties under a sense of the value of time.—Whitelaw.

Christian workers of the past.—Adam Clarke.—Dr. Adam Clarke said that "the old proverb about having too many irons in the fire is an abominable lie. Have all in it—shovel, tongs, and poker!" It is not so much the multiplicity of employments as the want of system in them that distracts and injures both the work and the workman.—Wesley.—Wesley said, "I am always in haste, but never in a hurry; leisure and I have long taken leave of each other." He traveled about 5,000 miles in a year; preached about three times a day, commencing at five o'clock in the morning, and his published works amounted to about 200 volumes.—Asbury and Coke.—Asbury traveled 6,000 miles a year, and preached incessantly. Coke crossed the Atlantic eighteen times, preached, wrote, traveled, established missions, begged from door to door for them, and labored in all respects as if, like the Apostles, he would “turn the world upside down.” At near seventy years of age he started to Christianize India!—Luther.—It is said that Luther preached almost daily; he lectured constantly as a professor; he was burdened with the care of all the churches; his correspondence, even as now extant, fills many volumes; he was perpetually harassed with controversies, and was one of the most voluminous writers of his day.—Calvin.—The same, and even more, may be said of Calvin. While in Strasburg he preached or lectured every day. In Geneva he was pastor, professor, and almost magistrate. He lectured every other day; on alternate weeks he preached daily; he was overwhelmed with letters from all parts of Europe, and was the author of works numerous and bulky, that any man of our day would think more than enough to occupy his whole undivided time. And all this, too, in the midst of perpetual infirmity of the flesh.

Help that comes too late.—

Ah! woe for the word that is never said
Till the ear is deaf to hear,
And woe for the lack to the fainting head
Of the ringing shout of cheer.
Ah! woe for the laggard feet that tread
In the mournful wake of the bier.

For baffling most in this dreary world,
With its tangles great and small,
Its lonesome nights and its weary days,
And its struggles forlorn with fate,
Is that bitterest grief, too deep for tears,
Of the help that comes too late.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

11, 12. (11) race, etc.,^a he is still looking gloomily at life. Now he suggests that there is no certain advantage to the diligent and the earnest. Even when working “with our might” we must cherish the feeling that the results of our work are uncertain. chance, all human purposes are liable to be changed or controlled by circumstances beyond man’s power, and incapable of explanation. A hand higher than man’s disposes events, and success is conditioned by superior laws which work unexpected results. (12) snared, etc., men are suddenly overtaken by calamity, which they are totally unable to foresee or provide against.

Death inevitable and often sudden (vs. 12).—I. The time of every man’s death is uncertain to him. II. Death often approaches men in a secret, unsuspected manner. III. When the snares of death fall on the sons of men there is no way of escape. IV. Death is often sudden. 1. Without previous warning; 2. No time for preparation; 3. Little reliance to be placed on death-bed repentance. V. The snares of death fall on some in an evil time. 1. To such as are immersed in the snares of the world; 2. To those who are engaged in the pleasures of the world; 3. To all who are unprepared.—Lathrop.

One thing to all.—If one thing happens to all in the journey of life, what advantage have the good? Much every way, and specifically thus:—The hardness which disciples experience in following the Lord is righteousness rubbing on the remaining lusts, and so wasting their deformities away; whereas the hardness of a transgressor’s way is the carnal mind, in its impotent enmity, dashing itself against the bosses of the Almighty’s buckler. The one is a strainer, made strait to purge the impurities away, through which the purified emerges into peace; the other is the vengeance which belongeth unto God, beginning even here to repay.”—Arnot.

13—15. (13) This wisdom, or this illustration of wisdom. Wisdom

“A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work, and done his best; but what he has said or done otherwise, shall give him no peace.”—R. W. Emerson.

“It is our best work that He wants, not the dregs of our exhaustion.”—Geo. MacDonald.

“The soul’s play-day is Satan’s work-day: the idler the man the busier the tempter.”—South.

“Jesus, Master, whom I serve, Though so feebly and so ill, Strengthen hand, and heart, and nerve, All thy bidding to fulfil; Open thou mine eyes to see All the work thou hast for me.”—Frances H. Havergal.

^a “Human actions are regarded as in this world dependent entirely on Div. fate, and their success, therefore, is too often in no comparison with the real ability and strength of the actor.”—O. Zockler.

“He that by a constant holiness secures the present, and makes it useful to his noblest purposes, turns his condition into his best advantage by making his unavoidable fate become his necessary religion.”—Jeremy Taylor.

“Not because I raise myself above something, but because I raise myself to something, do I approve myself.”—Jacobi.

^a "The Chaldee Targum explains this passage as an allegory: 'The city is the human body, the great king is an evil desire, the poor man a good disposition.' But this is wholly unnecessary." — Spk. Com.

"I would advise all in general, that they would take into serious consideration the true and genuine ends of knowledge; that they seek it not either for pleasure, or contention, or contempt of others, or for profit, or fame, or for honor and promotion, or such-like adulterate or inferior ends; but for merit and emolument of life, that they may regulate and perfect the same in charity." — Bacon.

^a Knowledge is that information which the mind receives either by its own experience or by the testimony of others. The beneficial use of knowledge is wisdom. That portion of knowledge, the truth of which can be demonstrated, is science." — Maunder.

^a "Wisdom, however splendid, if in lowly state, is so obscured by the cloud of poverty that in a brief time it has all eyes averted, and utterly falls from the memory." — Cartwright.

"The ambition of one man may plunge nations into deadly warfare. The heresies of one man may divide the Church, weaken her influence, and provoke the rage of an irritating controversy." — Hom. Com.

of this kind. (14) little city, etc., comp. 2 Sa. xx. 16—22. This account is a parable rather than a historical incident.^b bulwarks, military works, mounds, etc., such as besiegers raise. (15) he . . delivered, etc., so it seems that wisdom can, in part, avail against evil destiny. remembered, "as soon as the exigency which brought him forward was past, the poor man fell back into his insignificance, and was thought of no more; he gained no personal advantage by his wisdom; his ungrateful countrymen forgot his very existence."

The saviour of the city (vs. 14).—I. I shall make some observations on this ideal poor wise man. 1. Although he had known he had been unhonored, it was still his duty to save the city; 2. The same wisdom which enabled him to save a city would enable him to bear ingratitude; 3. No doubt this neglect was the best thing for the poor wise man—very often the load of honor turns men's brains. Am I addressing any poor wise man who has saved a city? Do I address any poor man who thinks he could save a city as well as anybody, if he were in his proper place? II. I shall adduce a case in point,—the great example of the unappreciated poor wise man—Jesus of Nazareth. 1. Like the poor man in the text, He was a public benefactor; 2. He was wise; 3. The one barrier to His popularity was His poverty; 4. His poverty was no barrier to usefulness—nay, it contributed to His usefulness.—Stems and Twigs.

Men who saved cities.—It is not unlikely that in these words Solomon referred to some real historical fact, for such a fact is recorded in more than one instance. Archimedes, by his extraordinary wisdom, saved the city of Syracuse, when besieged by the Romans. He did this, not by fighting, nor by teaching others to fight; he acted not as a soldier, but as a philosopher—constructing machines and burning lenses, which destroyed the Roman ships as they approached the walls of the city. It is true the city was taken, yet not by the Roman forces, but by the treachery of one who betrayed it. Nor was Archimedes either rewarded or even spared on account of his skill, but was cruelly murdered while in the act of working out a new problem for the further safety of the city. There is also a story of Anaximenes, who met Alexander when he was marching to destroy Lampsacus. Alexander, suspecting that Anaximenes was coming to intercede for the safety of the city, immediately resolved to frustrate his purpose by taking an oath that he would not grant him anything that he should ask. Then said Anaximenes, "I request that you will destroy this city." Alexander was thus outwitted, but he respected his oath, and the city was spared. Thus it was the wisdom of one man which, by suddenly taking advantage of Alexander's oath, saved a noble city from destruction. In like manner, when Alexander was marching against Jerusalem, he was met by Jaddua, the high-priest, whose wise policy subdued the vengeful determination of Alexander, won his favor, and caused the city to be saved from destruction. Solomon could not, of course, have one of these instances in view, because he lived long before they occurred; but he might have others in view equally true. His design was to show that in this life virtue and wisdom may perform the most important services, and yet often be unrewarded.—W. Cooke.

16—18. (16) Wisdom, or mental energy, and skill. strength, or mere material, brute force. despised, and this he puts among the strange things that perplex him in the affairs of this world.^a The power of the purse too often prevails against the wisdom of the poor. (17) in quiet, the thought is like that of the "great cry and little wool" of the English proverb. That which tells on men, in the long run, is the wisdom whose words are wary, and calm, and few, not the declamation of the windbags of popular oratory. (18) one . . good, the sinner here is "one of those coarse miscreants or fools, who can command physical strength, but are destitute of wisdom."—Zöckler.

Power of evil example.—We may estimate the serious and lamentable mischief of an evil life if we think that a godless man may be injuring his neighbors: 1. By weakening or undermining their faith; causing them to lose their hold on Divine truth, and thus sinking into the miseries of doubt or into the darkness and despair of utter unbelief. 2. By undoing the integrity of the upright; leading them into the fatal morass of an immoral life. 3. By cooling, or even killing, the consecration of the zealous; causing them to slacken their speed or even to leave the field of noble service. One man, by his own evil example, by his words of folly and falsity, by his deeds of wrong, may enfeeble many minds, may despoil many hearts, may misguide many souls, may blight and darken many lives.—Clarkson.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

1. "This ch. consists entirely of rhythmical sentences, giving advice, more or less, as to conduct." ^b Dead flies, ^c Heb. flies of death. Deadly poisonous insects, which, finding their way into a vase of precious ointment, would turn its fragrance into a foetid odor. ointment, the word intimates valuable and delicate perfume. apothecary, perfumer. Dealer in spices. little folly, R. V., "so doth a little folly outweigh wisdom and honor." "It is a painful fact that a little folly, one foolish act, one silly peculiarity of manner or disposition, will suffice to impair the real value of a man's wisdom and the estimation in which he was held. The little element of foolishness, like the little insect in the ointment, obscures the real excellence of the man, and deprives him of the honor that is really his due. And in religion we know that one fault unchecked, one secret sin cherished, poisons the whole character, makes a man lose the grace of God."—Pul. Com.

A little evil spoils much good (vs. 1).—I. We will take two or three illustrations of the passage before us. It is true, as a general principle and rule, that a little evil will counterbalance much good. History shows this. The distinguishing sins and follies of individual nations and men: Benvenuto Cellini—passion; Bacon—avarice. II. Account for what we have thus illustrated. 1. The presence of folly in the midst of wisdom and honor—traceable to a sinful nature, to oneness of culture, to overlooking of little things, to malice of the enemy, to worldly opposition; 2. The power of a little folly in marring reputation for wisdom. Because there is so much folly in the world. Men are apt to point at the folly of others. Men form their judgment of others by little things.

"A single worm killed that tree."—During the summer of 1853 (writes a gentleman) I was an invalid, and was induced, on the recommendation of my physician, to go to the Hydropathic Establishment at Sudbrook Park, near Richmond, in Surrey. During my sojourn there, I was one day walking through the romantic grounds and park with some friends and the proprietor, Dr. Ellis, when the doctor drew our attention to a large sycamore tree, decayed to the core. "That fine tree," said he, "was killed by a single worm." In answer to our inquiries, we found that about two years previously the tree was as healthy as any in the park, when a wood-worm, about three inches long, was observed to be forcing its way under the bark of the trunk. It caught the eye of a naturalist who was staying at the establishment, and he remarked, "Let that worm alone, doctor, and it will kill the tree." This seemed very improbable, but it was agreed that the black-headed worm should not be disturbed. After a time it was found that the worm had tunnelled its way a considerable distance under the bark. The next summer the leaves of the tree dropped off very early, and in the succeeding year it was a dead, rotten thing, and the hole made by the worm might be seen in the very heart of the once noble trunk. "Ah," said one who was present, "let us learn a lesson from that dead tree. How many, who once promised fair for usefulness in the world and the church, have been ruined by a single sin!"

2-4. (2) right hand, this gnome is based on the fact that the right hand is more expert than the left.^a at his left, not having right self-control, he goes about things as awkwardly as a left-handed man.^b (3) walketh . . . way, comes out into public view and relations. In all his

^b "The thought wh. underlies the whole ch. is the advantage of that wisdom wh. includes plenty and patience, as practical guidance through all the perplexities of life."—Spk. Com.

^c "The swarms of flies in the E. very soon corrupt and destroy any moist unguent or mixture wh. is not carefully covered fr. them, and pollute a dish of food in a few minutes."—Tristram.

"A certain grace and attractiveness of behavior is necessary to give full effect and influence to the finest assemblage of virtues. In addition to the greatest excellences, we must have 'whatsoever things are lovely.'"—Leale.

A white garment appears worse with slight soiling than do colored garments much soiled; so a little fault in a good man attracts more attention than great offences in bad men.

^a "The wise man goes about his business with dexterity, turns his hand readily to it, and goes through it with despatch."—Mat. Henry.

^b "A wise man's sense is in its place ready to help and protect him; but a fool's is missing when it is wanted, and so is useless."—Rosenmuller.

^c"He is arrogant as well as ignorant; he despises the wise, and thinks them fools; and is not conscious that he is a fool, but thinks himself wise." —Wordsworth.

^aOne of the most frequent weaknesses of kings is the injudicious selection of high officials.

^b Pr. xxx. 21, 22.

"When a fool is set in dignity, it is as when a handful of hay is set up to give light, which with smoke and smell offendeth all that are near it." —Jermin.

^c Esth. vii. 10; Ps. vii. 15; Pr. xxvi. 27.

^d Isa. xxxiv. 13; Am. v. 19.

"The breaking of this hedge appears clearly as an action by which one seeks to injure his neighbor." — O. Zockler.

"The man who sets himself to pull down or to alter the fabric of the constitution of a country, undertakes a work of no light or trifling difficulty, and a work always of hazard to himself, and very often of fearful doubtful benefit to others. It is a vast deal easier to find fault than to mend; to complain of what is wrong, than to substitute what is right." — Wardlaw.

intercourse. saith . . fool, exposing his folly in his speech and acts. (4) against thee, in anger. leave . . place, in thine anger against him. yielding, the spirit of patience often wins the victory, calming down anger.

The pacifying power of patient submission.—"Yielding pacifieth [allayeth] great offences." It is not required that the injured party should approve the action of his injurer; or affirmed that no opportunity may occur of just and dignified rebuke. But silence, quietness of spirit, and control of natural impulse, will in many cases produce a good result. He who bears wrong patiently is the stronger and better for the discipline; and his demeanor may melt the wrong-doer to contrition, and will at all events lead him to reflection. Thus the threatened conflict may be avoided; a lesson may be administered to the hasty and arrogant, and the best interests of society may be promoted. Thus the Word of God is honored, and witness is given to the power which Christ possesses to subdue and govern the unruly nature of man.—Thomson.

5—7. (5) error . . from the ruler, the last word serves as a link connecting this verse with the preceding. It might be wise to bow to the temper of a despotic ruler, but the ruler was not always right. What the Debater had seen was to him a blot upon the government of him who allowed it.—Cam. B. (6) Folly . . dignity, through the favoritism of the ruler, wh. blinds him to the unfitness of the persons he raises to high places.^a rich, in wisdom rather than in wealth. The noble and distinguished. (7) upon horses, so put out of their proper place by the caprice of the king.^b princes walking as servants, eminent and virtuous men degraded.

Favorites.—In Oriental courts, where "the eunuch and the barber held the reins of power," men of no reputation or character had a chance of promotion. And even in Western courts and more modern times the same kind of evil has been only too common, as the history of the reigns of Edward II. and James I. of England, and of Louis XI. and Henry III. of France, abundantly proves. The reason for making favorites of low-born and unprincipled adventurers is not far to seek; they have ever been ready tools for accomplishing the designs of unscrupulous princes, for doing services from which men who valued their station and reputation in society would shrink.—J. Willcock.

8—10. (8) diggeth, etc.,^c he digs a pit that his enemy may fall into it, and he falls into it himself. Plots and conspiracies are as often fatal to the conspirators as to the intended victims. The literature of all nations is full of like sayings, among which that of the engineer "hoist with his own petard" is perhaps the most familiar. shall fall, not absolutely shall, but it is likely that he will. breaketh, etc., the hedge is rather the wall of stones and plaster usually built round a vineyard: in the crevices serpents are wont to nestle.^d Pulling down a wall may refer metaphorically to the removal of evil institutions in a state, wh. involves the reformer in many perils. (9) hurt, is in danger of being hurt by their falling on him. (10) whet, or sharpen. If we apply the whole verse to the case of disaffection with the government or open rebellion, the caution given would signify—See that your means are adequate to the end, that your resources are sufficient to conduct your enterprise to success.

The workman and his tools.—Consider—I. The work we have to do. Trees to fell. Ignorance, bad habits, social drawbacks, natural disqualifications to overcome. These are trees of hard wood. II. The tools we have to use. We have axes to use: mind, memory, resolution, heart, conscience. These we have about us. There are others also, as books, schools, etc. III. How to use them. Three ways:—1. When the axe gets blunt, whet it. Exercise thought, memory, feeling, etc.; study books, obey teachers, etc. 2. Otherwise put on more strength. If we have not wherewith to whet the iron, we must be more diligent with such means as we have. 3. The best way. Whet the iron, and put on strength as well. To do this, seek wisdom profitable to direct: God gives it; we all need it; all may have it. Hint:—(1) Seek wisdom; (2) Use wisdom.—Hive.

Verses 8—11.—Various proverbs expressing the benefit of prudence and caution, and the danger of folly. The connection with what has preceded is not closely marked, but is probably to be found in the bearing of the maxims on the conduct of the wise man who has incurred the resentment of a ruler, and might be inclined to disaffection and revolt. They are intentionally obscure and capable of a double sense—a necessary precaution if the writer lived under Persian despots.—Pul. Com.

11—13. (11) without enchantment, R. V., "If the serpent bite before it be charmed, then is there no advantage in the charmer." "As one may escape the serpent by charms, so one may escape the sting of a calumniator by discretion." babbler, lit. "Master of the tongue."^a (12) gracious, full of kindness and grace: doing good to those who hear him. swallow up,^b this is a stronger expression than "ruin" or "destroy." Speaking without due forethought, he compromises himself, says what he has shamefully to withdraw, and brings punishment on his own head. (13) beginning, etc., his foolish talk tends to become worse than foolish.

Serpent charmers.—In the East there have always been persons who, by means of music and legerdemain, exert great influence over some species of serpents, so that whilst under their spell the deadly cobra may be handled, as if he were utterly harmless. But if the charmer tread on the snake unawares, or be bitten when off his guard, he will be poisoned like another man. And to certain minds there has been given an ascendancy over other minds, like the influence of the serpent charmer. Sagacious and eloquent, they are able to soothe the fury of fierce tempers, and mould rancorous natures to their will. Like David's transforming harp, as the strain advances, it looks as if a new possession had entered the exorcised frame, and a seraph smiled out at those windows where a demon was frowning before. But alas for the harper, if Saul should snatch the javelin before David has time to touch the strings; Alas for the wise charmer, and also for the good cause, if the tyrant's passion towers up, or the decree of the despot goes forth before a friendly counsellor has time to interfere.—J. Hamilton.

14, 15. (14) full of words,^c R. V., "multiplieth words." He talks very freely about things of which he knows nothing. (15) wearieth, bec. he does not conduct his business with wisdom and skill. Intelligence lightens labor. knoweth . . . city, i. e. they have not the capacity to apprehend the plainest thing, such as the entrance into a great city. The words probably imply a reminiscence of a childhood not far from Jerusalem as the city of which the proverb spoke. Isaiah's description of the road to the restored Jerusalem as being such that "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein" (Isai. xxxv. 8) supplies an interesting parallel.

Full of words.—Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the course of an interesting article on the photographic art, delivers himself of the following astounding paragraph: "Then we replace the slide in the shield, draw this out of the camera, and carry it back into the shadowy realm where Cocytus flows in black nitrate of silver, and Acheron stagnates in the pool of hyposulphite, and invisible ghosts, trooping down from the world of day, cross a Styx of dissolved sulphate of iron, and appear before the Rhadamanthus of that lurid Hades!"—Some years ago, a physician, while in his patient's room, thus addressed a surgeon: "You must not fail to phlebotomise the old gentleman to-morrow!" "I will never suffer it," cried the sick man, in a fright. "Sir, don't be alarmed," replied the surgeon, "the doctor only orders you to be bled." "O, as for the bleeding," replied the venerable patient, "it matters little; but as for the other, I would sooner die than endure it." Who will dare blame our aged friend for such a determination? What sane man would submit to the barbarous and excruciating operation of being phlebotomised?—Andrew Jackson was once making a stump speech in a country village out West. Just as he was concluding, Amos Kendall, who sat behind him, whispered, "Tip 'em a little Latin, General; they won't be satisfied without it." The "Hero of New Orleans" instantly thought of a few phrases he knew, and in a voice of thunder, wound up his speech by exclaiming, "E pluribus unum—sine quâ non;—ne plus ultra!—multum in parvo!" The effect was tremendous, and the shouts could be heard for miles.—Jeffers.

16, 17. (16) a child, young in years: but especially young in intelligence. princes . . . morning, the kind of life condemned is the profligate

^a "One of ready tongue, not making timely use of his gift; a hero with his tongue, but without energy and promptness in action." — O. Zockler.

^b "Instances are not wanting where the serpents have been deaf to the voice and music of the charmers, and fastened upon them; when death has taken place in a few minutes." — Gadsby.

^c Pr. x. 32, xii. 13; Matt. xii. 36.

"There is a ridiculous disproportion between the passionate language of a fool and the insignificant causes which excite it."

^c Jas. iv. 13.

"There is nothing that makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should remedy suspicion by procuring to know more, and not to keep their suspicions in smother." — Lord Bacon.

"The end of man is an action, and not a thought, though it were the noblest." — Thomas Carlyle.

"St. Augustine! well hast thou said
That of our voices we can frame
A ladder, if we will but tread Beneath our feet each deed of shame!"
—Longfellow.

* "The peasants build very ephemeral habitations with small stones and mud, which, if deserted, soon fall and melt away like summer snow on the mountains. The roof of any of these huts, forsaken or neglected through idleness, will 'drop through' in a single winter, and then the unprotected walls wash down by the rain, and speedily become mere shapeless heaps."—Thomson.

"He who would do some great thing in this short life must apply himself to the work with such a concentration of his forces, as, to idle spectators, who live only to amuse themselves, looks like insanity."—Francis Parkman.

"He who does no good, gets none. He who cares not for others, will soon find that others will not care for him."

"Do good, cast thy bread into the water; it shall one day be repaid thee."—Arab. Proverb.

"When you give a loaf or a coin to a poor man, you do not lose it, but you sow it; for, as from one grain of seed many grains grow, so it is likewise with loves and money."—Lapide.

luxury which begins the day with revels, instead of giving the morning hours to "sitting in the gate" and doing justice and judgment. Morning revelling was looked upon naturally as the extreme of profligacy. (17) son of nobles, Heb. fig. for "one of noble disposition. in due season, after duty is properly performed. In E. much public duty is done in the early morning.

Eating in the morning.—It is considered unmanly in Samoa to eat early in the morning. It is even the language of abuse to hint that a person does so. It is like comparing him to a pig, which is fed the first thing in the morning.—Turner.

18—20. (18) building decayeth, the subject is still the state. Under the image of a house which falls into ruin for lack of needful repairs, is signified the decay that surely overtakes a kingdom whose rulers are given up to idolence and debauchery, and neglect to attend to the affairs which require prompt care.—Pul. Com. droppeth through, the rain coming through, and breaking down, the flat roof." (19) money . . things, Cam. B. translates: "For revelry they prepare food and wine that rejoices life, and money answereth all things," i. e. meets all they want. The words obviously point to the conduct of the luxurious and slothful princes condemned in verses 16, 18. Regardless of their duty as rulers and of the sufferings of their people, they aim only at self-indulgence and they look to money, however gained, as the means of satisfying their desires. (20) thy thought, bec. there is danger of even seditious thought gaining some expression, in look or attitude if not in word. bird, etc., a proverbial saying common to all languages.

Laziness.—Who can tell the pains which lazy people take? the mud-dles into which they bring themselves? They are driven to falsehood to excuse their sloth, and one lie leads on to more. Then they scheme and plot, and become dishonest. I knew one who fell out with hard work, and soon he fell in with drink and lost his position. Since then, to earn a scanty livelihood he has had to work ten times as much as was required of him in his better days, and he has hardly had a shoe to his foot. Meanwhile, a simple, plodding man has gone onward and upward, favored, as he confesses, by Providence; but, best of all, upheld by his integrity and industry; to him there has been success and happiness. He works hard, but his lot is ease itself compared with the portion of the sluggard.—Spurgeon.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

1. Cast . . waters, the bread in the East is made in the form of thin cakes, which would float for a time if thrown into a stream; and if it be objected that no one would be guilty of such an irrational action as flinging bread into the water, it may be answered that this is just the point aimed at. Do your kindnesses, exert yourself, in the most unlikely quarters, not thinking of gratitude or return, but only of duty. And yet surely a recompense will be made in some form or other.—Pul. Com.

Sowing.—The world seems to be a great field in which every man drops his seed, and which gives back to every man, not just the same thing which he dropped there, any more than the brown earth holds up to you in the autumn the same black berry which you hid under its bosom in the spring, but something which has its true correspondence and proportion to the seed to which it is the legitimate and natural reply. Every gift has its return, every act has its consequence, every call has its answer in this great live, alert world, where man stands central, and all things have their eyes on him and their ears open to his voice.—Phillips Brooks. Whitefield and the lantern-boy.—Whitefield often stood on the outside of the Court-house in Philadelphia, and preached to the thousands who crowded the streets below. On one of these occasions a youth pressed as near to his favorite preacher as possible, and, to testify his respect, held a lantern for his accommodation. Soon after the sermon began he became so absorbed in the subject, that the lantern fell from his hand and was dashed to pieces, and that part of the audience in the immediate vicinity of the speaker's stand was not a little discomposed by the occurrence. Some years after, Mr. Whitefield, in the course of his fifth visit to America, about the year 1754, on a journey from the southward, called at St. George's, via Delaware, where Mr. Rodgers was then settled in the ministry, and spent some time with him. In the course of the visit, Mr. Rodgers, riding one day with his visitor in a close carriage, asked him whether he recollected the occurrence of the little boy who was so much affected with his preaching as to let the lantern fall? Whitefield answered, "Oh! yes, I remember it well, and have often thought I would give anything in my power to know who that little boy was, and what had become of him." Mr. Rodgers replied with a smile, "I am that little boy." Mr. Whitefield, with tears of joy, started from his seat, clasped him in his arms, and with strong emotion remarked that he was the fourteenth person then in the ministry whom he had discovered in the course of that visit to America, of whose conversion he had been the instrument.

2, 3. (2) Give, etc., i. e. do not stint your generousities, for at best you can do but little toward relieving human sorrows.^a (3) empty, etc., the thought is linked to that which precedes it by the mention of the "evil coming upon the earth." In regard to that evil, the sweeping calamities that lie beyond man's control, he is as powerless as he is when the black clouds gather and the winds rush wildly. He knows only that the clouds will pour down their rain, that the tree will lie as the tempest has blown it down. tree fall,^b etc., wherever the misfortune comes, if you are in the way, you will have to bear it.

Law and life (vs. 3.).—I. The key to the passage, the broad idea which underlies the whole, is in the first verse. The main point here then is, that in all husbandry there are two elements—the intelligence and energy of the man, and the co-operation of a secret force, the springs of which and the methods escape him, but on which absolutely depend all his fruits. II. The writer of this book asks us to consider how much that has the most important bearing on the results of our activity is hopelessly beyond the control of our hand. 1. The awful force and inevitable certainty of the processes of nature; 2. There is the absolutely certain sequence of physical causes and effects, or antecedents and consequents, which we call laws of nature, which vary not one hair's breadth from their ordained order in obedience to the mandates of our will, but which, by observing and mastering the principle of that order, we can use for the accomplishing of our ends; 3. The writer, while he sees this constant order, had a dark sad vision of the uncertainties which cross it. III. There being this law of calamity at work, defying all calculation and all defence, what is the true policy of life? 1. Do not be afraid of giving with a bountiful hand, lest your charity should be wasted; 2. Do not be afraid of working, lest your toil should be fruitless; 3. Do not be afraid of loving, because every love is a sure germ of pain.—J. B. Brown.

"The Dairyman's Daughter" in Turkey.—"That well-known tract The Dairyman's Daughter, written in the Isle of Wight, by the Rev. Legh Richmond, found its way to Constantinople. There it was translated into the Armenian tongue by the Rev. Dr. Goodell, an American missionary to Turkey. A copy of this version was carried to Nicomedia (or Ismid), and fell into the hands of a Vartabed, or preaching priest of the Armenian Church. He, upon perusing it, was deeply affected by the picture it presented of simple and genuine Christianity, the result of faith in Jesus and the operation of the Holy Ghost, such as he supposed to have existed only amongst the primitive Christians. Comparing the spirit and principles of this sweet story with the condition of the Armenian Church, he was led to the study of the New Testament; and the result was his own conversion by the Divine grace. He then communicated the knowledge of this wondrous tract, and his own blessed experience, to another Vartabed, with the same results in his case also. These two converted priests, expelled from their own communion, were the chief beginnings of the evangelical church now in Nicomedia.—Blackwood.

^a "Or, you know not what reverses may befall either that person who by your liberality will be strengthened to meet them, or yourself, who may come to need grateful friends. Comp. Lu. xvi. 9."—Spk. Com.

^b This image is not in any way connected with the state of departed souls.

"Our life is like that wax melting in the flame. Death puts his stamp on it, and then it cools, and the impress never can be changed. Or like the burning metal, running forth from the cauldron into the mold, Death cools us in that mold, and we are cast into that shape through-out eternity."—C. H. Spurgeon.

"Follow with reverent steps the great example Of Him whose holy work was 'doing good;' So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple, Each loving life a psalm of gratitude."—Whittier.

a "The farmer would get on badly, who, instead of sowing and reaping, spent his time in watching the wind and clouds."—Fausset.

"If we stand thus, magnifying every little difficulty, and making the worst of it, starting objections and fancying hardship and danger where there is none, we shall never go on, much less go through with our work, nor make anything of it."—Mat. Henry.

"He whom the weather does not suit, and who is ever waiting for a more favorable season, misses finally the proper period for action."—O. Zoekler.

b Also Job xxxi. 15; Ps. cxxxix. 13—16; Jer. i. 5.

"Work is the holiest thing in earth or heaven,
To lift from souls the sorrow and the curse;
This dear employment must to us be given While there is want in God's great universe."
—Lucy Larcom.

a The "light" here stands for "life," of which it is the symbol. Comp. Job iii. 20; Ps. xxxvi. 9, xlix. 19, lvi. 13.

b Regarded as the dark prison beneath the earth.

"While the sun of earthly prospects shines, we are apt to feel the day of evil at a distance from our minds; we are reluctant to admit the possibility of a 4—6. (4) observeth . . sow, such watching the clouds would be a sign of a timid hesitancy that would ensure failure." The very watching for opportunities may end in missing them. There are times when it is our wisdom to "be instant out of season" (2 Tim. iv. 2). (5) spirit, or wind, comp. Jno. iii. 8. bones, etc., Job x. 8—12.^b works of God, the issues of God's will: His ways in the future. (6) whether shall prosper, the ignorance of men as to the results of their labor, still more the apparent or the actual failure of their earlier efforts, tempts them too often to despondency and indolence. The maxim, like that of verse 6, bids them take comfort from that very ignorance. The seed sown in the morning of life may bear its harvest at once, or not till the evening of age. The man may reap at one and the same time the fruits of his earlier and his later sowing, and may find that "both are alike good."—Cam. Bib.

I. Every day has its evening.—I. With its quiet hour for meditation—as with Isaac; 2. With its vacant hour to be filled up with some work for Jesus. II. Every life has also its evening. 1. It is clouded or bright, for the most part, as the day has been; 2. Sometimes the evening is unlike the day,—a contrast to it. III. The evening does not always commence at the same hour—short and long days,—with some the sun goes down while it is yet noon. Learn:—In secular things men live for the evening of life; let it be so in things spiritual.

Timid hesitancy.—If you stand at the door and look at the clouds you will not get your sowing done in the field. A man says he will not go to church because he may slip down on the road and hurt his foot; he will not take a railway journey because the boiler may burst or a wheel may take fire; he will not open his window in summer because an insect may crawl in. There are people in the world exactly so foolish, though at first this may appear to be simply incredible. Make any proposition to them you please, and they will tell you what difficulties surround it, and what awful possibilities are ahead of it. Such people live in circumstances, events, occurrences, and their imagination is quick on the side of perceiving dangers and losses. These are not the people who should set themselves to lead the world. This will be admitted as a philosophy, and yet, strange to say, these are the people who hinder the progress of society more than any others.—J. Parker.

Man's Life—

Man's life is but a working day

Whose tasks are set aright:

A time to work, a time to pray,

And then a quiet night.

And then, praise God, a quiet night,

Where palms are green and robes are white,

A long-drawn breath, a balm for sorrow,—

And all things lovely on the morrow.

—Christina G. Rosetti.

7, 8. (7) the light,^a of life; wh. the young are especially able to enjoy. behold the sun, Ps. lviii. 8; Jno. xi. 9. (8) days of darkness, these are clearly not the days of sorrow or adversity (though the phase as such might admit that meaning), but those of the darkness which is contrasted with the light of the sun, with the light of life, the land that lies behind the veil, in the unseen world of Hades or of Sheol,^b the darkness of the valley of the shadow of death.—Cam. Bib. All that cometh is vanity, all that comes after this life is ended, the great future, is nothingness; shadow, not substance; a state from which is absent all that made life, and over which we have no control.

The Christian aspect of the subject.—We know that this life will soon be over, may reach its terminus any day, and must come to its conclusion before many years have gone. What shall we be concerned about in this? 1. Not the hour or act of dying. Common human fortitude will carry us through that experience, as it has done in countless millions of cases already; much more will Christian faith and hope. 2. Not the silence and darkness of the grave. What does it signify to us that our mortal body will lie long in the grave, when we are hoping to be "clothed upon with our house which is from heaven?" 3. The long future of heavenly life. Not the many days of darkness, but the long, the everlasting day of glory is before us who believe in Christ, and who hope to dwell with him for ever. For that endless day of blessedness the life we are now living is not only the preliminary but the preparation. Therefore let every day, every hour, be sacred; be so spent in faith, in love, in holy labor, in ennobling joy, that the future will be but the continuance of the present—the continuance, but also the enlargement, the glorification. Thus shall there not fall upon the life that now is the shadow of the tomb; there shall shine upon it some beams from the glory that is beyond.—Clarkson.

A cloudless sky.—When in Madeira, I rose early one morning, hoping to reach the summit of a certain mountain, to gaze upon a magnificent scene, and enjoy the balmy air. I had a servant with me, and we had got up some two thousand feet, when a thick mist was seen descending upon us, quite obscuring the whole face of the heavens, and I thought we had no chance left but at once to retrace our steps. But as the cloud came nearer, my guide ran on, penetrating the mist, and calling to me ever and anon, and saying, "Press on, master, press on! There is light beyond." I did press on; in a few minutes the mist was passed, and I gazed upon a scene of transcendent beauty. All was bright and cloudless above; and below was the almost level mist, concealing the world below, and glistening in the rays of the sun like a field of untrodden snow;—there was nothing between us and heaven. I have often thought since there was nothing like "pressing on" in every trial of life, assured that, although the mists of earth may hang around us at certain stages of our journey, there is light beyond. You, the friends of Sunday schools, have present difficulties, but I would ask you to listen to the voice which on that occasion came from the untutored Madeiranese—"Press on! there is light beyond"—in this world; and, by-and-by, there shall be the light, all unclouded, of heaven; and, rejoicing in that light, we shall be constrained to exclaim, "Hallelujah, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth: the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our God and of His Christ."—Corderoy.

9, 10. (9) Rejoice, "the Debater falls back on the fact that life is after all worth living, that it is wise to cultivate the faculty of enjoyment in the season when that faculty is, in most cases, as by a law of nature, strong and capable of being fashioned into a habit." God's judgment, in good faith he tells the young man to "rejoice in his youth," to study the bent of his character, what we should call his æsthetic tastes, but all this is not to be the reckless indulgence of each sensuous impulse, but to be subject to the thought "God will bring thee into judgment." (10) sorrow, or that wh. will surely work out at last into sorrow. thy flesh, the body being the organ of sensual and sinful indulgences; 2 Ti. ii. 22.

An antidote to dissipation (vs. 10).—Our text teaches us—I. That there will be a future judgment. 1. The time of it is appointed; 2. The precursors are described; 3. The judge is named. II. That God will bring us into judgment. 1. All will be judged: some will be glad, others will shrink; 2. God will bring all into judgment. III. God will bring us into judgment for all these things. The heart prompts to many evil ways.—Omega in 100 Sks.

"And then"—"Oh, if I were lucky enough to call this estate mine, I should be a happy fellow," said a young man. "And then?" said a friend. "Why, then I'd pull down the old house, and build a palace, have lots of prime fellows round me, keep the best wines, and the finest horses and dogs in the country." "And then?" "Then I'd hunt, and ride, and smoke, and drink, and dance, and keep open house, and enjoy life gloriously." "And then?" "Why, then, I suppose, like other people, I should grow old, and not care so much for these things." "And then?" "Why, then, I suppose, in the course of nature I should leave all these pleasant things—and—well, yes—die!" "And then?" "Oh, bother your 'thens!' I must be off." Many years after, the friend was accosted with, "God bless you! I owe my happiness to you!" "How?"

change of scene; we shut out the thought of calamity and distress as an unwelcome intruder. Experience, in most cases, soon alters the sentiments, and events arise which impress an indelible conviction of the short duration of earthly good." —Robert Hall.

"We are big with the hopes of that part of life which is coming on, and live day after day upon the fancy of what to-morrow will produce, like the spectators of a play still in expectation of the next scene; but yet, when to-morrow comes, we find it just like yesterday, vain and without content; and so will every to-morrow be when it comes to be to-day." —Norris.

"These sentences mark the gradual progress in self-indulgence, to which the young especially are prone; they see the roses, but do not discover the thorns, until pierced by them." —Fausset.

"Thoughtless and sensual young man, . . . gratify thy appetites, indulge all thy passions, deny thyself nothing, eat, drink, and be merry; disregard the admonitions of conscience, trample under foot the authority of revelation, and think not that thou shalt always prosper in the ways of sin, or carry for ever that air of jollity and triumph." —J. A. James.

Ro. ii. 6—9.

"Enthusiasm means 'in God;'

and I can't understand how any man can realize his standing before God and not be on fire three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. Any man who goes into business and doesn't throw his heart into it doesn't succeed. Now, why not go into the Lord's work as earnestly as into athletics?" —D. L. Moody.

"Knowledge, when wisdom is too weak to guide her, is like a headstrong horse that throws the rider." —Quarles.

Childhood does sometimes pay a second visit to man — youth never. How responsible are we for the use of a period so precious in itself, which will soon pass away and never return.

"You are old: nature in you stands on the very verge of her confine." —Shakespeare.

"Years steal fire from the mind as vigor from from the limb." —Byron.

"Men will invest millions to get gold out of the heart of a mountain, if you can only convince them it is there. Surely, when we can see a tithe of the possibilities that Christ saw in the heart of the most of sinful men, we shall be more eager to redeem it than to rescue the richest treasures of gold." —J. F. Cowan.

"By two words spoken in season long ago—'And then?'"—Bib. III.—A thoughtless soldier.—Dr. John Evans, the author of some excellent sermons on the Christian temper, introduced, on one occasion, a sermon to young people in the following manner:—"Shall I be allowed to preface this discourse with relating a passage concerning an acquaintance of mine, who has been many years dead, but which I remember to have received, when young, from himself? When he was an apprentice in this city, the civil war began; his inclination led him into the army, where he had a captain's commission. It was fashionable for all the men of that army to carry a Bible along with them; which, therefore, he and many others did, who yet made little use of it, and hardly had any sense of serious religion. At length he was commanded, with his company, to storm a fort, wherein they were, for a short time, exposed to the thickest of the enemy's fire. When he had accomplished this enterprise, and the heat of the action was over, he found that a musket ball had lodged in his Bible, which was in his pocket, upon such a part of his body, that it must necessarily have proved mortal to him, had it not been for this seasonable and well-placed piece of armor. Upon a nearer observation he found the ball had made its way so far in his Bible as to rest directly upon that part of the first unbroken leaf where the words of my text are found. It was Ec. xi. 9; 'Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.' As the surprising deliverance, you may apprehend, much affected him, so a passage which his conscience told him was very apposite to his case, and which Providence in so remarkable a way pointed to his observation, made the deepest and best impression on his mind; and, by the grace of God, he, from that time, attended to religion in earnest, and continued in the practice of it to a good old age; frequently making the remark, with pleasure, that his Bible had been the salvation both of his body and his soul."—R. T. S.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

1. Remember, think on: keep ever before thee the law of thy Creator. He who makes has right of rule over the thing made. evil days, the evil days are those which are painted in the verses which follow; not necessarily the special forms of evil that come as the punishment of sensual sins, but the inevitable accompaniment of declining years, or of disease. no pleasure, etc., i. e. the time of old age, when the senses are dulled.

The period here recommended for the religious life.—Religion is indeed adapted to the whole of our existence; and what applies to every age of life, applies with especial force to childhood and youth. 1. Youth has peculiar susceptibilities of feeling, and religion appeals to them. 2. Youth has especially opportunities of acquiring knowledge and undergoing discipline, and religion helps us to use them. 3. Youth has abounding energy, and religion assists us to employ this energy aright. 4. Youth is the time of great and varied temptations, and religion will enable us to overcome them. 5. Youth is introductory to manhood and to age; religion helps us so to live when young that we may be the better fitted for the subsequent stages of life's journey. 6. Youth may be all of life appointed for us; in that case, religion can hallow those few years which constitute the earthly training and probation.—Pul. Com.

To-day—

Whatever length of life God may Hold for us in His store
Nothing is certain but to-day;
We own no more.

Use well the little narrow span
Between the dawn and dark,
Nor waste your time to think and plan
Beyond its mark.

To-morrow promises to pay,
But when the note comes due
Full apt the culprit runs away,
And none pursue.

The rascal runs from place to place
And flees from land to land.
Give me To-day with honest face
And gold in hand!—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

2-4. (2) not darkened,^a by reason of weakness or disease, which prevents their enjoyment. The approach of old age is likened to the rainy season in Palestine. clouds . . rain, fig. for trouble coming again and again.^b The body is represented as a house with its various occupants. (3) keepers,^c etc., the arms with the hands, wh. become tremulous in the aged. strong men, the legs, wh. in age lose their muscular power. grinders, or teeth. Fem. gender, bec. work of hand-mill was done by women.^d look . . windows, the eyes, sight of the aged is dim. (4) doors, etc., the lips in allusion to the silent mumbling of their food by those who have lost their teeth. rise . . bird, Stuart, "for it rises to the voice of a sparrow," i. e. the old man's voice becomes a "piping treble" like the note of a bird. daughters . . low, he can no longer sing, or enjoy singing.

Description of old age.—We have here an elegant description of old age. "Then the sun, and the light, and the moon, and the stars, will be darkened." That is, all outward comfort and prosperity, whether by day or by night, will be eclipsed and withdrawn. "And the clouds will return after the rain." That is, one bodily distemper and trouble will follow another in quick succession. Then will "the keepers of the house tremble." That is, the arms and hands, which defend the body, will by reason of their cold and dry temper shake and quiver. "And the strong men will bow themselves." That is, the thighs and legs, which have strongly borne up the structure of the body, will be weak, and need the support of a staff to assist them. "And the grinders will cease because they are few." That is, the teeth, which chew and grind our food, will break, decay, and fall out; so that, being reduced to a few, they will be unable to do their office. "And those who look out at the windows will be darkened." That is, the sight will fail; the eye, through which, as through a window, the soul looks out, being dim and weakened. "And the doors shall be shut in the streets." That is, the lips and mouth will be disabled from speaking and eating. . . . "And all the daughters of music shall be brought low." That is, our ears will grow dull, so that the sweetest music will have lost all its charms. "And they shall be afraid of that which is high." That is, we shall, by reason of weariness, dizziness, and want of breath, be afraid of ascending high places, and of attempting such high things as in youth we adventured upon without hesitation. "And fears shall be in the way." That is, we shall be afraid in our journeying, lest we dash our weak and weary foot against a stone. "And the almond tree shall flourish." That is, our head will grow white, like the almond tree, which soon ripens. "And the grasshopper shall be a burden." That is, the least weight will be too heavy for our infirm body; yea, we, being then like enough to grasshoppers, shall be a burden both to ourselves and others. "And desire shall fail." That is, all our bodily appetites will cool and cease.—R. Smith.

The darkness—

The dark comes down ere it be late;
I stand amid the shades and wait,

^a The darkening of the lights of heaven denotes a time of affliction and sadness.

Comp. Job iii. 9; Is. v. 30; Eze. xxxii. 7, 8. Contrast 2 Sa. xxiii. 4, 5.

^b "The season of weakness and decrepitude when no sooner has one cloud of sorrow discharged its dark contents and disappeared, but another black cloud, swollen with showers of sorrows, returns in its place."—Wordsworth.

^c Some e.g., Umbreit, Elster, Cox, think this and foll. vs. a poetic description of the day of death, represented under fig. of a fearful tempest.

^d Ex. xl. 5; Mat. xxiv. 41.

"Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years, when nature brought him to the door of death."—Shakespeare.

"Time's chariot-wheels make their carriage-road in the fairest face."—La Rochefoucauld.

Home is more near,
O Lord, by every passing day;
Home is more dear
By every prayer I pray.
—Henry N. Cobb.

"I am old now, and these same crosses spoil me."—Shakespeare.

"Every man desires to live long; but no man would be old."—Swift.

a "Of ascending an eminence wh. would be difficult on account of their sunken chests and short breath." — O. Zockler.

b "It is the type of old age whose hair is white;... the white blossoms completely cover the whole tree; the green leaves do not appear till some time after." — Thomson.

c "The ancient Egyptians called their tombs their 'long home,' or 'everlasting habitations.'" — Gadsby.

d The thread of life.

e 2 Cor. iv. 7.

"Each step but takes me nearer home.
Life's journey,
long or short,
is blest,
If it but end in Heaven's rest!"
—Kate Cameron.

a "The spirit of every man after death, good or bad, in some sense goes to God either as a Father or as a Judge, to be kept somewhere under the custody of His Almighty power, in order to the receiving of His final sentence at the last judgment, either of happiness or misery." — Bp. Bull.

"Do thy part with industry, and leave the event with God.
I have seen matters fall out so unexpectedly that they have taught me in all affairs neither to

Not knowing whether left or right
Will bring me to the open gate
Where I can pass to home and light.
O God, with whom is endless day,
Guide thou my steps; teach me thy way.

The distant lights like beacons shine;
The city they illumine is mine;
The friends I love are gathered there.
Give me thy help, O Guide divine,
For hope and faith are in my prayer;
And morn will break and I shall stand
At daybreak in my fatherland.—Marianne Farningham.

5, 6. (5) high, prob. high ground. The aged cannot ascend hills.^a fears, nervously dreads any journeying; wants to be left quietly at home. almond, wh. bears white flowers.^b flourish, R. V. "blossom." grasshopper, or locust. Even an insect is felt a burden to the weak old man. desire, lit. the caper berry, wh. was eaten before meals to provoke appetite; even it would no longer have its effect. long home, literally, "to the house of his eternity," so the grave is conceived.^c (6) silver cord, by wh. the house-lamp was hung from the ceiling.^d bowl, the lamp itself. pitcher, the body compared to an earthen vessel.^e wheel, the cistern wheel by wh. the bucket is lowered and raised; illus. the vital processes of the body. In the sixth verse the figurative character of the whole section reaches its highest point. The figures are symbolic of nothing less than death. We come to the actual dissolution of soul and body.

Old age.—Will ye give the bounding pulse, and the soaring thought, and the eager glance, and the rushing purpose, to the slavery of time and created things, and think of bringing the jaded energies, the thin grey hairs, the emaciated limbs, and consecrating them to the service of God? We know that even in old age the kingdom may be sought, the kingdom may be found; we dare not, therefore, and we thank God that we dare not, regard any individual, be he ever so old, be he ever so hardened, as having outlived the opportunity of being saved. We preach to the man of four-score years; and though, in the expressive language of Solomon—"the daughters of music are brought low, and the grasshopper is a burden, and the silver cord is almost loosed, and the golden bowl broken," we still say to him, "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." And yet it is impossible not to feel, that where there has been, for forty, or sixty, or seventy years, a determined resistance to all the proffers of the gospel, the case is growing comparatively hopeless. We may go on with our work; but it is impossible to go on with a very light heart. And never does the minister of Christ seem charged with a commission in which success is so doubtful, as when sent to the infirm and worn-out sinner, who, having given the strength of life to Satan and the world, has at last only the dregs with which to make an offering to his God.—H. Melville.

7. dust, Ge. iii. 19. The body formed of dust. spirit,^a rightly has the Targum paraphrased the words "The Spirit will return to stand in judgment before God, who gave it thee." The long wandering to and fro in many paths of thoughts ends not in the denial, but the affirmation, of a personal God and therefore a personal immortality.

Our dead—

Yet love will dream and faith will trust (Since He who knows our need is just)
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!

Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That life is ever lord of death,
And love can never lose its own!

—Whittier.

8—10. (8) all is vanity, "the Preacher does not follow the destiny of the immortal spirit; it is not his purpose to do so; his theme is the fragility of mortal things, their unsatisfying nature, the impossibility of their securing man's happiness; so his voyage lands him at the point whence he set forth, though he has learned and taught faith in the interval. If all is vanity, there is behind and above all a God of inflexible justice, who must do right, and to whom we may safely trust our cares and perplexities."—Pul. Com. (9) knowledge, gave practical counsel for the ordering of life while we have it. "What the writer here asserts is that Koheleth did not merely possess wisdom, but had made good use of it for the instruction of others. The author throws aside his disguise, and speaks of his object in composing the book, with a glance at the historical Solomon whom he had personated. That he uses the third person in relation to himself is nothing uncommon in historical memoirs, etc." (10) acceptable words, Heb. words of delight: pleasant, agreeable. and that which, etc., R. V., "acceptable words, and that which was written uprightly, even words of truth." The meaning is that what he wrote had two characteristics—it was sincere, that which he really thought and believed, and it was true objectively.

A model preacher.—I. A wise man. 1. Possessed of secular knowledge. 2. Endowed with heavenly wisdom. II. A diligent student. 1. Of the sacred Scriptures. 2. Of human nature. 3. Of the material creation. III. A skillful teacher.—Pul. Com.

11, 12. (11) goads, used by herdsmen to drive cattle, so the words of the wise are stimulating, they arouse to exertion. nails, or tent-pegs. The allusion is to their being driven into, and fixed in, the memory. masters of assemblies,^a it seems best to take the word translated "assemblies" as denoting collections, not of people, but of proverbs; and the phrase "masters of assemblies" or "chiefs of collections" would thus mean proverbs of an excellent character, the best of their sort gathered together in writing. one shepherd, God, the one source of wisdom for all teachers. (12) many books, "the words, which would have been singularly inappropriate as applied to the scanty literature of the reign of the historical Solomon, manifestly point to a time when the teachers of Israel had come in contact with the literature of other countries, which overwhelmed them with its variety and copiousness, and the scholar is warned against trusting to that literature as a guide to wisdom." study,^b "you may weary your brain, exhaust your strength, by protracted study or meditation on many books, but you will not necessarily thereby gain any insight into the problems of the universe or guidance for daily life."

Preaching.—Well did John Ruskin say that the issues of life and death for modern society are in the pulpit: "Precious indeed those thirty minutes by which the teacher tries to get at the separate hearts of a thousand men to convince them of all their weaknesses, to shame them for all their sin, to warn them of all their dangers, to try by this way and that to stir the hard fastenings of the doors where the Master himself has stood and knocked yet none opened, and to call at the openings of those dark streets where Wisdom herself hath stretched forth her hands and no man regarded. Thirty minutes to raise the dead in." And he who hath known the joy of encouraging some noble youth who is discouraged, the rapture that comes when at least one who hath become long snared and held in the cruel trap hath been freed, the joy of feeling that blind eyes have come to see things unseen and deaf ears to hear notes that once were unheard, or hath swung wide some dungeon door to lead forth some prisoner of conscience, will know that no profession conceals such hidden springs, receives such hidden messages, is fed with such buoyancy and happiness as the ministry—the Christian teacher, who brings divine truth to men for God's sake and for man's sake.—Bib. Sacra, July, 1898.

despair nor presume; not to despair, for God can help me; not to presume, for God can cross me; I will never despair, because I have a God; I will never presume, because I am but a man."—Fettham.

^a"The master of assemblies is the sheikh, who orders the gathering together of the tent dwellers, and the pitching of the encampment."—Van Lennep.

^b"This is only the discouragement of the prudent and roving curiosity which is always craving something new, however pernicious and poisonous, and has no appetite for what is old, however wholesome it may be."—Wordsworth.

"It is right to be contented with what we have, but never with what we are."—James Makintosh.

"Knowledge always desires increase: it is like fire, which must be first kindled by some external agent, but which will afterwards propagate itself."—Johnson.

"Because God is infinitely just, He will neither let hidden evil be unpunished, nor hidden good be unrewarded."
—Wolle.

"We shall see of what vast consequence it is to us that we be religious, if we consider the account we must every one of us shortly give of himself to God,"
—Mat. Henry.

"The kingdom of God is not going to religious meetings and hearing strange religious experiences; the kingdom of God is doing what is right—living at peace with all men, being filled with joy in the Holy Ghost."
Drummond.

"The one secret of life and development is not to devise and plan, but to fall in with the forces at work; to do every moment's duty aright, that being the part allotted to us; and let come — not what will, for there is no such thing—but what the eternal Thought wills for each of us, has intended in each of us from the first."—Geo. Macdonald.

13, 14. (13) Fear God, etc., "this injunction is the practical result of the whole discussion. Amid the difficulties of the moral government of the world, amid the complications of society, varying and opposing interests, one duty remained plain and unchanging—the duty of piety and obedience."—Pul. Com. this is .. of man, lit, this is for every man: i. e. a law of universal obligation. The duty is expressed in the most general terms as applicable to the whole human family; for God is not the God of the Jews only, but of Gentiles also (Rom. iii. 29). (14) into judgment, Ro. ii. 16, xiv. 10; 2 Cor. v. 10."

The whole duty of man (vs. 13).—This is real religion. I. It is the design of man's creation. II. The object of God's providential dispensation. III. The chief excellency of man's character. IV. The sole foundation of his happiness. V. It harmonizes with all his circumstances.

Photographs on the wall.—The infinite galleries of the past await but one brief process, and all their pictures will be called out and fixed for ever. I had a curious illustration of this great fact on a humble scale. When a bookcase, long standing in one place, was removed, there was the exact image left on the wall of the whole, and of many of its portions. But in the midst of this picture was another, the precise outline of a map which had hung on the wall before the bookcase was placed there. We had all forgotten everything about the map until we saw its photograph on the wall. Thus, some day or another, we may remember a sin which has been covered up, when this lower universe is pulled away from before the wall of infinity, where the wrong-doing stands self-recorded.—O. W. Holmes. Fear of God.—A proper fear of God originates in faith; a wrong fear, in doubt. A right fear bends towards hope, because it springs from faith, and we hope in the God whom we believe; an improper fear leads to despair, because we dread Him in whom we have not faith. This fears to lose God, and that to find Him.—Blaise Pascal. The root of character.—What is deepest in every man, and most influential, however little at times it may seem so, is, after all, his relation to God and the Unseen. The genuine root of character is here, as trial soon proves. How a man believes concerning God and the higher world—how his soul is—will show itself in his whole life. From this inner source, its essential and determining qualities will run. On this foundation its structure rests. The religious belief of young men, therefore, is a subject of the most vital moment for themselves and for all. Whatever tends to affect it is pregnant with incalculable consequences. To weaken or lose it, is to impair the very life of society. To deepen and expand it, is to add strength to character and durability to virtue.—Tullock. So long as life is full of strife and conflict, so long as men are the children of misfortune, adversity, and defeat; so long as troubles roll over the earth like sheeted storms; so long as dark minds need light and inspiration, and the pilgrim band, floundering through the wilderness, needs a leader, and a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, will religion remain the guide, the hope, the friend, and support of the people.—N. D. Hillis.

Introduction.

I. Author. The author is unknown. The heading which ascribes the book to Solomon, "is not the work of the author and has no more authority than other similar headings." "Assuredly, Solomon could not have been the author of this lovely poem in praise of the love and fidelity of a country maiden and her swain, and the simplicity of their rustic life. It would be difficult to find a man in all history who more conspicuously illustrated the exact opposites of these ideas." II. Time. The reference to Tirzah, associating it with Jerusalem as though of similar importance (vi. 4), is a strong reason for assigning the book to the half century after the death of Solomon, when Tirzah was the northern capitol. But some modern writers prefer a much later date, even as late as 300 B. C. III. Structure and Interpretation. Two leading views on these points have divided the multitude of commentators, viz: the allegorical view and the literal view. Down to a comparatively recent date the allegorical view in some form commanded the approval of most Biblical scholars and of the Christian church at large. This view is, that, either with or without some historical basis, the aim of the book is to represent the relation between Christ and the church.

The literal view is set forth by Dr. Kitto as follows: "The design of this charming poem is to teach us a lesson of practical righteousness by the record of an extraordinary example of virtue in a young maiden in humble life, who encountered and conquered the greatest temptations from the most exalted personage in the land. The simple story, divested of its poetic form, is as follows: A village girl, the daughter of a widowed mother of Shulam, is betrothed to a young shepherd, whom she met whilst tending the flock. The brothers of the Shulamite employ her in the vineyard on their farm. Whilst on the way to this vineyard she one day falls in with the cortège of King Solomon, who is on a spring visit to the country. Struck with her great beauty the king captures her, conveys her to his royal pavilion, then conducts her to Jerusalem in great pomp, in the hope of dazzling and overcoming her with his splendor, and eventually lodges her in his harem. But all is in vain. True to her virtuous love, she resists all the allurements of the exalted sovereign, spurns all his promises to elevate her to the highest rank, and in the midst of the gay scenes assures her humble shepherd that her affections are sacredly and inviolably pledged to him. Solomon, convinced at last that all his advances are in vain, allows her to quit the royal residence. Hand in hand the two faithful lovers return to her native place."

The literal view, essentially as outlined by Dr. Kitto, is adopted in the following exegetical treatment of the book. There are serious objections to the allegorical interpretation. "More than any other influence, the mystical interpretation of this book has imported an effeminate element into the notion of the love of Christ, not one trace of which can be detected in the New Testament. It cannot be said that the most wholesome of our modern hymns are those which are composed on the model of the Song of Solomon. * * * Assuredly it was much to make clear in the days of royal polygamy among the Jews that this gross imitation of the court life of heathen monarchies was a despicable and degrading thing, and to set over against it an attractive picture of true love and simple manners. The prophets of Israel were continually protesting against a growing dissoluteness of morals: the Song of Solomon is a vivid illustration of the spirit of their protest. If the two nations had been content with the rustic delights so beautifully portrayed in this book, they might not have fallen into ruin as they did under the influence of the corruptions of an effete civilization. If their people had cherished the graces of purity and constancy that shine so conspicuously in the character of the Shulamite they might not have needed to pass through the purging fires of the captivity."—Expositor's Bible.

Synopsis.

Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux, was of opinion that this Song is a regular drama, explained by the Jews celebrating their nuptials for seven days together. He accordingly divides it in the following manner:

Day. 1, Chapter 1—2:6.
“ 2, “ 2—7—17.
“ 3, “ 3—5:1.
“ 4, “ 5:2—6:9.
“ 5, “ 6:10—7:11.
“ 6, “ 7:12—8:3.
“ 7, “ 8:4—14.

With Bossuet agree essentially some Biblical scholars of the present day.

Dr. Good, after others, considered it as forming not one continued and individual poem, but a series of sacred idyls, 12 in number, thus:

Idyl 1, Chapter 1:1—8.
“ 2, “ 1:9—2:7.
“ 3, “ 2:8—17.
“ 4, “ 3:1—5.
“ 5, “ 3:6—4:7.
“ 6, “ 4:8—5:1.
“ 7, “ 5:2—6:10.
“ 8, “ 6:11—13.
“ 9, “ 7:1—9.
“ 10, “ 7:10—8:4.
“ 11, “ 8:5—7.
“ 12, “ 8:8—14.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1-3. (1) song of songs, i. e. the chief of songs. Its theme is "a faithful love." A Shulamite maiden captured by the king's forces has been brought to the palace at Jerusalem where the king tries in vain to win her affections. She is already pledged to a young shepherd to whom she remains faithful. which is Solomon's, lit. to, or for, Solomon. Usually regarded as ascribing the authorship to Sol.^a (2) kiss me,^b in vss. 2, 3, 4a the women of the harem sing of Solomon. better than wine, which was regarded as "making glad the heart." (3) savour . . . ointments, R. V. "Thine ointments have a goodly fragrance; Thy name," etc. these were freely used in dressing for entertainments.^c poured forth, the fame of the king has gone abroad like a spicy odor. virgins, all the court ladies are admirers of the brilliant and lovely king.

The Song of Songs.—In this poem pure love and simple living are exalted in opposition to the luxury and vices of the royal seraglio. A poem that sets forth the beauty of a simple country life as the scene of the true love of husband and wife in contrast to the degradation of a corrupt court is distinctly elevating in tone and influence, and the more so for the fact that it is not didactic in form. It is not only in kings' palaces and amid scenes of oriental voluptuousness that the influence of such ideas as are here presented is needed. Christian civilization has not progressed beyond the condition in which the consideration of them may be resorted to as a wholesome corrective. But another idea of highest importance emerges. It is not love, now, but fidelity, that claims our attention. The simple girl, protected only by her virtue, who is proof against all the fascinations of the most splendid court, and who prefers to be the wife of the poor man whom she loves, and to whom she has plighted troth, to accepting a queen's crown at the cost of deserting her humble lover, is the type and example of a loyalty which is the more admirable because it appears where we should little expect to find it.—Expos. Bible. The Bridegroom and the bride.—Love's native language is poetry. When strong and happy feeling dominates the soul, it soon bursts into a song. As young life in a fruit tree breaks into leaf and blossom, so the spiritual force of love unfolds in metaphor and music. Among the lyrics composed by King David, those which celebrate the Messiah-Prince have the richest glory of fervor, blossom most into Oriental imagery. The deep and inseparable union between Christ and his saints is by no one set forth so clearly as by Jesus the Christ; hence love is strong and tender, because love's Object is noble, winsome, kingly, Divine.—Pul. Com. Altogether lovely.—Jesus Christ is comprehensive of all things that are lovely. He seals up the sum of all loveliness: things that shine as single stars with a particular glory, all meet in Christ, as a glorious constellation. Cast your eyes among all created beings; survey the universe; observe strength in one, beauty in a second, faithfulness in a third, wisdom in a fourth; but you shall find none excelling in them all, as Christ doth. Bread hath one quality, water another, physic another; but none hath all in itself, as Christ hath. He is bread to the hungry, water to the thirsty, a garment to the naked, healing to the wounded, and whatsoever a soul can desire is found in Him.—J. Flavel.

4-6. (4) Draw me, by some look of love that will give me encouragement. run, immediately responding to such a love-sign. king's chambers, here for the first time the Shulamite speaks realizing her surroundings. We will be glad, etc., the women welcome her and extol the king. remember, R. V. "make mention of." upright, R. V. "Rightly do they love thee." (5) From 5-7 the Shulamite speaks. black, swart, or dark-hued. tents of Kedar,^a Ge. xxv. 13. curtains, i. e. comely as the curtains of Sol.'s tent. (6) black, etc., R. V. "swarthy, because the sun hath scorched me." angry, the cause of this anger is not given but its result only. For other reference to these brothers comp. viii. 8, 9. They

Luther calls this "The High Song."

a "In many Ps. the same Heb. particle occurs in the title as a sign of authorship." — Spk. Com.

b "For a king to permit his hands, or even garment, to be kissed, was counted a great honor, but that he should himself kiss another with his mouth is the greatest honor." — Fausset.

c Jno. xii. 3.

"To become like Christ is the only thing in the world worth caring for, the thing before which every ambition of man is folly, and all lower achievement vain. Those only who make this quest the supreme desire and passion of their lives can even begin to hope to reach it."—Drummond.

"Hawthorne compares Christianity to a grand cathedral with divinely pictured windows. Viewed from without, it is impossible to gain the slightest conception of the beautiful forms and radiant colors manifest to those who look at them from within. So it is with Christ. There is a glory in him not visible to those without, but revealed to those who dwell in his heart of hearts."—Peloubet's Notes.

a "The Arab tent is made of goat's hair cloth, always black, or of a dark brown, manufactured by the women of the household, and cut in long strips, wh. are stitched together at the edges until the desired width is obtained. This tent cloth possesses the double advantage of being waterproof, and of absorbing the sun's rays, and it is thus actually cooler than the white tent of the more civilized traveler."—Van Lennep.

"There are negroes in central Africa who never dreamed that they were black until they saw the face of a white man; and there are people who never knew they were sinful until they saw the face of Jesus Christ in all its whiteness and purity."—A. J. Gordon.

b "The sheep are led to pasture only towards sunset during the greater part of the year, and return home in the morning, or spend the day, sometimes the noon-day hours only, in the breezy shade of a friendly grove, or under booths prepared for the purpose."—Van Lennep.

c "It was jeeringly intended, and if it did not exactly wound her deeply, it was certainly adapted to increase her longing for her lover."—O. Zockler.

a "The simile is peculiarly appropriate on the lips, or from the pen, of Sol., who first brought horses and chariots from Egypt. 1 Ki. x. 28, 29."—Spk. Com.

were her natural protectors. keeper, etc., thinking to keep me safe by finding work for me. mine own vineyard, i. e. I have been careless of my personal attractiveness; Comp. viii. 12.

The cry of the bride (vs. 4).—I. The request. It is—I. Earnest; 2. Constant; 3. Believing; 4. Personal; 5. Unconditional. II. The promise—"We will run," etc. Notice this promise in its—I. Boldness; 2. Greatness; 3. Humility; 4. Object. III. How the request is answered. Jesus draws by—I. Silence; 2. A look; 3. A word; 4. By former promises brought to mind; 5. By afflictions; 6. By the ordinances.—Stems and Twigs.

Internal beauty procured through unselfish service.—The bride was really comely, though she had been compelled to work, like a slave, in the vineyards; yea, she was comely in character, as the result of this toil. Very true is it that no persecution can injure us; it brings, sooner or later, real advantage. The noblest characters have been fashioned and burnished in the furnace of suffering. Even of the Son of God we are told that "he learned obedience by the things which he suffered." The statue is not perfected until it has felt ten thousand strokes of the chisel. The diamond does not sparkle at its best until it has been well cut on the wheel of the lapidary. The pearl of great price is the fruit of pain. The verdict of experience records, "It was good for me that I was afflicted." Suffering is God's lancet, whereby he produces health. A vital lesson is here taught. Without personal piety there can be no permanent usefulness. A man's character is the mightiest instrument for recovering and elevating others. If we long to see the vineyards of others fair and fruitful, our own vineyard must be a pattern of good culture. Our first duty is respecting ourselves. If we are full of light, we can lead others along the path to heaven. Personal holiness is the great desideratum.—Pul. Com.

7, 8. (7) thou feedest, R. V. "Where thou feedest thy flock, where thou makest it to rest at noon," her heart goes out to her shepherd lover. turneth aside, R. V., marg. "wandereth beside the flocks." (8) If, etc., answer taken up by the chorus of women, with a tone of irony. footsteps, if you prefer your rustic lover to the king, go and find him.

The saint and the Saviour (vss. 7, 8).—I. The address of the saint to the Saviour. 1. An acknowledgment of His love; 2. A longing for communion; 3. A dread of declension. II. The reply of the Saviour to the saint. 1. A slight reproof; 2. A warm expression of admiration; 3. A plain direction.—J. Brooks.

Verse 8.—These pampered beauties of the Harem deem her a foolish virgin indeed to keep thinking of a plain country lad, when King Solomon offers her a place in his royal, albeit rather miscellaneous, affections. In their reference to kids instead of lambs in the shepherd's flock, there may be an allusion to the worship of the Phœnician goddess Astarte, or Ashtaroth, as the Hebrews called her. In the rites of this moon-goddess a kid was the emblem of love. The pure virgin of Shunem was a devout servant of Jehovah, while many of the women in Solomon's harem were idolaters to this Phœnician Venus. For that very reason they were as unable to understand or sympathize with the strict principles of the chaste Shulamite, as is the heathen woman of to-day in polygamy to enter into the mind of the Christian maiden. To one familiar with the literature, customs, speech, and ideas of the women who live where idolatry prevails, and the rulers and chief men of the country keep harems, the amazing purity and modesty of maidens reared in Christian homes is like a revelation from Heaven.—Griffis, The Lily among Thorns.

9—11. (9) compared, etc., this is the address of the king. my love, R. V. margin "my friend," so throughout, comp. Judg. xi. 37. company, R. V., "to a steed" in, etc. (10) rows of jewels, R. V. "plaits of hair," simple and unadorned. chains, R. V. "strings of jewels," or beads, not of great value, comp. Eze. xvi. 11—13. (11) borders, R. V. "plaits." The meaning of this passage is clear as Griffis translates: "Thy cheeks are comely in their fringes of coins, thy neck in its necklace of beads. We will make thee headbands of gold and a necklace of knobs of silver." He would win the girl by an offer of ornaments.

The enticement of worldly glitter.—And thus Solomon appealed to the natural love of adornment in a young maiden all unused to such rich presents. How many a woman's heart has been won by them! how the love of them has made many a home miserable by the extravagance to which they have been the temptation! how many a fair character has been blasted and lives ruined by their deceitful glitter! And are not such facts parables of one of the chief temptations of the soul, whereby it is sought to seduce it from God? Jewels and pearls and gold, how they flash and sparkle! how they dazzle and delight poor human nature! Types are they of more terrible things still—the pomps and vanities of this wicked world, for the sake of which all too many men are only too ready to sell their souls. How Moses was tempted by them! How brilliant was the career offered him! he, the cast-out child of a slave, to be adopted into the house and family, the possessions and honors, of the imperial dynasty, the Pharaohs of Egypt! How our Lord was tempted in like manner! “All these things”—all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them—“will I give thee if,” etc.—Pul. Com. Sympathy of Christ.—But if my dear husband, Christ, do for my trial leave me alone unto myself, alas! I know in what case I shall be then; but if for my proof He do so, yet I am sure He will not be long or far from me. Though he stand behind the wall and hide Himself, as Solomon says in his mystical ballad (Cant. ii.), yet will He peep in by a cleft to see how I do. He is so tender-hearted a Joseph, that though He speak roughly to His brethren, and handle them hardly, yea, and threatens grievous bondage to his best-beloved brother, Benjamin, yet He cannot contain Himself from weeping with us, and upon us, with falling on our necks and sweetly kissing us. Such, such a brother, is our Christ unto us all; wherefore hasten to go unto Him, as Jacob did, with his sons and family, leaving their own country and acquaintance. Yea, this our Joseph hath obtained for us His brethren, that Pharaoh the infidel shall minister unto us chariots wherein at ease we may be carried to come unto Him; as we have had experience how our very adversaries do help us unto our everlasting bliss by their speedy dispatch; yea, and how all things have been helping unto us, blessed be our God!—Saunders.

12—14. The Shulamite speaks. (12) R. V. “While the king sat at his table, my spikenard” sent forth its fragrance,” i. e. “while the king was away from me, at table with his guests, my love (for another) was active, and filled me with delicious memories.”—Driver. (13) myrrh,^a a costly myrrh-gum wh. the ladies of the East are in the habit of carrying in their bosom, perhaps in a little bag. he . . breasts, R. V. “that lieth betwixt,” she parries the compliments of the king by reminiscences of her absent lover. (14) camphire, R. V. “henna-flowers,” this she prefers to the jewels the king offers; the Orientals are extravagantly fond of the odor of the henna-flowers.—Thomson. En-gedi, famed for its aromatic shrubs.^b

A bundle of myrrh (vs. 13).—Jesus is like a bundle of myrrh. I. Precious—a very valuable drug. II. Pleasant. III. Perfuming. IV. Preserving. V. A disinfectant. VI. A cure. VII. A beautifier. VIII. It was connected with sacrifice.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Verse 13.—Note here how differently the words in verse thirteenth sound as we re-read them naturally. In the proper rendering of the Hebrew, the unrevised and offensive phrase “he shall lie all night,” etc., disappears, and with it the last suggestion of anything inconsistent with propriety. Grammar and parallelism show that the reference of place is to the myrrh and not to the lover. The young girl is simply comparing her betrothed to spikenard, myrrh, and cypress flower, or what is sentimentally equal to our buttonhole, belt, or corsage bouquet, which she wears for ornament, instead of the jewelry promised by Solomon. The maidens of Israel, as we learn from the Hebrew of Isaiah, called the pretty vials of perfume, made of snow-white onyx or alabaster, which they wore suspended round their necks between their heart and their garments, “soul-dwellings,” or “the houses of the soul,” the perfume inclosed being the soul of their favorite friend or lover. While virgin modesty bows her head under the royal flatteries, the sweet odor

“On account of her youthful bloom, and her unaffected demeanor, whose lovely charms are still further heightened by the simple ornaments worn upon her head and neck.” — Delitzsch.

“Persian ladies wear two or three rows of pearls round the head, beginning on the forehead, and descending down the cheeks, and under the chin, so that their faces seem to be set in pearls.” — Olearius.

“The only greatness is unselfish love. There is a great difference between trying to please and giving pleasure.” — Drummond.

Divine love makes the soul better at obeying than disputing.

^a Obtained from an Indian plant now called jata-mansi.

Jno. xli. 1—3.

^b Ps. xlv. 8.

^c Jos. xv. 62; 1 Sa. xxiii. 29. xxiv. 1; 2 Chr. xx. 2; Eze. xlvii. 10.

“Love is the highest word; it is the synonyme of God.” — Lamartine.

“Love is the road to God; for love, endless love is Himself.” — Sonnenberg.

“The blossoms of the henna are white, and grow in clusters. Their sweet perfume makes them special favorites with the women, who are fond of placing bunches of them in their bosoms." — Van Lennep.

"Her eyes are homes of silent prayer." — Ten-nyson.

"True eyes Too pure and too honest in ought to disguise The sweet soul shining through them." — Meredith.

"Your eye discourses with more rhetoric than all the gilded tongues of orators." — Mar-mion.

"What needs a tongue to such a speaking eye? that more persuades than winning oratory." — Old Play, "Edward the Third."

^a Thomson identifies with the malva, or marsh mallow. Fausset says meadow-saffron, with flower of white or violet color.

^b "There is a wild flower extremely common in all Western Asia, which presents the appearance of a small tulip, while it is superior to it in beauty, and it is mistaken easily for it. This delicate and graceful flower is remarkable for the great variety of colors it assumes; it is often seen of a bright scarlet, and of every shade of purple and pink, as well as straw color and white." — Van Lennep.

on her own bosom ascends gratefully to the sense of smell, reminding her of him whom she always calls "the beloved," now far away.—Griffis.

15—17. (15) doves' eyes, R. V. "Thine eyes are as doves," the likeness of the bride's eyes is to doves, to the lustrous and shimmering plumage of the dove. (16) Behold, etc., taking up the king's words the Shulamite speaks (i. 16—ii. 1) of her shepherd lover, thinking of his manly beauty, the green bank where she fancies him, the trees above them, and herself a wild flower fit for such rustic life only. bed, R. V., "Couch;" Griffis, "arbor." (17) house, fancifully referring to the trees that hung over and shaded them, as if they were pillars and beams of a palace.

Most fair (vs. 16).—I. Jesus is fair from every point of view. I. How amiable in our trials; 2. In our afflictions; 3. In our persecutions. II. He is fair in all His offices. III. In every act of His life. IV. In every trait of His character. Learn to be constantly looking unto Jesus.

God's house.—The picture drawn in these verses (16, 17) is one of rural delight—the soft and verdant turf, the o'erarching and umbrageous trees, the noble cedar, the stately fir, beneath which those spoken of have cast themselves down. The ideas suggested are those of happy rest. Ps. xxiii., "Thou makest me to lie down in green pastures," etc., tells substantially of the same spiritual rest. And the house of the Lord is the place of such blessed rest of heart and soul and mind. Because of this, we find those many impassioned expressions in the Psalms as to the psalmist's delight in the house of the Lord; how he had rather be a doorkeeper there than hold any place of worldly honor or pleasure, however exalted (Ps. lxxxiv.). The agitations and cares of the mind hush themselves to rest there.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1, 2. (1) rose, (comp. Is. xxxv. 1) the autumn crocus.* Evidently some wild flower is meant. Sharon, the most beautiful meadow land of Palestine. lily, not the white lily with wh. we are familiar, but the red lily,^b or a red anemone, as if she said "I am only a wild flower of the plain, a humble lily of the valley." (2) among thorns, the king speaks. Using her figure of a lily he says she is as incomparable as a lily among thorns. All other women are as thorns.

The lily among thorns (vs. 2).—I. This illustrates the lavish bestowment of the love of God. II. It illustrates the power possessed by the love of Christ of rendering beautiful objects morally unsightly. III. It illustrates also the tenacity of Divine love. IV. It suggests also the jealousy and power of the love of Christ of and over all other and opposite plans and principles.

The Rose of Sharon.—The extreme fragrance and beauty of the rose in some parts of Western Asia have attracted the notice of many travelers. It is also cultivated, not merely as a garden plant for pleasure, but in extensive fields, from the produce of which is prepared that valued and delicious perfume called rose-water. The size of the rose-trees, and the number of the flowers on each, far exceed in the rose districts of Persia anything we are here accustomed to witness.—Pictorial Bible. The Rose of Sharon.—The plain of Sharon is still renowned for its fertility and beauty, though roses, properly speaking, do not grow there. The flower referred to may be the cistus, which is found there in abundance, and is well known in our English gardens. It is supposed that the myrrh (ladanum) referred to in verse 13 of last chapter, as well as in Gen. xxxvii. 25, was the product of this plant. In the East this flower is extremely fragrant, and has always been much admired. In no country of the world does the rose grow in such perfection as in Persia; in no country is it so cultivated and prized by the natives. Their gardens and courts are crowded with its plants, their rooms ornamented with vases filled with its gathered bunches, and every path strewn with the full-blown flowers, plucked from the ever-replenished stems. Even the humblest individual, who pays a piece of copper money for a few whiffs of a kelioun, feels a double enjoyment when he finds it stuck with a bud from his dear native tree.—R. K. Porter.

3, 4. The Shulamite speaks, vss. 3-7, "applying to her shepherd lover the comparison suggested by the king in vs. 2. (3) apple tree. In Heb. poetry the word comes from a root meaning "to breathe," referring to the fragrant breath of the tree. (Griffis.) After referring to herself as a modest field flower this figure for her lover is doubly beautiful. It better fits the conception of country life than of a royal lover. (4) banqueting house, lit. house of wine. "O that he would bring me into his vineyard, his very shadow over me being love."—Griffis. banner, etc., "love waves as a protecting and comforting banner over my head when I am near him."—Delitzsch.

The hieroglyphic of love (vs. 3).—The apple tree was the emblem of love. This emblem teaches us—I. The great superiority of Divine love. Consider—1. The majesty of Divine love; 2. The compass of Divine love; 3. The expressions of Divine love. II. The abundant provisions of Divine love. 1. Shelter; 2. Refreshment; 3. Enjoyment. III. The blessed freeness of Divine love, "I sat down," etc.—Stems and Twigs.

The apple-tree.—As the apple tree with its sweet fruit and its fragrant smell excels the barren trees of the wood, so the bridegroom excels all other men in the eyes of the bride. It is uncertain what the tappauch,^a called in our version "apple tree," really is; it has been identified by different writers with the quince, the citron, or the orange. It is enough for our purpose to know that it excels the trees of the wood, that its foliage gives a pleasant shade, that its fruit is sweet and fragrant and possesses certain restorative properties.—Pul. Com. The citron is a large and beautiful tree, always green, perfuming the air with its exquisite odor, and extending a deep and refreshing shade over the panting inhabitants of the torrid regions. Well, then, might the spouse exclaim: "As the citron tree among the trees of the wood; so is my beloved among the sons. I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste." A more beautiful object can hardly be conceived than a large and spreading citron, loaded with gold-colored apples, and clothed with leaves of the richest green. Maundrell preferred the orange garden, or citron grove, at Beyroot, the palace of the Emir Facardine, on the coast of Syria, to everything else he met with there, although it was only a large quadrangular plot of ground, divided into sixteen smaller squares; but the walks were so shaded with orange trees, of a large spreading size, and so richly adorned with fruit, that he thought nothing could be more perfect in its kind, or, had it been duly cultivated, could have been more delightful.—Paxton. Shade, according to Mr. Wood, in his description of the ruins of Balbec, is an essential article in Oriental luxury. The greatest people seek these refreshments, as well as the meaner. So Dr. Pococke found the patriarch of the Maronites (who was one of their greatest families) and a bishop sitting under a tree. Any tree that is thick and spreading doth for them; but it must certainly be an addition to their enjoying of themselves, when the tree is of a fragrant nature, as well as shady, which the citron tree is.—Harmer. The pre-eminence of Immanuel.—In Eastern lands, far more than in Western, men are dependent on ripe fruit to allay their hunger. A man may walk all day among the oaks of Bashan or among the cedars of Lebanon, and find no food. To discover an apple tree or a citron tree among the trees of the forest would come as a surprise—as a meal direct from Heaven. Equally true is it that men wander from teacher to teacher, from one religious system to another, in quest of saving knowledge, and find it nowhere, until they find Jesus, the Christ. For Jesus, the Son of God, is the only Saviour, and, apart from him, the soul is starved, diseased, undone. "As the citron tree among the trees of the wood, so is my Beloved among the sons."—Pul. Com.

^a Pr. xxv. 11; Joel 1. 12.

"It is a generic word (like malum in Latin), and may include the citron and lemon."—Wordsworth.

"As the planets by gravitation are held in their courses by the sun, so are souls led to feel the attraction of our Saviour-God. But whilst material things obey unwittingly, it is for spiritual natures consciously and voluntarily to yield to the spiritual attraction of him who is the Centre, the Law, the Life of all."—Pul. Com.

"That you may be beloved, be amiable."—Ovid.

"No cord or cable can draw so forcibly, or bind so fast, as love can do with only a single thread."—Burton.

"The pleasure of love is in loving."—La Rochefoucauld. "They do not love that do not show their love."—Shakespeare.

"We love only partially till we know thoroughly. Grant that a closer acquaintance reveals weakness;—it will also disclose strength."—Bovee.

"Love keeps the cold out better than a cloak. It serves for food and raiment."—Longfellow.

"Love reflects the thing beloved."—Tennyson.

a "The original term means grapes compressed into cakes, which were an article of food."—Ayre.

Hos. iii. 1. See also 1 Sa. xxx. 12.

"The agreeable and healthful qualities of the apples of Syria are celebrated by travelers and physiologists."—Wordsworth.

"The district of Askelon is especially celebrated for its apples, wh. are the largest and best I have ever seen in this country."—Thomson.

"O Love Divine,
How sweet thou art!
When shall I find my willing heart
All taken up by thee?
I thirst, I faint,
I die to prove
The greatness of redeeming love,
The love of Christ to me."

c "What elegant creatures those gazelles are, and how gracefully they bound! These lovely harts are very timid, and descend at night to the plains to feed among the lilies until the day-break, and the shadows flee away."—Thomson.

a "Windows of female members of the household are screened with lattice-work made of narrow slats of wood, arranged diagonally at right angles with each other, and so close together that persons within can see without being seen."—Van Lennep.

5-7. (5) flagons,^a R. V. "raisins," thinking of the vineyard and the apple tree she longs for their fruits. comfort, or refresh me. sick, faint and exhausted, so as to need reviving food. (6) left, "oh that he would put his arms about her and support her as in the old days before she was carried away."—Adeney. (7) charge you, R. V. "adjure you." roes,^c or gazelles; figures of country love, pure and free and simple. awake, etc., R. V., "nor awaken love, until it please," this formula occurs four times, at the end of decisive scenes, dividing the composition into five parts. It is an appeal not to stir up wantonly the God-born gift of love, not to interfere with the course of true love or endeavor to deflect its course. Emphasizes one theme of the whole poem.

Verse 7.—Next follows a verse which is repeated later, and so serves as a sort of refrain. The Shulamite adjures the daughters of Jerusalem not to awaken love. This verse is misrendered in the Authorized Version, which inserts the pronoun "my" before "love" without any warrant in the Hebrew text. The poor girl has spoken of apples. But the court ladies must not misunderstand her. She wants none of their love apples, no philtre, no charm to turn her affections away from her shepherd lover and pervert them to the importunate royal suitor. The opening words of the poem which celebrated the charms of Solomon had been aimed in that direction. The motive of the work seems to be the Shulamite's resistance to various attempts to move her from loyalty to her true love. It is natural, therefore, that an appeal to desist from all such attempts should come out emphatically.—Expos. Bib.

The antelope.—The antelope, like the hind, with which it is so frequently associated in Scripture, is a timid creature, extremely jealous and watchful, sleeps little, is easily disturbed, takes alarm on the slightest occasion; and the moment its fears are awakened, it flies, or seems rather to disappear, from the sight of the intruder. Soft and cautious is the step which interrupts not the light slumbers of this gentle and suspicious creature. It is probable, from some hints in the sacred volume, that the shepherd in the Eastern desert sometimes wished to beguile the tedious moments by contemplating the beautiful form of the sleeping antelope. But this was a gratification he could not hope to enjoy, unless he approached it with the utmost care, and maintained a profound silence. When, therefore, an Oriental charged his companion, by the antelope, not to disturb the repose of another, he intimated, by a most expressive and beautiful allusion, the necessity of using the greatest circumspection. This statement imparts a great degree of clearness and energy to the solemn adjuration which the spouse twice addresses to the daughters of Jerusalem.

8, 9. Here begins the second great division of the poem, extending to iii. 5. In vss. 8-15 the Shulamite recounts a scene from her past life, a visit from her shepherd lover. (8) voice, Oettli considers this a real interview, the lover finding her and conversing through a window. Notice that the descriptions of the lover are fit for a shepherd lover, hardly for the king. (9) wall, "the clay-built wall of the house or vineyard of the bride's family." A different word from that meaning the strong wall of a city or fortress. looketh forth, R. V. "looketh in." windows . . . lattice,^a the beloved was looking in from the outside.

The voice of the beloved (vs. 8).—I. The beloved. Christ is—I. The beloved of the Father; 2. Of the angels; 3. Of His people. II. The revelation of the beloved—the voice. He reveals Himself—I. By His Word; 2. By His Spirit dwelling in the heart. Note—This voice is pleasant, instructive, influential. III. The coming of Christ. 1. This was the language of primitive and expectant saints; 2. He came by His incarnation; 3. He comes to the penitent sinner; 4. To the afflicted saint; 5. He comes at death to receive the soul to glory; 6. He will come in judgment to complete the salvation of His people.—Pulpit Themes.

Christ's coming makes a new epoch in our history.—Nature is a mirror in which God is seen, and all the processes of nature are samples of God's works in us. Such analogies we ought to expect, because all the forces in nature are the projections of God's thoughts and purposes. The same God who works so mightily in the material world works with mighty grace in us. If, in the visible creation, he gives life to dead matter, so does he likewise give life to dead souls. The sun which rides in royal majesty across the heavens is a picture of the great Sun of Righteousness, who arises on the soul "with healing in his beams." As the coming of spring makes a new epoch in the material world, so the coming of Immanuel is the opening of a new era to the soul. It is nothing short of a spiritual evolution. We pass out of winter into spring; out of death into life.

Windows in the East.—In Eastern countries the windows are made of lattice-work, so closely set together, that a person outside cannot see what is taking place within; while any one within can see all that goes on outside. In the centre of this lattice work, however, there is a small door, opening on hinges, about the size of a face, through which a person can hold communication with any one outside. When one does not wish to be seen at the opening, or to communicate with the outside, he has only to step a little aside, where he is unobserved, though he can observe. "The mother of Sisera looked out at the window, and cried through the lattice," Judg. v. 28. Windows, in Eastern countries, from their peculiar construction, have thus suggested the images, so expressive and beautiful, used in many passages of Scripture.

10—13. (10) Rise up, vss. 10—14, a serenade of the shepherd lover. Comp. with i:9—11 and note how different the language. (11) rain, "for the six summer months rain rarely falls in Palestine." (12) singing, not merely of birds, though spring is the special time for their songs. turtle,^b the turtle-dove, a bird of passage in Palestine; its return indicated spring. (13) R. V., "The fig tree ripeneth her green figs, And the vines are in blossom, They give forth their fragrance." fig, etc., lit. "the fig tree spices its fruit." vines,^c when just in blossom.

A song of three eras (vss. 12, 13).—We may regard these words—I. As a prophetic song of the first advent, when the winter of exclusiveness and moral darkness was past. II. As an experimental song of Christ's advent to the soul. III. As a prophetic song of the final glory. 1. Be patient, the winter will soon be past; 2. Be diligent; 3. Be appreciative; 4. Be earnest, think of the winter of the ungodly.—Stems and Twigs.

Verses 11, 12.—This is one of the sweetest songs of spring that ever was sung. In our colder climate we acknowledge that this is the most beautiful season of all the round year; but in Palestine it stands out in more strongly pronounced contrast to the three other seasons, and it is in itself exceedingly lovely. While summer and autumn are there parched with drought, barren and desolate, and while winter is often dreary with snow-storms and floods of rain, in spring the whole land is one lovely garden, ablaze with richest hues, hill and dale, wilderness and farmland vying in the luxuriance of their wild flowers, from the red anemone that fires the steep sides of the mountains to the purple and white cyclamen that nestles among the rocks at their feet. Much of the beauty of this poem is found in the fact that it is pervaded by the spirit of an eastern spring. This makes it possible to introduce a wealth of beautiful imagery which would not have been appropriate if any other season had been chosen.—Exp. Bib. Singing of birds.—But the nightingale, another of my airy creatures, breathes such loud music out of her little instrumental throat, that it might make mankind to think miracles are not ceased. He that at midnight, when the very laborer sleeps securely, should hear, as I have very often, the clear airs, the sweet descants, the natural rising and falling, the doubling and redoubling of her voice, might well be lifted above earth, and say, "Lord, what music hast Thou provided for the saints in heaven, when Thou affordest bad men such music on earth?"—I. Walton.

"Put ye on the new man."—All Nature does this at spring-time. We in our dwellings and in our dress try to imitate her and do the like. They who can, get new garments; they who cannot, try to make the old look new. Let us learn the lesson in things higher still. Is there not much room for it? In too many even Christian people the remains of what Paul calls "the old man" are too plentifully visible—in homes, in habits, in speech, in thought, in temper. How much we need yet to be created anew in Christ Jesus, to "put on the new man!" And he who

^b "The more common species of turtle-doves come up from the south in the early spring, and gradually fill the whole land, not only of Palestine and Syria, but the whole Peninsula of Asia Minor."—Van Lennep.

^c Figs in the Holy Land ripen about the end of June.

"This description of spring has not perhaps its equal in any of our poets (Greek or Latin)."—Mercler.

"Ah, how wonderful is the advent of the spring, — the great annual miracle of the blossoming of Aaron's rod, repeated on myriads and myriads of branches!"—Longfellow.

"Fair Spring! whose simplest promise more delights Than all their largest wealth, and through the heart Each joy and new-born hope With softest influence breathes."—Anna L. Barbauld.

"Airs, vernal airs, breathing the smell of fields and grove, attune the trembling leaves."—Milton.

^a Tame pigeons are fond of building their nests in the secret places underneath the stairs leading to the roofs of houses.

"Foxes are observed by many authors to be fond of grapes, and to make great havoc in vineyards. Aristophanes (in his Equites) compares soldiers to foxes, who spoil whole countries, as the others do vineyards. Galen (in his Book of Aliments) tells us that hunters did not scruple to eat the flesh of foxes in autumn, when they were grown fat with feeding on grapes." — Burder.

"No miracles of battle nor one great heroic act of mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The avoidance of little evils . . . these go far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life." — Andrew A. Bonar.

^a Mr. Williams believes that he has found the ancient Bether in Wady Beitir, which comes down from the south, and unites with Wady el Werd.

Eusebius says Bether was an impregnable fortress not far from Jerusalem.

"The Christian man is the man maketh "all things new" is ready to help us herein if we will have his help.—Pul. Com.

14, 15. (14) clefts, etc.,^a with reference to the dove, wh. hides in holes of the rocks. This was his song once, and now she hears him calling her to come forth from her present hiding place behind the bars in the king's harem. in the secret places, etc., R. V., "in the covert of the steep place." let me hear thy voice, an invitation to sing. (15) foxes, better, jackals, shy animals, wh. come forth only at night, and then do great mischief in the vineyards, as they are excessively fond of grapes. tender grapes, R. V., "For our vineyards are in blossom." This had been the song which she sang in answer to his invitation. It is undoubtedly part of a well-known folk song. Perhaps it was a laughing jibe at him as wishing to rob the vineyard even of its keeper. See prev. reference to the bride being busy in the vineyards, ch. i. 6.

The dove and the rock (vs. 14).—I. The title given by Christ to the converted soul. Dove—I. Beautiful; 2. Cleanly; 3. Harmless; 4. Loving; 5. Fruitful; 6. Sociable; 7. Defenceless; 8. Swift in flight; 9. Homely; 10. Quick-sighted; 11. Used in sacrifice; 12. Lures wild doves to the dove-cote. II. Place of residence. 1. Clefts of rock, Christ the spiritual Rock; 2. Secret place of the stairs, ordinances, prayer, etc. III. The request. 1. Let me see Thy countenance; 2. Let me hear Thy voice. IV. The motives. Apply—I. To those who are not in the clefts of rock; 2. To those who are; 3. To all.—W. Stevens. The little foxes (vs. 15).—I. Some of the little foxes that spoil the vine. The little foxes of—1. Unsanctified tempers; 2. Of the tongue; 3. Of the habits of the life; 4. Of irregularity and neglect; 5. Of pernicious thoughts and judgments; 6. Of selfishness. II. How they spoil the vine. 1. They deprive of spiritual strength; 2. They prevent growth and fruitfulness; 3. They endanger spiritual life. III. What we are to do with them. 1. Vigilance is necessary; 2. They must be entrapped; 3. They must be destroyed. Learn:—Let the subject lead to—(1) Self-examination; (2) Fidelity; (3) Resolution.—J. Burns.

The "little foxes."—In the gardens of Hampton Court you will see many trees entirely vanquished and well nigh strangled by huge coils of ivy, which are wound about them like the snakes around the unhappy Laocöon; there is no untwisting the folds, they are too giantlike, and fast fixed, and every hour the rootlets of the climber are sucking the life out of the unhappy tree. Yet there was a day when the ivy was a tiny aspirant, only asking a little aid in climbing; had it been denied then the tree had never become its victim, but by degrees the humble weakling grew in strength and arrogance, and at last it assumed the mastery, and the tall tree became the prey of the creeping, insinuating destroyer. The moral is too obvious. Sorrowfully do we remember many noble characters which have been ruined little and little by insinuating habits. Drink has been the ivy in many cases. Reader, see to it, lest some slowly advancing sin overpower you: men who are murdered by slow poisoning die just as surely as those who take arsenic.—Old Test. Anec.

16, 17. (16) She affirms to the women of Jerusalem her loyalty to the absent lover. feedeth, R. V. "feedeth his flock," repeated in v. 3. Notice how she describes her lover. "Never as king or courtier or dweller in cities." (17) day break, "day be cool," Griffis translates, "When the day cools, and the shadows flee away, return, haste, O my beloved, and be thou like a gazelle over the separating mountains." Bether,^a this may mean "mountains of separation."

The mountain of myrrh.—

Up to the fair myrrh-mountain,
The fresh frankincense hill,
I'll get me in this midnight,
And drink of love my fill.
O hills of fragrance, smiling
With every flower of love;
O slopes of sweetness, breathing
Your odors from above,—
Ye send me silent welcome,

I waft you mine again;
Give me the wings of morning,
Burst this still-binding chain.
For soon shall break the day.
And shadows flee away.

There my Beloved dwelleth,
He calls me up to Him;
He bids me quit these valleys,
These moorlands brown and dim.
There my long-parted wait me,
The missed and mourned below;
Now, eager to rejoin them,
I fain would rise and go.
Not long we here shall linger,
Not long we here shall sigh;
The hour of dew and dawning
Is hastening from on high.
For soon shall break the day,
And shadows flee away.

O streaks of happy dayspring,
Salute us from above;
O never-setting sunlight,
Earth longeth for thy love.
O hymns of unknown gladness,
That hail us from these skies,
Swell till you gently silence
Earth's meaner melodies.
O hope, all hope surpassing,
For evermore to be;
O Christ, the Church's Bridegroom,
In Paradise with Thee!
For soon shall break the day,
And shadows flee away.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1—5. (1) By night, the Shulamite relates a dream, to show that even in her sleep her heart and mind are with the shepherd lover. She thinks she has lost him. She hunts for him and finds him and brings him to her home. (2) rise now, R. V. "I said I will rise now," etc. city, Jerusalem, or perhaps Shunem. (3) watchmen, night-guards, or sentinels. (4) mother's house, proof of the simplicity and purity of the maiden's love. The artlessness of all this dream, its very impossibility as a reality, is in keeping with the idea that we have a picture of true and simple-hearted love of lad and lassie. (5) charge, R. V., "adjure," this refrain occurs four times (comp. ii. 7, v. 8 and viii. 4). See note on ii. 7. awake, R. V., "nor awaken love, until it please."

The strength of love.—Mercer's Hall stands upon a most interesting site. Here was the house of Gilbert Becket, a yeoman, who, whilst following his lord to the Holy Land during the crusades, was taken prisoner by a Saracen emir, and confined in a dungeon. The emir had a daughter, who saw and pitied the captive. Pity in this instance proved akin to love, and under the influence of these feelings she contrived to set him free. Gilbert returned to England, leaving his benefactress behind, pining in sorrow for his loss, which at last grew so insupportable that she determined to seek him through the world. She went to the nearest port, and embarked on the sea, the words "London" and "Gilbert" being all the directions she had to guide her. The first sufficed to guide her to the English capital; but when there, she could only wander from street to street, repeating with touching pathos the other,—"Gilbert! Gilbert!" How the fond and single-hearted girl succeeded in finding Gilbert the who has found to whom he belongs. The world wants men who know where they belong and to whom they belong. — W. W. Moore.

"Love one human being purely and warmly, and you will love all. The heart in this heaven, like the wandering sun, sees nothing, from the dew-drop to the ocean, but a mirror which it warms and fills." — Richter.

"Love is not love which alters when it alteration finds, or bends with the remover to remove; O no! it is an ever fixed mark, that looks on tempests, and is never shaken; it is the star to every wandering bark whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken." — Shakespeare.

"A man may be a miser of his wealth; he may tie up his talent in a napkin; he may hug himself in his reputation; but he is always generous in his love. Love cannot stay at home; a man cannot keep it to himself. Like light, it is constantly traveling. A man must spend it, must give it away." — Macleod.

"No one can perfectly love God who does not perfectly love some of His creatures." — Marguerite de Valois.

"Solomon tried all that the world can give, and under the most favorable circumstances, yet found all to be vanity and vexation of spirit."

it. Byron, with rank and wealth, and all manner of pleasure, failed of content and happiness. Alexander conquered the world, but it did not satisfy his soul; and, if he could have conquered all the worlds that stud the heavens, he would still have wept for more. For God has not created a single human soul so small and poor that all the material universe can fill it. All literature is full of expressions of the failure of worldly things to satisfy the soul." — Peloubet's Notes.

"Talk not of wasted affection, affection never was wasted;

If it enrich not the heart of another, its waters returning

Back to their springs, like the rain, shall fill them full of refreshment;

That which the fountain sends forth returns again to the fountain."

—Longfellow.

"'Tis love combined with guilt alone, that melts the soften'd soul to cowardice and sloth; but virtuous passions prompt the great resolve, and fan the slumbering spark of heavenly fire." — Johnson.

"Loveliness Needs not the foreign aid of ornament.

But is, when undorn'd, adorn'd the most."

—Thomson.

story sayeth not; but she did find him, and was rewarded for all her troubles, obtained the fruition of all her hopes. The yeoman welcomed her with tears of joy, had her immediately baptised, and was then united to her in marriage. The son of the fair pagan and the yeoman was the far-famed Thomas à Becket.—Old England.

6—8. Here begins the third general division of the poem, extending from iii. 6-v. 8. The rest of the chapter gives conversation between several citizens. (6) wilderness, or the country. The maiden is brought to a place where she can see Solomon riding into the city with his splendid equipage. It is hoped to impress her favorably with the spectacle. The smoke, is from the incense burned in the royal procession. The air is full of its perfumes. (7) R. V., "Behold, it is the litter of Solomon;" a second citizen speaks. valiant men, to form a body-guard. (8) upon his thigh, ready for instant use. fear, of robbers attacking the procession.^a Perfumes.—The use of perfumes at Eastern marriages is common; and upon great occasions very profuse. Not only are the garments scented till, in the Psalmist's language, they smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia; it is also customary for virgins to meet, and lead the procession, with silver gilt pots of perfumes; and sometimes aromatics are burned in the windows of all the houses in the streets through which the procession is to pass, till the air becomes loaded with fragrant odors. In allusion to this practice it is demanded, "Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense?" So liberally were these rich perfumes burned on this occasion, that a pillar of smoke ascended from the censers, so high, that it could be seen at a considerable distance; and the perfume was so rich, as to equal in value and fragrance all the powders of the merchant. The custom of burning perfumes on these occasions still continues in the East; for Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, describing the reception of a young Turkish bride at the bath, says, "Two virgins met her at the door; two others filled silver gilt pots with perfumes, and began the procession, the rest following in pairs, to the number of thirty." And Maillet informs us that when the ambassadors of an Eastern monarch, sent to propose marriage to an Egyptian queen, made their entrance into the capital of that kingdom, the streets through which they passed were strewed with flowers, and precious odors, burning in the windows from very early in the morning, embalmed the air.—Paxton.

A great lack.—There is nothing in all this glory of pomp and wealth which marks the presence of those Godward riches which alone are real; nothing to satisfy the soul of man or to help it in its life. The soul might starve, as Solomon's did, in spite of all this glory; and, on the other hand, the soul can prosper well though it can call none of this glory its own. We cannot help desiring earthly riches—they are designed in due measure to attract and stimulate us; and they will do us no harm if we are careful, all the while we seek them, to be rich towards God; to possess, as we may, "the unsearchable riches of Christ." But poor and miserable is that soul, though he have all Solomon's glory, if he have not these.—Pul. Com.

9—II. (9) chariot, R. V., "palanquin," margin, "car of state." Another speaker describes this conveyance in which the king is borne. wood of Lebanon, very costly, and fragrant. (10) pillars, to support the canopy. covering, R. V., "seat." paved, R. V., marg., "inlaid," etc., reference is probably to mosaic work or tapestry. for, R. V., "from," i. e. as a gift of love from the women of Jerusalem. (11) Go forth, to meet the procession. mother, i. e. Bathsheba. The crown referred to is the festive coronet of gold and silver wh. bridegrooms wore at Israelitish weddings. It is a significant fact that he now has it on. Is it in honor of the Shulamite? Let her realize the greatness of the honor.

The King coming to his capital.—In Asiatic lands wheeled carriages were rare, and are rare still. This is accounted for by the absence of roads. To construct and maintain roads through a hilly country like Palestine required more engineering skill than the people possessed; and further, there was a general belief that to make good roads would pave the way to military invasion. Hence all over Palestine the pathways from town to town were simply tracks marked out by the feet of men and beasts. Over the level plain of Esdraelon Ahab might ride in a chariot;

but if Solomon brought up wheeled chariots from Egypt he had a prior undertaking, viz. to make a road from Beersheba to the capital. Therefore traveling princes rode in a covered palanquin, which served to screen from the hot sun by day, and became a bed at night. Owing to the scorching heat, much of the journey would be taken during the cool hours of night, and hence the need for a strong body-guard. Before the rapt imagination of the sacred poet such a scene passed. The stately procession arrested his attention, and he asks, "Who is this?" What great king is this? Such is the poetic imagery. Now, what is the religious instruction? It is the march of Christ through the ages—a march beginning with the wilderness and terminating with his coronation in the new Jerusalem. Though he has been long hidden, the day is coming when the King of Zion shall be revealed to the eyes of men, and he shall "be admired by all who love his appearing."—Pul. Com. Work of women.—All through the East, women are despised, down-trodden, treated as an inferior race. If in Western lands women are ennobled and honored, it is wholly due to the grace of our King. So from the very beginning Jesus intimated that the service of women would be acceptable. He was dependent on an earthly mother's care. Once and again, women ministered to him "of their substance." The deed which he predicted should be known throughout the world was the deed of a woman. Women gathered round his cross in sweetest sympathy, while others laughed and jeered. Women performed the last acts of care for his dead body. Women were the first to greet him on the resurrection-morn. "In Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female."—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

The scene evidently changes here. vss. 1-5, Solomon tries to win the maiden's love, comp. i. 9-11; i. 15; ii. 2. 1-3. (1) doves' eyes, ch. i. 15, R. V., "Thine eyes are as doves behind thy veil." hair . . goats, i. e. "her locks were jet, glossy black, like the Syrian goats." appear, R. V., "that lie along the side of." teeth . . sheep, R. V., "a flock of ewes that are newly shorn," "one of the pleasantest sights to be witnessed under the clear and brilliant sky of Western Asia is a flock of snow-white sheep, scattered over the surface of a fine green meadow."—Van Lennep. bear twins, better, "are equal pairs and none is lost," referring to the regularity and completeness of the teeth. (3) scarlet, contrasting beautifully with the white of the teeth. speech, R. V., "mouth." temples, likened to a sliced pomegranate blushing with its fruitful seeds. "The fruit is of a flesh color, with tints of a deeper rose." within, etc., R. V., "behind thy veil."

Charm of true beauty.—The Church of Christ may well be encouraged and cheered by the assurance that the Divine Spouse appreciates those spiritual excellences which are due to the operation of his own Spirit. "Behold, thou art fair, my love," is the language of the Bridegroom as he looks upon his beloved. And our Saviour is not insensible to those signs of grace, those revelations of spiritual beauty, which he daily discerns in his own. Those who would please Christ may well be animated by the knowledge that he never looks with indifference upon the proofs of sincere affection, upon the evidences of spiritual assimilation to himself. Well may the Christian adopt the language of St. Augustine, "Take from me, Lord, all that injures me and displeases thee, and give me all that is requisite to please thee; give me words, affections, desires, and works which may draw upon me thine eyes, thy delight, and thy love!"

4-7. (4) tower, etc., see Ne. iii. 25-27; Mi. iv. 8. hang, "Thy neck is like the town of David built for trophies," Griffis, i. e. to hang trophies of love upon it, as the shields of the mighty men were hung on the walls of David's town. (5) young roes, R. V. "two fawns that are twins of a

"A beautiful eye makes silence eloquent; a kind eye makes contradiction an assent; an enraged eye makes beauty deformed."—Addison.

"For when with beauty we can virtue join, We paint the semblance of a point divine."—Prior.

"Whatever we make sacrifices for we count beautiful. Our love pierces through the outer husk of circumstance and evil habit, and sees the beauty within; and it is for that we will make sacrifice if need be. And so with our most blessed Lord—his eye of love pierced through the often hideous husk of men's vile habits and ways to the soul on which his heart was set, that he might redeem and save it, and make it beautiful, like his own."—Pul. Com.

"Love is like the spirit in Ezekiel's wheels, that made them move so swiftly; so that dullness, sluggishness, and wearisomeness is quickly dispelled by heavenly love, as the ice is presently dissolved by the sunbeams."—Anthony Burgess. "All dark thoughts of God and of God's dealings shall by-and-by disappear. All his mysterious ways will be illuminated in the blaze of noon. Whereas now we feel some of our earthly conditions hard to bear, then shall we discover that these were ordered by the ripest wisdom, combined with tenderest love. Every puzzling doe trine shall be made plain. Gracious reasons will appear for every disappointment, every sorrow, every conflict, we endured on earth. The mysteries of pain and sin and death will all be solved, and God's great plan for training men will be pronounced the best."—D.

"Solid love, whose root is virtue, can no more die than virtue itself."—Erasmus.

roe," beautiful and delicate, and exactly matching. (6) break, R. V., "be cool," comp. ii. 17. Here as then the maiden speaks. Unmoved by the flattery of the king she remains loyal to her lover. "In thought she returns to her mountain home, where rise the fragrant mountains rich in odorous forests."—Griffis. (7) all fair, The king speaks again. It is possible that vs. 6 is also his speech, meaning that he will bathe himself in perfume to be worthy of her presence.

The Hühle lily.—This flower is very large, and the three inner petals meet above, and form a gorgeous canopy, such as art never approached, and king never sat under, even in his utmost glory. And when I met this incomparable flower in all its loveliness, among the oak-woods around the northern base of Tabor and on the hills of Nazareth, where our Lord spent his youth, I felt assured that it was to this he referred. We call it Hühle lily because it was here that it was first discovered. Its botanical name, if it has one, I am unacquainted with, and am not anxious to have any other than that which connects it with its neighborhood. I suppose, also, that it is this identical flower to which Solomon refers in the Song of Songs, "I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys. As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters." The bride, comparing her beloved to a roe or a young hart, sees him feeding among the lilies. Our flower delights most in the valleys, but is also found on the mountains. It grows among thorns, and I have sadly lacerated my hands in extricating it from them. Nothing can be in higher contrast than the luxuriant, velvety softness of this lily, and the crabbed, tangled hedge of thorns about it. Gazelles still delight to feed among them, and you can scarcely ride through the woods north of Tabor, where these lilies abound, without frightening them from their pasture.—Thomas.

8, 9. Oettli thinks the shepherd lover here again obtains a stolen interview with his bride. Ewald, Griffis and others that the Shulamite describes an imaginary meeting giving iv. 8—15, the lover's invitation, and her reply iv. 16 and v. 1 his final response. (8) Lebanon, the district fr. whence the bride was brought. spouse, R. V., "bride," notice the entire change of character in this address from that of Solomon (iv. 1—7). "He does not waste his breath in formal compliments."—Adeney. The reference to the mountains may mean, "come down from your lofty heights to me, your shepherd lover of the plains." Amana, the part of the Antilibanus that looks over Damascus. Shenir, another peak of the same range. lions' dens, referring to the throne-room, with its lions crouching on either side, comp. I. Ki. x. 18—20. Or perhaps the king is the lion. (9) ravished, taken away. one . . eyes, or "one look of thine."—Gesenius.

One of thine eyes.—There is a singularity in this imagery, which has much perplexed the critics; and perhaps it is not possible to ascertain the meaning of the poet beyond a doubt. Tertullian mentions a custom in the East, of women unveiling only one eye in conversation, while they keep the other covered: and Niebuhr mentions a like custom in some parts of Arabia.—Williams.

Value of Words.—Mr. Hervey, in a letter, says: "I have lately seen that most excellent minister of the ever-blessed Jesus, Mr. ——. I dined, supped and spent the evening with him at Northampton, in company with Dr. Doddridge, and two pious, ingenious clergymen of the Church of England, both of them known to the learned world by their valuable writings; and surely I never spent a more delightful evening, or saw one that seemed to make nearer approach to the felicity of heaven. A gentleman of great worth and rank in the town invited us to his house, and gave us an elegant treat; but how mean was his provision, how coarse his delicacies, compared with the fruit of my friend's lips!—they dropped as the honey-comb, and were a well of life."—Whitecross.

10, 11. (10) spouse, R. V., "bride," in all cases; in the other passages, attributed to Solomon, "my friend" or "my love" is employed. (11) drop, honey, as the honeycomb does. under thy tongue, so as to sweeten thy words. smell, etc., comp. Ge. xxvii. 27.

The heavenly Bridegroom.—Thrice happy souls that have Christ for their Commander, and are led, governed, and conducted by Him as their King and Captain of their salvation. His very "banner" over them is love; all His commands are commands of love; all the service He requireth of them is imposed in love; He never enjoineth them anything but

*Comp. Ps. xlv. 8. Proverbs. —

"Nobody's sweet-heart is ugly."—Dutch. "People in love think other people's eyes are out."—Spanish. "Love is blind."—English. — "Faults are thick where love is thin."—Welsh. "To love and to be wise is impossible."—Spanish. "True love never grows heavy." "Who would be loved must love."—Italian.

what is for their good. They are never losers by obeying His pleasure; all their losses come by their disobedience: He never putteth them upon any suffering, but it is done in love. He chooseth the sweet attribute of love, showing that it is a special act of His love that He leadeth on His followers to conflict, intending to make them happy gainers, "more than conquerors."—J. Maynard (1646).

12—15. (12) inclosed, marg. barred (ch. viii. 9). fountain sealed,^b i. e. barred and sealed against the flatteries and seductions of the king and his court. A statement of confidence in the absolute purity of the maiden. (13) plants, R. V. "shoots," pomegranates,^c regarded as a sacred fruit. camphire, R. V. "henna"^d (ch. i. 14). (14) Spikenard, etc., different kinds of spices that were highly esteemed. Saffron, or crocus. calamus, a sweet cane, brought from Arabia Felix. cinnamon, if the well-known article of commerce it came fr. Ceylon. (15) R. V. "Thou art a fountain," etc. "In free unstudied diction, which lacks the perfect rhetorical finish of the king's addresses, and drawing his metaphors from wild nature within the view of the life of the toiler, his words burn with passion."—Griffis.

The sealed fountain.—This morning we went to see some remarkable places in the neighborhood of Bethlehem. The first place that we directed our course to was those famous fountains, pools, and gardens, about an hour and a quarter distant from Bethlehem, southward, said to have been the contrivance and delight of King Solomon. Close by the pools is a pleasant castle of a modern structure; and at about the distance of one hundred and forty paces from them is a fountain, from which, principally, they derive their waters. This the friars will have to be that "sealed fountain" to which the holy spouse is compared, Cant. iv. 12, and, in confirmation of this opinion, they pretend a tradition, that King Solomon shut up these springs, and kept the door of them sealed with his signet, to the end that he might preserve the waters for his own drinking, in their natural freshness and purity. Nor was it difficult thus to secure them, they rising under ground, and having no avenue to them but by a little hole, like to the mouth of a narrow well. Through this hole you descend directly down, but not without some difficulty, for about four yards, and then arrive in a vaulted room, fifteen paces long, and eight broad. Joining to this is another room, of the same fashion, but somewhat less. Both these rooms are covered with handsome stone arches, very ancient, and perhaps the work of Solomon himself. Below the pools here runs down a narrow rocky valley, enclosed on both sides with high mountains. This the friars will have to be the "enclosed garden" alluded to in the same place of the Canticles before cited. What truth there may be in this conjecture, I cannot absolutely pronounce. As to the pools, it is probable enough they may be the same with Solomon's; there not being the like store of excellent spring-water to be met with anywhere else throughout all Palestine.—Maundrell.

"Thy vineyards and thine orchards are Most beautiful and fair,
Full furnished with trees and fruits
Exceeding rich and rare.
Thy gardens and thy gallant walks Continually are green;
There grow such sweet and pleasant flowers
As nowhere else are seen."

16...north...south, "the north wind is cool and refreshing, the south wind heats and ripens." She who gave no direct answer to the king thus replies to her lover. She accepts his arrival, and calls upon the winds to increase her gifts that she may bestow them all upon him. his garden, hers, but she willingly acknowledges it as his.

The union between the bridegroom and the bride.—Marriage is further ennobled in our thought since God has chosen this most intimate and sacred union to illustrate the union between Christ and His Church. On the plains of Northern Italy there stands an ancient and beautiful city. Near its center rises a building of pure white marble, wonderful for its grandeur and beauty, seeming more like a dream from heaven

b "The garden and the spring being locked up and sealed, naturally indicates that the access is open only to the owner and possessor himself."—O. Zockler.

Comp. Ge. xxix. 3; Da. vi. 17.

c "One species of pomegranate has kernels of a deep crimson color, preferred by some on account of their strong acidity, their juice being sometimes used instead of vinegar. The other variety is nearly white, of a pleasant sweet flavor, very refreshing. These trees are often seen in gardens by running water, but they are also grown in extensive orchards."—Van Lennep.

d The henna is a shrub rising five or six feet high, with fragrant whitish flowers growing in clusters (Lawsonia alba).

"Love is poesie—it doth create; from fading features, dim soul, doubtful heart, and this world's wretched happiness, a life which is as near to heaven as are the stars."—Bailey.

"When hearts are join'd in virtuous union, love's impartial beams gild the low cottage of the faithful swain with equal warmth, as when he darts his fires on empires of state."—Fenton.

"Love must be attracted by beauty of mind and body."—Ovid.

"He who is a friend must love; but he who loves is not therefore a friend. Friendship, consequently, always profits; love sometimes does harm."—Seneca.

"Draw my soul to Thyself by the secret power of Thy love, as the sunshine in the spring draws forth the creatures from their winter cells; meet it half-way, and entice it to Thee, as the loadstone doth the iron, and as the greater flame attracts the less."—Baxter.

"Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind; And therefore is winged Cupid painted blind."—Shakespeare.

a "The sleep of Orientals is proverbially heavy, and loud and repeated knockings at doors are sometimes heard at the dead of night, accompanied by the reiterated shouts of some belated traveler, echoed by the narrow streets, and arousing all the barking curs of the neighborhood; then a parley ensues, the gate opens to admit the stranger, and the street is again hushed and silent."—Van Lennep.

than a creation of the earth. As one stands upon the roof of this cathedral of Milan, surrounded by the multitude of its dazzling pinnacles and spires, he may look far off to the north, over the plains and hills, until his eye rests upon the snowclad summit of the Alps, those other pinnacles and spires which God Himself created, and clothed with the ever pure white garments of the skies. So, from this purest of earth's relationships, we lift our thoughts to the mystical union of life and love, between the heaven and the earth, the marriage of the Church to her Divine Lord. Who shall speak of the love and faithfulness of this Divine Bridegroom, the love which knows no changing, which led Him to lay down His life for His Church? How steadily and warmly should her love go out to Him!

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1. These words, repeated here by the Shulamite, are either her fancy of what the shepherd lover would say in response; or, better, her repetition of what he did say—(perhaps at their betrothal)—just before she was borne away by the officers of Solomon. spouse, better, bride. eat . . abundantly, an invitation addressed to the guests. If this is the marriage of Solomon, as some suppose, and the maiden, "then the second half of the poem is left without a motive. It may better be taken as a reminiscence of an earlier passage in the lives of the Shulamite and the shepherd lover, and it is a maiden betrothed who has been carried away to the harem of the king.—Adeney.

Open-air customs in the East.—The inhabitants of the great towns of Syria, during the pleasant weather in winter, frequently leave their homes and give entertainments to their friends under tents pitched in the country for that purpose. In April and part of May they retire to the gardens, and in the heat of the summer receive their guests in the summer-houses, or under the shade of the trees. The same custom seems, from the invitation of the bridegroom, to have prevailed in the land of Canaan in the time of Solomon. When the poet says the flowers appear on the earth, he does not mean the time when the earliest flowers disclose their bloom, but when the verdant turf is thickly studded with all the rich, the gay, and the diversified profusion of an Oriental spring. This delightful season is ushered in at Aleppo about the middle of February by the appearance of a small crane's bill on the bank of the river which meanders through its extensive gardens; and a few days after, so rapid is the progress of vegetation, all the beauty of spring is displayed: about the same time, the birds renew their songs. When Thevenot visited Jordan on the sixteenth of April, he found the little woods on the margin of the river filled with nightingales in full chorus. This is rather earlier than at Aleppo, where they do not appear till nearly the end of the month. These facts illustrate the strict propriety of the poet's description, every circumstance of which is accurately copied from nature.—Paxton. The flesh and the spirit.—There are many people of whom one would have much more hope if they were a little better or a little worse than they are. They are generally decent people outwardly; they never offend against the conventionalities; they are to be found in all Churches, more's the pity; for they are but caricatures of the Christian character. They are dull, cold, selfish, hard, and spiritually dead. What is to be done with such? They are the despair of the earnest Christian, who would almost be willing that they should fall—were it possible—into some miserable sin if so only their present self-conceit could be shattered and they made to wake up.—Pul. Com. •

2—4. The Shulamite's second dream (vss. 2—7), in which she imagines that she hears her shepherd lover at the door, but on arising to open finds him vanished, and seeks him in vain through the city.—Driver-Ewald. (2) sleep . . waketh, R. V. "I was asleep, but my heart waked;" i. e. in a dream her heart went out to her beloved. All that follows is in keeping with the idea that the Shulamite was a bride when borne away to the harem. knocketh, as at the door of the house. un- defiled, or perfect one. filled with dew, through waiting so long in the night air. (3) feet, which were bare during the day, so needed washing at night. (4) hole . . door, Zockler translates "through the window," my bowels, R. V. "my heart."

Eastern locks.—In the capital of Egypt, also, all their locks and keys are of wood; they have none of iron, not even for their city gates, which may with ease be opened without a key. The keys, or bits of timber with little pieces of wire, lift up other pieces of wire that are in the lock, and enter into certain little holes out of which the ends of the wires that are in the key have just expelled the corresponding wires, upon which the gate is opened. But to accomplish this a key is not necessary; the Egyptian lock is so imperfectly made that one may without difficulty open it with his finger, armed with a little soft paste. The locks in Canaan at one time do not seem to have been made with greater art, if the poet here alludes to the ease with which they were frequently opened without a key.—Paxton.

5, 6. (5) dropped with myrrh,^b the lover had left upon the handle which he had touched the fragrance of myrrh. "It was a custom among Greek and Roman youth to anoint with perfumes the door-handles of the residences of their beloved."—Houghton. (6) withdrawn himself, characteristic of the dream. my soul failed, R. V. margin, "my soul went forth to him," explains her sorrow at failing to find him.

Hands dropping myrrh.—When the spouse rose from her bed to open to her beloved, her hand dropped myrrh (balsam), and her fingers sweet-smelling myrrh, on the handles of the lock. In this remark she seems to allude rather to a liquid than a powder; for the word rendered dropped, signifies to distil as the heavens or the clouds do rain, or as the mountains are said to distil new wine from the vines planted there, or as the inverted cups of lilies shed their roscid or honey drops. The same term is figuratively applied to words or discourse, which are said to distil as the dew, and drop as the rain; but still the allusion is to some liquid. As a noun, it is the name of stacte, or myrrh, distilling from the tree of its own accord, without incision. Again, the word rendered sweet-smelling signifies passing off, distilling, or trickling down; and therefore, in its present connection, more naturally refers to a fluid than to a dry powder. If these observations be just, it will not be difficult to ascertain the real sense of the passage. When the spouse rose from her bed to open the door of her apartment, she hastily prepared to receive her beloved, by washing herself with myrrh and water, or, according to an established custom in the East, by anointing her head with liquid essence of balsam, a part of which, in either case, might remain on her hands and fingers, and from them trickle down on the handles of the lock.—Paxton.

O Love unspeakable! that thou shouldst be Patient amidst the night's chill falling dew
While I thy proffered fellowship refuse,
Slothful to rise and ope the door to thee!
Long have I tarried, dreading yet to bear
The emblems of thy suffering, thorns and cross,
Lost in idolatry of Mammon's dross,
And lured by pleasure's transitory glare.—W. R. Weale.

7, 8. (7) watchmen, night police. veil, the greatest insult to an Oriental woman. The veil was her mark of betrothal or marriage. (8) charge, R. V. "adjure," a very earnest form of request. sick of love, "the memory of the dream still haunts her and impels her to make a fresh avowal of her love." (Comp. ii. 5). The dream of her lover visiting her and of her failing to secure him, coming when the king's importunities are threatening to separate them forever, is very true to nature.—Driver.

The charge.—The bride cannot find her beloved. She seeks the help of the chorus of maidens, the daughters of Jerusalem. She adjures them in her eager anxiety, "If ye find my beloved, what will ye tell him? That I am sick of love." She had used the last words once before (ch. ii. 5), ^b "Pure, or perhaps liquid myrrh, that weeps or drops from the tree, the most esteemed but most expensive of this class of perfumes." — Good.

"Oh! there is nothing holier in this life of ours than the first consciousness of love—the first fluttering of its silken wings—the first rising sound and breath of that wind which is so soon to sweep through the soul, to purify or to destroy!" — Longfellow.

"Love, only Love can guide the creature Up to the Father-fount of Nature; What were my soul did Love forsake her; Love guides the mortal to the Maker." — Schiller.

"They plucked off her veil, in order to discover who she was. It is well known that the eunuchs, in the Eastern countries, are at present authorized to treat the females under their charge in this manner." — Burder.

"Even He that died for us upon the cross, in the last hour, in the unutterable agony of death, was mindful of His mother, as if to teach us that this holy love should be our last worldly thought—the last point of earth from which the soul should take its flight for heaven." — Longfellow.

"To me there is but one place in the world, and that where thou art; for where'er

I be, thy love doth seek its way into my heart, as will a bird into her secret nest;
then sit and sing; sweet wing of beauty, sing."
—Bailey.

but in a different connection. Then his banner over her was love; then the joy of his love was almost too great for her; she was sick of love. Now it is her longing for the absent bridegroom which produces the heart-sickness which she describes. She fondly thinks that if he only knew her yearning for him he would return; he would forgive all that was past, and bring her again under the banner of his love. So the Christian soul, awakened out of sleep, longs for the Saviour's presence. She feels that she is sick. She needs the great Physician. Without Him all is dark; without Him there is no spiritual health, no joy, no hope. She seeks him in earnest prayer. She asks for the intercession of Christian friends; she would have them bring her distress and longing before the throne. "My God, my soul is cast down within me;" "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God;" "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise Him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God."—Pul. Com.

9. What . . beloved, the ladies of the court speak. If the only lover is Solomon the question is obviously absurd. It proves that she has been speaking of some other lover, of whom the women now speak in irony.

The Divine Bridegroom (vs. 9).—I. The transcendent excellencies of the Redeemer. 1. As they are in themselves; 2. As they are compared with those of others. II. The regard we owe Him. 1. We should prefer Him to every person and to every object that can become His rival; 2. We should beware of provoking Him to withdraw from us His gracious presence; 3. If on any occasion we have lost a sense of His presence, we should employ diligently the appointed means of regaining it; 4. If He condescends to return, we should find our chief happiness in His communion, and surrender ourselves completely to His will.—G. Brooks.

Seeing no beauty in Christ.—Corregio has a picture of St. Catherine of Sienna's mystical marriage. This mediaeval saint had a vision, in which she saw the Saviour approach and place on her hand a ring, in which blazoned a diamond of unearthly purity and beauty, with which He espoused her to Himself. The jewel ever burned with a splendid radiance to her eye, though invisible to all others.—Old Test. Anec.

a "Conspicuous as a standard amidst a host of other men."—O.
Zockler.

b "Doves delight in clear water brooks, and often bathe in them, and then their liquid loving eyes, 'fitly set' within a border of softest skyey blue, do look as though just washed in transparent milk." —
Thomson.

"These doves start up from every spring and water-course." —
Van Lennep.
"As certain silkworms have their silk colored by the leaves on which they feed, so if we were to feed on Christ, and nothing else but Christ, we should become pure, holy, lowly, meek, gentle, humble. What wonderful meat
this must be!" — Spurgeon.

10—13. The Shulamite eulogizes her lover vs. 10—16. (10) white, "the complexion most admired in youth." Lit. dazzling white. ruddy, with reference to his rosy, tinted cheeks. His body is white, cheeks red, face and hands bronzed or golden, Comp. vs. 14. the chiefest, or a standard-bearer." (11) head, etc., i. e. "it is noble and precious as the finest gold." bushy, curled, lit. hill upon hill. black, sign of youth and strength. (12) eyes, R. V. "His eyes are like doves beside the water brooks." comp. ch. i. 15. fitly set, R. V. margin, "sitting by full streams," referring to the moisture of the sympathetic and loving eye. (13) sweet flowers, R. V. "as banks of sweet herbs;" marg., towers of perfume; with possible reference to the beard and its fragrant ointment.

Verses 10—16.—The mocking question of the harem women rouses the Shulamite, and affords an opportunity for descanting on the beauty of her love. He is both fair and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand. For this is what he is like: a head splendid as finest gold; massive, curling, raven locks; eyes like doves by water brooks, and looking as though they had been washed in milk—an elaborate image in which the soft iris and the sparkling light on the pupils suggest the picture of the gentle birds brooding on the bank of a flashing stream, and the pure, healthy eyeballs a thought of the whiteness of milk; cheeks fragrant as spices; lips red as lilies (the blood-red anemones); a body like ivory, with blue veins as of sapphire; legs like marble columns on golden bases. The aspect of him is like great Lebanon, splendid as the far-famed cedars; and when he opens his lips his voice is ravishingly sweet. Yes, he is altogether lovely.—Expos. B. Christ's personal qualities incomparable.—Every virtue, human and Divine, blossoms in His soul. There's not an excellence ever seen in men or in angels that is not found, the perfect type, in Jesus Christ. For nearly nineteen centuries shrewd men have turned their microscopes on the Person of Jesus, if haply they could find the shadow of a spot. The acutest eye has failed, and Jesus stands before the world to-day a paragon of moral perfection. His character is better known and better appreciated to-day than in any previous age. Modern criticism confesses at the bar of the universe, "I find no fault in Him." As all the colors of the prism meet and blend in the pure rays of light, so all noble qualities blend in our beloved Friend. As in a royal garden or in the fields of nature there is unspeakable wealth of flowery bloom, all forms and colors composing a very paradise of beauty, so is it in the character of Jesus. Other men were noted for some special excellence—Moses for meekness, Job for patience, Daniel for constancy; but Jesus has every quality of goodness, and has each quality full-orbed and resplendent.—Pul. Com.

14-16. (14) rings,^a R. V. marg., "His hands are as cylinders of gold set with topaz." Hands and head are golden, i. e. bronzed by the sun. "Topaz" refers to yellowish color of finger nails. bright ivory, R. V. "his body is as ivory work," etc. (15) pillars, fig. of strength and steadfastness. sockets of gold, fig. for the sandals. as Lebanon, taking fig. fr. the majestic mountain form. excellent, etc., the cedar being regarded as a peculiarly handsome tree. (16) mouth, Heb. palate, regarded as the organ of speech. His words are full of affection. altogether, i. e. all of him is precious.^c

The believer's boast (vs. 16).—This is my Friend. I. Let me tell you how I made His acquaintance. II. Let me tell you how He treats me. 1. He never speaks of my past ingratitude; 2. He never fails to supply my wants; 3. He never shuns to rebuke me for my follies; 4. He never seems to grow weary of me; 5. He never treats me as a mere dependent; He calls me His friend. III. Let me tell, further, what I think of Him. 1. He is as condescending as He is rich; 2. His love is as ardent as it is constant; 3. He is as jealous of my affection as He is deserving of it; 4. He is as lavish of His promises as He is faithful in their performance. IV. Let me ask, Do you know Him? He is gracious—I. To be the friend of such a miserable being as I; 2. To let it be known to all the world; 3. To tell me freely to invite all my friends to His house and home, to be His friends as I am.—Stems and Twigs.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1-3. (1) The ladies of the court again speak ironically. Whither, how explain this question if Solomon has been the theme of v. 10-16?^a (2) The Shulamite answers (vs. 2, 3). beds of spices, or balm. To the maiden her old home, and the place of her beloved, is a garden. (3) I... beloved's, a reiteration of the unwavering love by which she solaces herself while in captivity and peril. feedeth, R. V. "feedeth his flock," ch. ii. 16.

The lily in the East.—"Our camels were scattered on the numerous slopes in search of food. On these heights the lilies abounded, with grass and low shrubs between. I noticed that the camels did not touch the lilies at all, but cropped what lay between. It reminded me of the words 'He feedeth among the lilies,'—among, but not on the lilies; for while the lily furnishes no acceptable food for flocks and herds, it seems, by the shade of its high broad leaves, to retain the moisture, and so to nourish herbage, wherever it grows. The place of lilies would thus be the place of the richest pasture, as the poet evidently indicates when, using the figure, he speaks of the 'young roes which feed among the lilies.'"

4-6. Solomon (vss. 4-9) endeavors anew to win the affection of the Shulamite by praise of her beauty and description of the honors in store for her. (4) Thou, etc., Renewed declaration of love. Tirzah, an old Canaanitish royal city;^a a remarkably beautiful and charming town in northern Palestine. The exact site is not now known. Jerusalem, Ps. xlviii. 2. terrible,^b etc., or awe-inspiring. This dread of the heroine's eyes is incredible if she were his exultant bride, but intelligible if she is resisting his devotion. (5) overcome me, or taken me by storm. hair, etc., ch. iv. 1. appear, etc., R. V. "lie along the side of." (6) teeth, etc., ch. iv. 2., where see R. V.

^a "Rings are worn on all the fingers—even on the thumbs—and are often set with precious stones." — Van Lennep.

"The hands bent in are compared to beautiful rings, in which beryl is set, as the nails are in the fingers."—Fausset.

^c "Why should I thus endeavor to express His beauty piece-meal, when He is in Himself and altogether the One longed for?" —Theodoret.

"A learned man once accounted for his eminent acquisitions by the fact that he had never hesitated to ask questions respecting the unknown. To find Christ is eternal life, therefore let us use every wise measure in order to gain so great a boon." — Pul. Com.

^a Jos. xii. 24. The name Tirzah signifies pleasantness; Tirzah was the first capital of the kingdom of Israel, where Jeroboam lived, and where the other earlier kings of Israel lived before Omri removed the capital to Samaria. 1 Ki. xvi. 15-18, 24. — Wordsworth.

^b "The artillery of the eyes is an idea common to poets of every nation."—Good. "Have you a glimpse of Christ now that you are dying?" was the question asked of an old Scottish saint, who, raising himself,

made the emphatic reply,
"I'll hae none o'
your glimpses
now that I am dying, since that I have had a full look at Christ
these forty years
gane."—Annals of the Early Friends.

c 1 Ki. xi. 3.

"Love is the purification of the heart from self;
it strengthens and ennobles the character, gives higher motives and a nobler aim to every action of life, and makes both man and woman strong, noble and courageous."— Miss Jewsbury.

"Where woman is held in honor,
there the gods
are well pleased;
where she receives no honor, all holy acts are void and fruitless."—Mann.

"Love is the golden ladder upon which the heart mounts to heaven."—Gelbel.

a Job xxv. 5, xxxi. 26.

b "The nuts mentioned here were probably the almond, walnut, filbert, and pistachio."—Van Lennep.

The moon, refulgent lamp of night, O'er heaven's clear azure spreads her sacred light.
When not a breath disturbs
the deep serene,
And not a cloud
o'ercasts the solemn scene.
The conscious swains, rejoicing
in the sight, Eye the blue vaults and bless the useful light.
—Homer.

Tirzah.—The mention of Tirzah as the equal of Jerusalem is also an evidence of the northern origin of the poem; for it is not at all probable that a subject of the mutilated nation of the south would describe the beauty of the rebel headquarters by the side of that of his own idolized city, as something typical and perfect. But the poem throughout gives indications of its origin in the country parts of the north. Shunem, famous as the scene of Elisha's great miracle, seems to be the home of the heroine. The poet turns to all points of the compass for images with which to enrich his pictures—Sharon on the western coast, Gilead across the Jordan to the east, Engedi by the wilderness of the Dead Sea, as well as the northern districts. But the north is most frequently mentioned. Lebanon is named over and over again, and Hermon is referred to as in the neighborhood of the shepherd's home. In fact, the poem is saturated with the fragrant atmosphere of the northern mountains.—Exp. B. "Turn away thine eyes."—Who has not felt the power of the eye? The beggar looked so imploringly that we gave him alms; the child's eye so darkened with disappointment that we indulged his desire; the sick man gazed so sadly at our departure that we turned back and lengthened our visit. But the eyes of those we love master us. Does a tear begin to form? We yield at once. We cannot endure that the beloved eyes should weep. Our Lord uses this figure to most encouraging purpose. The weeping eyes of prayer move the loving heart of Jesus. Matthew Henry says, "Christ is pleased to borrow these expressions of a passionate lover to express the tenderness of a compassionate Redeemer, and the delight he takes in his redeemed, and in the workings of his own grace in them."—Spurgeon.

7—9. (7) piece . . locks, ch. iv. 3. (8) queens, etc., Sol. had a large harem,^c but he intimates here his preference for her above all others. (9) but one, the one to whom he speaks. "If this is a continuation of Solomon's speech, as the flow of the verses would suggest, it must mean that the king would set his newest acquisition quite apart from all the ladies of his harem, as his choice and treasured bride."—Griffis.

Spiritual beauty.—God has given to the human soul a faculty that discerns and appreciates what is beautiful. We detect what is beautiful in material nature, viz., symmetry of form and harmony of color. We discern also what is beautiful in human character and in human conduct. All beauty springs from God, the Fount. He is perfect Beauty, as much as perfect Righteousness. The constituent elements of spiritual beauty are humility, holiness, and love. These, wisely blended, form a comely character. It is always unsafe, because an inducement to pride, to praise the bodily beauty of a maiden within her hearing. But one of the elements in spiritual beauty is lowliness; hence public praise is an advantage rather than a peril. For commendation is a spur to fresh effort, and whatever quickens our exertion in the culture of humility and holiness is a boon to be prized. Nor is this spiritual beauty evanescent. It is a permanent acquisition. It will develop and mature towards perfection, as the ages roll on. The sun will be quenched in darkness, the stars will disappear or else assume new forms; but the ransomed saints will be rising in excellence, and adding to their spiritual adornments, world without end. This high estate of beauty is not yet an actual possession. But it is in course of development, from the bud to the open flower. It is clearly seen in its perfectness by the prescient eye of our Immanuel.—Pul. Com.

10, 11. (10) Who, question now asked by the women, aroused by this language of the king, and quoting his words. as the morning, the dawn being regarded as beautiful. moon, or the White One.^a sun, or burning heat, comp. Ps. xix. 9. terrible, etc., perhaps with special reference to the starry host. The fig. is differently used in vs. 4. (11) nuts, Heb. egôz, the walnut; still common in northern Palestine.^b The Shulamite tells what she was doing when the king and his followers found her; vss. 11, 12. fruits, R. V. "green plants."

The rose of Sharon.—A gentleman being with Mr. Hervey, in his garden, he plucked a rose, and desired the gentleman to present it to his wife, to put her in mind of the Redeemer, the Rose of Sharon. She put such a respect upon the giver and the gift, as to put it into a frame with a glass: upon hearing of this, he wrote the gentleman:—"Your lady has shown the most welcome complaisance to me, and to the rose, in putting it to such a use; and could that poor vegetable be sensible, it would rejoice to be a remembrancer of its amiable Creator. I heartily wish she may every day become more and more acquainted with the Rose of Sharon; that His loveliness, riches, and glory may be revealed in her heart by the Holy Ghost."—Whitecross.

12, 13. (12) Or ever, Heb. I knew not. soul, etc., R. V. "my soul set me among the chariots of my princely people." Ewald, "I knew not that my soul (i. e. my desire—to roam about—) had set me," etc., i. e. brought me into the neighborhood of the king's retinue. (13) What will ye see, etc., R. V. "why will ye look upon the Shulamite, as upon the dance of Mahanaim?" The question is asked by the Shulamite, and perhaps means "why do you look upon me, a simple country girl, betrothed to another, as if I were a public dancer?"

Conquest as the result of conflict.—"Terrible as an army with banners." The metaphor imports a majesty of active power that moves onward with confident step to overthrow its foes. "Terrible as a bannered host." The Church on earth is a Church militant. Many regiments of believers make up one army. This consecrated host of God's elect is commissioned to fight against error, ignorance, superstition, vice, and all immorality. Until the day of complete triumph dawns, she must station her sentinels, discipline her recruits, boldly contend with sin, and lead men captives to the feet of Christ. In proportion to her internal holiness and utility and zeal she will be "terrible" to ungodly men. The main secret of her terribleness is the fact that Jehovah dwells in her midst. As the Canaanites of old feared the host of Israel because the rumor of their power had spread on every side, and the mystic presence of Jehovah was with them, so is it still. The more that evil men discern the tokens of God's presence in the Church, the more they tremble. On the banner of the Church, men see the pattern of the cross. This inspires courage in the army, but terror among opponents. And the old battle-cry of the Crusaders is still the battle-cry of the Church, "By this we conquer!"—Hom. Com. The Church's mission.—We have learned to see in the bride of the Song of Songs a figure of the Church, which is the bride of Christ. The mission of the Church is to "make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever the Lord commanded" (Matt. xxviii. 19). The heavenly Bridegroom is with the bride while she obeys his precept; for he adds, "Lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the end of the ages." Therefore "the Spirit and the bride say, Come" (Rev. xx. 17). The Church, taught and strengthened by the Holy Spirit, calls men to the knowledge of Christ. Her feet are beautiful as, "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace" (Eph. vi. 15), she moves ever onward, bringing the light of truth into the regions that were lying in darkness and the shadow of death. Missionary work is a most important part of the duty of the Church; when carried on in faith and love and forgetfulness of self, it is beautiful in the sight of God.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

1-3. Solomon speaks (vss. 1-9) almost without restraint, voicing his admiration and the nature of his passion. Many commentators suppose it to be a description of the Shulamite dancing. But that is not necessary. Another view of the passage is that the Shulamite dances before only the ladies of the harem, and that vss. 1-7 are the words of the women. (1) shoes, R. V. "in sandals,"^a joints, etc., "Thy rounded thighs" (marg. R. V.), referring to perfection of form. (2) which wanteth not, etc., "wherein no mingled wine is wanting," the wine giving color to the goblet. Griffis translates: "Thy round dances are perfect circles; let not variations be wanting. Thy body is like a sheaf of wheat garlanded with lilies." heap . . lilies, the Jews were in the habit of strewing

"Love is the bond and the sanction which connects not only man with man. but with everything which exists. We are born into the world; and there is something within us which, from the first instant that we live, more and more thirsts after its likeness." —Shelley.

"Love is of all stimulants the most powerful. It sharpens the wits like danger, and the memory like hatred; it spurs the will like ambition; it intoxicates like wine." —A. B. Edwards.

^a "The richer class wear either socks or stockings, of cotton or wool, or a morocco "mest," wh. is a boot or sock of soft leather, with a sole of the same, and is worn inside the shoe." —Van Lennep.

"He who determines to love only those who are faultless will soon find himself alone." — Vihlschli.

b "The simile well sets forth the appearance of a large clear liquid eye." — Spk. Com.

"O how beautiful it is to love! Even thou that sneerest and laughest in cold indifference or scorn if others are near thee,—thou, too, must acknowledge its truth when thou art alone, and confess that a foolish world is prone to laugh in public at what in private it reveres as one of the highest impulses of our nature; namely, love." — Longfellow.

a "The stem, tall, slender, and erect as rectitude herself, suggests to the Arab poets many a symbol for their lady-love." — Thomson.

"Love's voice doth sing as sweetly in a beggar as a king." — Decker.

"The fibre of the palm is so elastic that no imposed weights can hinder its upward growth. Hence probably its branches are used as tokens of victory and triumph. Nothing is able to separate the believer from Christ, who is his life, or to prevent his spiritual growth and final perfection." — Hom. Com.

flowers round their heaps of wheat when threshed in the open air. (3) two breasts, as ch. iv. 5.

The Heavenly Foot Society.—The Chinese women are beginning to rebel seriously against the fashion of compressing their feet, which has so long limited their energies. It appears that a missionary has been preaching to them on the subject, and they have taken the matter so much to heart that they have started a "Heavenly Foot Society." "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things."—Peloubet's Notes.

4. 5. (4) neck, ch. iv. 4. fishpools, etc., Heshbon was a royal city of the Amorites. A large pool is still found in the neighborhood.^b Bath-rabbim, better trans. the populous city; or the daughter of multitudes. tower of Lebanon, a straight nose was regarded as forming a handsome profile. The tower referred to is not known. (5) Carmel, wh. has a soft and rounded top. purple, of the deepest shade, with special reference to its lustre. held . . galleries, R. V. "held captive in the tresses thereof."

Note on vs. 4.—Whatever is majestic and comely in the human countenance, whatever commands the reverence and excites the love of the beholder—Lebanon, and its towering cedars, are employed by the sacred writers to express. In the commendation of the Church, the countenance of her Lord is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars: while in the eulogium which he pronounces on His beloved, one feature of her countenance is compared to the highest peak of that mountain, to the Sannin, which rises, with majestic grandeur, above the tallest cedars that adorn its summits: "Thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon, which looketh towards Damascus." Calmet imagines that the sacred writer alludes to an elegant tower of white marble, which, in his days, crowned the summit of a lofty precipice, at the foot of which the river Barrady foams, about the distance of two miles from Damascus. When Maundrell visited the place he found a small structure, like a sheikh's sepulchre, erected on the highest point of the precipice, where it had probably stood. From this elevated station, which forms a part of Lebanon, the traveler enjoyed the most perfect view of the city. So charming was the landscape, so rich and diversified the scenery, that he confessedly found it no easy matter to tear himself away from the paradise of delights which bloomed at his feet.—Paxton.

6. 7. (6) for delights, or among delightful things. (7) palm tree, wh. grows straight and tall.^a grapes, or dates growing on the palm tree.

The righteous like a palm.—"Well is the life of the righteous likened to a palm, in that the palm below is rough to the touch, and in a manner enveloped in dry bark, but above it is adorned with fruit fair even to the eye; below, it is compressed by the enfoldings of its bark; above, it is spread out in amplitude of beautiful greenness. For so is the life of the elect, despised below, beautiful above. Down below it is, as it were, enfolded in many barks, in that it is straitened by innumerable afflictions; but on high it is expanded into a foliage, as it were, of beautiful greenness by the amplitude of the rewarding."—St. Gregory the Great.

8—10. (8) go up to, R. V. "climb up into." nose, R. V. "breath." (9) roof, R. V. "And thy mouth like the best wine, that goeth down smoothly for my beloved, gliding through the lips of those that are asleep." The Shulamite vii. 10—viii. 4, "heedless of the king's admiration, declares her devotion to her shepherd-lover and her longing to be with him in the open fields.—Driver. (10) my beloved's, as vi. 3.

Sweetness of speech.—Christian speech is sweet when it testifies to the love and faithfulness of the Lord. There is no exercise more congenial to Christ's people, more acceptable to Christ himself, than this. The powers of speech cannot be more holily and honorably employed than in uttering forth the high praises of God, in lauding and magnifying the redeeming love of Christ. The hymn which is lisped by the little child, the anthem which rings through the cathedral aisles, the quiet word of witness in which the friend commends the Saviour to him who is dear to his heart,—these are but some of the forms in which language may show forth the greatness, the goodness, the wisdom, of the Eternal. What theme so worthy of the tongue, "the glory of the frame," as this? The voice of praise and thanksgiving is dear to the heart alike of God and man.—Pul. Com.

11-13. (11) Come, etc., this is what she will say to her lover when she meets him safe at home once again.—Griffis. field, or country: where in quietness mutual society may be enjoyed. (12) let us see, etc., ch. vi. 11. (13) mandrakes, Ge. xxx. 14. Heb. dudaim, love-apples."

Note on vs. 11.—In the gardens around Aleppo, commodious villas are built for the use of the inhabitants, to which they retire during the oppressive heats of summer. Here, amid the wild and almost impervious thickets of pomegranate, and other fruit-bearing trees, the languid native and exhausted traveller find a delightful retreat from the scorching beams of the sun. A similar custom of retiring into the country, and taking shelter in the gardens at that season, appears to have been followed in Palestine, in ages very remote. The exquisite pleasure which an Oriental feels, while he reclines under the deep shade of the pomegranate, the apple, and other fruitful trees in the Syrian gardens, which, uniting their branches over his head, defend him from the glowing firmament, is well described by Russel. "Revived by the freshening breeze, the purling of the brooks, and the verdure of the groves, his ear will catch the melody of the nightingale, delightful beyond what is heard in England; with conscious gratitude to heaven, he will recline on the simple mat, and bless the hospitable shelter. Beyond the limits of the gardens, hardly a vestige of verdure remains, the fields are turned into a parched and naked waste."—Paxton.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1-4. (1) as my brother, then follows the joyful, innocent outburst of a guileless child, to whom, though she be a maiden grown, a lover is but a good brother.—Griffis. This, however, contradicts the idea that she was already the bride of the shepherd. (2) my mother's, the references to the mother are beautiful and significant, comp. iii. 4. spiced . . pomegranate, "the juice of the pomegranate forms a very agreeable sherbet." (3) left, etc., see ii. 6. (4) charge you, again the refrain R. V. "I adjure you . . that ye stir not up, nor awaken love until it please." (comp. ii. 7; iii. 5.) This marks the end of the fourth section.

Note on vs. 2.—The fragrant odor of the wines produced in the vineyards of Lebanon seems chiefly to have attracted the notice of our translators. This quality is either factitious or natural. The Orientals, not satisfied with the fragrance emitted by the essential oil of the grape, frequently put spices into their wines to increase their flavor.—Paxton.

What men despise is altogether reasonable and right.—That men might see this is what is so desired here. But men are as a child playing on a railway line in front of an advancing train. Some kind bystander rushes forward and clutches the child and puts it out of danger before the train is upon it. The child probably only stares displeasedly at him who has roughly interrupted its play; no spark of gratitude is there. So men now do not see what Christ has done for them and is willing to do, and so their hearts are cold to him. The truth, therefore, that "God so loved the world" must be held up, insisted on, and shown by lives consecrated to him under the sense of that love.—S. C.

Old and new in the formation of character.—That which is old in our experience is that part of our life which has become habitual. That ought to be the largest part of our moral and religious life. The formation of good habits—habits of devotion—such as church-going, Bible study, private meditation, secret prayer; habits of just and considerate and kindly speech; habits of careful and discriminating thought; habits of activity in all good work, and of fidelity in the discharge of every obligation we assume; habits of benevolence in giving and in serving; habits of courtesy and temperance, and manly dignity and womanly grace—this is a most important element in moral and religious culture . . Yet the character thus formed needs to be continually reformed. New light, new truths, new relations, new powers, call for new adjustments of our thoughts and new departures in our conduct.—Washington Gladden.

^a Mandragora vernalis, or Atropa mandragora. A wild plant common in Pal., of the same genus with the belladonna, bearing small yellow apples, about the size of a nutmeg.

"Every garden is a lesson-book for humanity; every well-kept garden is a portrait of a saint; every fruitful vineyard is an emblem of Christ's Church."

"Lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong, when it is barr'd the aidance of the tongue."—Shakespeare.

"The ancients sought to increase the strength of their potations by a mixture of spices with their wine; and so likewise do modern Orientals."—Van Lennep.

"More loved by me than by the eye the light."—T. Cooke.

"Not without hope e'er loved the brightest fair;
But Love can hope, where Reason would despair."
—Lord Lyttleton.

"It is not safe to despise what Love commands. He reigns supreme, and rules the mighty gods."—Ovid.

"Make haste to live, and consider each day a life."—Seneca.

"Love is old, old as eternity, but not outworn; with each new being born, or to be born."—Byron.

"That love alone, which virtue's laws control, deserves reception in the human soul."—Euripides.

"O artless love, where the soul moves the tongue, and only nature speaks what nature thinks." — Dryden.

"Love stops not to think how much must be given and what may be kept; it gives all." — H. W. Webb-Peploe. "There is a comfort in the strength of love; 'twill make a thing endurable, which else would break the heart." — Wordsworth.

"It is like the sun in the sky, that throws his comfortable beams upon all and forbears not to warm even that earth that beareth weeds. Love extends to earth and heaven. In heaven it affecteth God, the Maker and the Mover; the angels, as our guardians; the triumphant saints, for their pious sanctity. On earth, it embraceth those that fear the Lord especially; it wisheth conversion to those that do not; it counsels the rich; it comforts the poor; it reverenceth superiors, respecteth inferiors; doth good to friends, no evil to foes; wisheth well to all. This is the latitude of love." — T. Adams.

"Nothing is sweeter than love, nothing more courageous, nothing higher, nothing wider, nothing more pleasant, nothing fuller nor better in heaven or earth; because love is born of God, and cannot rest but in God, above all created things." — Thomas a Kempis.

5. Who, etc., "shepherds of Shulem, perceiving the Shulamite's return, leaning on her lover's arm." — Ewald and Driver. Solomon has permitted her to depart. I raised thee, R. V. "I awakened thee." The shepherd lover speaks.

Leaning on Christ (vs. 5). — Observe what this attitude denotes. I. Weariness. II. Dependence. III. Communion. IV. Tenderness. V. Activity. — Stems and Twigs. Dependence on the Saviour (vs. 5). — I. Resting on His promises. II. Relying on His power. III. Realizing His love. IV. Rejoicing in His salvation. — J. T. Nollidge. Coming from the wilderness (vs. 5). — I. This world may be compared to a wilderness. 1. It is unfruitful; 2. Changeful; 3. Dangerous. II. The Christian coming up from it. 1. He has ceased to regard it as his home; 2. He is detaching his affections from it; 3. He is soon to be removed to another scene. III. As he comes up from it he leans on his Beloved. 1. Resting on His promises; 2. Trusting in His grace; 3. Enjoying His sympathy; 4. Realizing His presence. IV. His movements in it excite attention. 1. Inquiry; 2. Admiration; 3. Congratulation. — G. Brooks.

Shelter only in Christ. — A Chinese convert is spoken of by Dr. Medhurst as having used the following language to illustrate the futility of human merits, and the necessity of relying on Jesus Christ alone for salvation: — "How can a man trust in his own righteousness? It is like seeking shelter under one's own shadow; he may stoop to the very ground, and, the lower we bend, we still find that our shadow is beneath us. But if a man flee to the shadow of a great rock, or of a wide spreading tree, he will find abundant shelter from the rays of the noonday sun. So human merits are unavailing, and Christ alone is able to save to the uttermost those who come unto God by Him." — Nollidge.

6, 7. This is "the richest gem of the poem, the Shulamite's impassioned eulogy of love." — Adeney. (6) Set . . heart, i. e. let me be united to thee for ever. The Shulamite, after her terrible experience, passionately declares the irresistible power of true love. cruel, or hard. the coals, etc., R. V. "the flashes thereof are flashes of fire, a very flame of the Lord." This explains the place of a love-poem in the canon. Love is from God, "the very flame of the Lord," and pure and faithful love is a sacred thing. (7) it would, R. V. "he would."

The love that passeth knowledge (vs. 7). — The text singles out two things about this love. I. It is unquenchable by the waters of — I. Shame and suffering; 2. Of death; 3. Of our unworthiness; 4. Of our long rejection; 5. Of our daily inconsistency. II. It is unpurchasable. 1. As a gift to persuade Him to love; 2. As a payment for having been loved; 3. As a bribe to tempt Him not to love; 4. As a substitute for love. — Bonar.

"Love is strong as death." — Who can resist grim death? who escape its iron clutches? Who can resist mighty love, or evade its power? The illustration is startling in the apparent incompatibility of the two things drawn together for comparison. But it is a stern and terrible aspect of love to which our attention is now directed. This is apparent as the Shulamite proceeds to speak of jealousy which is "hard as the grave." If love is treated falsely, it can flash out in a flame of wrath ten times more furious than the raging of hatred — "a most vehement flame of the Lord." This is the only place in which the name of God appears throughout the whole poem. It may be said that even here it only comes in according to a familiar Hebrew idiom, as metaphor for what is very great. But the Shulamite has good reason for claiming God to be on her side in the protection of her love from cruel wrong and outrage. Love as she knows it is both unquenchable and unpurchasable. She has tested and proved these two attributes in her own experience. At the court of Solomon every effort was made to destroy her love for the shepherd, and all possible means were employed for buying her love for the king. Both utterly failed. All the floods of scorn which the harem ladies poured over her love for the country lad could not quench it; all the wealth of a kingdom could not buy it for Solomon. Where true love exists, no opposition can destroy it; where it is not, no money can purchase it. As for the second idea — the purchasing of love — the Shulamite flings it away with the utmost contempt. — Exp. Bib. A seal on the heart. — This alludes to jewels having the name or portrait of the beloved person engraved on them, and worn next the heart or on the arm. In the pictures of the Eastern princesses and heroines there is sometimes a large square jewel on the forepart of the arm, a little below the shoulder. "When all the persons had assembled in the divan every one remained sitting or standing in his place without moving, till in about half an hour came two kapudschis, one of whom carried the imperial signet-ring, and presented it to the grand vizier, who arose from his sofa and received the signet-ring with a kind of bow, kissed it, put it on his hand, took it off again, and put it in the bag in which it had been before, and placed both in a pocket at the left side of his kaftan, as it were upon his heart.—Rosenmüller.

8—10. (8) little sister, she repeats the words that her brothers had once uttered about her, in order to show how well she has fulfilled their desire for her. (9) wall, i. e. steadfast in virtue. palace of silver, R. V. "turret of silver, i. e. marry her to one of high estate: door, light-minded, easily moved fr. virtue. inclose her, defending her from temptation. (10) R. V. margin, "I was a wall." like towers, R. V. "like the towers thereof," means that in her resistance to Solomon's entreaties she had been as an impregnable fortress and had secured from her assailant terms of peace."—Driver.

An Eastern palace.—The eye is lost in contemplating the rich assemblage of ornaments which appear in every part of this noble hall. From the pavement to the beginning of the arches, the walls are decorated with elegant mosaic; the panels between the arches are filled with a very delicate ornament, which, at a little distance, has the appearance of a plain mass, and the ceiling is composed of stalactites in stucco, and is finished in a style of equal elegance. The distribution of the various parts of this noble apartment is truly enchanting. The balconies above were occupied by musicians; below sat the women; while a jet d'eau in the centre diffused a refreshing coolness through the hall. The windows in the background are finished in a similar manner, and look into a little myrtle garden.—Murphy.

11—14. (11) Baal-hamon, a tower so named is mentioned as being in Samaria. keepers, tenants." (12) My vineyard, must have, etc., R. V. "shall have the thousand." "Let Solomon and his vineyard-keepers receive the proceeds of the king's actual vineyard" her own vineyard—i. e. her own person and charms (comp. i. 6)—is at her own disposal still. (13) cause . . hear, as ch. ii. 14. The lover asks for a song. (14) Make haste, she sings as before (ii. 17) inviting him to come to her.

Mountains of Israel.—The only remarkable mountain on the western border of Canaan is Carmel, which lies on the sea-coast, at the south end of the tribe of Asher, and is frequently mentioned in the sacred writings. On this mountain, which is very rocky, and about two thousand feet in height, the prophet Elijah fixed his residence; and the monks of the Greek Church, who have a convent upon it, show the inquisitive stranger the grotto, neatly cut out in the solid rock, where, at a distance from the tumult of the world, the venerable seer reposed. At the distance of a league are two fountains, which they pretend the prophet, by his miraculous powers, made to spring out of the earth; and lower down, towards the foot of the mountain, is the cave where he instructed the people. It is an excavation in the rock, cut very smooth both above and below, of about twenty paces in length, fifteen in breadth, and very high; and Thevenot, who paid a visit to the monks of Mount Carmel, pronounces it one of the finest grottos that can be seen. The beautiful shape and towering height of Carmel furnish Solomon with a striking simile, expressive of the loneliness and majesty of the Church in the eyes of her Redeemer: "Thy head upon thee is like Carmel, and the hair of thy head like purple; the King is held in the galleries." The fields around have been celebrated in all ages for the extent of their pastures and the richness of their verdure. So great was the fertility of this region, that, in the language of the sacred writers, the name Carmel is often equivalent to a fruitful field. This was undoubtedly the reason that the covetous and churlish Nabal chose it for the range of his numerous flocks and herds.—Paxton. A trust faithfully fulfilled.—In the parable the keepers or tenants are represented as having cultivated the vineyards entrusted to them with skill and a "Vineyards are often let out to husbandmen. The price or hire is always paid in kind, and amounts to one-half the produce of the vineyard. We have, however, personally known many cases in which the hire was paid in money." — Van Lennep.

The Lord's love is free as the air; full as the ocean; boundless as eternity; immutable as His throne; and unchangeable as His nature.

"When we come to know Christ, we know ourselves as members of a universal family, and all men children with us of the same God. It is Jesus Christ who has given the thought of universal brotherhood its hold on the hearts of men."—Barrows.

"There are depths of love in Christ beyond what we have seen; therefore, dig deep, and labor and take pains for Him, and set by so much time in the day for Him as you can. He will be won with labor." — Rutherford.

success, so that they were able to pay the king the rent which was agreed upon or the tribute which he required. In this they are representatives of all those who, having received privileges and enjoyed opportunities, turn them to good account. The scholar who cultivates his mind, enlarges his knowledge, and fits himself to influence aright the opinion and convictions of his less-favored fellow-men; the man of wealth who employs his riches in a spirit of wise and expansive knowledge; the Christian minister who cultivates the corner of the spiritual vineyard committed to his care; every faithful child of God who diligently and prayerfully endeavors to do the will of the heavenly Husbandman, may be said to be faithful in his discharge of the obligations of his trust.—Pul. Com. Love.—"Love is the root of creation; God's essence. Worlds without number lie in His bosom like children; He made them for His purpose only,—only to love and to be loved again. He breathed forth His spirit into the slumbering dust, and upright standing, it laid its hand on its heart, and felt it was warm with a flame out of heaven; quench, O quench not that flame! it is the breath of your being."—Longfellow.

Introduction.

Author. The prevailing view until a comparatively recent date ascribed the whole book to Isaiah. Now the opinion is gaining ground that chapters xl to lxvi must have been written in the latter part of the Babylonian exile, more than two centuries after the time of Isaiah. Isaiah was probably born in Jerusalem about 760 B. C. and grew up to manhood under the brilliant reign of Uzziah. He apparently belonged to the higher classes in Jerusalem and was able to exert a powerful influence upon public affairs. He received his call to the prophetic office in the year of Uzziah's death and continued his activity through the reigns of Jotham and Ahaz and through a part of the reign of Hezekiah, down to 701 B. C. After the destruction of Sennacherib's army at that date, we lose sight of Isaiah. There is a Jewish tradition of doubtful value that he outlived Hezekiah and was put to death in the heathen reaction under Manasseh.

Historical conditions. "When Isaiah began his public work Judah had attained a degree of wealth, power and civilization which must have placed it, along with Israel, in the front rank of the petty principalities that now separated Egypt from Assyria. The great political fact of the time was the westward extension of the Assyrian Empire. This commenced in earnest, after a pause of 40 years, with the accession of Tiglath-pileser III. in 745; and was thenceforward prosecuted by a succession of vigorous monarchs, till it reached its goal in the conquest of Egypt by Esarhaddon (672). It must have been evident to thoughtful observers, even before Isaiah's entrance on public life, that the independent existence of all the smaller nations of Western Asia was endangered by the steady advance of this new and formidable power. Singly, they were helpless against the solid and disciplined might of Assyria; while at the same time they possessed too little stability of purpose to present a united front to the common enemy." (Cambridge Bible.) We owe it in large part to the influence Isaiah was able to exert in the long period of his prophetic career, that the southern kingdom was not overwhelmed, as the northern kingdom was, by the Assyrian power. "The Israelites, who were carried away into Assyrian captivity in B. C. 722, are untraceably lost. They were absorbed by their conquerors. Had the same fate befallen Judah and Jerusalem, they too would have disappeared. That their ruin was delayed a century and time gained in which religion could firmly establish itself and strike deep roots, so as to survive the overthrow of Judah and Jerusalem, was Isaiah's work and merit." (Cornill, the Prophets of Israel.) "The spiritual religion which lay in germ in the teaching of Isaiah was not as yet capable of existing apart from the nationality in which it had been born, and hence the preservation of the Hebrew state was of paramount importance for the conservation of the true knowledge of God." The success of Isaiah in persuading the weak king, Hezekiah, and the wavering people to put their trust in the Lord and to withstand the enemies who sought their ruin, was an event which has had "more influence on the life of subsequent generations than all the conquests of Assyrian kings; for it assured the permanent vitality of that religion which was the cradle of Christianity." (Robertson Smith.)

Synopsis.

(According to Delitzsch.)

First Half of the Collection i.—xxxix.

I.—PROGRESS OF PEOPLE TOWARDS HARDENING OF HEART.

1. Opening addressi. 2.
2. From false to true glory.....ii.—iv.
3. Judgment of devastation.....v.
4. The Prophet's missionvi.

II.—CONSOLATION OF IMMANUEL.vii.—xii.

1. The Virgin's wondrous Son.....vii.
2. Two omens of the future.....viii. 1—4.
3. Esoteric addressesviii. 5—xii.

III.—ORACLES CONCERNING THE HEATHENxiii.—xxiii.

1. The Chaldaeansxiii.—xiv. 27.
2. Philistiaxiv. 28—32.
3. Moabxv., xvi.
4. Damascus, Israelxvii.
5. Ethiopiaxviii.
6. Egypt, etc.xix., xx.
7. Desert of the sea, etc.....xxi. 1—10.
8. Silence of death, etc.....xxi. 11—17.
9. Valley of vision, etc.....xxii.
10. Tyrexxiii.

IV.—THE GREAT CATASTROPHE.xxiv.—xxvii.

1. Judgment upon the earth.....xxiv.
2. Fourfold melodious echo.....xv., xvi.

3. Jehovah's course towards Israel.....xxvii.

V.—THE BOOK OF WOES.....xxviii.—xxxiii.

VI.—FINAL JUDGMENT ON THE WORLD AND REDEMPTION OF ISRAEL

xxxiv., xxxv.

VII.—FULFILMENTS OF PROPHECY xxxvi.—xxxix.

Second Half of the Collection xl.—lxvi.

I.—FIRST SERIES OF PROPHECIES.

1. Words of comfort.....xi.
2. The God of history.....xi.
3. The Saviour of the Gentiles.xiii.—xiii. 13.
4. Outpouring of the Spirit.xiii. 14—xiv. 5.
5. Gods of the heathen.....xiv. 6—23.
6. Cyrusxiv. 24—xv.
7. Babylonxvi.—xviii.

II.—SECOND SERIES OF PROPHECIES xlix.—lvii.

III.—THIRD SERIES OF PREDICTIONS lviii.—lxiii. 1—4.

IV.—CLOSING PROPHECIES.

1. Church of captivity.....lxiii. 7—lxiv.
2. Jehovah's answer to prayer of the Church lxv.
3. Exclusion of scorers from the coming salvationlxvi.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

I. vision,^a something seen by the spiritual intuition, cf. ch. ii. 1). The prophet is a "seer" (hozeh), and his perception of divine truth a "vision" (hazon). The word here refers to the collection of prophetic utterances.—Cam. Bib. Isaiah, lit. The salvation of Jehovah. A name very significant of the subject of his prophecies. Amoz, not elsewhere mentioned. The name in Heb. is not the same with Amos the prophet. Judah, the kingdom of the two tribes. Jerusalem, its capital and central city. All Is.'s prophecies bear directly on the interests of God's covenant people. Uzziah, etc., kings of Judah from B. C. 782 to 686.

God's charges against His people (vss. 1-9).—I. The striking preamble with which these charges are introduced (vs. 2). 1. We are shown the importance of what is going to be uttered; 2. Its publicity; 3. Its veracity. II. The several particulars which these charges embody. 1. Ingratitude; 2. Ignorance and inconsideration; 3. Abounding transgressions; 4. Incurability; 5. Spiritual loathsomeness. III. The retribution with which these evils were visited. 1. The severity of God; 2. The goodness of God.

The seer.—A preacher who is not in some way a seer is not a preacher at all. You can never make people see religious realities by correct definitions. They will not believe in the reality of God on the word of a man who merely demonstrates it to them. You must see such things yourself if you are going to help others to see them. This is the secret of all the preaching that ever was good since preaching began.—Beecher. Prophecy.—The sweet stream of the prophet's doctrine did, as the rivers, make its own banks fertile and pleasant, as it ran by and flowed still forward to after ages, and by the confluence of more such prophecies grew greater as it went, till it fell in with the main current of the Gospel in the New Testament, both acted and preached by the Great Prophet Himself, whom they foretold to come, and recorded by His apostles and evangelists, and thus united into one river, clear as crystal. This doctrine of salvation in the Scriptures hath still refreshed the city of God, His Church, under the Gospel, and still shall do so, till it empty itself into the ocean of eternity.—Abp. Leighton.

2-4. (2) Hear, O heavens,^b comp. Deut. xxxii. 1, i. e. since His children will not hear, I call on the heavens to listen. hath spoken, comp. He. i. 1. children,^c Cheyne translates, "sons I have made great and high and they have broken away from me." rebelled, apostatized, with ref. to the national idolatry.^d (3) The ox, etc., for appeal to the habits of animals, see Je. viii. 7. The instinctive regard of animals for the owner who finds them shelter and food, is contrasted with Israel's wilful neglect of God the Father. "The ox and the ass are mentioned as the only thoroughly domesticated animals of the Hebrews." (4) laden with iniquity, bec. sin surely becomes a burden and brings a burden.^e corrupters, that corrupt themselves and one another. Sinners easily become tempters. they have provoked, etc., R. V., "They have despised the Holy One of Israel, they are estranged and gone backward." Holy . . Israel,^f a phrase apparently coined by the writer and emphasizing that attribute, holiness, which was fundamental in his conception of God in relation to Israel. (Cam. Bib.).

Inconsiderateness (vs. 3).—Why do not men consider? 1. Not for want of opportunity; 2. Not for want of encouragement. I. The reasons of inconsiderateness. 1. It saves intellectual trouble; 2. It saves moral compunction; 3. It escapes social obligation. II. Its results. 1. Practical atheism; 2. Spiritual feebleness; 3. Needless alarm; 4. Self-deprivation. Learn.—There is hope of any man who is thoughtful.—Parker.

Ingratitude.—It is an excellent representation of St. Austin: if a sculptor, after his fashioning a piece of marble in a human figure, could inspire it with life and sense, and give it motion and understanding and speech, can it be imagined but the first act of it would be to prostrate itself at the feet of the maker in subjection and thankfulness, and to offer

^a "Isaiah was enabled to see the moral corruption which was lurking beneath the fair surface of external forms and specious shows of religion." — Wordsworth.

^b "Isaiah says he will first of all accuse the times of degeneracy. This is not a grateful task. More loudly would he be welcomed who came to pronounce a eulogy upon the age. He will be an iconoclast; nothing will be spared by the iron rod of his vengeance: yea, though they be gods, they shall go down; though they be idols well cared for they shall be smitten as if they were common clay.—Peop. Bib.

^c De iv. 25, 26, xxx. 18, 19, xxxi. 28, 29.

^d Ex. iv. 22; De. xxxii. 5, 6; Ho. xi. 1; Mal. i. 2, 6; Ro. ix. 4.

^e "Especially by violating that peculiar covenant which bound God to His people." — J. A. Alexander. De. xxxii. 5, 6, 15.

^f "The fig. of a burden most naturally conveys the notion of the oppressive property of guilt, and the unsupportable punishment which it entails." — E. Henderson.

^g 2 Ki. xix. 22; Ps. lxxi. 22, lxxviii. 41, lxxxix. 18; Eze. xxxix. 7.

a "They had found that the stroke of God's rod had always, in severe mercy, followed sin. Why then did they continue to revolt, and provoke this ever-advancing series of Divine punishments, when already the body was one mass of festering stripe-wounds?" —Spk. Com.

Jer. ii. 30, v. 3.

b "The two noblest parts of the human body are here selected to represent the body politic." —E. Henderson.

c "Among all nations, in the early stage of medical practice, attention was in a great degree confined to outward applications, and what we should now call surgical practice." —Kitto.

whatever it is, and can do, as homage to him? The almighty hand of God formed our bodies, He breathed into us the spirit of life, and should not the power of love constrain us to live wholly to His will?—Bates. Heedlessness.—No man is in so much danger as he who thinks there is no danger. Why, when the bell rings, when the watchmen rend the air with cries of "Fire! Fire! Fire!" when in every direction there is the pattering of feet on the sidewalk, and when the engines come rattling up to the burning house, one after another the inmates are awakened, and they rush out; and they are safest that are most terrified, and that suffer most from a sense of danger. One only remains behind. He hears the tumult, but it weaves itself into the shape of dreams, and he seems to be listening to some parade, and soon the sounds begin to be indistinct in his ear, and at length they cease to make any impression upon him. During all this time he is inhaling the deadly gas with which his apartment has become filled, gradually his senses are benumbed, and finally he is rendered unconscious by suffocation. And in the midst of peril, and the thunder of excitement, that man who is the least awake, and the least frightened, is the very man that is the most likely to be burned up.—Beecher.

5. 6. (5) Why more? R. V., "Why will ye be still stricken, that ye revolt more and more?" Why bring on new punishments by continued rebellion? Cf. Ezek. xviii. 31. Or, "To what purpose shall one smite you more?" seeing you will learn nothing under the most gracious chastisement.^a head . heart,^b their sins have been both intellectual and moral, reason and affections are diseased. (6) "The whole nation is one miserably diseased body; not a sound spot to be found. And yet no one has sought a remedy. bound up, a common figure for spiritual healing. Hos. vi. 1; Ps. cxlvii. 3; Luke iv. 18, etc. mollified, "the art of medicine in the E. consists chiefly in external applications."^c ointment, or olive-oil.

The sinfulness and incorrigibility of the nation (vss. 4, 5).—These words lead us to set before you—I. Our sinfulness. 1. The general description of the Jews is equally suitable to us; 2. So also is the particular charge. II. Our incorrigibility. 1. What improvement have we made of our chastisements? 2. What reason have we to hope that our troubles will be sanctified to our good? Apply:—1. Adore God for His long patience; 2. Tremble at His judgments; 3. Take encouragement from His present dealings with us.—C. Simeon.

Results of Sorrow.—Sorrow is in itself a thing neither good nor bad; its value depends on the spirit of the person on whom it falls. Fire will inflame straw, soften iron, or harden clay; its effects are determined by the object with which it comes in contact. Warmth develops the energies of life, or helps the progress of decay. It is a great power in the hothouse, a great power also in the coffin; it expands the leaf, matures the fruit, adds precocious vigor to vegetable life; and warmth, too, develops with tenfold rapidity the weltering process of dissolution. So, too, with sorrow. There are spirits in which it develops the seminal principle of life; there are others in which it prematurely hastens the consummation of irreparable decay.—F. W. Robertson. The physician and his patient.—As long as the physician hath any hope of the recovery of his patient, he assayeth all manner of means and medicines with him, as well sour and sharp as sweet and pleasant; but as soon as ever he beginneth to doubt of his recovery, he suffereth him to have whatsoever himself desireth. Even so the heavenly Physician, as long as He hath any hope to recover us, will not always suffer us to have what we most desire; but as soon as He hath no more hope of us, then He suffereth us for a time to enjoy all our own pleasure.—Wermullerus.

7—9. (7) Your country, the condition of the land was as bad as that of the people. In this description "nearly every word corresponds to the curses threatened in Lev. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii. The prophet intentionally employs the words of the law to describe his own times."—Delitzsch. desolate, etc., could not have been written in times of Uzziah or Jotham, but was true during Hezekiah's reign, and points therefore to the time of the writing of this prophecy, as do vss. 10—18. Overthrown by strangers, the word for "overthrow" never occurs elsewhere except in connection with Sodom (xiii. 19; Deut. xxix. 23, etc.). Hence Ewald, Cheyne and others read "like the overthrow of Sodom." (8) daughter of ^a Comp. De. xxviii. 48, 50, 51.

Zion, poetic name for Jerusalem.^b cottage.^c cucumbers, or melons.^d Jerusalem is spared. But it stands in the midst of desolation, like a booth in a field of cucumbers, as the watch-man looks forth from it. (9) the Lord of Hosts, "title first appears in the times of Eli," (1 Sam. i. 3, 11, etc.) It refers not simply to the armies of Israel, but to all the hosts of God, by which He executes His almighty power. as Sodom,^e i. e. we should have been completely destroyed.

Cottage in a vineyard.—This allusion is illustrated by the following passage from Sir William Hamilton's account of Mount Vesuvius:—"In the vineyards there were several straw huts, which had been erected for the watchmen of the grapes. They remind us of those alluded to by Isaiah. The daughter of Zion plainly means Jerusalem, and the comparison is designed to convey an idea of loneliness and desolation, such as resulted from invading armies, destroying all before them with fire and sword (vs. 7), till Jerusalem itself was left alone to withstand the foe. Extensive fields of ripe melons and cucumbers adorn the sides of the river (Nile); they grow in such abundance, that the sailors freely helped themselves. Some guard, however, is placed upon them. Occasionally, but at long and desolate intervals, we may observe a little hut, made of reeds, just capable of containing one man, being, in fact, little more than a fence against a north wind. In these I have observed, sometimes, a poor old man, perhaps lame, feebly protecting the property. It exactly illustrates the above passage. The abundance of these most necessary vegetables brings to mind the murmurs of the Israelites (Numb. xi. 5, 6), "We remember . . the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic; but now our soul is dried away."—Jewett.

10, 11. (10) rulers of Sodom,^a in wickedness, indeed, Jerusalem is like Sodom, so its rulers are called "rulers of Sodom," "a striking apostrophe said to be unequalled."—Cheyne. The word "rulers" refers to the cadi, or judges,^b regarded as leaders of the people's wickedness. the law, "not the Mosaic Law, but the prophetic revelation which followed."—Cam. Bib. (11) multitude . . me? i. e. sacrifices as merely outward acts now worthless. "The observance of the ceremonial law had no value except as the expression of a godly disposition."—Oehler (cf. 1 Sam. xv. 22; Hos. vi. 6; Isa. lviii. 3; Jer. vii. 21—23; xiv. 12).^c full of, sated with. Figurative, but suggested by the idea that the sacrifices were the food of the gods.

The service which alone is pleasing to God (vss. 10—17).—From the text we see—I. The inadequacy of ritual observances. Hence—This address may be applied to self-righteous formalists; 2. To many who make a profession of vital godliness. II. The necessity of moral attainments. In relation to these two things are required—I. A renunciation of accustomed sins; 2. A performance of neglected duties. Hence see—(1) The nature of true religion; (2) The danger of self-conceit; (3) The excellency of the Gospel.—C. Simeon.

Sincerity in worship.—Fruit-trees that bring forth the fairest and most beautiful blossoms, leaves, and shoots, usually bring forth the fewest and least fruits; because where nature is intent and vigorously pressing to do one work, spending its strength there, it is at the same time weak about other works; but distinct and several works of nature, in moderate and remiss degree, are all promoted at the same time. Generally those persons who are excessive and most curious about the forms of duties, have least of the power of godliness. The Pharisees were excessively careful about the outside of God's worship. So it was among us of late years; bowing at the name of Jesus, the communion-table, surplice, common prayer, etc., and suchlike were pressed with all eagerness and strictness. The body of religion was large and monstrous, but without a soul; or, if any, it was lean and feeble. These persons are like the Indian fig-tree that Pliny speaks of, which had leaves as broad as targets, but fruits no bigger than a bean. This is a foul fault among us at this day: men stand more about the forms of worship than about the power of it; they look so much after the way, manner, and circumstances that they almost lose the substance; things which are but as husks or shells to the kernels, or as leaves in respect of fruits.—Austen.

^b "The city grouped around the fortress of Zion, and nestling in its shade."—Wordsworth.

^c "A rude hut, standing on piles, in which a man was stationed by night to scare away jackals and other wild animals."—Tristram.

^d "Longer than the common cucumber, of a deeper green, a softer and smoother skin, sweeter, and more easy of digestion; being very cooling, they are greatly in request."—E. Henderson.

^e Eze. xvi. 49; see Ge. xix. 24, 25; 2 Pe. ii. 6.

For them that fear and sin not God's mercy is a holy mercy; where it pardons, it heals.—Watson, 1696.

^a Re. xi. 8.

^b Arab proverb—"More unjust than a judge of Sodom."—Gesenius.

^c Pr. xv. 8, xxi. 27; Is. lxvi. 3; Je. vi. 20; Am. v. 21; Mic. vi. 6—12.

"The people of Jerus. pleaded their displays of religious zeal and devotion in the services and sacrifices of the temple, as a bar to the Prophet's severe verdict upon them. He says, they are mere empty shows, hypocritical masques and disguises."—Wordsworth.

"Examine yourselves: a metaphor from metal, that is pierced through to see if it be gold within. A man must search his heart for sin as one would search a house for a traltor; or as Israel sought for leaven to burn it."—Watson.

^a "A term of contempt purposely borrowed from the action of the cattle brought into the outer court for sacrifice."—E. Henderson.

^b Le. ii. 1—3; Nu. xxviii. 12, etc.

Comp. Mat. xxi. 12, 13.

^c Le.. xxiii. 36; Nu. xlix. 35; De. xvi. 6.

"A remembrance of God's omnipresence will quell distractions in worship. Oppose to every intruding thought the idea of the Divine omnipresence, and put it to silence by the awe of His majesty."—Charnock.

^a 1 Ki. viii. 38, 54; 1 Ti. ii. 8.

^b "Nothing could be more incongruous than to spread open to the view of Holy Omnipresence hands which had been stained by acts of atrocious wickedness."—E. Henderson.

"Under the term blood all sins of violence and gross injustice are to be comprehended."—Calvin.

"Will men's prayers be answered? Not if they pray as boys whistle sticks—absently, hardly knowing or caring what they are about."—Beecher.

^c Ex. xxx. 19—21.

"Heart - cleansing, turning away from evil, proper fruits of repentance: such is the Divine service that the Lord requires."—Nagelsbach.

12, 13. (12) tread, R. V. "trample," like heedless animals.^a (13) vain oblations,^b i. e. offerings with no heart in them. Lit. lying meat-offerings, incense, wh. is the symbol of prayer, ascending to God; but lacking the spirit of prayer it was hateful. new moons, etc., your specially holy seasons and gatherings. I cannot away, R. V. "I cannot away with iniquity and the solemn meeting." The combination is unbearable, laxity of morals and strictness in liturgy! solemn meeting, the eighth day of Feast of Tabernacles, and the seventh day of the Passover.^c

Irreverence.—I have sometimes had the misfortune to sit in concerts where persons would chatter and giggle and laugh during the performance of the profoundest passages of the symphonies of the great artists; and I never fail to think, at such times, "I ask to know neither you, nor your father and mother, nor your name: I know what you are, by the way you conduct yourself here—by the want of sympathy and appreciation which you evince respecting what is passing around you." We could hardly help striking a man who should stand looking upon Niagara Falls without exhibiting emotions of awe and admiration. If we were to see a man walk through galleries of genius, totally unimpressed by what he saw, we should say to ourselves, "Let us be rid of such an unsusceptible creature as that." Now I ask you to pass upon yourselves the same judgment. What do you suppose angels, that have trembled and quivered with ecstatic joy in the presence of God, think when they see how indifferent you are to the Divine love and goodness in which you are perpetually bathed, and by which you are blessed and sustained every moment of your lives? How can they do otherwise than accuse you of monstrous ingratitude and moral insensibility, which betoken guilt as well as danger!—Beecher.

14, 15. (14) appointed feasts, the stated festivals dependent on the season of the year. These were ordained by God Himself. My soul hateth, (cf. xlii. 1, "my soul delighteth"), a rare and very emphatic expression. a trouble, lit. "a burden." (15) spread . . hands, a very usual and appropriate gesture of prayer.^a The lifting up of the hands in prayer was a presentation of ones-self. To have "clean hands" was a well understood ceremonial requirement, signifying a clean life. full of blood, the traces of violence and crime,^b not necessarily murder, but also, as context shows, injustice, oppression, causing anguish and even death.

God oppressed (vs. 11).—God, being the holiest, feels sin the most. The language indicates—1. The exquisite sensibility of God; 2. The amazing patience of God; 3. The remedial agency of God.—Thomas.

God's hatred of sin.—God hates sin, because it destroys what He loves. He could live high and lifted up above all noise of man's groaning, all smoke of his torment; but His nature is to come down after man—to grope for him amid all the dark pollutions of sin, and, if possible, to rescue and cleanse him. God hates sin very much, as mothers hate wild beasts. One day a woman stood washing beside a stream. She was in a wild frontier country, and the woods were all around. Her little, only child was playing about near her. By and by she missed the infant's prattle, and, looking about, she called its name. There was no answer. Alarmed, the mother ran to the house, but her babe was not there. In wild distress the poor woman now fled to search the woods, and there she found her child. But it was only its little body that she clasped to her heart. A wolf had seized her treasure, and when, at last, she rescued it from those bloody fangs, its spirit had gone. Oh, how that mother hated wolves! And do you know that this is the very figure Christ uses to show what feeling He has towards the sin that is seeking to devour His children?—Beecher.

16, 17. (16) Wash you, comp. the duty of priests before sacrificing.^a put away . . eyes, "to remove their ill-doings from before the All-seeing Eyes, was, in fact, altogether to cease from it." (17) judgment, the expression of righteousness in our actions and relations. relieve, Heb. "set right the oppressor," restrain him within the bounds of justice. Ill-treatment of the orphan and widow^a are sure signs of a low state of public morality. The righteous are merciful and tender.

Repentance necessary (vs. 16).—I. God doth primarily desire the good of all His creatures. II. He doth not desire man's salvation without his return. III. He doth not desire man's return without his own consent.—B. Whichcot.

Elements of a noble character.—It is not great, or special, or extraordinary experiences which constitute in the best sense the religious character. It is the uniform daily walk with God, serving Him in little things as well as great—in the ordinary duties and everyday avocations, as well as in the midst of grave and eventful contingencies. As the sublimest symphony is made up of separate single notes;—as the wealth of the cornfield is made up of separate stalks, or rather of separate grains;—as the magnificent texture, with its gorgeous combinations of color, is made up of individual threads;—as the mightiest avalanche that ever came thundering down from its Alpine throne, uprooting villages and forests, is made up of tiny snowflakes;—so it is with the spiritual life. That life is itself the grandest illustration of the power of littles. Character is the product of daily, hourly actions, words, thoughts; daily forgivenesses, unselfishnesses, kindnesses, sympathies, charities, sacrifices for the good of others, struggles against temptations, submissiveness under trial. Oh it is these, like the blending colors in a picture, or the blending notes of music, which constitute the man.—Macduff.

18. reason, G. A. Smith and others translate "Come now and let us bring our reasoning to a close." "God reasons with man, that is the first article of religion according to Isaiah. Revelation is not magical but rational and moral. Religion is reasonable intercourse between one intelligent Being and another."—Smith. as scarlet . . red like crimson,^b the promises in this verse are conditional on obedience to vs. 16—17. white as snow, the sense is best rendered in the Polychr. Bib., "If your sins be scarlet they may become white as snow: Be they red as crimson they may become as wool."

Forgiveness (vs. 18).—I. There is assumed the existence of enormous guilt. 1. "Scarlet" and "crimson" indicate sins of peculiar flagrancy; 2. Sin extends to the whole human race; 3. These principles extend to ourselves; 4. The great sin is the neglect of the great salvation. II. There is the promised bestowment of pardoning mercy. 1. This promise is consistent with the holiness and justice of God; 2. Note the manner in which the promised blessing is bestowed; 3. The sufficiency by which this promised blessing of forgiveness is characterized. III. There is desired the exercise of wise consideration. Procrastinate not a moment longer. Believe the saving testimony now. Wash in the fountain now. Seek for glory, honor, and immortality now.—J. Parsons.

Double-dyed.—Certain scarlet cloth is first dyed in the grain, and then dyed in the piece; it is thus double-dyed. And so are we with regard to the guilt of sin; we are double-dyed, for we are all sinners by birth, and sinners by practice. Our sins are like scarlet, yet by faith in Christ they shall be as white as snow: by an interest in Christ's atonement, though our offences be red like crimson, they shall be as wool; that is, they shall be as white as the undyed wool.—"Friendly Greetings."

Sin and Grace.—Like some black rock that heaves itself above the surface of a sunlit sea, and the wave runs dashing over it, and the spray, as it falls down its sides, is all rainbowed and lightened, and there comes beauty into the mighty grimness of the black thing; so a man's transgressions rear themselves up, and God's great love comes sweeping itself against them and over them, makes out of the sin an occasion for the flashing more brightly of the beauty of His mercy, and turns the life of the pardoned penitent into a life of which even the sin is not pain to remember.—Maclaren. Divine alchemy.—In nature there is hardly a stone that is not capable of crystallizing into something purer and brighter than its normal state. Coal, by a slightly different arrangement of its particles, is capable of becoming the radiant diamond. The slag cast out from the furnace as useless waste forms into globular masses of radiating crystals. From tar and pitch the loveliest colors are now manufactured. The very mud of the road, trampled under foot as the type of all impurity, can be ^a "Orphans and widows are continually spoken of in Scripture as special objects of Divine compassion, and as representing the whole class of helpless innocents."—J. A. Alexander.

"Rooting up the large weeds of a garden loosens the earth, and renders the extraction of the lesser ones comparatively easy."—Eliza Cook.

^b "Scarlet was regarded as the most fast or fixed of colors. Neither dew, nor rain, nor washing, nor long use could remove it."—Kitto.

With the Jews, white was the symbol of purity, red of crime, especially of cruelty and murder.

Mt. vii. 18, 19; Is. xlii. 25, 26; Ps. li. 7; 1 Jno. i. 7.

"There is an antipathy between sinning and praying. The child that hath misspent the whole day in playing abroad, steals to bed at night for fear of a chiding from his father. Sin and prayer are such contraries, that it is impossible at a stride to step from one to another. Prayer will either make you leave off sinning, or sinning will make you leave off prayer."—Gurnall.

"He is rich in mercy, abundant in goodness and truth. Thy sins are like a spark of fire that falls into the ocean, it is quenched presently; so are all thy sins in the ocean of God's mercy. There is not more water in the sea than there is mercy in God."—Manton.

"Princes very often pardon traitors to please others more than themselves, or else it would never be done; but God doth it chiefly to delight and gladden His own merciful heart." —Gurnall.

^a "Temporal blessings, 'in the land of their possession,' were prominent in the O. T. promises, as suited to the childhood of the Church. Ex. xiii. 17."—Fausset.

^b Is. xxi. 17, xxii. 25, xxiv. 3, xxv. 8, xl. 5, lviii. 14.

"The wages that sin bargains with the sinner, are life, pleasure, and profit; but the wages it pays him with are death, torment, and destruction; he that would understand the falsehood and deceit of sin, must compare its promises and payments together."—South.

" 'Tis greatly wise to talk with our past hours, and ask them what report they bore to heaven, and how they might have borne more welcome news." —Young.

changed by chemical art into metals and gems of surpassing beauty; and so the most unpromising materials, the most worthless moral rubbish that men cast out and despise, may be converted by the Divine alchemy into the gold of the sanctuary, and made jewels fit for the mediatorial crown of the Redeemer. Let the case of Mary Magdalene, of John Newton, of John Bunyan, of thousands more, encourage those who are still in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity. Seek to be subjected to the same purifying influences; yield yourselves up into the hands of the Spirit to become His finished and exquisite workmanship; seek diligently a saving and sanctifying union with Christ by faith, and He will perfect that which concerneth you, and lay your stones with fair colors (Ps. lxxviii. 13).—Macmillan. God's pity and warning.—God indeed tells us of hell, but it is to persuade us to flee to heaven; and as a skilful painter fills the background of his picture with his darker colors, God introduces the smoke of torment, and the black thunder-clouds of Sinai, to give brighter prominence to Jesus, the Cross of Calvary, and His love to the chief of sinners. His voice of terror is like the scream of the mother-bird when the hawk is in the sky. She alarms her brood, that they may run and hide beneath her feathers; and as I believe that God had left that mother dumb unless He had given her wings to cover them, I am sure that He, who is very "pitiful," and has no pleasure in any creature's pain, had never turned our eyes to the horrible gulf unless for the voice that cries, "Deliver from going down to the pit, for I have found a ransom." We had never heard of sin had there been no Saviour. We had never heard of hell had there been no heaven. "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof." And never had Bible light flashed before the eyes of the sleeping felon, to wake him from his happy dream, but that he might see the smiling form of Mercy, and hear her as she says, with finger pointing the way, "Behold I have set before thee an open door."—Guthrie.

19, 20. (19) willing,^a notice that the demands here (vss. 16-17) are external, not spiritual, and the reward "the good of the land" was equally external. This is not the deepest message of the prophet. (20) refuse, i. e. to be just and relieve the oppressed, etc., then ye shall suffer by the sword. Note the antithesis "ye shall eat"—"ye shall be devoured." mouth, this is not human judgment but the direct verdict of God from His lips.^b

The magnitude of Divine pity.—God's pity is not as some sweet cordial poured in dainty drops from some golden phial. It is not like the musical water-drops of some slender rill, murmuring down the dark sides of Mount Sinai. It is wide as the whole scope of heaven. It is abundant as all the air. If one had art to gather up all the golden sunlight that to-day falls wide over all this continent, falling through every silent hour; and all that is dispersed over the whole ocean, flashing from every wave; and all that is poured refulgent over the northern wastes of ice, and along the whole continent of Europe, and the vast outlying Asia, and torrid Africa; if one could in any wise gather up this immense and incalculable outflow and treasure of sunlight that falls down through the bright hours, and runs in liquid ether about the mountains, and fills all the plains, and sends innumerable rays through every secret place, pouring over and filling every flower, shining down the sides of every blade of grass, resting in glorious humility upon the humblest things—on stick and stone and pebble, on the spider's web, the sparrow's nest, the threshold of the young fox's hole, where they play and warm themselves; that rests on the prisoner's window, that strikes radiant beams through the slave's tear, that puts gold upon the widow's weeds, that plates and roofs the city with burnished gold, and goes on in its wild abundance up and down the earth, shining everywhere and always since the day of primal creation, without faltering, without stint, without waste or diminution, as full, as fresh, as overflowing, to-day, as if it were the first day of its outplay;—if one might gather up this boundless, endless, infinite treasure, to measure it, then might he tell the height and depth, and unending glory of the pity of God. In light,—in the sun its source,—you have God's own figure of the immensity and copiousness of His mercy and compassion.—Beecher.

21—23. (21) "Ah! how," This is a peculiar word used in the beginning of Elegiac utterances (e. g. Lamentations). It is preceded by a rhetorical pause, as if awaiting a reply. None comes, and the prophet breaks out in lamentation. faithful city, that once was faithful. He remembers the days of David and the glory of Israel. harlot, by being faithless to her covenant with Jehovah. Not only idolatry but every kind of sin brings this condemnation. Notice the introduction here of the symbol of the bridal relation betw. Israel and Jehovah, far more commonly used in O. T. than that of filial relationship, employed in vs. 2. murderers, the worst class of violent wrong-doers put to include all others.^a (22) silver .. wine, the nobles and leaders of the land,^b cf. Jer. vi. 28—30; Ezek. xxii. 18. The best metal of your citizenship is worthless. The best blood has run thin. (23) princes, your civil and military leaders take bribes and connive at extortion and robbery. companions, better, accomplices. judge, etc., because these are weak and poor and cannot bribe.

Liberality.—If we so love our riches that we would eternally possess them, let us not hoard them up in the earth, where we are sure to leave them, carrying nothing with us but the canker of our coin, which shall bear witness against us at the Day of Judgment; but let us send them before us into heaven, delivering them unto the poor, who are God's factors and receivers; and so having conveyed and made over our goods, as it were by bills of exchange, we shall find the Lord a sure and all-sufficient paymaster, who will give us more than double usance, and yet pay us at the first sight. If we would have our coin continue sweet and good for a great space, let us know that there are for this purpose no garners comparable to poor men's stomachs, which will preserve our grain for our use unto life eternal. If we would have our clothes preserved from moths, and to last long, the backs of the naked are our safest wardrobes.—Downname. Silver becomes dross thro' little failings.—You need not break the glasses of a telescope, or coat them over with paint, in order to prevent you from seeing through them. Just breathe upon them, and the dew of your breath will shut out all the stars. So it does not require great crimes to hide the light of God's countenance. Little faults can do it just as well. Take a shield, and cast a spear upon it, and it will leave in it one great dent. Prick it all over with a million little needle shafts, and they will take the polish from it far more than the piercing of the spear. So it is not so much the great sins which take the freshness from our consciences, as the numberless petty faults which we are all the while committing.—Beecher.

24—27. (24) the Lord, Heb. Adonai. Lord of hosts,^c three names heaped together to emphasize the absoluteness of the verdict and the omnipotence of the Judge. the mighty One, a title rarely used (cf. xlix. 26; lx. 16; Gen. xlix. 24; Ps. cxxxii. 2). ease me, by getting rid of them. enemies, the unfaithful among the Jews themselves. (25) turn, "bring back," in judgment. purely, R. V. "thoroughly," marg. "Heb. as with lye,"—cf. Job ix. 30.^a tin, or lead, as when coin or silver vessels are melted the lead alloy is separated from the pure silver. (26) at the first, cf. Jer. ii. 2. "The regeneration of Israel will be as wonderful as its first foundation under Moses, and Joshua and Samuel."—Cheyne. (27) with judgment, or Divine severities. converts, returning penitent ones.

The influence of holiness.—There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life, passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen but silent beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty than the tongues of men and angels. Let parents remember this. The best inheritance a parent can bequeath to a child is a virtuous example, a legacy of hallowed remembrances and associations. The beauty of holiness beaming through the life of a loved relative or friend is more effectual to strengthen such as do stand in virtue's ways, and raise up those that are bowed down, than precept, command, entreaty, or warning. Christianity itself, I believe, owes by far the greater part of its moral power, not to the precepts of parables of Christ, but to His own character. The beauty of that holiness which is enshrined in the four brief biographies of the Man of Nazareth has done more and will do more to regenerate the world, and bring in everlasting righteousness, than all the other agencies put together. It has done more to spread His religion in the world than all that has ever been preached or written on the evidences of Christianity.—Chalmers.

^a Comp. condition of city in Manasseh's reign. 2 Ki. xxi. 16, xxiv. 4.

Spk. Com. comp. the condition of Jerusalem in the siege that followed on the rejection of the Lord Jesus Christ.

^b "The silver is said to be turned into dross, and the pure wine to be mixed with water, when judges and senators turn from purity and grave manners, from integrity, sincerity, and candor, and prostitute their own dignity." — Vitranga.

^c Is. lli. 1, x. 16, 33, xlx. 4.

^a "The totality of the nation shall be subjected to a purifying process wh. the Prophet compares to the process by which silver ore is freed from the mixture of ignoble metal, and rendered solid silver. The separation of the lead ore is promoted by applying alkali." — Nagelsbach.

Ro. xi. 26, Re. iii. 19.

"Christianity ends not in negatives. The soul may be cleansed from all blots, and yet still be left but a blank." — South.

^b "The crushing, utter ruin. The terms of this vs. are appropriate to all kinds of sin, but seem to be peculiarly descriptive of idolatry, as defecation or desertion from the true God to idols."—J. A. Alexander.

^c Ps. civ. 35; Pr. xxix. 1; Re. xxi. 8.

^d Is. lxx. 3, lxvi. 17; Eze. vi. 13; Ho. iv. 13.

^e Comp. Je. ii. 13, xvii. 13.

^f "Sin is the match which ignites the sinner with the fire of the punishment that will consume him."—Wordsworth.

28—31. (28) And, R. V., "But," by contrast with vs. 27. destruction, lit. breaking into shivers.^b transgressors, Cheyne, "renegades," who have inwardly and outwardly broken away from Jehovah; same word as in vs. 2, "rebelled." together, in a mass, at once, and utterly. consumed, Ps. xxxvi. 20.^c (29) Polychr. Bib. calls vss. 29—31 "a fragment against Tree-worship." oaks, R. V. margin, "terebinths," a sacred tree in Canaan and Cyprus, an object of worship. gardens, or idol-groves.^d Peculiarly favorable for the sensual rites connected with idol-worship. (30) leaf fadeth, "the falling leaf and the failing spring would mean, to nature worshipers, the decay of divine life that was within the terebinth and the sacred garden."—Cam. Bib.^e maker of it, R. V. "and his work," i. e. his work shall be the cause of his destruction, as the spark fires the tow. His sin shall find him out. spark,^f a man's sin lighting up his judgment.

Gardens.—In the language of the Hebrews, every place where plants and trees were cultivated with greater care than in the open field was called a garden. The idea of such an enclosure was certainly borrowed from the garden of Eden, which the bountiful Creator planted for the reception of His favorite creature. The gardens of primitive nations were commonly, if not in every instance, devoted to religious purposes. In these shady retreats were celebrated, for a long succession of ages, the rites of pagan superstition. Thus, Jehovah calls the apostate Jews "a people that provoked Me continually to anger to My face, that sacrificeth in gardens."—Paxton. Moral beauty of shame.—A young girl was one day censured by her mother for some fault, upon which she deeply blushed, burst into tears, and retired into a corner. Gotthold was present, and observed to the mother: "How beautiful your reproof has made your daughter! That crimson hue, and silver tears, become her better than any ornament of gold and pearls. A full-blown rose, besprinkled with the purest dew, is not so beautiful as this child blushing beneath her parent's displeasure, and shedding tears of sorrow for her fault. A blush is the sign which nature hangs out to show where chastity and honor dwell."—Gotthold.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

There is no connection between chaps. i. and ii. But chaps. ii—iv. are a continuous prophecy of a future vindication of God's holiness.

1, 2. (1) word, or message Divinely entrusted to Is. saw, by spiritual intuition. "The original meaning of the Hebrew word saw, which is used in the title to this series, is to cleave, or split; then to see into, to see through, to get down beneath the surface of things and discover their real nature."—G. A. Smith. (2) last days,^a lit. "in the sequel of the days"—that is in the day of results, when the conclusion of present conditions comes, comp. Mi. iv. 1, 2, vss. 2—4 are not originally Isaiah's own words, but those of another prophet, taken out of their connection. Perhaps Isaiah and Micah quoted from some common source. (Delitzsch). mountain . . mountains, a fig. expression, meaning that Jerusalem should be given the highest place in religious and political supremacy. Possibly also a physical elevation was thought of (Ezek. xl. 2). top of, R. V. "at the head."^c flow, in a procession that may be likened to a river.

The Gospel conspicuous (vs. 2).—I. The coming glory of the Church. 1. A universal brotherhood; 2. A reign of love; 3. An age of progress. II. Signs of its approach. 1. The accomplishment of prophecy; 2. Dissemination of useful knowledge; 3. The connection of minds by scientific discovery; 4. The extension of evangelical truth.—W. Whythe.

The spiritual magnet.—There is an Eastern fable about a great mountain of loadstone out in the middle of the sea, that attracted all the ships which came near it, by the iron nails and bolts which fastened their timbers together, and then, drawing these out, left the vessel to strew the waves, a mass of beams and boards and spars. This mountain of the Lord's house is a grand spiritual magnet, and it draws souls, not to destruction, but everlasting life.—Edmond.

3. people, R. V. "peoples." of his ways, "the preposition has a posi-

^a Je. xxiii. 20, xxx. 24; Da. x. 14; Ho. iii. 5.

^b "Instead of saying, in modern phraseology, that the Church, as a society, shall become conspicuous and attract all nations, he represents the mountain upon which the temple stood as being raised and fixed above the other mountains, so as to be visible in all directions."—J. A. Alexander.

^c "Its crest the summit of the whole range."—Spk. Com.

"The Church which was first founded at Jerusalem was the seminary or seedplot of all Churches of Christendom."

tive sense, 'somewhat of his ways' (cf. Ps. xciv. 12), each people receiving such direction as is adapted to its peculiar circumstances."—Cam. Bib. out of Zion . . from Jerusalem," these are the emphatic words of this verse, declaring Zion and Jerusalem to be the source of all wisdom and righteousness. "Salvation is of the Jews," John iv. 22.

The mountain of the Lord's house (vss. 2-4).—I. The period referred to. The Christian dispensation. II. The cheering truth declared. 1. Elevated position; 2. Permanent duration. III. The general interest awakened. 1. The invitation given; 2. The considerations by which it is enforced. IV. The happy results secured. 1. A consummation devoutly to be wished; 2. Absolutely certain is its realization; 3. The means whereby it shall be accomplished.

Origin and glory of the Gospel.—As to its origin and glory, the Gospel may be compared to an angel "standing in the sun;" as to the territorial range of its commission, it may be compared to "an angel flying in the midst of heaven;" as to the gracious mysteries of salvation to which it points, it may be compared to the angels looking into the ark of the covenant; as to the pure and holy worship which it enjoins, and over which it presides, it may be compared to the angel standing beside the altar of incense; as to the hopes and inspirations which it warrants and sustains, it may be compared to an angel at heaven's gate, saying to us, poor dusty wayfarers, "Come up hither." But looking at the relations of the Gospel to men in the business of everyday life, we may regard it still as an angel (losing nothing of its ethereal beauty and celestial brightness); but then, it is an angel full of condescension and brotherly companionship; an angel mingling with us, and talking to us—helping, and guiding, and comforting us; an angel, recognizing our earthly wants, and sympathizing with us in our earthly trials, like the angel who came to Abraham under the trees of Mamre, and to Lot in his house at Sodom; like the angel who appeared to Ornan while he was threshing wheat; like the angel who appeared to Zechariah in the shop of the four carpenters; like the angel who touched Elijah asleep, and showed him a "cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head;" and like the angel who came to Peter in prison, and took off his chains and set him free! Thus does the religion of the Bible come home to us, and put itself on a level with us, entering fully into our temporal circumstances, temporal necessities, temporal duties, and temporal trials.—Stoughton.

4. he shall judge, the coming Messiah shall administer justice as a king. rebuke, R. V., "reprove," better still, "arbitrate for," i. e. the influence of the coming kingdom will be to put arbitration in the place of force. pruning hooks, such will be the influence of the reign of justice that men will neither desire nor need to make war any more. Therefore instruments of war become useless. learn war, the arts of war. Among the prophetic anticipations is a time when war shall cease. "All weapons are to be destroyed (Micah v. 4-10; Zech. ix. 10; Hosea ii. 18; Ps. xlv. 9; Ezek. xxxix. 9-10, etc.), the new Church is unapproachable in its protected retirement (Micah vii. 14). The new city of God is no more to be desecrated by enemies (Joel iii. 7)."—Oehler.

Weapons of war.—I have been laboring among a people who once delighted in war; but, since Christianity has prevailed there, war has ceased altogether, and they are astonished how they ever engaged in all those deeds of savage cruelty, which, according to their usual practice, threatened the extermination of their race; but now the Prince of Peace reigns there. I have seen the musket-barrel taken from the stock, and carried to the anvil, and beaten into a spade or a hoe, though not into a ploughshare, for the plough does not yet turn up their fruitful soil, and the warrior who has used it in battle now employs it in cultivating the land. They have even gone further in illustration of this beautiful description of the Prophet; for they have devoted the implements of war to the service of the sanctuary. The last Sabbath I was there, I went into one of their chapels, and ministered to a large congregation of about fifteen hundred persons. A rude sort of pulpit was erected, and stairs led up to it, the railings of which, smooth and polished, were literally composed of the handles of warriors' spears, who had thus transferred their weapons, with themselves, to a nobler and better purpose—the service of

And well might the Prophet say that the law shall go forth from Zion; for the Gospel streamed forth with its living waters from that fountain and well-spring, and irrigated the world."—S. Jerome.

Je. 1. 5; Zec. viii. 21-23; Lu. xxiv. 47.

"All who profess the Gospel and have not sincerity, are as clouds without water, trees without fruit, or lamps without oil; but those who love God with undivided hearts, participate a constant succession of pleasures in His approbation and in their own minds."—Beaumont.

"So much does the Syrian ploughshare resemble the short sword used by the ancient warriors, that it may with very little trouble be converted into that deadly weapon, and when the work of destruction is over, reduced again to its former shape."—Barnes.

Ps. lxxii. 7; Je. xxiii. 6; Zec. ix. 10.

"People are always expecting to get peace in Heaven; but you know whatever peace they get there will be ready-made. Whatever of making peace they can be blest for, must be on the earth here."—Ruskin.

"A weary and discouraged woman said: 'Everything looks dark, dark.' 'Why don't you turn your face to the light, aunty dear?' said a little niece.

The words were a message from on high, and the weary eyes were turned toward Him in whose light alone we see light."

Ps. lxxxix. 15; Is. lxi. 19; Jno. xii. 35, 36; 1 Jno. i. 7; Re. xxi. 23, 24.

"Where the sun does not enter, the physician must;" so say the Italians, and their wit-ness is true. Sunlight has not only a cheering but a health-giving influence. Along the Riviera, invalids owe everything to the sun; and when it is gone, they shrink into their own rooms."

a "The word 'replenished' suggests a reference to the pythons, and other diviners, who were filled with an affluens from an evil spirit." —Vitranga.

b "As if that could be a god to them wh. was not only a creature, but their own creature." —Matt. Henry.

"In the library of the world, men have hitherto been ranged according to the form, the size, and the binding. The time is coming when they will take rank and order according to their

the sanctuary of God.—W. Ellis. The promise of peace.—What words are these! What ideas! What radiance of glory and hope for the long-afflicted Church! Nations abolishing war and crimes, to cultivate righteousness and peace! nations emerging from ignorance and idolatry, to join themselves to the Church, and to walk in the light of the Lord! How marvelous that words like these should proceed from the Hebrew prophets! that men of the most confined education with regard to the Gentiles should thus lose the glory of Israel in the overflowing glory of the converted world! Can we ask for clearer proof that those holy men were purely the organs of the Holy Ghost, and transported in the spirit to publish the righteousness of God to every nation and language of the earth?—Sutcliffe.

5. house of Jacob, comp. Ex. xix. 3: here is an abrupt transition as of one returning from a vision to every-day realities. light of the Lord, to walk in the light of the Lord is to walk in the way he has revealed, i. e. according to His instructions, Ps. cxix. 105.

Exhortation to a holy walk (vs. 5).—Let us walk in—I. The light of His truth. It now shines with meridian splendor. II. Of His countenance. This is the privilege of the true believer; let us enjoy our privilege. III. Of His commandments. These are given as a light to our feet: let us make them the rule of our conduct. Addressing the house of Jacob—I. Speak to those who are so nominally; 2. Those who are really so.—C. Simeon.

The satisfaction of holiness.—The knowledge of God and conformity to Him are in their own nature apt to satisfy the desires of the soul, and even now actually do so in the measure wherein they are attained. Some things are not of a satisfying nature; there is nothing tending to satisfaction in them. And then the continual heaping together of such things doth no more towards satisfaction than the accumulating of mathematical points would towards the compacting of a solid body, or the multiplication of cyphers only, to the making of a sum. But the hungry, craving soul, that would fain be happy, but knows not how, needs not spend its days in making uncertain guesses and fruitless attempts and trials; it may fix its hovering thoughts, and upon assurance here given, say, "I have now found at last where satisfaction may be had; and have only this to do, to bend all my powers hither and intend this one thing, the possessing myself of this blessed rest. Happy discovery! welcome tidings! I now know to which way to turn my eye and direct my pursuit. I shall no longer spend myself in dubious toilsome wanderings, in anxious vain inquiry. I have found it! I have found it! blessedness is here." —J. Howe.

6—9. (6) Therefore, R. V. "for." Turning to God, the Prophet says, "I thus exhort Thy people, because Thou hast forsaken them," etc. replenished from, R. V., "filled with customs from." the east, the cradle of the occult arts and sciences. Filled with Oriental luxuries and idolatries." soothsayers, sorcerers, practicing hidden arts. Cheyne translates "diviners of the clouds." Philistines, 1Sa. vi. 2; 2 Ki. i. 2. please themselves, R. V. "strike hands with"; make covenant with. (7) horses, the wealth of the land has enormously increased, and they have standing armies, sources of peril to any nation, comp. De. xvii. 16, 17. (8) own hands .. made, the usual prophetic satire of idols. (9) boweth .. humbly, R. V., "is bowed down," and "is brought low," i. e. (ch. v. 15) as a judgment upon them. forgive, etc., "and forgive them—no, that thou wilt not," Delitsch. The prophet's conviction is that God cannot forgive this sin.

National apostasy (vss. 6—8).—We have here—I. A catalogue of Israel's sins. 1. Unhallowed intercourse with God's enemies; 2. Divination; 3. Worldliness; 4. Idolatry. II. A denunciation of Israel's punishment. 1. God forsakes them; 2. Withholds forgiveness.—Lyth.

The sinner's plea.—"A man called at my house some time ago for charity—an arrant beggar, I have no doubt. Thinking that the man's rags and poverty were real, I gave him a little money, some of my clothes, and a pair of shoes. After he had put them on and gone out, I thought, 'Well, after all, I have done you a bad turn very likely, for you will not get so much money now as before, because you will not look so wretched an object.' Happening to go out a quarter of an hour afterwards, I saw my friend; but he was not wearing the clothes I had given him, not he! Why, I should have ruined his business if I could have compelled him to look respectable. He had been wise enough to slip down an archway, take all the good clothes off, and put his rags on again. Did I blame him? Yes, for being a rogue; but not for carrying on his business in a business-like manner. He only wore his proper livery, for rags are the livery of a beggar. The more ragged he looked, the more he would get. Just so it is with you. If you are to go to Christ, do not put on your good doings and feelings, or you will get nothing; go in your sins, they are your livery. Your ruin is your argument for mercy, your poverty is your plea for heavenly alms, and your need is the motive for heavenly goodness."—Spurgeon.

10, 11. (10) Enter, etc.,^c because God cannot forgive (vs. 9) it only remains for you to flee to the cares from His wrath. dust, "as travelers endeavoring to escape the sweeping simoon of the desert." for fear, or fr. before the terror of the Lord. glory . . . majesty, some great manifestation of His power in judgment.^d (11) lofty looks, lit. eyes of loftiness. exalted, as judge and sovereign. that day, i. e. the one about to be described in vss. 12—16.

A great day (vss 10—12).—I. A description of the day of the Lord. 1. It is the day of the revelation of the Divine glory; 2. Of the exaltation of the Divine majesty; 3. Of the utter overthrow of human pride; 4. Of the abolition of idolatry and superstition; 5. Of the confusion and destruction of God's foes. II. An exhortation to prepare for it. 1. Enter into the rock; 2. Hide thee in the dust; 3. Cease from man. III. Grounds for the exhortation. 1. This day will be very terrible and glorious; 2. A place of shelter is provided—a rock, a cleft in the rock; 3. We have the means of securing this shelter—humble thyself in the dust, enter by faith.—Lyth.

12, 13. (12) day of the Lord,^a the usual phrase for a time to come when God will insure the triumph of His kingdom by overwhelming His enemies, called "the day of Jehovah," "the day of Jehovah's anger" (Zeph. ii. 3). "The great and terrible day of Jehovah" (Mal. iv. 5), etc. Comp. N. T. term, "day of judgment." (13) cedars,^b "the totality of nature is bound up with man in one common history." This is the constant Biblical teaching, and it is a striking figure here used which shows the wrath of the Creator, beginning by mowing down the great cedars and oaks and mountains, and then towns and ships, and then men themselves.

Humility in God's presence.—A minister named Winstanley was the means of comforting and edifying the great Dr. Johnson on his deathbed. In a letter to a friend, Hannah More, alluding to this, says: "I cannot conclude without remarking what honor God has hereby put upon the doctrine of faith in a crucified Saviour. The man whose intellectual powers had awed all around him, was in his turn, made to tremble when the period arrived at which all knowledge appears useless, and vanishes away, except the knowledge of the true God and Jesus Christ whom He has sent. Effectually to attain this knowledge, this giant in literature must become a little child. The man looked up to as a prodigy of wisdom must become a fool that he might be wise."—Old Test. Anec.

14—16. (14) mountains . . . hills, first the forests, then the mountains themselves shall be overwhelmed. (15) high tower, then the things that men have builded, towns, walls, ships. (16) ships of Tarshish, the great merchant ships,^c put as the type of the commerce in wh. men placed so great confidence. pictures, R. V., "imagery," an obscure word, found only here.

A corrective of pride.—Libussa, princess of Bohemia, first ennobled, and then married Primaslaus, who before was a plain husbandman. In remembrance of his former condition, he preserved a pair of wooden shoes. Being asked the cause of his doing so, he made the following answer: "I have brought these shoes with me for the purpose of setting them up as a monument in the castle of Visegrade, and of exhibiting them to my successors, that all may know that the first prince of Bohemia was called to his high dignity from the cart and the plough; and that I myself, who am elevated to a crown, may bear constantly in mind that I have nothing whereof to be proud."

contents and intrinsic merits." —E. Cook.

"This is a true and literal description of India: the traveler cannot proceed a mile through an inhabited country without seeing idols and vestiges of idolatry in every direction." —Roberts.

^c Of old Is. fled before an invading army into caves and rocks. Ju. vi. 2; 1 Sa. xiii. 6. See Re. vi. 15.

^d "The terror shall be like that which spreads before an overpowering invasion of the enemy."—Lange.

^a Joel i. 15.

"More exactly—'For the Lord hath a day.' He has it in reserve, ready to be brought out when the time of forbearance is over." —Spk. Com.

^b "The most distinguished objects of nature and art are used metaphorically to represent the different persons whom the judgments of God would hurl into ruin."—E. Henderson.

^c "Richly-laden and far-golging vessels, like our term East Indian."—Fausset.

"Ships delightful to look upon." —E. Henderson.

"Such as were built for the Ophir trade at the ports of the Aelanitic gulf." —Spk. Com. "All the noble vessels and instruments of commercial prosperity."—Wordsworth.

a "In a verse consisting of three words, their destiny is declared as with a flash of lightning." — Delitzsch.

a Am. i. 1. Comp. He. xii. 26.

"Even in heathen countries, men are becoming ashamed of their idols, and are representing them as merely the media of worship. The victory of Christianity over idolatry is already assured."—Hom. Com.

"None but the true God can discover [make known] what the true worship of God is. As that glorious eye of heaven is not to be seen but by its own proper light,—a million of torches cannot show us the sun: so it is not all the natural reason in the world that can either discover what God is, or what worship He expects, without Divine and supernatural revelation from Himself." — Arrow-smith.

b "A confession that they had buried themselves away in the darkness of earthly desires, and of foul, grovelling superstition." — Spk. Com.

"A religion that does not take hold of the life that now is, is like a cloud that does not rain. A religion that consists in the observance of magnificent ceremonies, but that does not touch the duties of daily life, is a religion of show and of sham." — Beecher.

17—19. (17) loftiness, etc., and when man has witnessed all this, then his pride shall be humbled. (18) the idols, as for his idols, in which he has trusted, they shall vanish. abolish, R. V., "shall utterly pass away:" a use of these words in the Hebrew, "the idols—vanished," suggestive of swift and complete destruction.^a (19) holes, etc., comp. vs. 10. Then shall the stricken mortals, deprived of all in which they had trusted, creep into caves and cellars, to escape the terrible majesty of Jehovah, cf. Rev. vi. 15—17.^a

The triumphs of the Gospel (vs. 18).—I. The condition implied. Idolatry: define this—carved objects of worship, supreme affections set on other than God, the idols of the heart. II. The glorious change predicted. 1. The conversion of their adherents to a purer faith; 2. The extent to which this change shall be affected. III. The means appointed for its accomplishment. 1. Earnest prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit; 2. The preaching of the Gospel. IV. The encouragement. 1. The faithfulness of God's word; 2. The success already granted; 3. The condescension of God in owning and blessing the feeble efforts made for His glory.

An unfortunate idol.—There are few positions more melancholy than that of an Indian god who has seen better days, and it is difficult to read the accounts in the Indian papers of the present condition of Jagarnath without a deep feeling of commiseration for that unfortunate deity. Jagarnath, according to the Pioneer, has been in a bad way since his hereditary protector, the Rajah of Puri, has gone to live in the Andamans. The affairs of the temple have been found to be in a pitiable state, the Rajah having greatly mismanaged the revenue. His mother, the Rani, has done all that her ingenuity could suggest to mend matters, but there are serious arrears in the pay and perquisites of the servants of the temple and family dependents, to pay up which would take a large revenue. Since the conviction of the Dibya Singh Deb the pension to the family has been stopped, and the local feeling is that the Rani is harshly treated by having the sins of her son visited on her own head. A further calamity in the shape of a famine has long been hanging over Puri, and the car festival was a miserable affair. At first no timber for the great car could be got, as the usual agent blankly refused to send an inch of wood, and it seemed as if Jagarnath would have to dispense with his customary airing. The Rani, however, was indefatigable, and in spite of difficulties managed to do the work of her worthless son.—Pall Mall Gazette.

20, 21. (20) cast his idols, He seems to forget the former figure of utter destruction and now emphasizes man's own disgust at the uselessness of the idols when a time of testing comes. Perhaps vs. 18 is incomplete as Polychr. Bib. suggests. which they made, notice repetition of idea, upon which the prophet dwells elsewhere. to the moles, etc., creatures of the darkness; the one burrowing in the dark ground, the other flying in the dark sky.^b The expression is a proverbial one for "contemptuous rejection." (21) To go, unencumbered, seeking a safety for themselves wh. their idols fail to give. tops, crevices; fissures of the cliffs.

The long reign of idols.—Trace human history back as far as all extant records will enable you to do so, and you will find idols enthroned in the affections of men. That they should ever have been set up there must be regarded as one of Satan's subtlest and greatest triumphs. The instincts that lead men to worship are so strong, that his only hope of preventing fallen men from returning to their allegiance to God lay in persuading them to worship some other thing or being. His difficulty and his device were those of Jeroboam (1 Kings xii. 26—28). He seems to have led men down step by step: stars, images as their representatives, then the images themselves: first, natural principles, then living creatures in which these principles were supposed to be embodied, then the living creatures themselves. To have begun at the end would have been too great a shock; the absurdity as well as the wickedness of such worship would have been too obvious. Thus was the empire of the idols founded, and it continues to this day.—Hom. Com.

22. Cease . . man, i. e. cease to trust in him, see Ps. cxlvi. 3, 4. The prophet is overcome with a sense of the folly and weakness of man, who is so high in his own esteem, and is to be so completely humiliated. breath . . nostrils, the quick passing breath being a symbol of his fleeting life. Man regarded as helper, saviour, defender, is of little worth. accounted of, or valued. "In what way can he be reckoned as having intrinsic worth?"^a Trust not in man (vs. 22).—I. Man may be endowed with rich and varied talents and distinctions. Illustrations. II. All men are fragile and mortal. 1. This agrees with the account of his creation; 2. Is philosophically true; 3. It exhibits the uncertainty of life; 4. In old age breathing is weak; 5. At death it ceases; 6. This is the condition of all men. III. The wise and reasonable conclusion of the text. 1. We ought to recognize talent and greatness, should honor it, greatly value it, when removed mourn its loss; 2. But should not trust in man, for the wisest man may err, the best may do wrong, all men will die; 3. If we cease from man we shall make God our hope, adhere to principles which are immortal; Jesus stands in contrast to all others.—Burns.

The certainty of death—

The glories of our birth and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate;

Death lays his icy hand on kings;
Sceptre and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill;
But their strong nerves at last must yield;
They tame but one another still;
Early or late
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath,
When they, pale captives, creep to death.

The garlands wither on your brow;
Then boast no more your mighty deeds;
Upon death's purple altar, now,
See where the Victor Victim bleeds!
All heads must come
To the cold tomb!
Only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust!

—Shirley.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1-3. (1) Lord . . hosts, "the divine name given here, with which Isaiah everywhere introduces the judicial acts of God (cf. i. 24; x. 16, 33; xix. 4), is a proof that the proclamation of judgment commences here afresh."—Delitzsch. stay . . staff, every kind of support.^a bread . . water, the natural and necessary means of subsistence. "This clause seems out of place in view of what follows and is probably a marginal gloss which has crept into the text."—Cam. Bib. (2) the mighty man, the prophet, accepting the popular position, names first among the props of the state, the soldier. prudent, R. V. "the diviner." ancient, or elder. (3) honourable man, or man of high rank. eloquent orator,^b R. V. "the skillful enchanter."

National calamity (vss. 1-8).—Here are—I. Some forms of national calamity. 1. Famine; 2. Removal of men prominent in influence; 3. An upstart and inefficient Government; 4. Mutual oppression; 5. General in-

^a Job vii. 17, 18; Ps. viii. 4, cxviii. 8, 9, cxliv. 3, 4, cxlvi. 3, 4.

"Here, like a shepherd gazing from his hut, Touching his reed, or leaning on his staff, Eager Ambition's fiery chase I see;

I see the circling hunt of noisy men

Burst law's enclosure, leap the mounds of right,

Pursuing and pursued, each other's prey;

As wolves for rapine; as the fox for wiles;

Till Death, that mighty hunter, earths them all.

Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?

What though we wade in wealth, or soar in fame?

Earth's highest station ends in 'Here he lies'—

And 'Dust to dust' concludes her noblest song."

—Young.

"Applause is the spur of noble minds, the end and aim of weak ones."—Colton.

"God will not give ammunition to any soldier who is not willing to go into battle."—Anon.

^a Le. xxvi. 28.

^b "The entire apparatus of State machinery of that day is mentioned." — Nagelesbach.

"A sublime idea remains the same, from whatever brain, or in whatever region, it had its birth."—Menzel.

"The great cause of our neglecting the Scriptures is not want of time, but want of heart, some idol taking the place of Christ." — From "Words and Weapons."

"Some apply this in a strict sense to the weak and wicked reign of Ahaz; others, in a wider sense, to the series of weak kings after Isaiah. But the most probable opinion is that the incompetent rulers are called boys or children not in respect to age, but character." — J. A. Alexander.

c "When weak hands hold the reins of government a condition of lawlessness ensues, and of defencelessness for the weak. The strong then do as they wish. They exercise club law." — Naegelesbach.

"There is no slight danger from general ignorance; and the only choice which Providence has graciously left to a vicious Government, is either to fall by the people, if they are suffered to become enlightened, or with them, if they are kept enslaved and ignorant." — Cole-ridge.

a They would make a ruler or a judge any man with a decent coat on his back.

subordination; 6. No healer of the sick State; 7. Utter ruin. II. The causes which occasion them. 1. Ungodliness in speech; 2. In act; 3. In spite of light and knowledge.—Lyth.

Preparation for death—

So live, that, when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan, that moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not like the quarry slave at night
Scourged to his dungeon; but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

—Bryant.

4. 5. (4) children, as in cases of Ahaz and Manasseh (King at 12). Delitzsch suggests that by "princes" reference is made to the councillors of the king. It being a greater evil than that the king himself should be a youth. babes, etc., this is really an abstract noun and means outrage. The better translation is "and Outrage shall rule over them." (5) be oppressed, etc., the marks of these evil days will be, class hatred and injustice, irreverence, and the supremacy of the baser elements of society.

The relation of classes.—Whilst all that is purely mechanical and arbitrary is to be viewed with suspicion, yet there is a natural sequence in things, there is indeed what is called a fitness or harmony of things; and when society is rightly inspired the base man knows that he is base, and his baseness is his weakness, and his weakness defines his position; and the child knows himself to be but a child, and therefore he behaves himself with discretion, and is limited by circumstances which he cannot control. Once let the moral centre be lost, and then you have lost all arithmetical counting, all geometrical relationship, all figure and form and mechanism and security, and the foursquare is thrown out of its parallel, and that which was right is numbered with that which is forbidden. How is society held together but by moral and political considerations? Some of the strongest men physically are amongst the weakest mentally and morally. When society is properly ordered and organized wisdom goes for everything; wisdom rules the city; wisdom directs the war; wisdom is consulted in the day of perplexity and in the night of desperation. Once let moral security give way, and you have this picture repeated: "The people shall be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbor": complete chaos shall reign; the child shall spit in the face of the ancient, and the base man shall claim the throne of the honorable. We are more dependent upon righteousness than we sometimes suppose. A sense of honesty keeps men right; a sense of moral inferiority determines the right classification of society. Aristocracy is mental, not hereditary. There is a genealogy of blood; there is also a genealogy of mind. When moral considerations are supreme all these questions are settled easily and finally.—Peop. Bib. "Our country—whether bounded by the St. John's and the Sabine, or however otherwise bounded or described and be the measurements more or less;—still our country, to be cherished in all our hearts, to be defended by all our hands."—Winthrop.

"Heaven forming each on other to depend,
A master, or a servant, or a friend,
Bids each on other for assistance call,
Till one man's weakness grows the strength of all."

—Pope.

6—8. (6) a man, etc., "the choice of the people falls on a landed proprietor who has been fortunate enough to retain his ancestral estate (his "father's house,") and whose outer garment is a sufficient badge of respectability."—Camb. Bib. ruin . . hand, an offer of absolute control, to remedy this ruinous condition. (7) not to be a healer, or binder up. Even he will decline the responsibility.^b neither, etc., this respectable show is all even this man has. Beneath it he is as poor and helpless as the rest. Or else he is one of those who having sufficiency refuse responsibility on the plea of poverty. provoke, etc., or defy Him to His face. the eyes of his glory, God is the glorious One, and abhors all this uncleanness and evil. It is the all-searching eyes of such an One whom these rebels provoke to wrath.

Reason for ruin.—A man cannot lay up a character and fall back upon it if his present conduct is out of keeping with it; he himself takes the juice and sap out of the character which he once lived. "Jerusalem is ruined." Why? There is a moral reason. There is always a moral reason for divine judgment. That reason reads thus: "Because their tongue and their doings are against the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his glory." In their fancy they give him eyes of omniscience, and in their action they defy those eyes to see the rottenness of their conduct. Men do not come to ruin because they are good; it is nowhere recorded that because a man prayed he was blasted by the lightning of heaven. Ruin has a moral explanation behind it, an explanation we may be ashamed to give, or to confess, or to recognize even within the secrecy of our own consciousness; but there is the eternal law—wherever there is death there has been sin: the wages of sin is death. We are not speaking now of the mere death of the body, of the death which dogs die, but of that second death, that inner decease, that decessus or exodus of the character, when the soul goes out of a man, and abandons him, because it has been ill-used, dethroned, disrowned.—Peop. Bib.

9—11. (9) shew, etc., brazen daring; bold, staring effrontery; impudence.^a as Sodom, their wickedness is stamped upon their faces; but they do not care to conceal it, they proclaim it aloud; see Ge. xiii. 13, xviii. 20, 21, xix. 13. unto themselves, the destruction that shall come upon them they have invited. Sin is suicidal. (10, 11) the fruit . . the reward, an exposition of the statement in vs. 9.—Each class is preparing its own reward.

Conscience.—Many sinners who seem so jocund in our eyes have not such merry lives as you think. A book may be fairly bound and gilded, yet have but sad stories writ within it. Sinners will not tell us all the secret rebukes that conscience gives them. If you will judge of Herod by the jollity of his feast, you may think he wanted no joy; but at another time we see that John's ghost walked in his conscience. And so doth the Word haunt many, who appear to us to lay nothing to heart. In the midst of their laughter, their heart is sad: you see the lightning in their face, but hear not the thunder that rumbles in their conscience.—Gurnall.

12, 13. (12) my people, notice the affection of the prophet even while he condemns. children, "this language points to a time when the vigorous administration of Uziah and Jotham had been succeeded by the weak and inefficient government of Ahaz."—Driver. women, either their rulers are as unfit as women; or these rulers are under the government of their seragios. they which lead, i. e. the prophets, who should correct and guide the people, lead them astray. "Thy leaders are misleaders."—Delitzsch. cf. Micah iii. 5; Is. ix. 15—16; Jer. xxiii. 25—26. destroy, swallow up, i. e. "the landmarks of national righteousness have been effaced from the minds of the people by the conduct of their leaders." (13) standeth up, the sign of earnestness. The beginning of the end has come; the verdict is now to be declared.

Following principle.—Men know where they are going when they follow a principle; because principles are rays of light. If you trace a ray of light in all its reflections, you will find that it runs back to the central sun; and every great line of honesty, every great line of honor, runs back towards the centre—God. And the man that follows these things knows that he is steering right Godward. But the man that follows policies, and worldly maxims, does not know where he is steering, except that in general he is steering toward the devil.—Beecher.

14, 15. (14) ancients, or elders. for ye, R. V. "It is ye that." eaten up, as devouring beasts; not tended and watched, as faithful husband-

^b "The state of affairs was so ruinous and calamitous that he would not attempt to restore them—as if in the body disease should have so far progressed that he would not undertake to restore the person, and have him die under his hands, so as to expose himself to the reproach of being an unsuccessful and unskillful physician." —Barnes.

^a "An unblushing recklessness of character is indicated." — E. Henderson.

Is. lix. 12; Ho. v. 5, vii. 10.

"Conscience, as an expression of the will and mind of God, is not now to be implicitly depended on. It has been deranged and shattered by the fall. So far as doctrines and duties are concerned, not conscience, but the revealed Word of God, is our one, only sure and safe directory." — Guthrie.

"Reason is God's candle in man. But, as a candle must first be lighted, ere it will enlighten, so reason must be illuminated by Divine grace, ere it can savingly discern spiritual things." — Top-lady.

b "The most natural interpretation is that which applies it to the act of grinding the face upon the ground by trampling on the body." — J. A. Alexander.

Ps. xli. 5; Is. v. 7. "Ah! my lord, do not thus crush my face. Alas! my nose and other features will soon be rubbed away. Is my face to be made quite flat with grinding? My heart is squeezed; my heart is squeezed. That head man has been grinding the faces of all his people." — Roberts.

a "The worldliness of the people was reflected in the luxury of the females, and the costly variety of their robes and ornaments." Spk. Com.

"The following eight vss. contain the most complete description of Oriental female attire to be met with in any ancient writing." — E. Henderson.

Comp. 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4.

b Ps. lxxv. 5.

c "Metallic rings or bands worn round the ankles. Still used in Syria, Egypt, and India."

d "The women of Samaria wear now a head-dress which perfectly illustrates the Proph. description. It is a sort of bonnet with a horseshoe shape in front, and in the front are some silver coins lapping over one another, and making a crescent-shaped tire (resembling the crescent moon) round the forehead and down to the ears." — Bib. Things.

men.^b (15) beat, or crush, as in a mortar. Notice the ground of the condemnation; the leaders have misled the people, devoured their possessions, and overwhelmed the poor with violence and oppression. These are all social evils.

Servilia.—Among the numerous victims of the tyranny of Nero, was one Barea Soranus, a man, as Tacitus informs us, of singular vigilance and justice in the discharge of his duty. During his confinement his daughter Servilia was apprehended, and brought into the senate to be arraigned. The crime laid to her charge was, that she had turned into money all her ornaments and jewels, and the most valuable part of her dress, to defray the expense of consulting magicians. To this the young Servilia, with a flood of tears, replied, "That she had indeed consulted magicians, but the whole of her inquiry was to know whether the emperor and senate would afford protection and safety to her dear and indulgent parent against his accusers. "With this view," continued she, "I presented the diviners, men till now utterly unknown to me, with my jewels, my apparel, and other ornaments peculiar to my quality, as I would have presented my blood and life, could they have procured my father's liberty. But whatever this my proceeding was, my unfortunate father was an utter stranger to it; and if it is a crime, I alone am guilty." This pathetic appeal was lost on the sanguinary monster; and Servilia and her father were condemned to die.—Percy Ames.

16—18. (16) daughters of Zion,^a with this description cf. Prov. xxxi. 10 ff. where industry, benevolence, liberality and skill in handiwork mark the excellent woman; also Pr. xi. 16, 22; xii. 4. haughty, Isaiah sees in the women of Jerusalem as unfavorable signs as Amos (iv. 1) saw in Samaria a generation earlier. The character of a people is well revealed by the character of its women. necks, stretched out with the proud uplifting of the head.^b mincing, or tripping, "though well versed in sin and old in years they tried to maintain a youthful appearance."—Delitzsch. tinkling, with their ankle-rings.^c (17) scab, bring disgrace in form of offensive diseases. discover, lay bare, giving them over to the hands of barbarous enemies, so that they who have lived in lust shall suffer the lust of others. (18) tinkling ornaments, R. V. "anklets." cauls, or headbands: braided tresses of hair, with little bells attached. round tires, ornaments for the neck.^d

Differences in society.—To us there seems a wide difference between the judge, with the robes of office on his back, mind in his eye, and dignity in his mien, and that poor, pale, haggard wretch at the bar, who throws stealthy glances around, and hangs his head with shame. Yet the difference that looks so great to man may be very small in the eyes of God; and would look small in ours if we knew the different upbringing and history of both. The judge never knew what it was to want a meal; the felon often went cold and hungry to bed. The one, sprung of wise, kind, reputable, and perhaps pious parents, was early trained to good, and launched, with all the advantages of school and college, on an honorable and high career; while the other, bred up a stranger to the amenities of cultivated and Christian society, had no such advantages. Born to misery, his struggles with misfortune and evil began at the cradle. None ever took him by the hand to lead him to church or school. A child of poverty, and the offspring of abandoned parents, he was taught no lessons but how to swear, and lie, and drink, and cheat, and steal. The fact is, it is just as difficult for some to be honest as it is easy for others. What merit has that judge in his honesty? None. He had no temptation to be else than honest. And so, I suspect, much of the morality of that unblemished character and decent life in which many trust, saying to some poor guilty thing, "Stand aside, I am holier than thou," and pluming themselves on this, that they have not sinned as others have done—is due, less to their superior virtue, than to their more favorable circumstances. And so the difference between many honest men and decent women on the one hand, and those on the other hand on whom a brand of infamy has been burned, and the key of a prison turned, may be just the difference between the green branch on the tree and the white ashes on the hearth. This is bathed in the dews of night and fanned by the breath of heaven, while that, once as green, has been thrust into the burning fire—the one has been tried in a way that the other has not.—Guthrie.

19—23. (19) chains, prob. ear-drops, or pendants from the neck. mufflers, or veils ornamented with spangles." (20) bonnets, ornamental head-dresses. of the legs, or stepping-chains, arranged to make the lady take short and mincing steps. headbands, R. V. "sashes." tablets, R. V. "perfume-boxes." earrings, R. V. "amulets," or charms." rings, i. e. finger-rings. nose jewels, or rings." (22) suits, R. V. "festival robes." mantles, or sleeve-frocks, worn over the inner tunic. wimples, R. V. "shawls." crisping pins, R. V. "satchels." (2 Ki. v. 23). (23) glasses, R. V. "hand-mirrors;" polished metal plates, cf Job xxxvii, 18; I Cor. xiii. 12. Glass was made for other purposes, but seems not to have been used for mirrors. linen, of the inner tunics. hoods, or turbans. Stockings and handkerchiefs are not mentioned in this list. The former were introduced from Media long after Isaiah's time.—Delitzsch.

Anklets.—Besides ornamental rings in the nose and the ears, they wore others round the legs, which made a tinkling as they went. This custom has also descended to the present times; for Rauwolf met with a number of Arabian women on the Euphrates, whose ankles and wrists were adorned with rings, sometimes a good many together, which, moving up and down as they walked, made a great noise. Chardin attests the existence of the same custom in Persia, in Arabia, and in very hot countries, where they commonly go without stockings, but ascribes the tinkling sound to little bells fastened to those rings. In the East Indies, golden bells adorned the feet and ankles of the ladies from the earliest times; they placed them in the flowing tresses of their hair; they suspended them round their necks; and to the golden rings which they wore on their fingers, to announce their superior rank, and exact the homage which they had a right to expect from the lower orders; and from the banks of the Indus, it is probable the custom was introduced into the other countries of Asia. The Arabian females in Palestine and Syria delight in the same ornaments.—Paxton.

24—26. (24) instead of sweet smell, etc., R. V. "instead of sweet spices there shall be rottenness; and instead of a girdle a rope." The prophet foresees the doom that will fall upon these women in coming days of beggary and slavery. "Not merely would the articles of finery be removed, but everything that was coarse, vulgar, and disgusting was to supply their place." baldness, through skin disease fostered by dirt. stomacher, or full flowing mantle. sackcloth, covering of the very poor, and of mourners. burning, R. V. "branding," as of slaves." (25) thy mighty, lit. thy might,^c this explains how the reverses just declared are to come about. (The protectors of Jerusalem are to be destroyed in battle, and the women will be the prey of the enemy. (26) lament, etc., as those who wait for the dead.^d she . . shall sit, Jerusalem shall mourn the loss of her sons.

Perfumes for the person.—"Sweet smell." No one ever enters a company without being well perfumed; and in addition to various scents and oils, they are adorned with numerous garlands, made of the most odoriferous flowers. "A girdle." Probably that which goes round the waist, which serves to keep the garments from falling, while the girls are dancing. It is sometimes made of silver. "Well-set hair." No ladies pay more attention to the dressing of the hair than do these; for as they never wear caps, they take great delight in this their natural ornament. "Baldness" in a woman makes her most contemptible; and formerly, to shave their head was a most degrading punishment. "Stomacher," I once saw a dress beautifully plaited and stiffened for the front, but I do not think it common. Here, then, we have a strong proof of the accurate observations of Isaiah in reference to the Jewish ladies; he had seen their motions, and enumerated their ornaments; and here we have a most melancholy picture of the fallen state of "the daughters of Zion."—Roberts.

Two forms of temptation.—Sometimes temptation comes to us like an army with open attack, but more often like a malaria. We breathe in the poisoned air from neighboring marshes; we bring the deadly sewer a "Fluttering vells," — Gesenius.

b "Gems or metal plates with an inscription on them, wh. were worn as a protection as well as an ornament." — Delitzsch.

c "It is the custom in almost all the East for the women to wear rings in their noses, in the left nostril, which is bored low down in the middle. These rings are of gold, and have commonly two pearls and one ruby between, placed in the ring." — Chardin.

Ge. xxiv. 22.

"Fell Luxury! more perilous to youth Than storms or quicksands, poverty and chains." — Hannah More.

a 2 Sa. iii. 31.

b "Or perhaps a sunburnt countenance, owing to their hoods and vells being stripped off whilst they had to work as captives under a scorching sun." — Fausset.

c Military force, used collectively for mighty warriors.

d "On Roman medals, struck by order of Titus, in commemoration of his conquest of Jerusalem, Judaea actually appears in the posture of a female, sitting on the ground, under a palm tree, and giving way to inconsolable grief." — E. Henderson.

"Vanity is as ill at ease under indifference as tenderness is under the love which it cannot return."—George Eliot.

"Those who live on vanity must not unreasonably expect to die of mortification."—Mrs. Ellis.

gas into our houses by the very triumph of modern conveniences; cess-pools in hundreds of yards send up their malaria to enter every open window in summer, and then in winter we shut up every crack and crevice lest God's pure air enter our rooms, to save coal; till our whole systems are poisoned, and in some hour of weakness or overwork suddenly we are consumed with a burning fever. If the fever had come like a deadly serpent, we would have avoided it; if it had come like the north wind, we would have sheltered ourselves from it; if in battle array, we could fight it. But it has come with our daily breath, its footsteps unheard, without knocking at the door, and has insidiously poisoned our whole system before we were aware of our danger.—Peloubet, Sugges. Illus.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1. This verse belongs with the third chapter. "A companion picture to iii. 6. The male population are in search of a ruler, the women in search of a husband."—Cheyne. one man,^a "the image which the prophet has in mind is that of a disaster in the field: the warriors of Judah defeated and slain; their wives and daughters in the hands of the conquerors. The women that remain crowd around the few warriors, not to obtain support, but that the reproach of childlessness may not rest upon them forever."—Driver. called .. name, it was customary for the wife to be named after the husband.^b reproach, i. e. the disgrace of being unmarried. cf. Jud. xi. 37f.

^a "The paucity of males in the community, resulting from this general slaughter, is now expressed by a lively figure representing seven women as earnestly soliciting one man in marriage and that on the most disadvantageous terms, renouncing the support to which they were by law entitled."—J. A. Alexander.

^b Ge. xii. 17, xli. 19; 2 Sa. xi. 3.

"All true penitence must take account of God's willingness and readiness to forgive."—G. F. Pentecost.

Rage of battle—

Still pressing forward to the fight, they broke Through flames of sulphur and a night of smoke,
Till slaughter'd legions fill'd the trench below,
And bore their fierce avengers to the foe.
High on the works the mingling hosts engage,
The battle kindled into tenfold rage.
With showers of bullets, and with storms of fire,
Bombs in full fury, heaps on heaps expire;
Nations, with nations mix'd, confus'dly die,
And lost in one promiscuous carnage lie.
The western sun now shot a feeble ray,
And faintly scatter'd the remains of day,
Ev'ning approach'd; but oh! what hosts of foes
Were never to behold that ev'ning close!
Thick'ning their ranks, and wedged in firm array,
The close-compacted Britons win their way;
In vain the cannon their throng'd war defaced,
With tracks of death, and laid the battle waste.

—Addison.

2-4. "Beyond the great judgment there is revealed to the prophet a vision of the ideal religious community, blessed with an exuberant super-natural fertility imparted to the soil (vs. 2), purified from sin (vss. 3, 4), and overshadowed by the protecting presence of Jehovah (vss. 5, 6). It is a picture of the glorious Messianic age which immediately follows the day of the Lord."—Cam. B. (2) branch, etc.^a this is not the same word rendered "branch" in xi. 1, and this is best rendered "the growth of Jehovah," that which Jehovah causes to grow. That is, as the destruction of the earth was first mentioned in judgment (ii. 13) so here the fruitage of the earth is the first token of Divine pleasure. Polych. Bib. translates "the self-springing plants" and refers it to wild growth dependent on God's care. escaped of Israel, the remnant, the faithful few. (3) left, the same as the "escaped." Those whom God would acknowledge as His people. holy,^b that is, "consecrated and inviolate" as well as pure.—Camb. Bib. These whom the Lord has preserved will be looked upon by Him as His chosen. In fact they will be the pure ore that survives the smelting. written,^c etc., i. e. inscribed in the register of its living citizens. By "the living" the prophet means on earth, in the redeemed city, under new conditions. It is a vision of the kingdom when it has come on earth.—Driver. (4) washed away, by His judgments and captivities. spirit of burning, regarded as having both a destroying and purifying influence.^d

^a Je xxiii. 5, xxviii. 15; Zec. vi. 8, vi. 12.

^b Ex. xix. 6; De. xxviii. 9.

The branch of the Lord (yss. 1—6).—We have—I. A special period implied. II. An attractive object presented. III. An encouraging fact announced. IV. An important process declared. V. A state of blessedness promised. God is set forth in connection with His people—I. As their guide; 2. As their guard.

The use of affliction.—As God makes use of all the seasons of the year for the harvest, the frost of winter as well as the heat of summer, so doth He of fair and foul, pleasing and unpleasing providences for promoting holiness. Winter providences kill the weeds of lusts, and summer providences ripen and mellow the fruits of righteousness. When He afflicts it is for our profit, to make us partakers of His holiness (Heb. xii. 10). Bernard compares afflictions to the teasel, which though it be sharp and scratching, is to make the cloth more pure and fine. God would not rub so hard if it were not to fetch out the dirt that is ingrained in our natures. God loves purity so well that He would rather see a hole than a spot in His child's garments. When He deals more gently in His providences and lets his people sit under the sunny bank of comforts and enjoyments, fencing them from the cold blasts of affliction, it is to draw forth the sap of grace, and hasten their growth in holiness.—Gurnall.

5, 6. (5) cloud and smoke, recalling the pillar of cloud and fire over Israel, and assuring of the Divine protection and guidance. defence, R. V. "over all the glory shall be spread a canopy," of Div. protection. (6) tabernacle,^e all this is a vision of the New Jerusalem described in Rev. xxi, which is the vision of the kingdom of God when it has come in its completeness.

Divine shelter.—Somewhere in the East there is a tree which is a non-conductor of electricity. The people know it, and when a storm comes, they flee towards it for safety. Beautiful picture of the Saviour! Beautiful emblem of the tree of Calvary! It is a non-conductor of wrath. Get underneath it, and you are safe—safe for ever.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

This chapter records another prophecy—later than that of Chs. ii—iv., but similar in cause and tone. "The difference between the two sets of prophecies is that in the former we have the obscure and tortuous path of a conviction struggling to light in the prophet's own experience; here, we have its careful array in the light and before the people."—G. A. Smith. 1, 2. (1) a song, the prophet appears as a minstrel and proceeds to recite in verse the story of the experience of a beloved friend, within his vineyard. vineyard, Ps. lxxx. 8—16. fruitful hill, lit. on a horn, a son of fatness. ^a (2) fenced it, R. V. "made a trench about it." stones, wh. tended to make it barren. choicest vine,^b "a technical word for the finest sort of grapes grown in Syria."—Cam. Bib. Lit. vine of Sorek, the name of a valley bet. Askelon and Gaza. tower, for the watchman. winepress, R. V. "hewed out a winepress" in the rock. It was the proof that the owner fully expected good fruitage in answer to his labor. wild grapes, such as would grow on a poor vine that received no care.

Fruit required.—I. Fruitfulness is, first and before all things else, in character, in holiness, in what we are rather than in what we do, and only in what we do so far as that is the genuine outcome and spontaneous revelation of what we are. Usefulness is the result of character, and must never be lost sight of; but character is first, and in that the fruit of our position in God's vineyard is chiefly to appear. II. God expects fruit from a tree on which he has bestowed such exceptional advantages, and that is the second point to which I would here give prom-

^c Phil. iv. 3; Re. iii. 5, xvii. 8.

^d "In the burning fire of God's judgments there is a Spirit of love, which, while it scorches, purifies." — Wordsworth.

^e God has never yet left the world without a nucleus of heaven. There is always a remnant, the one left, the true heart, the faithful among the faithless found." — Peop. Bib.

"All other books will perish in the flame; only the writing of God will survive. In that register the humblest man may have a place. Pitiable is the life of him whose name is written everywhere but in the life-book!" — Peop. Bib.

^e "The 'Branch of the Lord' is Himself the restored 'Tabernacle of David.'" — Spk. Com.

"Though God may seem to frown in His providences, yet He always smiles in His promises."

^a In the Hebrew idiom a thing is said to be the son of whatever quality it possesses.

^b Je. ii. 21.

The grapes of this vine are small in size, reddish in color, with small or scarcely any stones, and they have a very sweet taste. The present Arab name is Serki, or Sherki, or Zerka.

"How bitter must have been the disappointment of the father of the Prodigal when he went away into a far country! Such disappointments break the hearts of tens of thousands of fathers and mothers; and precisely such disappointment it is, only vaster, deeper, sadder, that fills the heart of our Heavenly Father when His children go astray."—Hom. Com.

a "God has done all that could be done for the salvation of sinners, consistently with His justice and goodness. The God of nature is, as it were, amazed at the unnatural fruit of so well cared for a vineyard."—Fausset.

Matt. xxiii. 37.

"Who seeks and will not take when once 'tis offer'd Shall never find it more."—Shakespeare.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men, Which, taken at their flood, leads on to fortune. Omitted, all the voyage of their life Is bound in shallows and in miseries."—Shakespeare.

"The promises of eternal blessedness are not given to the strength of faith, but to the truth of faith; not to the degrees of faith, but to its reality."

"True blessedness consisteth in a good life and a happy death."—Solon.

"The more a man denies himself, the more he shall obtain from God."—Horace inence. If we have so much more than other nations, we ought to be just so much better than they. For the fruit in this case is that of character. III. Now observe, in the third place, that God pronounces sentence of destruction on all who, having had such privileges, bring forth no fruit.—W. M. Taylor.

Opportunities neglected.—A prisoner is under sentence of death. The fatal hour of execution is concealed from him, but he is told that if before it strikes he petitions the governor, his life will be spared. He says, "I'll send to-morrow," and when to-morrow comes he says again, "Oh, there's time enough yet; I'll wait a little longer." Suddenly his dungeon doors open, and behold the sheriffs and the executioners! "Oh, wait, and I'll sign the petition." "No," they say, "the clock has struck; it's too late—you must die."

3. 4. (3) judge, act as umpires. He intended to make them convict themselves. me and my vineyard, here he reveals partially his meaning. The prophet speaks in this manner only when speaking for Jehovah. (4) what . . . done more, to the awakening consciences he puts the question, "Was the failure due to lack on the part of the owner?" wherefore, the whole situation reminds of Nathan's parable to David, 2 Sam. xii. 1-13.

A sad canticle (vss. 4-6).—The similitude under which the Church is represented. The vineyard—1. Represented prosperity; 2. Was associated with rejoicing; 3. As a scene of labor; 4. Was specially noticed by God. This vineyard was in a very favorable locality, planted with the choicest vine, carefully fenced, diligently cultivated, having husbandmen living in its midst. II. The just complaint of the Lord,—founded not on the poverty, but on the nature of the crop. III. The terrible condemnation He pronounces. Observe—its mercy; its severity.

The wine-press.—The wine-press, constructed for expressing the juice of the grapes, does not seem to be a movable implement in the East; and our Lord, in the parable of the vineyard, says expressly that it was formed by digging. Chardin found the wine-press in Persia was made after the same manner; as it was a hollow place dug in the ground, and lined with mason-work. Besides this, they had what the Romans called lacus, the lake, a large open place or vessel, which, by a conduit or spout, received the must from the wine-press. In very hot countries it was perhaps necessary, or at least convenient, to have the lake under ground, or in a cave hewed out of the rock, for coolness, that the heat might not cause too great a fermentation, and sour the must.—Paxton. Self-interrogation.—Let me judge myself! Could anything more have been done for me than has been done? I am constrained to answer, There has been nothing lacking on the part of God. It is not for me to compare myself with other men, and to say their advantages have been greater than mine; possibly that may be so; yet I have had advantages enough to have brought forth an abundance of grateful fruit. How much have I produced? Are mine lifeless branches? Are my grapes wild grapes? These are the questions that tear the life, these the songs the music of which we forget in the terribleness of their judgment. But this is healthy investigation; this is the kind of heart-searching which, if properly received, ends in edification. We cannot repent sooner than to-day; behold, now is the accepted time for repentance; now is the chosen hour for the real improvement of our innermost life.—Peop. Bib. Harmony with God.—To be godly is to be godlike. The full accord of all the soul with His character, in whom, as their native home, dwell "whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely," and the full conformity of the will to His sovereign will, who is the life of our lives—this, and nothing shallower, nothing narrower, is religion in its perfection, and the measure in which we have attained to this harmony with God is the measure in which we are Christians. As two stringed instruments may be so tuned to one keynote that if you strike the one, a faint ethereal echo is heard from the other, which blends undistinguishably with its parent sound; so drawing near to God, and brought into unison with His mind and will, our responsive spirits vibrate in accord with His, and give forth tones, low and thin indeed, but still repeating the mighty music of heaven.—Maclaren.

5, 6. (5) go to, no corresponding Heb. word. Translate "Now I will tell you," etc. The minstrel prophet pauses at end of verse 4, but the hearers are silent. He therefore passes on to give sentence. wall, wh. was sometimes put up outside the hedge. New suggestions here of the thoroughness with which he had protected and cared for his vineyard. Since now the vine has brought forth wild grapes it shall be treated as wild vines are. (6) waste, i. e. "put an end to it." briers and thorns, a phrase peculiar to Isaiah (vii. 23; ix. 18; x. 17; xxvii. 4; lv. 15), one of his many references to sympathy of nature with man. clouds, the first clear hint that it is God who is speaking through His prophet.

Sinking in the quicksand.—It sometimes happens that a man walking on the beach at low tide suddenly notices that for several minutes he has been walking with some difficulty. The strand beneath his feet is like pitch; his soles stick to it; it is sand no longer—it is glue. The eye, however, has noticed no change. The man pursues his way, goes forward, inclines to the land. He is not anxious. Only he feels somehow as if the weight of his feet increases with every step he takes. Suddenly he sinks in two or three inches. Decidedly he is not on the right road; he stops to take his bearings. All at once he looks at his feet. His feet have disappeared. He draws his feet out of the sand; he turns back; he sinks in deeper. The sand comes up to his ankles; he pulls himself out and throws himself to the left; the sand is half-leg deep. He throws himself to the right; the sand comes up to his shins. Then he recognizes with unspeakable terror that he is caught in the quicksand. He throws off his load, if he has one, lightens himself like a ship in distress. It is already too late, the sand is above his knees. If there is no help in sight, it is all over.—Abridged from Victor Hugo.

7. For, etc., now appears clearly who the Beloved is and what the vineyard.^a house of Israel, the whole people, and especially Judah which had been most signally blessed. God's prophecies and messages do not often recognize the division of the Israelites into two kingdoms. He addresses the entire covenant people. judgment, etc.,^b the play upon words is striking in the Heb. "He looked for mishpat, but behold mispat (bloodshed); for tsedaqua, but behold tsaqua (the cry of the oppressed).

The dying soldier.—A soldier, who had enlisted as a Christian, but had for three years, though a man of uprightness and integrity done nothing to make known the name of Christ, said when dying, "I die as a Christian, and I die contented; but oh, if I could have died as a Christian worker!" "I am peaceful and assured in view of death," he said again, "but I am not joyful and glad; those three lost years keep coming back upon me." Then lying a moment quiet with closed eyes, he added, "Chaplain, do you suppose we shall be able to forget anything in heaven? I would like to forget those three years." Sword and Trowel.—The lost opportunity.—A passenger comes bustling into a railway station. He is just too late, for the engine has sounded its whistle, and the train is gliding rapidly out of sight. He looks after it in despair. He had important business to transact. Ruinous may be the consequences of delay. He sits down on his trunk, leaning his head upon his hand, and, absorbed in vain regrets, gazes vacantly forward. But see! another train is at the platform, just about to start for the same destination. Other passengers have arrived, and are eagerly crowding in. The bell rings, again the whistle sounds, again the engine bears away its living freight, and, starting up, our friend again bewails an opportunity lost! Oh! sit not down again despondingly. There is yet another chance; throw not this away too, but at once take your seat in this third train which now is preparing to follow the other two.—Newman Hall.

8-10. The second section of this chapter vvs. 8-24 describes the "wild grapes" of this vineyard—in six "woes." (8) Woe, comp. our Lord's denunciations, Mat. xxiii. 13-29. house to house,^a "by violently expelling the poorer proprietors."—Cheyne. cf. Job xx. 19; Mic. ii. 1-5; Ezek. xlii. 18. The evil of cruel landlordism has cursed many lands.

Proverbs. — "What may be done at any time will be done at no time. Strike while the iron is hot. Take time while time is, for time will away." —English. "God keep you from 'It is too late.' When the fool has made up his mind, the market has gone by." — Spanish. "A little too late, much too late." — Dutch. "Some refuse roast meat, and afterwards long for the smoke of it." —Italian.

"If importunity can prevail with an unjust judge, what must it do with a just one?"

^a 2 Sa. xii. 5.

^b Lu. xiii. 7.

"The shortest and surest way to live with honor in the world is to be in reality what we would appear to be."—Socrates.

"Opportunity is like a string of stepping-stones across a ford. The traveler, coming up to them, may find the river so swollen with the rains that the stones are all but covered. If he delay, though his home be on the opposite bank, and full in sight, it may be too late to cross, and he may have a journey of several miles to reach his home." —Union Magazine.

^a "The monopoly of houses and landed property was diametrically opposed to the spirit of the Mosaic law, and a virtual infraction of the enactment relative to the year of jubilee."—Henderson.

I.e. xxv. 10, 13, 26, etc.; Lu. xii. 15—21.

Still, one of the gravest of national and social evils, is the gathering of the landed property into a very few hands.

The homer was a dry measure equal to ten baths; the ephah perhaps equalled six pecks.

"Gather the rosebuds while ye may, old Time is still a-flying; and that same flower that blooms to-day, to-morrow shall be dying."—Herriek.

a "Early drinking was considered by the Jews, as it was by the Romans, a mark of the most depraved sensuality."—Henderson.

b Eccl. x. 16, 17; comp. Is. xxii. 13, lvi. 12; Am. vi. 6.

c "Sensual indulgences steel the heart against religious impressions, and cause their victims to sport on the very brink of ruin."—Henderson.

"What good does physic poured down a dead man's throat? If he cannot be chafed to some sense of his condition, all applications are hopeless; and if sharp affliction, which is the strongest physic, leaves the sinner senseless, there is little prospect that anything else will do him good."—Gurnall.

See Pr. xxiii. 29, 30; Eph. v. 18, 19; Col. iii. 16, Ja. v. 13.

that they may be placed alone, R. V., "and ye be made to dwell alone," i. e. so that only the few are land-owners and householders, while he who seeks a bit of land can find "no place." (9) In mine ears (cf. xxii. 14) the ears of the prophet, i. e. this I heard distinctly, as if the Lord had spoken in mine ear. Of a truth, an emphatic introduction in the nature of a solemn oath. shall be, better, are becoming; the Prophet sees the penalty actually beginning. (10) one bath, about 8 gallons. instead of the 500 which it ought to produce. homer, eight bushels of seed would yield only three pecks of produce. The picture is of the complete failure of harvest and vintage. "Barrenness, Jehovah's remedy for land-grabbing."—Cam. Bib.

Covetousness (vss. 8—10).—I. The sin here denounced. Covetousness defined. It is—1. Desiring more than is necessary for the purposes of life; 2. Worldliness; 3. Trusting and delighting in it; 4. Selfish monopoly. II. Its punishment. 1. Here—disappointment, loss, ruin, death; 2. Hereafter—misery, destitution. III. The certainty of this punishment. 1. God announces it to His servants; 2. Few believe it.—Lyth.

Oppression.—What shall become of the oppressor? No creature in heaven or earth shall testify his innocence. But the sighs, cries, and groans of undone parents, of beggared widows and orphans, shall witness the contrary. All his money, like hempseed, is sowed with curses.—Adams. Avarice.—I doubt not many covetous men take a great deal of pleasure in ruminating upon their wealth, and in recounting what they have; but they have a great deal of tormenting care and fear about it; and if they had not, it is very hard to understand where the reasonable pleasure and happiness lies of having things to no end. It is, at the best, like that of some foolish birds, which, they say, take pleasure in stealing money, that they may hide it; as if it were worth the while for men to take pains to dig silver out of the earth, for no other purpose but to melt it down and stamp it, and bury it there again.—Tillotson.

11, 12. (11) rise early, the second sin is drunkenness. Men plunge into debauchery as soon as the sun rises. This vice must describe a wide-spread condition, for the nation is denounced on account of it. Of course it refers mainly to the wealthy classes. continue until night,^b R. V. "tarry late into the night." The land question and liquor question appear here as the marks of a corrupt national life on the verge of overthrow. (12) harp, etc., joining riotous mirth to sensual indulgence. tabret, or tambourine. pipe, or flute.^c work. Lord, i. e. God is not in their thoughts. Though His work is all about them, in nature and history they do not heed it, nor see their impending punishment.

The degradation and ruin of intemperance (vss. 11, 12).—I. The sin, with its concomitants and connections, described in the text. 1. The Prophet refers to intemperance and its associate habits of festivity and dissipation—it is both bad in principle and degrading to character, it has a greater tendency than almost any other to destroy the feeling of shame and to harden conscience, it leads to other great sins, it is dangerous to the peace of society, and puts to hazard the lives of men; 2. The Prophet points out the connection between intemperance and unhallowed festivity and an infidel disregard of the works and ways of God. II. The woe denounced by the Prophet upon the sons and daughters of intemperance. Learn:—1. Habits of intemperance are progressively formed; 2. Beware of the first step, of the first temptation, of the first indulgence.—E. A. Cox.

Drinking habits in the East.—Such practices as these condemned by the Prophet are, unhappily, still common in the East. Mr. Morier, in his narrative of travels, describes the following scene:—"Returning from a morning ride about seven o'clock, I saw, at about forty yards from the roadside, a party of well-dressed Persians seated on a carpet close to a rising ground in the plain, with a small stream of water, near a field of rising corn, flowing before them, and surrounded by their servants and horses. As I passed, they sent a lad to me with a message to the following purpose: 'The Khan sends his compliments, says be happy, and join his party.' At the same time the whole company hallooed out to me as loud as they could, 'Be happy! be happy!' I afterwards learnt that this party was given by a Yuzbashee, or colonel of the king's troops, and that they were in the height of enjoyment when I passed, for they were all apparently much intoxicated. We one day met a party in one of the king's pleasure-houses nearly under similar circumstances; and we found that the Persians, when they commit a debauch, arise betimes, and esteem the morning as the best time for beginning to drink wine, by which means they carry on their excess until night.—They consider not.—This awful picture has already received a verification in the past history of Israel, and will yet again be verified even more markedly. But though primarily belonging to them, is it not equally true of ourselves? Does this chapter admit of no application to favored Protestant England? In our case, indeed, the judgments may for a time be chiefly moral—blindness of heart, famine of truth, moral perversion; but these things are judgments. When men, after having been brought into near proximity to light, suddenly renounce the things which they have professed to receive, and rush eagerly into darkness, is it not an evidence that delusion, causing them to believe lies, has fallen upon them; and is that no judgment? There is no infliction more terrible than that of judicial blindness. Is not society in England dividing itself between sacerdotal idolatry and philosophic scepticism? Can the anointed eye of faith look upon our stately temples, our "broad-ways," our marts, our cities, and not see them crowded by "men of hunger,"—men famished as to the bread of life, and yet they know it not?—J. Newton.

Knowledge—

Oh, for the coming of that glorious time
When, prizing knowledge as her noblest wealth
And best protection, this imperial realm,
While she exacts allegiance, shall admit
An obligation, on her part, to teach Them who are born to serve her and obey;
Binding herself by statute to secure
For all the children whom her soil maintains
The rudiments of letters, and inform
The mind with moral and religious truth,
Both understood and practised,—so that none,
However destitute, be left to droop
By culture unsustained; or run Into a wild disorder; or be forced To drudge through a weary life without the help
Of intellectual implements and tools;
A savage horde among the civilised;
A servile band among the lordly free.

—Wordsworth.

13, 14 (13) are gone into captivity, better "goeth into." This is "the only explicit mention of exile in Isaiah."—Cam. Bib. no knowledge, the expression may mean "without knowing it," "unawares." G. A. Smith refers this to the "captivity" of drunkenness, in keeping with following verses. My people have become captives to strong drink, without knowing it. honourable men .. multitude, the aristocracy and the common people, drunkards alike, reach the point where neither hunger nor thirst can be satisfied. (14) hell," Sheol: "the appetite of hell itself has to be enlarged to suffice for the consumption of the spoils of strong drink."—G. A. Smith. Even the place of the dead is not large enough, but must extend its limits to receive those who are about to enter it because of this evil. herself R. V., "her desire." and their glory, etc., Camb. Bib. translates, "And down goes her (Jerusalem's) pomp, and her tumult and her uproar and all that it so jubilant in her."

Ignorance.—As blindness is the deformity of the face, so is ignorance the deformity of the soul. As the want of fleshly eyes spoils the beauty of the face, so the want of spiritual eyes spoils the beauty of the soul. A man without knowledge is as a workman without his hands, as a painter without his eyes, as a traveler without his legs, or as a ship without sails, or a bird without wings, or like a body without a soul.—Brooks. Preparation for eternity.—Why should a man defer that which ought to

"The Persians, when they commit a debauch, arise betimes, and esteem the morning as the best time for beginning to drink wine, by which means they carry on their excess till night."—Mortier.

"No man oppresses thee, O free and independent France! but does not this stupid porter-pot oppress thee? No son of Adam can bid thee come or go; but this absurd pot of heavy wet, this can and does! Thou art the thrall, not of Cedric the Saxon, but of thy own brutal appetites, and this scoured dish of liquor. And thou pratest of thy 'liberty,' thou entire block-head!"—Carlyle.

"All their glory has faded away; it has vanished into a poor and pitiful handful of starvelings."—Wordsworth.

"Poetically it is represented as enlarging itself immensely, in order to receive the countless hosts of Jews wh. should perish."—Fausset.

Sheol was figured as a vast and profound subterranean region, the entrance to wh. was furnished with gates and bars, into which men went down, and from which there was no return to the present world.

Comp. Is. xiv. 9—15.

"Ignorance opens the door for Satan to enter in with his troops of lusts; where the watch is blind, the city is soon taken."—Gurnall.

"Misery and ignorance are always the cause of great evils. Misery is easily excited to anger, and ignorance soon yields to perfidious counsels."—Addison.

be the occupation of a life, which ought to command all his powers in all their vigor—why should a man defer that to the last few abrupt moments, to his departure from time to eternity? When a man is going to any distant part of the globe—say to America—what preparation there is! How much it is talked about! It is a long, a distant, an eventful journey. The man talks about it; his friends prepare in every conceivable way. Oh, what infatuation and stupidity, what folly it is for a man to make no preparation for this distant voyage—the voyage to eternity!—Beaumont. He that knew not his Lord's will, because he wilfully rejected the means of coming to the knowledge of it, deserves to be beaten with as many stripes as if he had known it and would not. He that will not take notice of the king's proclamation, or will stop his ears when it is read, and afterwards offends against it, does equally deserve punishment with those who have read it, and heard it, and disobey it; because he was as grossly faulty in not knowing it; and there is no reason that any man's gross fault should be his excuse.—Tillotson. Absence of misery a mercy.—And that our present happiness may appear to be the greater, and we the more thankful for it, I will beg you to consider with me how many do, even at this very time, lie under the torment of the stone, the gout, and toothache; and this we are free from. And every misery that I miss is a new mercy; and therefore let us be thankful. There have been, since we met, others that have met disasters of broken limbs; some have been blasted, others thunder-struck; and we have been freed from these and all those many other miseries that threaten human nature: let us therefore rejoice and be thankful. Nay, which is a far greater mercy, we are free from the insupportable burden of an accusing, tormenting conscience—a misery that none can bear: and therefore let us praise Him for His preventing grace, and say, Every misery that I miss is a new mercy. Nay, let me tell you, there be many that have forty times our estates, that would give the greatest part of it to be healthful and cheerful like us, who, with the expense of a little money, have ate, and drunk, and laughed, and angled, and sung, and slept securely; and rose next day, and cast away care, and sung, and laughed, and angled again, which are blessings rich men cannot purchase with all their money.—I. Walton.

15—17. (15) mean man, comp. ch. ii. 9. the reference is to those in lowly circumstances. eyes . . lofty, all classes are included in the coming doom. The common crowd and the military hero and the "first families," all shall be humbled. (16) exalted, or honored in men's view. sanctified, by the display of the holiness of His character, seen in the just punishment of the wicked.^b (17) After their manner, R. V., "as in their pasture," where the city was, flocks shall graze among the ruins. strangers, nomads, wandering tribes. Judæa should become a vast pasturage. Le. xxvi. 43.

The lambs of the fold (vs. 17).—There are two ways of regarding this text. I. Taken literally, we have—1. An accomplished prophecy—the waste condition of the Holy Land—overrun with Bedouins and strangers; 2. A certain proof of the faithfulness of God's word—there may be delay, but all shall be fulfilled. II. Taken figuratively, we have—1. God's care of His lambs—He feeds them with sufficiency, in peace; 2. His judgments upon the proud—He takes them away, gives their substance to others.—Lyth.

Sin.—The evil spirit called sin may be trained up to politeness, and made to be genteel sin; it may be elegant, cultivated sin; it may be very exclusive and fashionable sin; it may be industrious, thrifty sin; it may be a great political manager, a great commercial operator, a great inventor; it may be learned, scientific, eloquent, highly-poetic sin! Still it is sin, and, being that, has in fact the same radical and fundamental quality that, in its ranker and less restrained conditions, produces all the most hideous and revolting crimes of the world.—Bushnell.

18, 19. The third woe. (18) draw . . vanity, they, as it were, yoke themselves in the harness of iniquity, and put forth all their strength to drag the burden along.^a Or if we read "draw punishment near with cords," etc., then we have the antithesis in verse 19. of "the drunkards mocking Isaiah, 'Let Jehovah make speed', while they are dragging his

^a "The judicial act is a realization of the idea of righteousness."—Nagelsbach.

"In that hour of righteous retribution His absolute supremacy and holiness shall stand out clearly to view."—Spk. Com.

Eze. xxviii. 22; Ro. ii. 5; Re. xv. 3. 4.

"The hearer sometimes complains that there is no food for his soul; when the truth is that there is no soul for the food."—Joseph Parker.

^a Other explanations are, "Woe to them who draw calamity judgment near as with cart ropes." The figure is of "sinners jeering at the approach of calamity, while they actually wear the harness of its carriage."—G. A. Smith. (19) Let him, etc., the spirit at once of unbelief and defiance. Whatever Isaiah may say, they do not believe in a day of Divine retribution." counsel, or warning of punishment, of wh. the Prophet made so much. "This defiant unbelief seems to have been the reigning spirit in the political circles of Isaiah's time; xxviii. 14 f. 22; cf. Jer. v. 12; xvii. 15."—Camb. Bib.

Power of sin over the unregenerate.—So long as a man is dead in trespasses and sin, there is no iniquity which may not get the mastery of him. Where the body is, thither will the vultures of hell be gathered together. The devil finding him dead, calls up his hosts of temptations and his bands of evils to feed on him. Nothing but the new life can secure a man from the worst fiends in the Pandemonium of vice, for they gather like a scattered pack to a feast. Vices seldom come alone; where there is room for one devil, seven other spirits more wicked than himself will find a lodging. We may say of sins as Longfellow of birds of prey, in his song of Hiawatha:—

"Never stoops the soaring vulture
On his quarry in the desert,
On the sick or wounded bison,
But another vulture watching,
From his high aerial look-out
Sees the downward plunge and follows;
And a third pursues the second,
Coming from the invisible ether,
First a speck, and then a vulture,
Till the air is dark with pinions."

Retribution is sure.—Many a man has gone on in sin, practising secret fraud and villainies, yet trusted and honored, till at length, in some unsuspected hour, he is detected, and, denounced by the world, he falls from his high estate as if a cannon-ball had struck him—for there is no cannon that can strike more fatally than outraged public sentiment—and flies over the mountains, or across the sea, to escape the odium of his life. He believed that his evil course was building him up in fame and fortune; but financiering is the devil's forge, and his every act was a blow upon the anvil, shaping the dagger that should one day strike home to his heart and make him a suicide. The pea contains the vine, and the flower, and the pod, in embryo, and I am sure, when I plant it, that it will produce them and nothing else. Now, every action of our lives is embryonic, and, according as it is right or wrong, it will surely bring forth sweet flowers of joy, or the poison fruits of sorrow. Such is the constitution of this world, and the Bible assures us that the next world only carries it forward. Here and hereafter, "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Beecher.

20. call evil good, "the fourth woe, against those who confuse moral distinctions. Amongst the "wise men" of the time (Prov. xxv. 1) there may have been a class of teachers who employed their subtlety in making out a case for abuses condemned by the unsophisticated moral sense."—Camb. Bib.

Confounding right and wrong (vs. 20).—Our subject is the guilt of confounding right and wrong, by changing their names. I. It confounds moral distinctions, and perplexes one in regard to his duty. II. But it not only perplexes men—it deceives and misleads them. Now how is this confounding of right and wrong done? 1. When we slander one another by giving false names to each other's acts; 2. When we deceive ourselves in respect to our own character and conduct; 3. When we relieve our consciences by giving to our actions false names; 4. When by giving decent names to gross sins the standard of public morality is lowered. Learn:—(1) Be not deceived by false names; (2) Do not practise such impositions upon others; 3. Call things by their right names.—S. G. Buckingham.

The deceptive influence of words.—The world is generally governed by with cords of iniquity, and punishment with ropes of wickedness."—Sugg. by Henderson.

b Comp. Ge. 1v. 23, 24.

"Woe to them that harness themselves as brute beasts to iniquity, with cords of falsehood, and drag on the weight of sin, as a waggon, with the ropes of vicious habits."—Wordsworth.

"Not content with the ordinary progress of iniquity, they spin ungodly theories, by which to make their massive loads of sin move more readily through the land."—Spk. Com.

"Like the beasts lay themselves to the traces with all their might, in order to start the load, so these lay themselves out to sin with all their might."—Nagelsbach.

a "Those do a great deal of wrong to God and religion, and conscience—to their own souls, and to the souls of others, who misrepresent these, and put false colors upon them; who call drunkenness good fellowship and covetousness good husbandry, and, when they persecute the people of God, think they do Him good service; and, on the other hand, who call seriousness ill-nature, and sober singularity ill-breeding, and say all manner of evil falsely concerning the ways of godliness."—Matthew Henry.

a "Drunkenness not merely incapacitates judges for the discharge of their official functions, but tempts them to make a trade of justice, with a view to the indulgence of this appetite."—J. A. Alexander.

"By ignorance is pride increased; Those most assume who know the least; Their own self-balance gives them weight, But every other finds them light." —Gay.

"O that men should put an enemy in their mouths, to steal away their brains!" —Shakespeare.

"In the bottle, discontent seeks for comfort, cowardice for courage, and bashfulness for confidence." —Johnson.

words and shows: for men can swallow the same thing under one name, which they would abominate and detest under another. The name of king was to the old Romans odious and insufferable; but in Sylla and Julius Cæsar they could endure the power and absoluteness of a king, disguised under the name of dictator.—South. Honest words.—I think that one of the master incantations, one of the most signal deceits, which we practice upon ourselves, comes from the use of language. There are words that we learn in childhood which we abandon when we come to manhood. Generally speaking, our fireside words are old Saxon words—short, knotty, tough, and imbued with moral and affectional meanings; but as we grow older these words are too rude and plain for our use, and so we get Latin terms and periphrases by which to express many of our thoughts. When we talk about ourselves we almost invariably use Latin words, and when we talk about our neighbors we use Saxon words. And one of the best things a man can do, I think, is to examine himself in the Saxon tongue. If a man tells that which is contrary to truth, let him not say, "I equivocate;" let him say "I lie." Liel why, it brings the judgment-day right home to a man's thought. Men do not like it, but it is exactly the thing that will most effectually touch the moral sense; and the more the moral sense is touched the better. If a man has departed from rectitude in his dealings with another, let him not say "I took advantage," which is a roundabout, long sentence: let him say, "I cheated." That is a very direct word. It springs straight to the conscience, as the arrow flies from the bow to the centre of the mark. Does it grate harshly on your ear? Nevertheless, it is better that you should employ it; and you should come to this determination: "I will call things that I detect in my conduct by those clear-faced, rough-tongued words that my enemies use if they wanted to sting me to the quick."—Beecher.

21—23. (21) wise . . eyes, fifth woe, directed against those who confident of their own superior wisdom "interfered in the conduct of the State, and prepared arrogant policies of alliance and war that were the distress of the prophet all his days."—G. A. Smith. (xxviii. 9 f, xxix. 14 f, xxx. 1, 10 f.) (22) mighty, sixth woe, returns again to the drunken leaders of the people, who are mighty at drinking and mixing drinks, but nothing else. (23) for reward, or on receiving bribes. Still one of the common forms of Eastern iniquity. righteousness,^a rob him of his character by declaring him guilty of crimes of which he is innocent.

Intellectual pride (vs. 21).—Woe to the intellectually proud. I. To the self-conceited sceptic, who sits in judgment upon the Word of God and condemns it. II. To the self-conceited enthusiast, who substitutes his own fancies in the face of Divine truth. III. To the self-conceited Pharisee, who trusts in his own works. IV. To the self-conceited sinner, who despises instruction.—Lyth.

Drunkenness.—It is a perfect shipwreck of a man; the pilot is drunk, and the helm dashed in pieces, and the ship first reels, and by swallowing too much, is itself swallowed up at last. And therefore the Navis Agrigentina, the madness of the young fellows of Agrigentum, who, being drunk, fancied themselves in a storm, and the house the ship, was more than the wild fancy of their cups; it was really so, they were all cast away, they were broken in pieces by the foul disorder of the storm. "The senses languish, the spark of divinity that dwells within is quenched; and the mind snorts, dead with sleep and fulness in the fouler regions of the belly." So have I seen the eye of the world looking upon a fenny bottom, and, drinking up too free draughts of moisture, he gathered them into a cloud, and that cloud crept about his face, and made him first look red, and then covered him with darkness and an artificial night; so is our reason at a feast. . . . The clouds gather about the head, and according to the method and period of the children and productions of darkness, it first grows red, and that redness turns into an obscurity and a thick mist, and reason is lost to all use and profitableness of wise and sober discourses; "a cloud of folly and distraction darkens the soul," and makes it crass and material, polluted and heavy, clogged and loaden like the body; and, there cannot be anything said worse, reason turns into folly, wine and flesh into a knot of clouds, the soul itself into a body, and the spirit into corrupted meat: here is nothing left but the rewards and portions of a fool, to be reaped and enjoyed there, where flesh and corruption shall dwell to eternal ages.—Jer. Taylor.

24, 25. (24) devoureth, nothing could provide a more impressive figure of hopeless sinking into destruction than that of chaff and dried grass sinking in the flames. root . . blossom,^b by which life is perpetuated. The root shall have no life in it, and the blossom shall be as sterile as dust. This burning up, as with fire, is a fitting description of the end of drunkenness. cast away, or rejected. (25) against them, that very hand which had been so tenderly and graciously for them. hills . . tremble,^c with the tread of the foe. carcasses, of the slain. torn, R. V. "were as refuse." all this, a refrain which occurs again in ch. ix. 12, 17, 21; x. 4, indicating that probably that section is out of place and belongs here, betw. vss. 25 and 26.

Discontent at restraints of God's law.—The spring of the law is love. With its "Thou shalt not do this," and "Thou shalt not do that," the law presents rather an ungracious aspect. We like ill to be bidden, but worse to be forbidden. But does love never forbid? A mother, does she never forbid her child; but, on the contrary, indulge every caprice and grant all its wishes? How disastrous the fate, and brief the life, of a child denied nothing, indulged in everything, allowed to play with fire, or fire-arms; to devour the painted but poisonous fruit—to bathe where the tide runs like a racehorse or the river rushes roaring into the black, swirling pool. And he who frets against the restraints of God's holy law because it forbids this and the other thing, is no wiser than the infant who weeps, and screams, and struggles, and perhaps beats the kind bosom that nurses it, because its mother has snatched a knife from its foolish hands.—Guthrie.

26—28. (26) ensign, God himself will summon a nation (the better reading) and give the signal for its rendezvous.^a No nation is named. But the Assyrians are referred to. hiss, a fig. from drawing bees out of a hive by hissing or whistling. they shall come, He is the governor of all the earth and all nations serve Him. swiftly, this word will characterize the movement in the description following. The language rushes on, figure following figure, most graphically representing the mighty and onrushing invasion of the Assyrians. (27) none . . weary, etc., strong poetical figures of the greatest activity and readiness for conflict. girdle^b loosed, for resting times. They would move forward without any intermission. (28) horses' hoofs . . flint, as the horses were not shod, the hardness of the hoof was a prime quality of a good horse, especially if used for war in the rocky land of Palestine. whirlwind, revolving so fast—in their onward rush.

National judgments (vss. 26—30).—I. God uses one nation to punish another. II. Summons them at His pleasure. III. Disposes them to do His will,—promptly, efficiently. IV. Fits them for His service. V. Ensures their success. VI. The transgressor has no hope of escape.—Lyth.

Conscience.—There is a warning conscience and a gnawing conscience. The warning comes before sin; the gnawing conscience follows after sin. The warning conscience is often lulled asleep, but the gnawing conscience wakes her again. If there be any hell in this world, they who feel the worm of conscience gnawing on their hearts may truly say that they have felt the torments of hell. Who can express that man's horror but himself? Nay, what horrors are those which he cannot express himself! Sorrows are met in his soul as at a feast; and fear, thought, and anguish divide the soul between them. All the furies of hell leap upon his heart like a stage. Thought calls to Fear; Fear whistles to Horror; Horror beckons to Despair, and says, Come, and help me to torment this sinner. One says that she comes from this sin, and another says that she comes from that sin. So he goes through a thousand deaths, and cannot die. Irons are laid upon his body like a prisoner. Thus he lives as it were upon the rack, and says that he bears the world upon his shoulders, and that no man suffers that which he suffers. So let him lie, says God, without ease, until he confess and repent and call for mercy.—Henry Smith.

29, 30. (29) roaring,^c translate, "He has a roar like that of a lioness.

^b "Those roots and blossoms that ought properly to be fresh and full of sap, shall fly away, dissolved as they are in dust and decay, as easily as hay and stubble are devoured by the flames." — Nagesbach.

Mat. iii. 12.

^c Explained by Henderwork as the earthquake of Am. i. 1; Zec. xiv. 5.

^a "Reference is to the military custom of planting a pole with a flag on a high mountain, either to serve as a signal of rendezvous or to point out the direction in which an army is to proceed. The latter is here intended." — Hender-son.

^b The military girdle is meant, which had attached to it the sheath with the sword.

"Afflictions are but the shadows of God's wing." —George Macdonald.

"Many do with opportunities as children do at the sea-shore: they fill their little hands with sand, and then let the grains fall through, one by one, till all are gone." —T. Jones.

^c Hab. i. 6—10; Je. xxxii. 5—28, xxxvii. 8—10.

d "Let the distressed look wh. way they will everything appears dismal; for, if God frown upon us, how can any creature smile?" — Mat. Henry.

he roars like young lions and growls seizing the prey."—Camb. Bib. A figure suggested by the hoarse war-cry and the cruel fury of the coming invader. (30) roaring . . sea, the nation is like a storm-wracked ship. The ocean roars over it, ready to engulf it. They look toward the land for help but there is no land—only darkness and despair. The very light of the heavens dims, and is swallowed up in blackness.^d

Sin conceals the favor of God.—Sin is as a thick cloud, stopping the sunshine of God's mercy; but if we turn from sin, this will melt the cloud, and cause the Sun of Righteousness to shine upon us. Sin is a wall of separation between God and us. To turn from sin will break down this wall. To turn from sin is a key to unlock all the chests of God's mercies. Oh, the Divine rhetoric and omnipotent efficacy of repentance! This is that rainbow, which, if God seeth shining in our hearts, He will never drown our souls. That star which will bring us to Christ. A repenting faith ties God's hands, and charms His wrath. There is no thunderbolt so great, no wrath so furious in God, but repentance will abolish it.—E. Calamy.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1, 2. (1) Uzziah died, disgraced, of leprosy, a type of weak human power; in that year (740 B. C.) Isaiah had a vision of the King of kings. Uzziah had been great but his glory faded away. Here is true and unfading glory. saw, pictured in vision. the Lord, Adonai, the supreme Ruler and Judge. throne, "the Prophet sees the earthly temple transfigured until it seemed a miniature of the Universal Temple."^a train, "the skirts of the royal mantle falling in ample folds conceal from the prophet the Form seated upon the throne."—Driver. (2) seraphims,^b not to be likened to the cherubim who seem to be only symbolic figures. But these, according to vs. 6, are angelic beings of the highest order. They are represented in human form, with wings. The name probably comes from an arabic root meaning "noble." covered his face, for even the highest angels cannot bear to look upon the full glory of God. covered his feet, an Eastern token of reverence. did fly, the wings were set ready at once to fly in obedience to Div. command.

The vision of Isaiah (vss. 1—8).—I. We have to observe the vision which the Prophet beheld. It was—I. A vision of the Divine supremacy; 2. Of the Divine attendants; 3. It connects holiness with the Divine greatness; 4. By this connection, a remarkable effect is stated to have been produced. II. The effect which this vision produced upon the Prophet's mind—I. As a man; 2. As an intended messenger of God. III. The sustaining visitation which was made, in connection with the effect produced. 1. The agent sent: note his celerity; 2. The assurance communicated; 3. The manner in which the assurance is testified. IV. The commission which, in connection with this visitation, was proposed and accepted. 1. The messenger who goes out, God sends by His own power; 2. Such messengers are fully devoted to God; 3. They must proceed without debate to the object of their mission.—J. Parsons.

Isaiah's inaugural vision.—It is now universally acknowledged that this chapter records Isaiah's initiation into the office of a prophet. The opinion of many older commentators that it represents a renewal or recovery of the prophetic consciousness after several years of public activity, was based on the erroneous assumption that the order of the book is in the main chronological and that the previous chapters contain prophecies from the reign of Uzziah. Everything in the narrative itself suggests that it is an inaugural vision, a record of the experience by which Isaiah was made a prophet. The consciousness of standing in a peculiar relation to God, of personal reconciliation to Him, of being in His council, and bearing a definite commission straight from Himself, dates from the moment when in an ecstasy he "saw the Lord." The vision is undoubtedly an actual experience, not the mere embodiment of an idea; it occurred in the death-year of Uzziah, as the prophet, looking back after some lapse of time, distinctly recalls. Then Isaiah saw God,

^a "Isaiah is outside, near the altar in front of the temple. The doors are supposed to be open, and the veil hiding the holy of holies to be withdrawn, unfolding to his view a vision of God, represented as an Eastern monarch, attended by seraphim as His ministers of state, and with a robe and flowing train (a badge of dignity in the E.), which filled the temple."—Fausset.

^b Comp. Rev. iv.

"No rebellions shake the throne of God; though 'the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing,' yet 'He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision.'" The throne of God is a rock in the midst of the ever-rolling ocean of created existence, that heaves and swells with ceaseless change; but, in compari-not indeed with his bodily eyes, but in a prophetic trance, in which the ordinary operations of the mind were suspended and spiritual realities assumed concrete and visible forms.—Camb. Bib. The prophet's call.—Once for all must he who was to be a prophet have become absolutely certain of the true relation of the world and Jehovah,—must have beheld, as in a distinct form, the sublime and holy character of Jehovah, and felt that he was directed by Him alone; once for all must he have recognized the divine power of truth against the whole world, and himself as living and moving in it alone; once for all must he have entered, with the effectual energy and act of his whole inner being, into the counsels of God, and found himself for ever bound by them, and endowed by these bonds with true power and freedom:—this was the first condition and the true beginning of all the work of the prophet, the holy consecration and the inner call, without which none can become a true prophet.—Ewald.

3. 4. (3) one . . another, responding the one to the other. Holy,^a this is not a scholastic definition of the Deity, nor is intended to convey the idea of the Trinity, but is an emphatic declaration of the nature of God. He is Holy, holy, holy. This is His great characteristic which the formalists, liturgists, sensualists of the day needed to realize. The death of Uzziah stricken with leprosy for his irreverence made the teaching timely for Isaiah and the nation. Holiness is the keynote of Is.'s prophecies. whole . . glory, "the fulness of the whole earth is His glory," is the proper rendering. The wealth and beauty of all the world is His glory.^b (4) posts, R. V. "foundations of the thresholds." filled with smoke, comp. Ex. xix. 18, xl. 34; 1 Ki. viii. 10. Intended to produce a solemn awe in the beholder; perhaps also to moderate for Isaiah the vision of the Divine glory.

The vast and the minute:—

"There's nothing great
Or small," hath said a poet of our day;
And truly I reiterate, "There's nothing small,
No pebble at my feet but proves a sphere;
No chaffinch but implies a cherubim;
No hum of lily-muffled bee but finds
Some coupling music with the whirling stars.
"Earth's crammed with heaven;
And every common bush afire with God;
But only those who see take off their shoes;"
The rest sit round it, and eat blackberries."

—E. B. Browning.

5. Woe is me, the awe produced by the sense of God's presence passed into a deep humiliation and fear, in the feeling of his own sinfulness.^c unclean lips,^d unworthy to speak to the unclean people until his own lips, and life, had been cleansed. The sense of the uncleanness of the nation, himself included, came from the vision of the Holiness of God. seen the King,^e I am undone, because, being full of sin I have come into the presence of the Holy God.

God's calls.—We are apt to think that if calls came to us with the distinctness with which they came to men of the olden time we should readily and gladly respond. If anything as dramatic as the vision Isaiah had could be duplicated in our experience we, too, would be overwhelmed with a sense of God's presence and of our own unworthiness to be commissioned by him. If, again, as we were pursuing our commonplace avocations, a majestic and gracious person should appear beside our boats, our counters, close to our office desks, we, too, would be quite willing to drop our numerous interests and rise up and follow him. But are we right in thinking that the heavenly word does not press in upon our lives today, that the Son of Man is not walking through our streets as he went up and down the highway of Galilee? There is a celebrated picture in the National Gallery in London which represents St. Augustine sitting with his hand in that of his mother, Monica. The rapt expres-son of Him, its mightiest billows have but their moment of existence, and sink into the mass at the base of the immovable throne of the Everlasting One." —Watson.

One of the mottoes on the walls of the temple at Delphos was, "Know thy opportunity."

^a "Holy, though His work in redeeming Israel seems to have come to naught, and His pretermission of human sin appears to militate against justice." —Spk. Com.

^b "The Jews thought the glory of God should be confined to their land; but it is here intimated that in Gospel times the glory of God should fill all the earth, the glory of His holiness, which is indeed the glory of all His other attributes." —Mat. Henry.

^c "The Prophet, appalled by the display which he saw of the Divine glory, the theme and loud peals of the seraphim, the concussions of the earthquake, and a sense of his own sinfulness, and that of his nation, apprehended instant destruction." —Henderson.

^d "That he emphasizes the unclean lips comes from the fact that he had just heard the seraphim bring an offer of praise with clean lips." —Nagelsbach.

^e Comp. Jno. 1. 18; 1 Ti. vi. 16.

a "The fire is applied to the lips for a twofold reason: 1. To show that the particular impediment of which the Prophet had complained was done away; and 2. To show that the gift of inspiration is included."—J. A. Alexander.

Oh, dull of heart! Enclosed doth lie,
In each "Come, Lord," a "Here am I,"
Thy very prayer to thee was given,
Itself a messenger of heaven.
—Trench.

"If ever a man ought to be all there, it is when he is called to the service of God. He should marshal all his faculties, and every faculty should reply, 'Here am I.' The whole of a living man is something worth having, but a fragment is only fit to be buried."
—Spurgeon.

b "The language is proverbial in its character, and savors strongly of sacred irony, of wh. we have a decided instance in Mat. xxiii. 32." — Hender-son.

c "Render them the more hardened by your warnings." — Maurer.

d "Forasmuch as they would not be made better by his ministry, they should be made worse by it; those that were wilfully sion on both faces shows that they have risen above earthly things. The tradition is that at this moment St. Augustine said: "O, that God would speak to us!" His noble mother replied: "My son, perhaps he is speaking to us." If, instead of looking for such extraordinary tokens of God's presence, we should keep quiet long enough and our spirits humble enough, perhaps we should learn that God is speaking to us all the time.

6—8. (6) live coal, to this cry of penitence God sends a messenger to purify. Notice that it is not an act of sacrifice on the part of Isaiah, but of the angel. The man confesses and God cleanses and consecrates his lips. the altar, either that of burnt-offering, or that of incense. (7) my mouth, comp. Je. i. 9. iniquity, etc., i. e. his conscious unworthiness to act as God's messenger. (8) voice of the Lord, not until then did he hear the Lord speaking to him. for us, the Lord does not think of Himself alone nor of His work as His own alone,—but as that of His Kingdom.—Cam. B. refers to the "council of the holy ones," Ps. lxxxix. 7. R. V. send me, the call implies that even he may serve God, and his loyal spirit responds at once.

A missionary spirit described (vs. 8).—I. The proposal made referred to a mission which God intended to send to His people. II. The answer given. We should offer ourselves to serve Him—I. Instantly; 2. Without reserve. III. The peculiar obligation which lies on us to follow the Prophet's example. We may be considered as having—I. More glorious discoveries of Christ; 2. More abundant communications of the Spirit; 3. More certain assurances of the forgiveness of our sins.—C. Simeon.

Preparation for service.—If thou, then, wouldst have thy soul surcharged with the fire of God, so that those who come nigh to thee shall feel some mysterious influence proceeding out from thee, thou must draw nigh to the source of that fire, to the throne of God and of the Lamb, and shut thyself out from the world—that cold world which so swiftly steals our fire away. Enter into thy closet, and shut to thy door; and there, isolated, "before the throne," await the baptism; then the fire shall fill thee, and when thou comest forth, holy power will attend thee, and thou shalt labor, not in thine own strength, but "with the demonstration of the Spirit, and with power."—W. Arthur. Promoters of missions.—There was a race of parents that could raise a race of missionaries. Let me give you an instance of an old Moravian woman. A friend called upon her with sadness in his looks. "Your son," said he to the mother, "is gone." "Is Thomas gone to heaven through the missionary life? Would to God that He would call my son John!" Well, John did become a missionary; and he fell. And this time the committee were very sad; but, before opening their lips, the old woman anticipated the story, and exclaimed, "Thank God! Would that He would call my last son, William!" And William, too, went, and fell; when the noble woman exclaimed, "Would that I had a thousand sons to give to God!" Oh! would that I had a thousand such mothers! Then would our ranks be full.—Durbin.

9, 10. (9) Hear,^b etc., "the most decisive judgment to which men are subjected lies in the abundance of the revelations of God to them."—Camb. Bib. (Mat. xiii. 14; Acts xvi. 26; Ro. xi. 8; John iii. 19). "Spiritual blindness is the punishment of the Jews for refusing to see, obduracy is their chastisement for hardening their heart." Je. vii. 26. (10) Make, etc.,^c this would be the result of his preaching, not the object he was to seek.^d "The O. T. calls the highest degree of sin obduracy, or hardening of the heart. (Ex. iv. 21; Ps. xcv. 8; Prov. xxviii. 14, etc.) This is the condition in which a man, by continually cherishing sin, has [in a sense] lost the ability to withstand it."—Oehler. convert, R. V. "turn again." Notice that the O. T. always speaks of this hardening of the heart only in connection with a divine revelation offered to the sinner but rejected by Him. This divine revelation results in the rebellious act, so that both God and the man are spoken of as causing the hardened heart. To "turn again" will be to accept and act upon the revelation.

Pitying the heathen.—In the whole history of the human family there is nothing that is better fitted to draw from our eyes tears of compassion, even yet, than those things that men are wont to laugh at. Is it but a poor and childish superstition that leads the Indian of the forest to go through his incantation? The incantation is poor enough, and childish enough; but the heart-ache which there is in the Indian's bosom is just as sublime as it was in Socrates. Is it a sad and pitiful thing to see the heathen go down to the river, to the jungle, to the idol temple, and pass through fires, or floods, or expiations? and are these things foolish, and utterly without power either to change the character or to appease an intelligent God? The thing may be imbecile, if you please; but the soul-want, the shadow of a great fear that rests upon these untaught children that have felt the power of moral government, but that do not know what that government is, nor the way to it—that is full of heroism even. None more than we can afford to throw away the superstitions; but none so much as we should pity those poor, thrall'd hearts, that are bound by superstition, and that know not where to find a Redeemer.—H. W. Beecher.

11-13. (11) how long? bec. Is. knew that God's times of judgment were but steps to times of salvation. Until, etc., i. e. until it has utterly ruined the people, and driven them from their country. (12) far away, to Babylon; there was to be no permanent recovery until after the great captivity. (13) But yet in it, etc., Cam. Bib., "And should there still be in it a tenth, it must again pass through the fire, like the terebinth and like the oak, to which a stump (remains) when they are felled; a holy seed is the stump thereof." i. e. As the terebinth and oak when cut down retain the principle of vitality in their roots, which will again spring up into a great tree (cf. Job xiv. 7 ff.), so the ruined Israel contains the indestructible germ of the future kingdom of God, the "holy seed" is wrapped up in it. Here is the important prophetic doctrine of "the remnant." Though the present nation shall be destroyed, there shall remain a vestige of life from which a new nation shall arise. Is. lxxv. 8 ff. Zeph. iii. 12, 13; Mic. ii. 12; v. 6. Jer. xxiii. 3.

The leafless tree (vs. 13).—Having explained the meaning of the passage, I shall make the application—I. To the Jews. II. To the Church of Christ. III. To each believer. 1. Men lose their leaves when they lose their comforts; 2. Some Christians lose their leaves, not by doubts, but by sin.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Fulfilment of prophecy.—Heathens, Christians and Mohammedans have alternately possessed Judæa. It has been the prey of the Saracens; the descendants of Ishmael have often overrun it; the children of Israel have alone been denied the possession of it, though thither they ever wish to return; and though it forms the only spot on earth where the ordinances of their religion can be observed. And, amid all the revolutions of states, and the extinction of many nations, in so long a period the Jews alone have not only ever been aliens in the land of their fathers, but whenever any of them have been permitted, at any period since the time of their dispersion, to sojourn there, they have experienced even more contumelious treatment than elsewhere. Benjamin of Tudela, who travelled in the twelfth century through great part of Europe and of Asia, found the Jews everywhere oppressed, particularly in the Holy Land. And to this day (while the Jews who reside in Palestine, or who resort thither in old age, that their bones may not be laid in a foreign land, are alike ill-treated and abused by Greeks, Armenians, and Europeans) the haughty deportment of the despotic Turkish soldier, and the abject state of the poor and helpless Jews, are painted to the life by the Prophet.—Keith. Possibilities of excellence.—As the eye of the cunning lapidary detects in the rugged pebble, just digged from the mine, the polished diadem that shall sparkle in the diadem of a king; or as the sculptor in the rough block of marble, newly hewn from the quarry, beholds the statue of perfect grace and beauty which is latent there, and waiting but the touch of his hand,—so He who sees all, and the end from the beginning, sees oftentimes greater wonders than these. He sees the saint in the sinner, the saint that shall be in the sinner that is; the wheat in the tare; the shepherd feeding the sheep in the wolf tearing the sheep; Paul the preacher of the faith in Saul the persecutor of the faith; Israel a prince with God in Jacob the trickster and the supplanter; Matthew the Apostle in Levi the publican; a woman that should love much in a woman sinning much; and in some vine of the earth bring-blind should be judicially blinded."—Mat. Henry.

"There is light enough for those whose sincere desire is to see; and darkness enough for those of a contrary disposition." — Pascal.

a "However frequently the people may seem to be destroyed, there shall still be a surviving remnant, and however frequently that very remnant may appear to perish, there shall still be a remnant of the remnant left, and this indestructible residuum shall be the holy seed, the true Church."—J. A. Alexander. Job xiv. 7; Eze. xi. 16.

"The historical matters of Scripture, both narrative and prophecy, constitute as it were the bones of its system; whereas the spiritual matters are as its muscles, blood-vessels and nerves. As the bones are necessary to the human system, so Scripture must have its historical matters. The expositor who nullifies the historical groundwork of Scripture for the sake of finding only spiritual truths every where, brings death on all correct interpretation." — J. A. Bengel.

"As for our opportunities, we can make a heroic life out of whatever is set before us to work with or upon."—Anna Robertson Brown.

a "Ahaz had applied to the king of Assyria, and the news that the latter was in motion in response to the request of Ahaz, moved the allied kings to hasten home into their countries."—Nagelsbach.

b "Hitherto the northern kingdom had for the most part acted as a barrier between Syria and Judah. Now Syria had gained Israel over, and could use Samaria as a base of operations against Judah."—Spk. Com.

If you wish to be miserable, you must think about yourself,—about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay to you, what people think of you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose. — Charles Kingsley.

ing forth wild grapes and grapes of gall a tree which shall yet bring forth good fruit, and wine to make glad the heart; so that when some, like those over-zealous servants in the parable, would have Him pluck it up, and to cast it without more ado into the wine-press of the wrath of Almighty God, He exclaims rather, "Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it," and is well content to await the end.—Trench.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

Chaps. vii. 1—ix. 7 contain a collection of prophecies belonging to the reign of Ahaz. Chap. vii. is divided into two sections, vss. 1—17 and 18—25. Date 735 B. C. 1, 2. (1) Ahaz, 2 Ki. xvi. 5. Rezin, this name is found in the Assyrian inscriptions as that of a king of Damascus, and tributary of Tiglath-Pileser. went up toward, for the earlier part of this war, comp. 2 Ki. xv. 37; 2 Chr. xxviii. could not prevail,^a for what reason does not appear. This verse gives a summary of the whole adventure and issue of the war, by way of introduction. The narrative proper begins with verse 2.—(G. A. Smith.) (2) house of David, the expedition was really directed against the family of David: its expressed object (vs. 6) is not conquest—but a change of dynasty. confederate^b with, Camb. Bib. trans. "Syria hath alighted upon Ephraim." That is, the Syrian armies, moving against Jerusalem have already settled, like a great swarm of locusts, on the land of Israel. moved, i. e. trembled—as trees tremble in the wind.

The purpose of Isaiah in his interview with Ahab.—In order to understand Isaiah's words and actions at this period it is necessary to realise as clearly as possible the salient features of the political situation created in Judah by the Syro-Ephraimitish invasion. It is generally supposed that the ultimate motive of the attack was to coerce Judah into a coalition to oppose the westward progress of the Assyrian arms. To allay what he perceived to be a groundless alarm on the part of the king and court was one purpose of Isaiah's memorable interview with Ahaz. But this of itself does not explain the extraordinary vehemence and urgency of the prophet's appeal. It becomes fully intelligible only when we understand that he wished to warn the king against the fatal step, which he afterwards took, of calling in the aid of Assyria against his two petty foes. It is only reasonable to suppose that this obvious and tempting expedient had already been discussed in the royal council and was favourably entertained by Ahaz. Isaiah was no doubt alive to the grave political dangers which would result from placing the country in a position of servitude to the Assyrian Empire. He also perceived how unnecessary it was for Judah to make any advances in that direction at this time, since it was quite certain that the ambitious schemes of Rezin and Pekah would speedily be crushed by Tiglath-pileser, whether Ahaz applied to him or not. All this must have been evident to any sagacious observer who kept his head amidst the general panic caused by the approach of the allied armies. But the prophet perceived that higher interests than the political future of the nation were at stake. He was opposed, on religious grounds, to all compacts with heathen powers as involving disloyalty to Jehovah and distrust of His power. The crisis presented itself to him as a test of the religious mind of the people, of its capacity for exercising that fearless trust in Jehovah's word which alone could guide it safely through the complications of the immediate future to the felicity that lay beyond. Hence the great object of this encounter with Ahaz is to bring round the king to Isaiah's own attitude of calm reliance on the help of God, and above all things to dissuade him from compromising his position by entering into direct relations with Assyria. Cam. Bib. —Obstacles in the path of sin. Augustine, in his Confessions, makes thankful note of the manner in which, in the years of his ungodliness, God had raised up obstacles in his path of sin. When sinful desires raged within him, he says, the means for gratifying them were absent; or when the desires and the means of gratifying them came together, some witness was present to deter him; and when the means were present, and no witnesses stood by to hinder him, the desire to transgress was wanting. He rightly judged that these were no mere accidents or coincidences.

3. 4. (3) Shear-jashub, meaning, a remnant shall return. Isa.'s sons were used as signs. The presence of this son was a call to penitence. end . . pool, the prob. ref. is to a pool 700 yards from the Jaffa gate, from wh. an aqueduct led the water into the city.^a "In the historic sieges of Jerusalem the assailants always suffered more for want of water than did the defenders."—Cambridge Bible. highway, or causeway beside the aqueduct. fuller's field, or bleaching ground for clothes washed in the pool. (4) be quiet, i. e. do not be alarmed. Keep cool, and trust in God. Do not be afraid of these enemies. Who are they? Mere burned out stumps of fire-brands. Their threats are smoke. two tails,^b etc., this enterprise is but the last flicker of two expiring torches.

Fear not.—Fear not.—I. For thyself. I will wash thee thoroughly from thine iniquities. I will console thee in trouble. I will be with thee in the dark valley. II. For any among thy kindred and acquaintance of the same family of God. There is a shield over the head of each. III. Amid changes however startling; circumstances however unexpected. I am the perfect Ruler of a perfect providence.

God's message.—"Then said the Lord unto Isaiah—" There is always some man to send, some man of purged lips, some man fire-touched, who will face the occasion under the inspiration and comfort of the Paraclete. Here, as ever, human ministry is employed to carry out divine purposes. Then here is a man sent of God so confident that he becomes contemptuous of the opposition. Isaiah said unto the king: "Be quiet; fear not, neither be fainthearted for the two tails of these smoking firebrands." The figure is that of two torches that have been burned down to the root, and nothing is left of them but smoke; the fire is nearly out, and a little wreath of smoke expresses the strength of these two firebrands. The contempt which Righteousness can assume is a terrible sarcasm. When Judgment laughs, the laugh is spectral and heart-shaking; it sends a sense of dismay into the innermost parts of the spirit: when God laughs at our calamity, our calamity is multiplied by infinity.—Peop. Bib. Groundless fear.—It was wise advice of Sydney Smith, when he said that those who desire to go hopefully and cheerfully through their work in this life, should "take short views:" not plan too far ahead; take the present blessing, and be thankful for it. It was indeed the best of all possible advice; for it was but a repetition, in another form, of the counsel of the kindest and wisest: "Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself: sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Whenever I see man or woman, early old with anxiety, and with a face deeply lined with care, I think of certain words which deserve infinitely better than to be printed in letters of gold; and I wish that such a one, and that all I care for, were numbered among the people who have a right to take these words for their own: "Be careful for nothing; but in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and mind through Christ Jesus."

5. 6. (5) son of Remaliah, i. e. Pekah, a usurper whom Isaiah never calls by name, but "son of Remaliah," to recall his low birth, and in contrast with the House of David, the absence of Divine promise. evil counsel, planning a mischievous design. Their secret scheme, Isaiah, by prophetic power, discloses to Ahaz.^c (6) vex it, strike horror into it: harass it. make a breach, or take by storm. set a king, a creature of their own, whose policy they might control. son of Tabeal, this person is unknown, but the name is a Syriac one, and not a Hebrew, indicating that the man was a foreigner.

Faith in God makes men fearless.—The difference, which is made in the character and habits of men if the country they live in has a powerful government or not, is well known. If there be no such central authority, it is a case of every man's hand against his neighbor. Men walk armed to the teeth. A constant attitude of fear and sus-

^a Robinson and Smith identify with a large tank at the head of the valley of Hinnom. It is full in the rainy season, and its waters are then conducted by a small rude aqueduct, which is the conduit mentioned.

^b "Ahaz was superintending the works for defence, and the cutting off of the water supply from the enemy and securing it to the city."—Fausset.

^c "The hot fire of their anger was now turned to smoke and almost quenched."—J. A. Alexander.

"God hath three hands wherewith he distributes earthly things: A hand of common providence; with this he feeds the ravens when they cry. A hand of special love; with this he feeds his children who commit their way to him and trust in him. A hand of anger and wrath; with this he gives to those who are impatient."—Phillip Henry.

^c "The objects at which the confederate aimed were the entire destruction of the house of David, and the placing of a foreigner upon the throne."—Henderson.

"We do far too much for ourselves; we suppose we are more than a match for the enemy, and therefore we play off our resources against his: better to pray than to plan; better to forgive than to circumvent; better to think of God than to think of man—or to think of God and thus think more truly and profoundly of man. Sometimes we do everything by doing nothing. Sometimes we win the battle by simply standing still and watching the wondrous ways of Providence.” —Parker.

a “They should neither of them (Syria nor Israel) enlarge their dominions, nor push their conquests any farther. They shall be made to know their own; their bounds are fixed, and they shall not pass them.” —Mat. Henry.

b 2 Kl. xvii. 1 —6.

c “God’s faithfulness is as the strong mountains; if ye would be strong, ye must plant your feet on His promise.” —Spk. Com.

d A present visible pledge of the certainty of something invisible or future.

e De. vi. 16.

f “As if it would be a tempting of God to do that wh. God Himself invited and directed him to do.” —Mat. Henry.

“Who seeks, and will not take when once ’tis offered, shall never find it more.” —Shakespeare.

picion warps the whole nature. The passions are excited and magnified; the intelligence and judgment are dwarfed. Just the same after its kind is life to the man or tribe, who believe, that the world in which they dwell and the life they share with others have no central authority. They walk armed with prejudices, superstitions and selfishnesses. They create, like Ahaz, their own providences, and still, like him, feel insecure. Everything is exaggerated by them; in each evil there lurks to their imagination unlimited hostility. They are without breadth of view or length of patience. But let men believe that life has a central authority, that God is supreme, and they will fling their prejudices and superstitions to the winds, now no more needed than the antiquated fortresses and weapons by which our forefathers, in days when the government was weak, were forced to defend their private interests. When we know that God reigns, how quiet and free it makes us! When things and men are part of His scheme and working out His ends, when we understand that they are not monsters but ministers, how reasonably we can look at them! Were we afraid of Syria and Ephraim? Why, the head of Syria is this fellow Rezin, the head of Ephraim this son of Remaliah! They cannot last long; God’s engine stands behind to smite them. By the reasonable government of God, let us be reasonable! Let us take heed and be quiet. Have faith in God, and to faith will come her proper consequent of commonsense.—Expositors’ Bible.

7—9. (7) Lord God, or Lord Jehovah, who will keep His covenant. not stand, this plot has no foundation. It will not succeed. Notice the positive tone of the prophet. He is sure of what he promises. He displays that calmness and certainty which he advises to the king. (8) head of, or the capitol of. a “We may even suppose (with Ewald) that Isaiah intended to add “But the head of Judah is Jerusalem, and the head of Jerusalem is Jehovah of hosts.” —Cam. Bib. broken, so as to be no longer a distinct nation.” (9) head, etc., What are these heathen kingdoms and kings against Jehovah and His people! If . . . established, Oehler calls this “the thesis of prophetism”; If you do not trust in God you have no sure foundation.” 2 Chron. xx. 20. Jer. xvii. 5. Ps. cxii. 7. Is. xxx. 15.

The sin of unbelief (vs. 9).—The sin of unbelief may be called the white devil. It is that sin, above all others—I. That hath some show of reason in its attempts; for it keeps the soul from Christ by pretending its present unfitness and unpreparedness; 2. It most suiteth with the conscience, which tells the sinner that he hath nothing good; 3. It most suiteth with the wisdom of the flesh, which thinks it prudent not to be too rash and presuming upon Jesus Christ; 4. It is continually whispering in the soul’s ear mistrusts of the faithfulness of God, and of the willingness of Christ to save; 5. It is always at hand to enter an objection to the promises, which by the Spirit of God are brought to the heart to comfort us.—J. Bunyan.

10—12. (10) spake again, so absolutely does Isaiah act as the mouth-piece of God that the prophet’s further exhortation is referred to as “the Lord spake again.” (11) a sign, d He offers to give proof of his authority by some sign of divine help—such as the king might choose. Comp. Judg. vi. 17, 36 ff. 1 Kl. xiii. 1 ff. Li. vii. 8 ff. etc. depth . . . height, either on the earth, or in the heavens. (12) tempt, in the sense of put to the test. e Ahaz is afraid of being committed to a policy he does not like, and therefore, under a pretence of reverence, he declines the ordeal. f

Hypocrisy.—Satan, we are told, appears sometimes in the guise of an angel of light, and in this respect his children are wonderfully like him; they are marvellously ingenious in using holy principles to cover unholy purposes. But what does all this ingenuity amount to? Whom do they succeed in deceiving? Not men for any length of time. The wolf never succeeds in long completely covering itself with the sheep’s clothing. The mask of the hypocrite will slip aside. And when it does so, men despise him for wearing it. Did he show himself as he is, men might, would, condemn him; but they would not despise him so much. And God—He is never deceived. He loathes the false pretenders to righteousness; and ere long He will strip them bare, and expose them to the execration of the universe.—De La Bruyere.

13, 14 (13) house of Dav., represented by this their wilful king. Isa.

turns from him to the people of the covenant. weary men, such as the Prophet. my God, Isaiah seems to regard the action of Ahaz as practically a denial of Jehovah as his God? comp. "thy God" in vs. 11. (14) virgin, Heb. almah, i. e., "a young woman of marriageable age." Immanuel, i. e. "God with us." Many commentators find in this vs. a prophecy of the Messiah. Others suppose the name Immanuel was given to a child born soon after the words of the prophet were spoken and that the fulfilment within a few years, of vs. 16 would be a sign and proof to Ahaz of the later fulfilment of the prophecy in vs. 17.

True righteousness.—It is possible to enrich dead things from the outside. Soft wood may be veneered with mahogany, nickel may be coated with silver, and silver plated with gold, but living things must be developed from the inside. Would the husbandman have a rich flush upon the rose? Let him feed the roots. Would the mother have the bloom of beauty upon the cheek of the child? Let her feed the babe with good food, and the pure blood on the inside will lend the rosy tint to the cheek on the outside. Men cannot be made wise or strong or moral by exterior laws or agencies. There are two ways to help a thriftless man. One is to build him a house and place him therein. The other is to inspire in him the sense of industry, economy, and ambition, and then he will build his own house. All tools, books, pictures, laws, on the outside, begin with ideas on the inside. Inspire the reason, and man will fill the library with books. Wake up the taste and imagination in young men, and they will fill the galleries with pictures. Stir the springs of justice, and men will go forth to cleanse iniquities and right wrongs. Quicken the inventive faculty, and men will create tools and machines. It is as useless to seek to make men good or wise by law as to adorn leafless trees by tying wax flowers to bare branches. The time was when men talked about being clothed with righteousness and character, as if God was a wholesale goods merchant, and kept great bales of integrity, and cut off a new suit for each poor sinner. But righteousness and character are not made for man on the outside. Love, joy, justice represent something done with man on the inside.—N. D. Hillis.

15, 16. (15) Butter and honey, "this has to be explained by vs. 22, where the eating of butter (lit. "thick milk") and (wild) honey is a symptom of the primitive simplicity to which human life is reduced by the cessation of agriculture. The meaning is that the youth of Immanuel will be spent amidst the privations of a land laid waste by foreign invaders."—Camb. Bib. that . . know, R. V., "when he knoweth" i. e. when he "is capable of exercising intelligent choice between the pleasant and the painful." (comp. 2 Sam xix. 35) or in two or three years. (16) before, etc., i. e. within three years. forsaken, R. V., "the land whose two kings thou abhorrest shall be forsaken," The land of the two kings, Syria and Israel, was first of all laid waste by the Assyrians, and their inhabitants carried into captivity.

Butter and honey.—D'Arvieux, visiting the camp of the Grand Emir, was treated with great consideration. The Arab prince lived in splendor, and on the first morning treated his guest with little loaves, honey, new-churned butter, and loaves of cream, more delicate than any he ever saw, together with coffee. In another passage the same writer assures us that one of the principal things with which the Arabs regale themselves at breakfast is cream, or new butter mingled with honey; a mixture, he observes, which seems odd, but which experience proves not to be bad.

17—19. (17) Ephraim departed, the revolt of the ten tribes under Jeroboam was the heaviest disaster that had ever befallen the house of David. king of Assyria,^a but not only the two kings—Judah also shall be overwhelmed; and that by the ally whom Ahaz had chosen rather than Jehovah, namely, the king of Assyria. (18) the fly . . and the bee, i. e., Egyptians, whose land swarms with flies, and the Assyrians who are still famous for their bees and honey.^b Sometimes Judah inclined to lean on Egypt. and sometimes on Assyria; both at last helped to accomplish her destruction. (19) thorns, prickly lotus.^c bushes, R. V. pastures.

Note on vs. 18.—The allusion which this text involves, is the practice of calling out the bees from their hives, by a hissing or whistling sound, to ^a "The Prophet renews the promise of deliverance, and connects it with the birth of a child, whose significant name is made a symbol of the Div. interposition, and his progress a measure of subsequent events."—J. A. Alexander.

"Let your light shine. A light under cover is a light beginning to go out." — Anon.

"How often we look upon God as our last and feeblest resource! We go to Him because we have nowhere else to go. And then we learn that the storms of life have driven us, not upon the rocks, but into the desired haven." — George Macdonald.

2 Ki. xv. 30, xvi. 9.

"Patience and struggle; an earnest use of what we have now, and all the time an earnest discontent until we come to what we ought to be — are not those what we need?" — Phillips Brooks.

^a "The kings of Babylon are reckoned among the kings of Assyria, and are designated as such, as being their successors and representatives." — Wordsworth.

^b "Bee-keeping is an established trade in Assyria to the present day." — Spk. Com.

^c "Palestine, fr. the combined heat and dryness of its climate, and the rockiness of its surface, has a peculiar tendency to form thorns even in groups where we should least expect them." — Tristram.

"Man, as the minister and interpreter of nature, does and understands as much as his observations on the order of nature, either with regard to things or the mind, permit him, and neither knows nor is capable of more. . . Nature is only subdued by submission." — Bacon.

a "Instead of living on the fruits of the soil, they shall subsist upon spontaneous products, such as milk and honey, wh. shall be abundantly because the people will be few, and the uncultivated grounds extensive." — J. A. Alexander.

"Verse 25 continues and completes the description of the general desolation, as manifested first by the people's living upon milk and honey, then by the growth of thorns and briers in the choicest vineyards and the terraced hills, and by the conversion of these carefully-tilled spots into dangerous solitudes, hunting grounds, and pastures." — J. A. Alexander.

their labor in the fields, and summoning them again to return, when the heavens begin to lower, or the shadows of evening to fall. In this manner, Jehovah threatens to rouse the enemies of Judah, and lead them to the prey. However widely scattered, or far remote from the scene of action, they should hear His voice, and with as much promptitude as the bee, that has been taught to recognise the signal of its owner, and obey his call, they should assemble their forces; and although weak and insignificant as a swarm of bees in the estimation of a proud and infatuated people, they should come with irresistible might, and take possession of the rich and beautiful region which had been abandoned by its terrified inhabitants. This insect is called Zimb. It is, in size, very little larger than a bee, of a thicker proportion, and its wings, which are broader than those of a bee, placed separate, like those of a fly. As soon as this plague appears, and their buzzing is heard, all the cattle forsake their food, and run wildly about the plain till they die, worn out with fatigue, fright, and hunger. No remedy remains but to leave the black earth and hasten down to the sands of Atbara; and there they remain while the rains last, this cruel enemy never daring to pursue them farther. All the inhabitants of the sea-coast of Melinda, down to Cape Gardafan, to Saba, and the south coast of the Red Sea, are obliged to put themselves in motion and remove to the next sand, in the beginning of the rainy season, to prevent all their stock of cattle from being destroyed. This is not a partial emigration; the inhabitants of all the countries, from the mountains of Abyssinia northward to the confluence of the Nile and Astaboras, are once a year obliged to change their abode, and seek protection on the sands of Beja.

20—22. (20) A razor, the people of Judah will be utterly despoiled. Even the hair on head and feet will be shaved off. Nay more, worst of all indignities, the beard will go with the rest. And the razor with which this utter despoiling will be accomplished will be this King of Assyria, to whom Ahaz looks for help, instead of looking to Jehovah. beyond the river, the Euphrates. head . . beard, a strong figure for the manner in which Assyria would desolate the country and sweep away all its treasure. The Orientals consider the removal of the hair as ignominious. (21) nourish . . sheep, the former prosperity would be reduced to the most miserable housekeeping. One man would keep alive, with the greatest care, a milch cow and two head of sheep. But this would be quite enough, for there would be only a few men left in the land; and as all the land would be pasture the small number of animals would yield milk in abundance. Whoever escaped the Assyrian razor, would eat curds and honey, that and nothing but that, without variation." — Delitzsch. The fig. indicates that agriculture would cease, and the land become one great pasture-ground. (22) abundance, through having such a wide range for feeding in.

Shaving.—To tell a man that you will shave him is as much as to say you will ruin him—entirely overthrow him. "Our king has shaved all his enemies," means, he has punished them; reduced them to the most abject condition, so that they have not a single vestige of power in their possession. "What, fellow! didst thou say thou wouldst shave me?" "I will give thy bones to the crows and the jackals. Be-gone, hald-head, get out of my way." — Roberts.

23—25. (23) silverlings, i. e. "silver shekels." (24) With arrows, etc., i. e. seeking wild animals in these once cultured gardens. (25) And on all hills, etc. R. V. "And all the hills that were digged with the mattock, thou shalt not come thither for fear of briers and thorns, but it shall be for the sending forth of oxen and for the treading of sheep." That is, the places that once were cultivated gardens shall become thorny pastures. "The hills of Judæa were anciently cultivated to the very top:" they were to become mere ranges for the cattle.

Verse 25.—These words embody the opinion that the slopes and brows of the hills, which had, by the industry of man, been reduced to a state of cultivation, should again relapse into their natural wildness, the thorns and briers should be allowed to resume their ancient empire, the beasts of the chase should again lodge in the thickets, and the sheep and the ox feed in the grassy labyrinths between them, as in times of old.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

This chapter furnishes a series of detached oracles and may be analyzed as follows—1-4; 5-8; 9-10; 11-15; 16-18; 19-22. 1, 2. (1) roll R. V. "tablet,"^a "The prophet is to take a tablet, large enough for him to engrave upon it in lasting characters the prophecy which he was to deliver."—Lowth. man's pen,^b "i. e." with large characters easily read by the common and unlearned classes." Mahe-shalal-hash-baz, these words to be the writing on the tablet, and they mean,^c "Swift spoil, speedy prey," implying the certainty of the fall of Damascus and Samaria.—Driver. This writing kept the Divine message before the people until the child was born and named. (2) witnesses, who should see this tablet put up, understand its meaning, and afterward, when the event had occurred, should tell the people of the warning and its fulfilment.

Christianity and the future.—Sometimes the Lord's judgments are "abroad" in the earth, and sometimes they work with subtlety that cannot be valued by human criticism. What does Mahe-shalal-hash-baz mean? Speed-plunder, haste-spoil: the man shall arise who will do God's judgments, and do them with earnestness, alacrity, precision, completeness. How the prophet lives in the future! There is always a Child to be born who will advance the kingdom of God. Do not believe that the ages have seen their greatest birth. Even Jesus Christ when he went away said: If I go away, I will send a Comforter, even the Paraclete, who shall abide with you for ever. The greatest births will be found by-and-by to be spiritual births—new conceptions of God; new in the sense of being larger, juster, more pregnant with joy and promise. Christianity has to deal with the future. The Lord Jesus Christ made but few references to the past, but he did make some, and they were distinct and solid; but his eyes were set towards the coming Sun, the coming Kingdom, his own return, not as a man that could be seen, but as an inspiration and a sovereignty felt in every mind and heart, and owned by all who should come under its gracious and redeeming and sanctifying touch.—Peop. Bib.

Writing materials.—Amongst the materials upon which the ancient Scriptures were written, were skins—tanned, or dyed red or yellow. These were not bound by the edge, but so fastened together as to form one continuous roll: hence the word volume, from Lat. volumen—a roll.^a Some were written on prepared skins called parchments, so called from Pergamos, the place where parchment was first made. "Sometimes tables of wood^b or stone, called caudices, or codices, were employed: hence the term codex (Lat.—tablet) came to be applied to a manuscript on any material;" and hence also a system of laws was called a code, because the use of such tables was once frequent for legal purposes, where durability was important. "These tables were written on in their natural state (or, when used for temporary purposes, covered with wax) with an iron needle (Job xix. 24) called a stylus;" hence we have the term style, now applied to the character of the composition.

3, 4. (3) prophetess, only called such as being Isaiah's wife. A son This is the second son. (comp. vii. 3.) (4) to cry, my father, i. e. before he should be able to talk; within some two years.^c spoil . . Assyria, "an allusion to the ancient custom of carrying in triumph before the victor the spoils taken from the enemy."

A great Name.—What a thought it is, that One Name should cover all names; that One Name should signify more than all names! As all things which are named came from one God, there must be a far greater fullness of meaning in His single name than in all the names put together of all the creatures and things in heaven and earth. The earth, and all that is in it; the firmament, with all the stars; the heavens, with all the angels,—are contained in God; but they do not contain God. Nothing is easier than to say the word "universe;" and yet it would take us millions and millions of years to bestow one hasty glance upon the surface of that small portion of it which lies within the range of our glasses.

^a The laws of Solon were inscribed on tablets of wood.

^b Among the ancients stone, brass, lead, wood, and the like, were employed when the design was to promulgate public decrees, or record memorable events for posterity."—Henderson.

^b Heb. enosh, wh. means a common man as contrasted with the upper ranks.

^c "The spoil (i. e. the spoiler) hastens, the rapine speeds forward."—Maurer. "They (the Assyrians) hasten to the spoil (i. e. to spoil Syria and Samaria), they speed to the prey."—Gesenius.

^a Jer. xxxvi. 3; Zech. v. 1.

^b Exod. xxxii. 15; Deut. vi. 9; Isa. xxx. 8; Hab. ii. 2; Luke i. 68; 2 Cor. iii. 3.

"The body sins not; 'tis the will That makes the action good or ill."—Herrick.

^c "Pekah was assassinated in the fourth year of Ahaz, and Tiglath-Pileser's invasion of Damascus belongs prob. to the early part of the fourth of Ahaz."—Spk. Com.

2 Ki. xvi. 9, xvii. 5, 6.

"One day is the same as another.

Prayer, worldly business, calls to be devout, charitable, and faithful,—these are the duties that each hour brings in its turn; and if I am faithful in their fulfilment, God will be always ready to help me, and then what signifies a little ennui, pain, or misfortune?" —Gold Dust.

d "The fountain of Siloam, in its name, and in its mysterious subterranean derivations and flowings forth, was a remarkable figure of Christ, the Incarnate Word, the fountain of living waters." —Wordsworth.

"The only perennial fountain of Jerus. here used as a symbol of the Divine protection." —J. A. Alexander.

e "The Euphrates overflows its banks in spring and summer, after the snows of Armenia begin to melt. The armies of Assyria should now in like manner overflow their usual boundaries." —Spk. Com.

2 Kl. xviii. 9—16.

"God's help, though it may seem inconsiderable as Shiloah's stream, is yet, like that stream, constant. Our reliance upon it will never issue in disappointment." —Hom. Com.

"Our opportunities to do good are our talents." —C. Mather.

a "The world power must shiver on the rock Israel, for it is thereby the strong rock in that God is with it." —Nagelsbach.

But what are all suns, comets, earths, moons, atmospheres, seas, rivers, mountains, valleys, plains, woods, cattle, with beasts, fish, fowl, grasses, plants, shrubs, trees, minerals, and metals, compared with the meaning of the one name God! We are learning here under these heavens, from the heavens and from the earth, what that Name is, from whom all things, named and unnamed, came. After death,—our emancipated souls, our new eyes, our new friends, and the new scenery, helping us,—we shall commence anew the study of that Name. And to all eternity, all that we shall ever see and hear will only help us to a more humbling, worshipful appreciation of the incomprehensibility of that Name.—Pulsford.

5—8. (5) spake. (6) waters of Shiloah,^a flowing past Zion and Moriah, were a familiar type of the temple and its Lord. comp. Jer. xvii. 13. "They have rejected the fountains of living waters, even Jehovah." go softly, quietly, making no noise in their beneficent flowing. rejoice . . . son, this evidently refers to a party in Jerusalem that traitorously favored the Syrian schemes, and the pretensions of the "Son of Tabeal." (7) the river, the Euphrates, symbol of the Assyrian power.^e "From the Euphrates shall mighty floods of water overflow first Ephraim and then Judah. (8) pass through, R. V., "sweep onward into," in contrast with the quiet waters of Shiloah is this torrent of the Euphrates which shall completely submerge Israel, and Judah shall hardly keep head above water. Comp. xxx. 28. the neck, not going right over the head. Jerusalem was not at first to be destroyed. wings, by a hasty change of figure the Assyrian is represented as a huge bird of prey hovering over its victim. of the land, O Immanuel, this may with equal exactness be translated, "of the land. For with us is God." Cam. B.

Mercy and judgment (vss. 6—8).—We deduce the following truths. I. That the mercies of our present life flow softly, as by a gentle stream. They flow—I. Vivifyingly; 2. Constantly; 3. Softly. II. That the abuse of the stream of mercies is an immense crime. Here is—I. Rejection; 2. Presumption. III. That this crime will bring on the tumultuous river of retribution. 1. The abuse of mercy leads to retributive misery; 2. The streams of retributive misery stand in awful contrast with those of mercy.—Thomas.

The village of Siloam.—The valley is the southern entrance to the valley of Jehoshaphat, and derives its name from having the village and fountain on its opposite sides, and from its receiving the waters of the latter. The village is situated at the base of the Mount of Olives, and consists of about sixty poor dwellings, scarcely distinguishable from the surrounding tombs. "So rich and full of interest," says a traveler, "is the walk round Mount Zion, down to the brook of Kidron, the village of Siloam, to the garden of Gethsemane, and from thence up the Mount of Olives, that we cannot look upon it without delight and heartfelt admiration." The gentle waters of Shiloah, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city for the use of the inhabitants, are an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God; and are finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous; the image of the Babylonian empire, which God threatens to bring down like a mighty flood upon all these apostates of both kingdoms, as a punishment for their manifold iniquities.—Burder.

9, 10. (9) Associate yourselves, R. V., "make an uproar," he flings out a challenge to the nations:—raise the war-cry, do your worst. broken, etc., your schemes miserably failing. gird yourselves, i. e. arm and equip yourselves. (10) take counsel, etc., i. e. make what plans you may, none can avail; utter threats or declare your resolutions it matters not, for with us is God.^a

The slave-mother crossing the Ohio.—We remember, says a writer in The True American, the story of a cruel master, who, without cause, had determined to separate a slave mother and her only child. She had been faithful under the very worst usage, and she determined to remain so, until he told her that on the morrow her child must be borne to New Orleans to be sold there in the slave mart. It was mid-winter. The earth was frosted with a hard crust, yet at midnight she started for the Ohio, determined, if she could, to live and die with her child. She reached its banks as the pursuers rose on the hill behind; no boat was near—masses of broken ice were sluggishly drifting along—what was she to do? Trusting to heaven, she put her feet on the treacherous element, and with it bending and breaking beneath her (spectators on either side expecting to see her and her child sink at every moment), she boldly pushed on from cake to cake, until she landed safely on the Ohio shore. Five minutes sooner and she must have perished—two minutes later and she would have met with a watery grave, for before she had proceeded twenty steps, the ice behind her, close on the Kentucky side, had broken and was scattered ere she reached the mid-river. "Thank God you and your child are safe," exclaimed the hard-hearted master, as he saw her land, rejoiced that he had escaped the responsibility of their death. "Brave woman," said a Kentuckian who had witnessed her escape and met her at the landing, "you have won your freedom and shall have it." The mother and the child were kept together, and liberty and love is now their lot in their humble but happy home. Was there not true heroism here, and is not the scene worthy the sweetest song of poetry, or the holiest praise of man?

11, 12. (11) strong hand, this was not an ordinary communication, but he was completely grasped, as it were, by God, who impressed upon his consciousness the following line of conduct and speech. not . . people, i. e. not be carried away by the spirit of the hour. (12) confederacy, R. V., "conspiracy." to all them, etc., R. V., "concerning all whereof this people;" the conspiracy is the Syro-Ephraimitish alliance which Isaiah is warned not to treat as a serious danger.^b

The panic.—There was a general panic among the people; "their heart was moved as the trees of the wood are moved by the wind," when they heard that Syria was confederate with Ephraim; their cry was everywhere, "A confederacy has been made against us, and we must meet it by a counter-alliance with Assyria;" and the prophet says that he too should have fallen under the influence of this panic, if Jehovah had not laid hold of him with a strong hand, to keep him in the way of dependence on Himself, and if He had not taught him to escape the fear which possessed his fellow-countrymen, by making the Lord of hosts his fear and his dread, by sanctifying Him himself, as he now in His Name calls on them to do. To sanctify Jehovah is in mind and practice to recognize Him as the holy God, the Lord who is absolute, free from the limitations which hinder all other beings from carrying their wills into full operation, and to believe with the whole heart that God does and can govern all things according to the counsel of His own will. To the nation which thus sanctifies Jehovah, He (says Isaiah) will be their sanctuary—their protection against all their enemies. Such was His original covenant with both the houses of Israel, and it still holds good. If, therefore, they will break and renounce it, it becomes a stumbling-block to them. When their statesmen endeavor to remedy present mischance and secure future prosperity, by craftily playing off against one another the nations whom they cannot hope to match by force, they are attempting to go counter to the whole plan of Jehovah's government, and they will do it only to their own confusion.—Strachey. Comfort in tribulation.—There is an island in a distant sea, from whose shores the fishermen sail in tiny crafts to procure the treasures of the deep. During their absence thick mists often descend and cover highland, cliff, and beacon with so thick a veil, that these hardy mariners are left without a mark by which to steer their laden barques. But in these dull hours they are not left to wander, unguided, on the pathless sea. When the time for their return arrives, the women of the islet—mothers, wives, sisters and daughters—descend to the shores and raise the voice of song. Borne on the quiet air, their voices soon fall sweetly on the ears of the loved ones on the sea. Guided by the well-known sounds, they steer their boats in safety to the shore. And thus to thee, O Christian, comes the voice of love from the celestial shore, as thou wanderest, a bewildered child of tribulation, on the misty sea of life. Harken! "Be of good cheer!" is the cry that greets thee. It comes from Jesus, who has overcome this world, which is the scene and source of your trials. His

Let all the ends
thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's.
—Shakespeare.

"Ask God to give thee skill
In comfort's art,
That thou may'st consecrated be
And set apart Unto a life of sympathy.
For heavy is the weight of ill
In every heart;
And comforters are needed much Of Christ-like touch."

a Eze. 1. 3, 111.
22, xxxiii. 22,
xxxvii. 1; comp.
Eze. 11. 14.

b "Do not join with those that,
for the securing of themselves, are for making a league with the Assyrians, thro' unbelief
and distrust of God and their cause." — Mat.
Henry.

Je. i. 17—19.

"That song is sweetest, bravest, best.
Which plucks the thistle-barb of care
From a despondent brother's breast.
And plants a sprig of heart'sease there."
—Andrew Downing.

"There is but one road to lead us to God—humility; all other ways would only lead astray, even were they fenced in with all virtues." — L'Abbe Boileau.

"A beam of comfort, like the moon through clouds, glids the black horror, and directs my way."
—Dryden.

"Every step toward Christ kills a doubt. Every thought, word,

and deed for Him carries you away from dis couragement."—Cuyler.

c "To sanctify God means here to cherish and evince a due sense of His character, as worthy of entire confidence, being able to defeat all the enemies of His people, and faithful to fulfil His promises of protection and deliverance."—Henderson.

"How little have we accepted and made use the legacy of peace and joy which Christ left to us! Instead of faces telling the world what a full salvation we have, how often a long face has suggested that men had better take their fill of happiness first before they leave it behind by becoming Christians!"—J. Hudson Taylor.

"In proportion as one has a true fear of God, he will feel no fear of man. It was a saying of Col. Gardiner, 'I fear God, therefore there is none else that I need fear.'"

"Blessings may appear under the shape of pain, losses, and disappointments, but let him have patience, and he will see them in their proper figure."—Addison.

"The true reward of the prophet, the only one that really enriches him, is the growing power of seeing more deeply into the deep things of God, and the growing power of revealing these more and more clearly to men. The true reward of the righteous man is his becoming more righteous conquest of your adversary is the pledge of your victory. Therefore, "be of good cheer!"

13—15. (13) Sanctify,^c but, on the other hand, put all your confidence in Jehovah Sabaoth, the Lord of all the hosts of heaven and earth. him . . . fear, i. e. fear to resist Him. Dread lest He be against you. (14) sanctuary, or defence in the evil time. stone, etc., "two figures are used to set forth the threatening side of Jehovah's relation to both the houses of Israel: the stone against which one heedlessly stumbles to one's own destruction; and the snare in which a wild animal is caught unawares. Jehovah is a secret and sudden danger to those who walk in blind unbelief. Cf. Ps. xviii. 26." Camb. Bib. (15) many, not all, the remnant shall be spared. stumble, etc., figures taken from the means used in catching wild animals.

A Double-edged Fact.—God is the one great fact of life, but what a double-edged fact—a sanctuary to all who put their trust in Him, but a rock of offence to both houses of Israel! The figure is very picturesque. An altar, a common stone on steps, one of those which covered the land in large numbers—it is easy to see what a double purpose that might serve. What a joy the sight would be to the weary wanderer or refugee who sought it, what a comfort as he leant his weariness upon it, and knew he was safe! But those who were flying over the land, not seeking Jehovah, not knowing indeed what they sought, blind and panic-stricken—for them what could that altar do but trip them up like any other common rock in their way? "In fact, Divine justice is something which is either observed, desired, or attained, and is then man's weal, or, on the other hand, is overlooked, rejected, or sought after in a wild, unintelligent spirit, and only in the hour of need, and is then their lasting ruin."—Exp. Bib. Stone of Stumbling.—The idea appears to be taken from a stone, or a block of wood, being thrown in the path of travelers, over which they fall. "Well, friend, did the king grant you your request?" "No, no; there was a Udaru-katti, a stumbling-block in the way." "Just as Valen was attaining the object of his wishes, that old stumbling-block, the Modeliar, lay down in the way, and the poor fellow stumbled, and fell." "Why are you so dejected this morning?" "Because I have had a severe fall over that stumbling-block, my profligate son."—Roberts.

16—18. "The prophet, recognizing the failure of his work as regards the nation, prepares a written record of his teaching, and deposits this as a sealed document in the custody of his disciples. By this solemn act he forms an inner circle of religious fellowship, which is the nucleus of the new people of God." Camb. Bib. (16) Bind, etc., may be translated "I will bind" and "I will seal," an indication that this particular message was complete; also that some time would elapse before the fulfilment. (17) wait upon, R. V., "wait for," God's time for fulfilment. hideth his face, the time of judgment has come. Comp. Ps. xiii. 1; Job xiii. 24; Deut. xxxi. 7, etc. look for him, i. e. watch for signs of His working and of His coming. (18) children, Isaiah and his children were for figures and emblems of redemption; Isaiah—salvation of Jehovah: Shear-Jashub—a remnant shall return: Maher-shalal-hash-baz—swift spoil, speedy prey. "Living omens of a happier future."—Driver.

Verse 16.—I agree with Vitringa, Drechsler, and others in regarding verse 16 as the prophet's own prayer to Jehovah. We "bind"—tie together—what we wish to keep from getting separated and lost; we "seal" what is to be kept secret, and only opened by a person duly qualified. And so the prophet here prayed that Jehovah would take his testimony with regard to the future, and his intimation, which was designed to prepare for the future that testimony and thorah which the great mass, in their hardness did not understand, and in their self-hardening despised, and lay them up well secured and well preserved, as if by bond and seal, in the hearts of those who received the prophet's words with loving obedience. For it would be all over with Israel unless a community of believers should be preserved, and all over with the community if the word of God, which was the ground of their life, should be allowed to slip out of their hearts.—Delitzsch.

Religious confidence—

Not seldom, clad in radiant rest
Deceitfully goes forth the morn;
Not seldom, evening in the west
Sinks smilingly forsworn.

The smoothest seas will sometimes prove
To the confiding barque untrue;
And if she trust the stars above,
They can be treacherous too.

The umbrageous oak, in pomp outspread,
Full oft when storms the welkin rend,
Draws lightning down upon the head
It promised to defend.

But Thou art true, incarnate Lord!
Who did vouchsafe for man to die;
Thy smile is sure, Thy plighted word
No change can falsify.

I bent before Thy gracious throne,
And asked for peace with suppliant knee;
And peace was given,—nor peace alone,
But faith, and hope, and ecstasy.

—Wordsworth.

19, 20. The prophet, having now discontinued and "sealed up" his public "testimony," appears to address himself in what follows to his own immediate followers. The passage presents, in vivid contrast, two pictures; one of the darkness and despair that are settling down on the incorrigible nation, the other of the light and joy that are to break upon it with the advent of the Messianic salvation. (19) Seek unto, asking guidance from. them that have, etc., that is "consult a medium." Comp. Lev. xx. 27, etc.; 1 Sam. xxviii. 8. familiar spirits, Le. xix. 31. wizards, Le. xix. 31. peep, or chirp. mutter, speak in a low, hollow manner, as if their voices came from the ground. living .. dead, R. V., "on behalf of the living should they seek unto the dead?" This is the reply that the faithful ones must give to the spirit-seekers. "What madness to consult the dead in the interests of the living." (20) law, etc.,^a the will of God, as authoritatively revealed in His Word, and by His Prophets. it is because .. their, R. V., "surely there is no morning for them." There is no light, no morning-dawn, for those who seek light from these other sources, or no morning-dawn for them.

The Duty of Prayer (vs. 19).—I. The proof that prayer is a duty. 1. From the relations in which we stand to God; 2. From the express commands of God; 3. From the practice of the saints in all ages; 4. From the example of Christ. II. The objections to the validity of this proof. 1. From the greatness of God; 2. From the knowledge of God; 3. From the goodness of God; 4. From the unchangeableness of God.—G. Brooks.

The Holy Scriptures are to be read with an high and reverent esteem of them; with a firm persuasion that they are the very Word of God, and that He only can enable us to understand them; with desire to know, believe, and obey the will of God revealed in them; with diligence and attention to the matter and scope of them; with meditation, application, self-denial, and prayer.—The Larger Catechism.

To the Law and to the Testimony.—When men look up into heaven and there is no light, and round them upon the earth and there is no dawn, when they wait for the coming of the sun in heaven, and when through all the darkness they can see no shining of the stars, then Isaiah would seem to say they will turn to the word and to the testimony, that is, to the true revelation of God. No man need be in any difficulty as to duty, as to the course of right, as to the discharge of all his highest responsibilities; the Bible, whatever else may be said about it or even still, his finding the virtuous principles within him growing stronger, the vicious in their presence becoming weaker, his finding the path of duty before him growing clearer and clearer, and himself more able to walk in it without stumbling."

—Hom. Com.

^a Ps. xix. 7, 8, cxlix. 129, 130; 2 Pe. 1. 19—21.

"It is by doing our duty that we learn to do it. For God accompanies it with the influences of his blessed Spirit, and each performance opens our minds for larger infuxes of His grace, and places them in communion with him." — E. B. Fousey.

"The more we work, the more we need to pray. In this day of activity there is great danger, not of doing too much, but of praying too little for so much work." — Alexander McLaren.

"Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation: so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation."

a "Detailed description of the despair wh. they shall fall into who seek necromancy instead of God." —Fausset.

"Hard, honest, practical work is a panacea for many ills. Under a fresco of the 13th century, discovered at Cortona, in Italy, is inscribed the motto, 'Sum misero nisi ten-eam bigonem;' —I am miserable unless I hold a spade." —The Scottish Pulpit.

"The Prophet here describes in strong language the desperate condition of those who reject the Divine Word, and adhere to their own devices, or to the sinful inventions and practices of men." —Henderson.

MI. III. 6.

"The eternal ground of thanksgiving is to be found in the righteousness of God, in the consciousness that under all human life there is a foundation which no man can disturb, and that life is so organized that no man can be happy, restful, or prosperous in doing evil; that at every turn he is smitten with in disparagement of it, utters no uncertain sound as to the culture of the soul and the obedience of the whole life to the divine sovereignty. If men say they are willing to receive light if they could only get it, they are deceiving themselves so long as the Bible lies unopened, unread, or unappreciated. Everything needful for the salvation of the soul, the culture of the spirit, and the most blessed destiny of the life, is revealed in the volume which we hold to be inspired. We are to test all prophets by this book. We are not to be deceived by the glamor of their poetry, or by the passion of their rhetoric; we are to test everything by the law and by the testimony. Thus the soul is pointed in the direction of sureness and is led into the sanctuary of rational as well as pious contentment.—Peop. Bib.

21, 22. (21) through it, obviously, the land; but something must have fallen out before this verse, to account for the reference of the pronoun. The subject is either the whole nation or an individual Israelite. He wanders through the land, perhaps seeking an oracle (Am. viii. 12). Cam. B.; perhaps seeking pasture for cattle. Pul. Com. and curse, etc., R. V., "and curse by their king and by their God." look upward, as speaking defiance against the God who will not let him have his own wilful way. (22) unto the earth, or around them, and there they shall see nothing to give them hope. dimness, etc., R. V., "the gloom of anguish." driven to darkness, or, "in thick darkness is he driven away, i. e. cast out of the land which he has despised and profaned." Spk. Com. "Driven onward, as by a sweeping storm."

Finding Fault with God.—General Burn, in describing the effects of a violent storm that assailed the vessel in which he was returning to England, off the coast of Whitehaven, says, "As beings imagining they had but a few moments to live, all strove with dying eagerness to reach the quarter-deck, but we had scarcely raised ourselves upright when the ship struck a second time, more violently than before, and again threw us all prostrate. The scene was enough to make the heart of the stoutest sinner tremble. I very well remember the agony of one of my poor messmates. This man had acquired considerable property in Jamaica, and during the voyage, like the rich man in the parable, was frequently devising plans of future happiness. At this awful moment, he exclaimed bitterly against the treatment of Heaven, that had made him spend so many toilsome years in a scorching and unhealthy climate to procure a little wealth; and when with pain and trouble he had heaped it together, had tantalized him with a sight of the happy shore where he expected peaceably to enjoy it; but now with one cruel, sudden stroke, had defeated all his hopes. The cutting reflections and bitter complaints that came from this man's mouth, expressed such black despair that he appeared more like a fiend of the bottomless pit than a sinner yet in the land of hope."—Whitcross. Hunger an Impulse to Labor.—Hunger is one of the beneficent and terrible instincts. It is, indeed, the very fire of life, underlying all impulses to labor, and moving man to noble activities by its imperious demands. Look where we may, we see it as the motive power which sets the vast array of human machinery in action. It is hunger which brings these stalwart navvies together in orderly gangs to cut paths through mountains, to throw bridges across rivers, to intersect the land with the great iron-ways which bring city into daily communication with city. Hunger is the overseer of those men erecting palaces, prison-houses, barracks, and villas. Hunger sits at the loom, which, with stealthy power, is weaving the wondrous fabrics of cotton and silk. Hunger labors at the furnace and the plough, coercing the native indolence of man into strenuous and incessant activity. Let food be abundant and easy of access, and civilization becomes impossible; for our higher efforts are dependent on our lower impulses in an indissoluble manner. Nothing but the necessities of food will force man to labor which he hates and will always avoid when possible. And although this seems obvious only when applied to the laboring classes, it is equally though less obviously true when applied to all other classes, for the money we all labor to gain is nothing but food, and the surplus of food, which will buy other men's labor. If in this sense hunger is seen to be a beneficent instinct, in another sense it is terrible; for when its progress is unchecked it becomes a devouring flame, destroying all that is noble in man, subjugating his humanity, and making the brute dominant in him, till finally life itself is extinguished.—Smiles.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1, 2. (1) Nevertheless, etc., R. V., "But there shall be no gloom to her that was in anguish. In the former time he brought into contempt the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphthali, but in the latter time hath he made it glorious, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the nations." Zebulun, etc.,^b these districts had borne the brunt of the invasions from the north and east; so they were to be the first favored with the new light. way of the sea, i. e. the tract about the sea of Galilee, of the nations, or Gentiles, so called bec. the people were of a mixed race, and the land bordered on Gentile territories. The people of this district were greatly despised by the strict Jews. (2) have seen, the perfects throughout are those of prophetic certainty. The writer is transported into the future. great light, Is. lx. 1-3; Lu. i. 78, 79, ii. 32; Jno. 4, 5, 9. shadow of death, denoting the densest gloom, the most awful darkness. "The darkness of ignorance and the darkness of distress." We reach in these verses the climax of the series of prophecies that began with vii. 1.

Night and Morning (vs. 2).—I. Our state by nature is set forth by the idea of night; which is a word that suggests—1. Sleep; 2. Peace; 3. Darkness; 4. Sin; 5. Helplessness. II. Christ's advent to the soul typified by the sunrise. 1. There was light; 2. Life; 3. Warmth; 4. Growth; 5. A sense of security and confidence. Apply:—(1) Has this great light risen on your soul? (2) Or is it still night?—Stems and Twigs.

Jews and Tiberias.—A residence at Tiberias is highly valued by the Jews, because of the ancient renown of the place in connection with Jewish literature, and because they expect that the Messiah will make His appearance in the parts of Galilee bordering on the Lake of Tiberias—a remarkable fact when it is borne in mind that the true Messiah was rejected by them on this ground among others, that He did, as it seemed to them, come from this part of the land. It is understood that they found this expectation upon Isa. ix. 1, 2; not knowing—but may they soon know—that this very passage has found an application in the Gospel to the very neighborhood in which they dwell: for Matthew, after reciting that Jesus left Nazareth and "came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea-coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephtholim," adds, "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephtholim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up," Matt. iv. 12-16.—Kitto.

3. and not increased, R. V., "thou hast increased." This verse is most naturally regarded as picturing the joy of the people in the dawning light of Messiah. joy in harvest,^a the joy of realizing at last what had been long waited for. divide the spoil, gaining thus unexpected or surprising possessions.

Earthly Joy (vs. 3).—Four kinds are noted in Scripture as most excellent and enjoyable. I. Nuptial joy; 2. The joy of children; 3. The joy of conquest; 4. The joy of harvest.—J. Flavel.

Harvest.—They had scarcely any foreign trade—none till Solomon's time. Every family lived upon its own inheritance and upon the produce of its own land. Consequently, if harvest failed, all failed. They expressed their joy by solemn offerings to the Lord. Not a field was reaped before the wave-sheaf was placed upon the altar; and when it had been waved there, amidst the loud thanksgiving of the people, before the Lord of the whole land, the messengers from the Temple carried the proclamation to the husbandmen in the field, "Put ye in the sickle and reap."—Thodey.

4, 5. (4) broken, etc., the yoke with wh. Israel was burdened. staff, penalties, and that real happiness and satisfaction are bound eternally to right thinking and right acting."—From The Outlook.

^b Zebulun stretched across from the Mediterranean Sea at Mount Carmel to the Sea of Tiberias; Naphthali fr. the northern boundary of Zebulun, between that sea and Lebanon.

Mat. iv. 13, 15, 16.

"The change for the better, which was promised at the close of the 8th chap., is described in the 9th as consisting in the rise of the Great Light upon the darkness... the advent of a Divine successor to David, who should establish, restore, and enlarge his kingdom without any limitations."—J. A. Alexander.

"Blessed is he that is invited to the supper of the Lamb, who here below receives the sacrament of his love, and waits in patience until he be called to sit down to the banquet in heaven."—Thomas a Kempis.

6 Ps. iv. 7; Is. xlv. 9; comp. Ps. cxvii. 5, 6.

"The condition of successful work with sinners is, first of all, that we ourselves have the joy of this salvation." —B. P. Raymond.

Comp s. x. 26.

"For every boot of tramping warrior, and the garment rolled in blood, shall even be for burning, for fuel of fire." —Kimchi.

"None can love freedom heartily but good men; the rest love not freedom, but license, wh. never hath more scope or more indulgence than under tyrants. Hence it is that tyrants are not oft offended by, nor stand much in doubt of, bad men, as being all naturally servile; but in whom virtue and true worth most is eminent, them they fear in earnest, as by right their masters; against them lies all their hatred and corruption." —Milton.

a Comp. Is. xxii. 22; Re. iii. 7.

b "This hope of a Prince of Peace, who should quell the great enemy of man, was shadowed forth in mystical history by the priestly king of Salem; projected into prophecy under the title of 'Shiloh' (the tranquil one); realized humanly, in faint outlines, in the person of Solomon (Shelomoh, the peaceful one); then again illusor wooden part of the yoke that presses on the shoulder. oppressor, or "task-master." The language reminds of Egyptian bondage. But not the whole nation is to be redeemed only a remnant, "so it is compared to the day of Midian, when Gideon broke the seven years dominion of Midian" forever (Ju. vii. 22.) in this very district of the country. (5) For every battle, etc., R. V., "For all the armor of the armed men in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood, shall even be for burning, for fuel of fire," i. e. after the great victory of Jehovah every reminder of war shall be burned up as the kingdom of endless peace will have dawned. Comp. Ezek. xxxix. 9 ff.

Freedom—

Ye clouds! that far above me float and pause,
Whose pathless march no mortal can control!
Ye ocean waves! that wherso'er ye roll,
Yield homage only to eternal laws!
Ye woods! that listen to the night-birds' singing,
Midway the smooth and perilous slope reclined,
Save when your own imperious branches swinging
Have made a solemn music of the wind!
Where, like a man beloved of God,
Through glooms which never woodman trod,
How oft, pursuing fancies holy,
My moonlight way o'er flowering weed I wound,
Inspired beyond the guess of folly,
By each rude shape and wild unconquering sound!
O ye loud waves! and O ye forests high!
And O ye clouds that far above me soar'd!
Thou rising sun! thou blue rejoicing sky!
Yea, everything that is and will be free!
Bear witness for me, wherso'er ye be,
With what deep worship I have still adored
The spirit of divinest liberty!

—Coleridge.

6. "The last and greatest cause of joy is the birth of the Messiah and his wonderful character and government. When Isaiah expected the event to take place, cannot be gathered from this prophecy. There is no reason for supposing that the reference is to a child already born; the perfect tense is used, as throughout the passage, from the ideal standpoint of the writer, which is within the Messianic age. The birth of the child is most naturally conceived as taking place in the age of miracle which succeeds the overthrow of the Assyrian; hence no part is assigned to him in effecting the national emancipation." Camb. Bib. For, intimates the ground on wh. such expectations rest. unto us, Israel and all mankind. government . . shoulder, "the ensign of office used to be worn on the shoulder, in token of sustaining the government."^a Wonderful Counsellor, these two words should go together, "one who counsels wonderful things." mighty God, this coming ruler has not only supernatural wisdom but strength in like measure, so that what he plans he can execute. everlasting Father, His reign will be fatherly in its nature and eternal in duration. Prince of Peace,^b reigning over a kingdom of established peace. Comp. Mic. v. 5; Zech. ix. 10.

The Incarnation of Christ (vs. 6).—I. The event here celebrated may be interpreted historically. II. It may be interpreted experimentally. III. The glorious character by which this gift is distinguished. 1. Its greatness; 2. Purpose; 3. Appropriateness; 4. Manner; 5. Obligations which it imposes. IV. Sentiments appropriate to the subject. 1. Personal interest; 2. Lively joy; 3. Boundless gratitude.

Deliverance.—The writer found himself, in the fortunes of war, a prisoner in the Libby, at Richmond. One evening, as the prisoners lay down to sleep, the story was whispered among them that a flag-of-truce boat had come up the river, and that some one of their number was to be released the next day. That was glad tidings for all. But the question in every prisoner's mind was, "Am I to be released?" There were many dreams of home that night on that prison floor. In the early morning, after roll-call, there was breathless expectancy for the name of the favored prisoner. It was the name of Chaplain Trumbull. Those glad tidings had a meaning for him they could not have had for any of his companions. To him there came that day the message of deliverance from bondage, and he passed out from the prison-house thanking God that the message was to him. "Unto you" is a Saviour born. Whoever you are whatever are your sins, there is salvation for you.—H. C. Trumbull. Eternal Life.—It seems to me to glorify life, it seems to me to banish the shadow of gloom from death, to feel that that majestic figure—of Brother, Teacher, Friend, Redeemer—which towers supremely over the centuries, which made the earth sublime by its advent, which seemed in ascending to unite it to the heavens, has equal place in worlds to come! that we may trust his imperative word; that we may serve His Kingly cause; that we may see the illumined Universe, for us as for Him, a house of Victory and of Peace! that we may stand, by and by, with Him, amid the light as yet unreached, and say, each one, "I believed in Thy religion; I saw its triumphs in the earth; I felt its power in my heart; I rose to God in love upon it; I foreknew by it, what now I find—Eternal Life." Mighty to Save.—Come, ye miserable sinners, laden with the insupportable burden of your sins; come, ye troubled consciences, uneasy at the remembrance of your many idle words, many criminal thoughts, many abominable actions; come, ye poor mortals, condemned first to bear the infirmities of nature, the caprices of society, the vicissitudes of age, the turns of fortune, and then the horrors of death, and the frightful night of the tomb; come, behold the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace; take Him into your arms, learn to desire nothing more when you possess Him.—B. Murphy.

7. no end, no limit. It should go on increasing until it embraced the whole earth. throne of David, the Messiah is to succeed to David's throne and doubtless is conceived as his lineal descendant. Camb. Bib. to order it, etc., R. V., "to establish it, and to uphold it with judgment and with righteousness from henceforth," etc. This Messianic rule over all the earth is to be established not by means of force, not by militarism, but by the exercise of justice and righteousness. zeal, or jealousy, ^b "in the idea of divine holiness is included that God is a jealous God (Ex. xxxiv. 4; Deut. vi. 5). This jealousy turns especially against idolatry (Deut. xxxii. 21), and generally against all sins by which God's holy name is desecrated. These terms are used not to indicate change in the divine nature, but to keep awake the consciousness of the living, holy God."—Oehler.

Zeal of the Lord.—The word rendered "zeal" is the root-word out of which comes the term jealousy; zeal and jealousy mean the same thing in this connection—The jealousy of the Lord of hosts will perform this. The Lord is jealous over the daughter of Zion; he is jealous over the integrity of His own oath. When He has declared that the whole earth shall be filled with a divine glory, not one iota of that promise can fail; the Lord's jealousy or zeal is involved in the fulfilment of the terms. The Lord worketh. If the conversion of the world were dependent upon our mechanical agencies, that conversion would be long delayed, it might, indeed, be expunged from any record of the possibilities; but the battle is not ours, it is God's; the banner that is to float from the heights of a conquered world is to be planted there by Him whose name is King of kings, Lord of lords. Heaven takes a long time in its working, but its work is done for ever. We should wish to see the whole world at peace to-day, and we should love to run from tower to tower and tell the metal in every belfry to ring out the old and ring in the new, for the very Christ has come; but the matter is of greater consequence to Christ than it can be to us. It is well, therefore, for us if in faith and rest and love we can say, Lord, Thy time is best: we will pray Thine own prayer, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, in earth, as it is in heaven."—Peop. Bib. Prophetic Titles Given to the Messiah.—In the Talmud the idea first appears that Hezekiah was the son in whose birth the Prophet saw the advent of an era of glory for the Jewish people; but the reason of this application of the text, so unlike the manner in which generally the Jewish traditions are so true to the national conviction, that the ed by Solomon himself with greater richness of prophetic detail; and at last fully and clearly embodied in Isa.'s predictions concerning the righteous King and the 'Servant of the Lord,' by whom our peace would be worked out."—Spk. Com.

"You cannot limit 'love' in its syntax. You can write grammars for periphrastics, but when the heart burns, when all love turns the heart to divinely uses, then we use redundancy of words, because we require all possible multiplications of terms in order to give but a dim hint of the rapture which makes our souls ecstatic."—Peop. Bib.

a 2 Sa. vii. 11—16.

b "The two ideas of God's jealous partiality for His own people, and His jealous sensibility respecting His own honor, are promiscuously blended in the usage of the word, and are perhaps both included in the case before us. The expressions are derived from the dialect of human passion, but describe something absolutely right on God's part for the very reasons wh. demonstrate its absurdity and wickedness on man's."—J. A. Alexander.

"The remarkably emphatic repetition of the idea of His ruling in righteousness, real justice, and real benevolence, suggests how fearfully the world has been misgoverned, and how little the great body of human government in even civilized nations have sought and practically secured the welfare of the millions."—Cowles. In the glass of Scripture we may catch many glimpses of the glory of Christ; the full vision will be when we are within the veil, and behold the Lord in the plenitude of His glory.

"Whosoever in our search of the Scriptures we find a promise specially adapted to our needs, let us lay hold of it, saying with joyful confidence, 'The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this!'"

Christ is the Pearl of great price. Pearls are not like pebbles, which are found on the sea-shore; they lie in the depths of the ocean, and require much labor to secure them.

a "The impatient Ephraimites treat with contempt the results of Tiglath-Pileser's invasion, and boast that they will speedily place their affairs in a far more prosperous condition than before."—Henderson.

Pr. xvi. 18, 1
Pe. v. 5.

"A man under God's affliction is like a bird in a net; the more he strives, the more he is entangled."—Bishop Hall.

"Great gifts are beautiful as Rachel; but pride makes them also barren like her."

Prophets in all similar passages spoke of the Messiah, is to us confirmatory rather than the contrary of the belief that our Lord is the object of Isaiah's words. For their difficulty lay in the phrase, "The mighty God." They had hardened themselves into the settled belief that the Messiah was to be a national hero, their Cyrus and Alexander, who should command their armies, win for them battles, found for them an empire, and establish their supremacy over the hated heathen; he was to be a man whose sons should reign in his stead; and therefore the title "The Mighty God," contradicted their expectations, and in enmity to the Christian interpretation they sought for some other person to whom they might apply the words. It is evident, therefore, that the translation whereby modern commentators make this title signify nothing, had not suggested itself to them; for these tell us that, according to the idiom of the Hebrew language, the words may mean only "a god-like hero," whereas the Jews themselves translated it "a strong God," and were not aware in their expositions of the possibility of rendering it in any other way. To the Christian this phrase is the strongest proof that the Prophet was speaking of Christ; for in Him only has God become incarnate in the flesh: and as he reads the titles whereby the dignity of the Child is shadowed forth, he thinks with reverence upon the mystery of the Godhead united with the manhood, whereby Jesus of Nazareth was able to be the Prince of Peace, the Reconciler of lost man unto a just though merciful God.—R. P. Smith. We see here the universal extent of the Redeemer's kingdom; and, in this respect, how much does it differ from all the kingdoms of the earth! A universal empire, in the hands of a mortal, is a huge, unwieldy thing; a heap of confusion; a burden to mankind; and it has always rushed headlong from its glory, and fallen to pieces by its own weight. But Jesus is equal to the immense province of an empire strictly universal; His hand is able to hold the reins; and it is the blessing of our world to be under His administration. He will turn what appear to us scenes of confusion into perfect order, and convince all worlds that He has not taken one wrong step in the whole plan of His infinite government.—Davies.

8—10. (8) Beginning with this verse is a section (ix. 8—x. 4) which is probably out of place and should follow v. 25, which closes with the refrain repeated here in vs. 12, 17, 21; x. 4. The passage prob. belongs to the earliest period of Isaiah's ministry. sent a word, the figure is one of personification, as if "the word" were living (comp. Ps. cxlvii. 15, 18. cvii. 20; Is. lv. 10, 11) a messenger of His will. And now it hath lighted upon Israel, making itself heard. (9) know, or feel by personal suffering. stoutness of heart, shown in resistance of the Divine messages. (10) build . . stones, "calamity did not make this people thoughtful." What the earthquake has overthrown they will rebuild more durably. They did not recognize the Lord shaking the land, so He sent their enemies to steal it from them.—G. A. Smith. sycamores, a "light-wood, unfit for massive buildings."

Building Materials.—The houses of the lower orders in Egypt are in like manner constructed of unburnt bricks, or square pieces of clay, baked in the sun, and only one story high; but those of the higher classes, of stone, are generally two, and sometimes three stories high. These facts are at once a short and lively comment on the words of the Prophet: "All the people shall know, even Ephraim, and the inhabitants of Samaria, that say, in the pride and stoutness of heart, the bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones; the sycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars." Bricks dried in the sun, are poor materials for building, compared with hewn stone, which, in Egypt, is almost equal to marble, and forms a strong contrast between the splendid palace and mud-walled cabin. And if, as is probable, the houses of the higher orders in Israel were built with the same species of costly and beautiful stone, the contrast stated by the Prophet places the vaunting of his wealthier countrymen in a very strong light. The boastful extravagance of that people is still further displayed by the next figure: "The sycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars;" the forests of sycamore, the wood of which we have been accustomed to employ in building, are cut down by the enemy, but instead of them we will import cedars, of whose fragrant and beautiful wood we will construct and adorn our habitations. The sycamore grew in abundance in the low country of Judea, and was not much esteemed; but the cedar was highly valued; it was brought at a great expense, and with much labor, from the distant and rugged summits of Lebanon, to beautify the dwellings of the great, the palaces of kings, and the temple of Jehovah. It was therefore an extravagant boast, which betrayed the pride and vanity of their depraved hearts, that all the warnings, threatenings, and judgments of the living God were insufficient to subdue or restrain. —Paxton.

11, 12. (11) adversaries, etc., this is the second great calamity, loss of territory, the first being the earthquake (ch. v. 25), and three more to follow. against him, i. e. Israel. Assyria would first conquer Syria, and then attack Israel. and join his, R. V., "and shall stir up his." (12) Syrians . . devour Israel,^a "guerilla warfare, armed raids, the land eaten away bit by bit." —G. A. Smith.

Verse 12.—Professor Duhm calls the latter part of this verse "one of the most effective refrain-verses that have ever been composed." The figure of Jehovah, with His arm stretched out in wrath, is kept before the mind of the reader, as the prophecy advances to its conclusion.

13—15. (13) For the people turneth not, R. V., "yet the people hath not turned," they do not learn from this second calamity. smite, or chastiseth, in order to humble. seek, the forgiveness of. (14) head and tail, the high and the low, all ranks. The next consequent calamity passes from the land to the people themselves. A great battle is described, in which the nation is dismembered in a day.—G. A. Smith. branch, palm branch, growing right at the top of the tree. rush, sedge in the marshy ground; a type of the poor. (15) The ancient, etc., an explanation of verse 14, with the prophet's characteristic scorn of false teachers, who cater to the people rather than lead them; such are the worst and meanest of the people.

Calls to repentance.—Wherever we may be, there are voices which call us to repentance. Nature, as well as our whole life, is full of them, only our ears are heavy and will not hear. There is an awakening call in the rolling thunder, which is a herald of infinite majesty—in the lightning, which darts down before thee, carrying with it destruction—in the stars, which look down upon thee from such remote regions, as if they would say, "How far, O man! art thou cast out from thy home!"—in the flower of the field, which, in its transient blooming and fading, depicts thy own brief existence upon earth—in the midnight hour, when the church-bell strikes upon thy ear, like the pulse of time, which rapidly hastens away, and calls out to thee to hasten to save thy soul. Nay, where are we not surrounded by awakening voices of this nature? They sit upon the tombstones of our churchyards, and their language is, "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after that the judgment." Their warning voice resounds from every funeral-car that rolls past thee. It may be heard on every birthday which thou celebratest; in every fit of illness by which thou art attacked; in every danger that threatens thy life; as well as in that secret uneasiness which incessantly steals through thy soul.—Krummacher.

16—19. (16) leaders, ch. iii. 12. destroyed, Heb. swallowed up. (17) fatherless, etc., usually such objects of tenderest Divine compassion. every one, "the whole nation shares the ruler's guilt; as ruler so people. War brings out as nothing else does, the solidarity of a people in guilt."—G. A. Smith. hypocrite, R. V., "profane," or impious. Comp. x. 6; xxxii. 6; xxxiii. 13. (18) wickedness . . burneth, blazes forth.^a The fourth calamity, internal anarchy. "There is a panic of wickedness, sin spreading like mania. The physical metaphors of the prophet are evident: a forest fire, and the consequent famine, whose fevered victims feed upon themselves."—G. A. Smith. shall mount, etc., R. V., "roll upward in thick clouds of smoke," miserable ending of their wealth and pride. (19) darkened, R. V., "burnt up." This conflagration of evil passions is the punishment of a nation for its falseness. spare, in the general woe none shall care for the other. Comp. the bloody scenes of the French Revolution.

Man's readiness to invent excuse for sin.—A traveler in Venezuela Either we must lay self aside, or God will lay us aside." —Gurnall.

"No . . striving with supreme powers: we must submit ourselves unto the mighty hand of God, acknowledge our offences, call to Him for mercy. If He strike, He alone must help."—Burton.

a 2 Chr. xxviii. 18, 22, 23.

b "To seek God in the idiom of Scrip. is to pray to Him (Is. lv. 6), to consult Him (Is. viii. 19), to resort to Him for help (Is. xxxi. 1), to hold communion with Him (Am. v. 4, 5)." —J. A. Alexander.

"It is not a trivial matter to be well or ill led. How true this is politically, commercially, legally; it is not less true religiously. That community shows little wisdom that chooses its leaders carelessly. That community is insane which demands that its prophets shall prophesy unto it only smooth things (Isa. xxx. 10)." —H. M. Com.

a "God having withdrawn His Providential restraints, the pent-up passions of men have broken out like flames." —Spk. Com.

"When the heart begins once to be kindled, it is easy to smother the smoke of passion, which else will fume up into the head and gather into so thick a cloud that we shall lose the very sight of ourselves, and what is to be done." —Stibbes.

b "In times of anarchy, cruelty and self-will appear to grow more inordinate by being indulged." — Spk. Com.

"Place one spark amid combustible material in London. Let it alone. What will be the result? It will leap from point to point, house to house, street to street, until the whole city is in flames. Sin has spread in an exactly similar way. One sin, to the individual; one wrong action, to the family; one immoral look, to thousands; one crime, to a kingdom." — Hom. Com.

a "Or magistrates who caused unjust decisions to be recorded." — Fausset.

"Execute written documents which exact what is unjust." — Wordsworth.

b There is no surer sign of the misery of a people than is found in the corrupt administration of justice.

Is. xxix. 21; Am. v. 12; Pr. xviii. 5.

"How many sentences have I seen more criminal than the crimes themselves! all which makes me remember the ancient opinions, 'that there is a necessity a man must do wrong by retail, who will do right in gross; and injustice in little things, that will come to do justice in great.'" — Montaigne.

illustrates the readiness of men to lay their faults on the locality, or on anything rather than themselves, by the story of a hard drinker who came home one night in such a condition that he could not for some time find his hammock. When this feat was accomplished, he tried in vain to get off his riding-boots. After many fruitless efforts he lay down in his hammock, and soliloquized aloud, "Well, I have traveled all the world over; I lived five years in Cuba, four in Jamaica, five in Brazil, I have traveled through Spain and Portugal, and been in Africa, but I never yet was in such an abominable country as this, where a man is obliged to go to bed with his boots on." Commonly enough are we told by evil-doers in excuse for their sins that no man could do otherwise were he in their position, that there is no living at their trade honestly, that in such a street shops must be open on a Sunday, that their health required an excursion to Brighton on the Sabbath because their labors were so severe, that nobody could be religious in the house in which they were engaged, and so on, all to the same effect, and about as truthful as the soliloquy of the drunkard of Venezuela.—C. H. Spurgeon.

20, 21. (20) snatch, a vivid picture of the general distress: each gets food how he can, and thus cannot satisfy himself. eat . . arm, fig. for plucking away and eating the food of his nearest and dearest relatives. Fighting with those who are dear to him as his own arm. It is "the cruelty of rival political factions" that is referred to. (21) Manasseh, Ephraim, the two leading tribes of the ten making up the northern kingdom. "Ancient tribal jealousies would naturally be revived in a period of anarchy and civil war. Something of this kind seems to be implied in the account of the accession of the usurper Pekah, who murdered Pekahiah, at the head of a band of fifty Gileadites (2 Ki. xv. 25). The tribal names, however, need not be taken quite literally; indeed, it is hardly probable that the tribes had preserved their separate identity to so late a time." Camb. Bib.

Divine anger.—The anger which God feels and displays is always anger against sin. It is never against sinners as offenders against Himself personally, but as violators of the eternal laws of righteousness and love. It is not possible for the most daring transgressor to injure God in the slightest degree, and therefore He can never feel anything approaching to that personal vindictiveness which we feel against those who have wronged us. His anger against sin and sinners is no passion of personal vindictiveness, but is the natural revulsion of purity from impurity, of honesty from fraud, of truthfulness for falsehood; the instinctive abhorrence of generosity for meanness, of benevolence for malice, of kindness for cruelty. If God did not feel and manifest this anger against sin, it would be impossible to respect and love Him. If He could look down on the mean and dastardly things that are done every day, and yet remain cold and emotionless as an iceberg, as indifferent to the sufferings of His creatures as some Oriental despots have been to the miseries of their wretched subjects, our whole soul would rise up in righteous condemnation of Him.—R. A. B.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

The fifth calamity is the threat of captivity, vs. 1—4. "Turning now from the past, and from the fate of Samaria, with which it would appear he has been more particularly engaged, the prophet addresses his own countrymen in Judah, and paints the future for them. It is not a future in which there is any hope."—G. A. Smith. 1, 2. (1) decree, in the courts of justice. That is, they make laws which enable them to commit grievous wrongs under legal forms. and that write . . prescribed, R. V., "and to the writers that write perverseness," referring to the professional interpreters of the law. (2) turn aside, etc., or exclude, prevent from gaining their right. take away, by fraud and violence. my people, the tone of affection toward those who are thus unrighteously oppressed. widows . . fatherless, the helpless. comp. Jas. i. 27. God's hatred of injustice.—The Lord's voice is always for righteousness. What is it that is denounced? It is the very thing that is to be denounced evermore. There is nothing local or temporary in this cause of divine offence. The Lord is against all unrighteous decrees, unnatural alliances, and evil compacts. This is the very glory of the majesty of omnipotence, that it is enlisted against every form of evil and wrong. Then—"Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed"—scribes or registrars who preserve all the forms of the court, and keep their pens busy upon the court register, writing down every case, and appearing to do the business correctly and thoughtfully; and yet all the while these very registrars were themselves plotting "to take away the right from the poor, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless." The court of law was turned into a means of robbery, as it is in nearly every country under the sun. The scribes who wrote down the law were men who secretly or overtly broke it; the judge used his ermine as a cloak, that under its concealment he might thrust his hand further into the property of those who had no helper. "For all this his anger is not turned away." Blessed be His name! Oh, burn thou against us all; mighty, awful, holy God, burn more and more, until we learn by fire what we can never learn by pity. The Lord speaks evermore for the poor, for the widow, for the fatherless, for the helpless. Here we pause, as we have often done before in these readings, to say, How grand is the moral tone of the Bible; how sweetly does God speak for truth and righteousness; how condescendingly does He enlist omnipotence on the side of innocent helplessness.—Peop. Bib.

3, 4. (3) day of visitation, when God takes judgment on such iniquities. desolation, or storm. from far, i. e. distant Assyria. leave . . glory, i. e. your wealth and treasures. How will you secure them in the evil day? (4) bow . . prisoners, better, "They shall only crouch among the prisoners or fall among the slain." This is the answer to the questions of vs. 3. There is nothing left to them but captivity or death. For all . . still, the last time that this refrain occurs. This whole section (ix. 8—x. 4) should follow v. 25 preceding vss. 26—30, which are an appropriate conclusion.

The uses of affliction.—There is a little plant, small and stunted, growing under the shade of a broad spreading oak, and this little plant values the shade which covers it, and greatly does it esteem the quiet rest which its noble friend affords. Once upon a time there comes along the woodman, and with his sharp axe he fells the oak. The plant weeps and cries: "My shelter is gone, every rough wind will blow upon me!" "No," says the angel of the flower; "now will the sun get at thee, now will the shower fall on thee in more copious abundance than before; now thy stunted form shall spring into loveliness, and thy flower, which could never have expanded itself to perfection, shall now laugh in the sunshine, and men shall say, How greatly hath this plant increased, how glorious hath become its beauty through the removal of that which was its shade and delight.—Spurgeon.

The judgment of the world power: an oracle against Assyria, vss. 5—34. 5, 6. (5) O Assyrian, better, "Woe to thee also, O Assyrian." the rod, comp. Jer. i:20, the agent used for the punishment of My people. A great empire, but only a rod in God's hand. indignation, i. e. the instrument for expressing My indignation. (6) hypocritical, R. V., "profane," all Israel, first northern Israel in the 6th year of Hezekiah's reign and then Judah in his 14th year. people . . wrath, who, by their continued transgressions, have become the objects of Divine wrath.^a

The Assyrian (vss. 5—19).—I. His commission—subordinate, a mere rod in God's hand—defined. II. His pride: he boasts of his schemes, his achievements, his strength and wisdom, of what he will do against God. III. His rebuke: just, keen, humiliating. IV. His punishment: irresistible, sudden, signal, effected by Divine power.—Lyth.

Verses 5—34.—"This great prophecy is the clearest and probably the earliest exposition of that conception of the divine government of the world which was the guiding principle of the latest period of Isaiah's ministry. The leading idea of the passage is the contrast between the mission assigned to Assyria in the scheme of Jehovah's Providence, and the ambitious policy of universal dominion cherished by the rulers

"Or, 'if they do not bow down under the captives, they shall fall under the slain.'" —J. A. Alexander.

"Or, sinking, for very shame and self-reproach, lower than the captives." —Spk. Com.

"Bow down, as in the stocks, in which the head, feet, and hands were cramped together." —Wordsworth.

a Comp. Eze. xxix. 19, 20.

"Justice is as strictly due between neighbor nations, as between neighbor citizens. A highwayman is as much a robber when he plunders in a gang, as when single; and a nation that makes an unjust war is only a great gang of robbers." —Franklin.

"Justice is the idea of God, the ideal of man, the rule of conduct writ in the nature of mankind." —Theodore Parker.

"Where evil may be done, 'tis right to ponder; where only suffer'd, know, the shortest pause is much too long." —Hannah More.

"God beholds thee, wretch, though wrapped in prayer, A wolf disguised, a painted sepulchre; Regards no more thy cant, and godly whine Than yon dumb statue on the marble shrine, Whose hands are seen in holy rapture closed And steadfast eyes to heaven alone disposed, Prayer's senseless image where no soul within Speaks through the form and animates the men."

—J. Scott.

* "This uprooting of conquered nations was a new thing in the world; devised by Syria as a means of carrying out that imperial policy which originated with it; as if it were bent on realizing the dream of the old Babel builders."—Spk. Com.

b Is. xxxvi. 19, 20, xxxvii. 12, 13.

"The spider weaves a web, and that is its world. It retires into its corner for observation, and has no concern for any surrounding objects, except as they may be caught upon its net, and appropriated to its use. So they who live without God reticulate life with selfishness. Nothing concerns them except as it may be drawn into the mesh of scheming for ministering to their own wants and wishes." —Bellew.

of that empire. Assyria was the instrument chosen by Jehovah to manifest His sole deity by the extinction of all the nationalities that put their trust in false gods." But the great world-power, intoxicated by its success and attributing this to its own wisdom and resource, recognizes no difference between Jehovah and other gods, but confidently reckons on proving His impotence by the subjugation of His land and people. Hence it becomes necessary for Jehovah to vindicate His supreme Godhead by the destruction of the power which has thus impiously transgressed the limits of its providential commission. And this judgment will take place at the very moment when Assyria seeks to crown its career of conquest by an assault on Jehovah's sanctuary on Mount Zion, the earthly seat of His government. These are the ideas which lay at the root of Isaiah's heroic faith in the crisis of Sennacherib's invasion. He did not doubt that Judah's sins required an exemplary chastisement, or that that chastisement would come by means of the Assyrians, but he had the firmest conviction that Jehovah's purpose did not include the violation of His sanctuary, which would in that age have been equivalent to the extinction of the true religion.—Cam. Bible. Assyria. —We know what the Assyrians were in the history of the world. They do not stand alone; they belong to a class of men who have appeared again and again, and are numerous represented in the world to-day—men of enormous force, of abounding energy, of vast ambition, of unscrupulous determination. Such men as Ghengis-Khan, Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander the Great, Caesar, and Napoleon, are their conspicuous representatives, but their representatives only. They are to be found elsewhere than on thrones and at the head of armies. They have been represented in the Church by ambitious and unscrupulous popes, cardinals, and bishops not a few. They are represented among our nobles by domineering landlords; in commerce by great capitalists, who brook no competition, but will crush a rival at any cost. This chapter concerns men who live in England to-day, and it has for us more than an historic interest.—Hom. Com.

7—9. (7) meaneth not so,^a it is not the purpose of Assyria to act as the servant of Jehovah; in what he does he is not guided by moral but by selfish interests. heart think, the heart in the O. T. is the organ of knowledge, so that the Heb. word has often the meaning of intellect, insight. Prov. xxiii. 7, "as he thinketh in his heart." (8) princes, i. e. "officers." kings, many of them were subjugated kings (2 Ki. xxv. 28), and any one of them excelled in dignity the petty sovereigns of the independent states. The title "King of kings" was already assumed by Assyrian monarchs. (9) Is not, etc., i. e. was any one of these cities able to withstand me? "Hamath was taken by Sargon in 720. Arpad by Tiglath-Pileser in 740; Samaria by Sargon in 722; Damascus by Tiglath-Pileser in 732; Carchemish by Sargon in 717. The date of capture of Calno is not known. But, thus far, the nations had been powerless before the Assyrian."—Driver..

Hypocrisy.—Some hypocrites and seeming mortified men, that held down their heads like bulrushes, were like the little images that they place in the very bowing of the vaults of churches that look as if they held up the church, but are but puppets.—Bacon.

Atrocity of hypocrisy—

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile;
And cry content, to that which grieves my heart
And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,
And frame my face to all occasions.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the orator as well as Nestor, Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could,
And, like a Sinon, take another Troy;
I can add colors to the chameleon;
Change shapes, with Proteus, for advantages,
And set the murderous Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
Tut, were it further off, I'll pluck it down.—Shakespeare.

Hypocrisy—

It was withal a highly polished age,
And scrupulous in ceremonious right.
When stranger stranger met upon the way,
First each to each bowed most respectfully,
And large profession made of humble service;
And then the stronger took the other's purse;
And he that stabbed his neighbor to the heart,
Stabbed him politely and returned the blade
Reeking into its sheath with graceful air.—Pollok.

10, 11. (10) idols, lit. "nonentities." He uses the same scornful word that the prophet employed (ii. 8); from his conception of the conquering power of Ashur the word is intelligible. excel, in number, and in fame or importance, such as certain shrines or idols possess. Samaria, from this and vs. 9 it is evident that the prophecy is written after the fall of Samaria in 721, while the preceding prophecies were written about 732. (11) her idols, "her nonentities, so do to Jerusalem and her images." The Jews were to blame for this conception that the gods of the Jews were images and idols like the gods of other nations.

An Indian youth.—A native gentleman of India, in relating his history to one of the missionaries, said:—My father was an officiating priest of a heathen temple, and was considered in those days a superior English scholar; and, by teaching the English language to wealthy natives, realized a very large fortune. At a very early period, when a mere boy, I was employed by my father to light the lamps in the pagoda, and attend to the various things connected with the idols. I hardly remember the time when my mind was not exercised on the folly of idolatry. These things, I thought, were made by the hand of man, can move only by man, and, whether treated well or ill, are unconscious of either. Why all this cleaning, anointing, illuminating, etc.? One evening, these considerations so powerfully wrought on my youthful mind, that instead of placing the idols according to custom, I threw them from their pedestals, and left them with their faces in the dust. My father, on witnessing what I had done, chastised me so severely, as to leave me almost dead. I reasoned with him, that if they could not get up out of the dust, they were not able to do what I could; and that instead of being worshipped as gods, they deserved to lie in the dust, where I had thrown them. He was implacable, and vowed to disinherit me, and, as the first step to it, sent me away from his house. He relented on his death-bed, and left me all his wealth. Compromise.—Ships, when the tide rises and sets strongly in any direction, sometimes turn and seem as if they would go out upon it. But they only head that way, and move from side to side, swaying and swinging without moving on at all. There seems to be nothing to hinder them from sailing and floating out to sea; but there is something. Down under the water a great anchor lies buried in the mud. The ship cannot escape. The anchor holds her. And thus are men holden by the cords of their own sins. They go about trying to discover some way to be forgiven, and yet keep good friends with the devil that is in them.—Beecher.

12—14. (12) An abrupt transition. The impious language of the Assyrian leads the prophet to declare that when Jehovah has punished Israel He will remember and punish the pride of Assyria. performed, lit. "cut off." The figure is taken from the cutting off of the finished web from the loom. Comp. xxxviii. 12, and Zech. iv. 9. punish . . heart, lit. "the fruit of the pride of his heart," which fruit is boasting against God, lust of empire and cruelty, hateful to God in any people. Notice, though God uses a man or an army as His instrument, if the instrument sins it shall suffer for its sin. (13) strength . . hand, again the king is quoted, as he describes his victories, and ascribes it to his own absolute strength and wisdom. I am prudent, i. e. have insight. removed the bounds, it was his policy to obliterate boundaries and mingle conquered peoples by deportation and colonization. like a valiant man, "like a bull," the Assyrian symbol of strength. (14) moved . . wing, "The magnificent simile represents the ease with which the Assyrians a "He regarded foreign gods as impotent and worthless esp. after having with so much ease, conquered the cities and countries of wh. they were the supposed protectors."—Hendersonson.

A mother was describing to her little son the idols which heathen nations worship as gods. "I suppose, mamma," said the boy, "that these heathens do not look up to the same sun, and moon, and stars which we do." "Yes, my dear, they do." "Why, then, I wonder that they do not think there must be a better God than those idols."

a Comp. Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar.

b "The Assyrian compares his conquests not to the easy work of seeking nests, but the much easier one of gathering eggs fr. forsaken nests. The people fled before him, leaving their treasures in his hands."—Nagelsbach.

Ha. iii. 11—15; 2 Ki. xix. 20—24.

"As an eagle, though she enjoy her wings and beak, is wholly prisoner if she be held but by one talon; so are we, though we could be delivered of all habit of sin, in bondage still, if vanity hold us but by a silken thread."—Donne.

c "The absurdity of Assyria's vaunting is forcibly depicted by supposing the case of an inanimate tool disengaging itself from the power of the intelligent agent by whom it is used, and treating him as if they had exchanged places with each other."—Henderson.

d "Ha-Adon, the Supreme Judge, who is also Sovereign Ruler, Adonai-Sebaoth, Lord of Hosts."—Spk. Com.

e Ps. cvi. 15; Isa. xvil. 4.

f 2 Chr. xxxii. 21; Isa. xxxvii. 36.

a "Some think the ref. may be to the Assyrian king, and propose to read, 'Heshall be utterly despised, and like the fainting away of a sick man,' i. e., he shall resemble a wretched invalid, sinking through weakness and want of sustenance."—Henderson.

"From his exhaustless store the Prophet produces another figure, and calls Assyria a weakling, who pining dies away."—Nagelsbach.

a "It is evident that this passage was composed when the Assyrian alliance was already an historical fact."—Nagelsbach.

2 Ki. xvi. 7.

"Every hour life's sands are sliding from beneath incautious feet, and with sin's fatal flower in the incautious hand the trifler goes to his doom. The regulum of each departure is an echo of the Saviour's question, What shall had rifled the countries of their treasures, and the panic terror which their approach everywhere produced."—Camb. Bib.

Note on vss. 13, 14.—These are the sentiments and boastings of Sennacherib, a proud Assyrian monarch, who viewed and treated cities just as we in Africa viewed and treated ostrich nests, when they fell in our way; we seized the eggs as if they had been our own, because we had found them, and because there was no power that could prevent us. So did Sennacherib seize and plunder cities with as little compunction as we seized the eggs of the absent ostrich; never thinking of the misery for life which he thereby brought on many peaceable families, who had done nothing to injure or offend him.—Campbell.

15, 16. The prophet speaks again. (15) boast, or vaunt. "The idea is not merely that of boastful opposition, but of preposterous inversion of the true relation bet. agent and instrument, bet. mind and matter."—staff .. wood, R. V., "staff should lift up him that is not wood," i. e. the man who uses it. (16) Lord of hosts, an unusual combination of Divine names.^d fat ones, choice soldiers. leanness, prob. some withering disease.^e a burning, "the serried battalions of Assyria appear to the imagination of the prophet as the trees of some huge forest, irresistible in their strength and countless in their number; but the light of Israel kindles majestically into a flame; and at the end of a single day a child may count them."—Driver.

The worker and his tools (vs. 15).—These words point to one of the common temptations of strong men in every sphere of action to rely on their own skill and power. Consider—I. The real connection of human industry with God—useful and fine arts belong to the original idea of man as a working being; note the kind of world which God has made our present home, also the mode in which the Scriptures speak of the arts; learn to separate human handiwork from human sin. II. The disconnection of industrial pursuits from God in the minds of men generally: this evil may exist either in a positive or in a negative sense; the sources of it are religious ignorance and alienation from God, the forms in which it is developed are various; the duties especially incumbent upon the Christians of this land in connection with their daily labor are the unfailing recognition of the Divine Providence,—humility, justice, and kindness.—S. Martin.

17—19. (17) light of Israel, God is fire (Deut. ix. 3), and light (1 John i. 5). The holiness of God is light, revealing; and flame, consuming. Now it is to burn in wrath against Assyria. thorns and briers, "the splendid forces of Asshur were nothing but a mass of thistles and a bed of thorns," fit only to be burned.—Delitzsch. (18) forest, the wilder districts. fruitful field, the cultivated districts; intimating the desolation of the whole country. soul and body, a proverbial expression meaning utterly. standard-bearer,^a R. V. margin, "as when a sick man pineth away," like a consumptive, hopelessly growing weaker from day to day. (19) rest, i. e. those surviving the destruction. child, who cannot count up to high numbers, a prophecy remarkably fulfilled for but a fragment of the army that marched against Jerusalem ever escaped.

Uncertainty of riches.—Riches take to themselves wings, and flee away. The wicked have been in great power, and they have departed without telling whither they have gone; they have not left even the rustle of a wing behind them to indicate the direction of their flight. We have much now; upstairs and downstairs, all full; to-morrow every chamber will be emptied, and yet not a door will have been opened by human hand. Seal up your treasures; take wax, and plenty of it; melt it down, stamp it with your crest—frailest sign of vanity—and to-morrow will find you empty-handed, and you will open your mouth in wonder, and ask who did it; and the secret-keeping air, the confidant of God, will not allow even a little bird to tell you whither the property has gone. Use it well! Blessed is the true and faithful servant who toils and prays!—Peop. Bib.

20, 21. (20) remnant, comp. Is. lxxv. 8ff. Zeph. iii. 12, 13; Mic. v. 7, 8; Jer. xxiii. 3. again stay, i. e. lean for support on Assyria.^a "an allusion to the alliance contracted by Ahaz (2 Ki. xvi. 7 ff.), a policy, however, whose evil consequences were not fully realized till the reign of Hezekiah. From the false situation in which the nation was then placed no escape was possible except by the intervention of Jehovah. After that deliverance the survivors shall adopt the attitude, consistently advocated by Isaiah, of steadfast reliance on Jehovah alone; they shall stay (themselves) upon Jehovah, the Holy One of Israel, in truth (in faithfulness).—Camb. Bib. (21) the mighty God, comp. ix. 6, where this is given as one of the names of the coming Messiah.

A happy conversion (vs. 20).—Refer to history of the Jews, their sins, and punishment. I. Consider what is said of their former error. 1. They had exercised an improper dependence; 2. Their dependence had been disappointed; 3. Their folly was to be corrected by their sovereign. II. What is said of their renewed experience. 1. It is enlightened; 2. Extensive; 3. Blessed. III. The reality of their change. 1. They shall stay upon the Lord, in distinction from mere pretensions: 2. In distinction from imaginary confidence.—W. Jay.

A remnant.—We can hardly understand such language as this, because in our national life and personal history we have never been subject to those strange mutations which befell the kingdom of Israel. We can hardly understand what it means where a whole nation is torn up by the roots, and carried away into a foreign land; and where, by and by, in a capricious mood of some despot, a portion of them are allowed to go back again,—a mere fragment. For in the carrying away of a million people, how many perish! And when a few are gathered together, and they turn to go back, how much is this remnant to be pitied! Wandering from place to place in the promised land, crossing the Jordan, finding a heap where once there was a flourishing city, drawing near to the home of their ancestry and finding it in the hands of foreigners, themselves regarded as intruders and outcasts, what a harrowing experience theirs must be! It was under such circumstances as these that the prophets did their chief work. It was one of their principal functions to encourage a nation plunged into profound despondency. In this chapter the prophet, with words of cheer, and with an inexpressible richness of imagery, comforts the poor, despoiled band of people, and makes them feel that the hand of power shall not for ever be so strong against them.—Hom. Com.

22, 23. (22) though thy people,^b etc., trans. "though thy people, O Israel, were as the sand of the sea only a remnant." The prophet emphasizes the greatness of the calamities overhanging the nation. It is a remnant, only a remnant that will survive." consumption, "Render: extermination is decreed overflowing in righteousness. The 'extermination' is the judgment which reduces the teeming population of Israel to a mere remnant; this will be an overwhelming manifestation of Jehovah's judicial righteousness."—Camb. Bib. (23) consumption, R. V., "consummation," that is a final work; determined, i. e. irrevocably decided upon.

God's mercy.—Oh, who can read of a Manasseh, a Magdalene, a Saul, in the roll of pardoned sinners, and yet turn away from the promise, out of a fear that there is not mercy in it to serve his turn? These are landmarks that show what large boundaries mercy hath set to itself, and how far it hath gone, even to take into its arms the greatest sinners that make not themselves incapable thereof by final impenitency. It were a healthful walk, poor doubting Christian, for thy soul to go this circuit, and oft see where the utmost stone is laid and boundary set by God's pardoning mercy, beyond which He will not go. It is harder to get sin felt by the creature, than the burden, when felt, removed by the hand of a forgiving God. Never was tender-hearted surgeon more willing to take up the vein, and bind up the wound of his fainting patient, when he hath bled enough, than God is by His pardoning mercy to ease the troubled spirit of a mourning penitent.—Gurnall.

24, 25. (24) Here the prophet turns to a message of consolation to the faithful that yet look to Jehovah. dwellst in Zion, this is the emblem of security, since it is there that Jehovah will beat back and destroy the Assyrian, comp. vss. 32—34. rod . . . staff, the instruments rather of chastisement than of destruction. manner of Egypt, recalling to mind how God overruled for His people's good even the sufferings of a man give in exchange for his soul?"

"Live 'as in God's sight, mindful of thy position as a child of God, and as a servant of Jesus. Meditate on His Word; pray always. Then you will know when to close and when to open the lips; when to listen; and how to behave, if wrongfully accused."

^b For the expression comp. Sol.'s prayer, 1 Ki. vii. 30, etc.

c Ge. xlii. 17.

"The meaning is, that the destruction of the great mass of the people would be an event involving an abundant exhibition of God's justice."—J. A. Alexander.

"God will justly bring this consumption upon a provoking people, but He will wisely and graciously set bounds to it."—M. Henry.

"In war men will venture their lives, because they think some will escape, and why not they? In traffic beyond the seas many adventure a great estate, because some grow rich by a good return, though some miscarry. The husbandman adventures his seed, though sometimes the year proves so bad that he never sees it more. And shall not we make a spiritual adventure, in casting ourselves upon God, when we have so good a warrant as His command, and so good an encouragement as His promise, that He will not fail those that rely on Him?"—Sibbes, 1577-1635.

"Life, like a dome of many-colored glass, stains the white radiance of eternity."—Shelley.

a Isa. ix. 4.

Comp. the fate of Oreb and of Sennacherib, 2 Chr. xxxii. 21; Isa. xxxvii. 38; and Ju. vii. 25.

bOr for the sake of the anointing, which was one seal of the Divine covenant.

The Targum reads—"And the nations shall be broken before the Messiah."

The following suggestion, by Kocher, is curious—"Whereas yokes are commonly preserved by oil, this shall be destroyed by it."

"Mercy, not justice, is the throne of princes. For what is power, though boundless and almighty? A deity of awfulness and fear; but in the whirlwind of its wrath, when flies the burning shaft, if mercy's saving hand arrests its flight, then we kneel and worship, and mix our praise with gratitude and love."—Francis.

"Men reckon the extreme penalty to be death; but in the Divine court of justice this is scarcely the beginning."—Philo.

"Why cannot we, slipping our hand into His each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace and home?"—Phillips Brooks.

their time in Egypt. (25) indignation, against Israel. shall cease, R. V., "shall be accomplished." mine anger . . . destruction, i. e. and then mine anger will be turned to their (the Assyrians') destruction. Very shortly after they think to utterly demolish Israel they will themselves be overwhelmed by Jehovah.

Divine deliverance (vs. 25).—I. The deliverance of God's people is coincident with the destruction of their enemies. II. The reason of this arrangement: their enemies exist as a test, for their instruction, correction. III. The inference deducible from it: when God's people are perfected they will be delivered and their enemies destroyed. IV. The gracious assurance that this shall be speedily accomplished.—Lyth.

Mercy—

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown:
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this sceptred sway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute of God Himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Therefore,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,—
That, in the course of justice none of us Should see salvation; we do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render The deeds of mercy.
—Shakespeare.

26, 27. (26) for him. R. V., "against him." The Almighty will swing the whip over Asshur and smite it as once the Midianites were smitten. —Delitzsch. Oreb, Ju. vii. 25. and as His rod, etc., R. V., "and his rod shall be over the sea, and he shall lift it up," etc., so that this sea of affliction which had threatened Israel shall overwhelm Assyria. (27) his burden, that of Assyria. because of the anointing, the best translation of this passage is margin, cf. R. V., "the yoke shall be destroyed by reason of fatness." "Judah is compared to an animal which as it increases in strength and size, bursts the yoke which presses and galls its neck."—Driver.

Divine chastisements.—They are—I. Tender, "O My people." II. Merciful, "be not." III. Necessary, "he shall." IV. Of short duration. V. Without partiality. VI. End in deliverance.—Lyth.

Providence in history.—We shall see all the meaning of sword and pestilence and grim famine, of cloud and storm and angry thunder, of love, and mercy, and hope, and gospel sacred with the blood of sacrifice. By-and-by, yet a little while, no cloud is eternal; it is but vapor after all, and the wind will cleanse it away. When the vision is declared we shall know that Righteousness is the security of the universe, hell the necessity of unrepented sin, and heaven is the God-built, eternal home of men who touched the atoning Saviour with the reverent, grateful hand of faith. History is in a great tumult: nation clashes against nation in the shock of war; man eats the flesh of the arm of man, and grows the hungrier for his feast of blood; the poor are little counted of, the weak go to the wall; banners red as blood are being figured all over with lines of fire, with the motto, "Might is right." O Lord, how long? In reply to this question we are entitled to go back upon all the record of history, and trace the line of providence through the whole—a line now terrible as righteousness, now gracious as the love of Christ. The Lord reigneth.—Peop. Bib. Results of moral discipline.—The law of habit, when enlisted on the side of righteousness, not only strengthens and makes sure our resistance to vice, but facilitates the most arduous performance of virtue. The man whose thoughts, with the purposes and doings to which they lead, are at the bidding of conscience, will, by frequent repetition, at length describe the same track almost spontaneously,—even as in physical education, things laboriously learnt at the first come to be done at last without the feeling of an effort. And so, in moral education, every new achievement of principle smooths the way to future achievements of the same kind; and the precious fruit or purchase of each moral virtue is to set us on higher and firmer vantage-ground for the conquests of principle in all time coming. He who resolutely bids away the suggestions of avarice, when they come into conflict with the incumbent generosity; or the suggestions of voluptuousness, when they come into conflict with the incumbent self-denial; or the suggestions of anger, when they come into conflict with the incumbent act of magnanimity and forbearance, will at length obtain, not a respite only, but a final deliverance from their intrusion. Conscience, the longer it has made way over the obstacles of selfishness and passion, the less will it give way to these adverse forces, themselves weakened by the repeated defeats which they have sustained in the warfare of moral discipline: or, in other words, the oftener that conscience makes good the supremacy which she claims, the greater would be the work of violence, and less the strength for its accomplishment, to cast her down from that station of practical guidance and command, which of right belongs to her. It is just because, in virtue of the law of suggestion, those trains of thought and feeling, which connect her first bidings with their final execution, are the less exposed at every new instance to be disturbed, and the more likely to be repeated over again, that every good principle is more strengthened by its exercise, and every good affection is more strengthened by its indulgence than before. The acts of virtue ripen into habits; and the goodly and permanent result is the formation or establishment of a virtuous character.—Chalmers.

28, 29. The section (vss. 28-32) is called by Driver "a passage of astonishing power, in which the prophet, conscious of his strength, resorts to a species of irony." Delitzsch says, "This description is one of the most magnificent that human poetry has ever produced." It describes the march of the Assyrian army, its triumphant progress and final complete failure. It was exactly fulfilled. (28) He is come, i. e. the Assyrian general with his army. Aiath, prob. Ai, 10 miles N. of Jerus. Migron, prob. Makrun, a little S.E. of Bethel.—Robinson. Michmash, some 8 miles N. of Jerus., a strategic point marking the N. frontier of Judah. Here was "a long, narrow defile where a large army might easily be checked by a handful of resolute defenders. But they pass through it triumphantly, having previously seized Migron at the southern end, by skilful strategy. carriages, R. V., "baggage"; the heavy baggage was left under guard at this point bec. the steep Wady Suweinît had to be passed. (29) passage, or defile. Geba, etc., see Jos. xviii. 21—28; 1 Sa. xiii. 2, 3. "Geba they have made their night-quarters."

God overruling nations.—Man may be the crown of creation, but he is only a creature, and set to do God's most delicate and particular work. So far as we can understand the history of our world, we can see that great nations have been raised up to do certain things for God, and they have done them, either with their wills or against them. Egypt was raised up to educate the childhood of God's chosen people. Assyria was raised up, as we see in this chapter, to be the rod of God wherewith he might punish his people for their sin. Babylon was commissioned to guard the years of Jewish captivity. Greece was exalted to show the world that "the beautiful" is not, of necessity, "the good." Rome proved to the world that "restraint of law" can never take the place of the "liberty of righteousness." The Gothic nations were commissioned to overthrow a debased and worn-out civilization. France shows how the passion for "glory" can lead men astray. America illustrates the principles of self-government. England tells what can be achieved under the inspiration of duty.—Pul. Com.

30—32. (30) Lift up, Heb. cry shrill. Gallim, Laish, "these places cannot be identified."—Camb. Bib. Anathoth, now Anata, 3 miles only fr. Jerus. (31) Madmenah, an unknown village. is removed, R. V., "is a fugitive." gather . . flee, hastily collect their property and fly before "Heart - work must be God's work. Only the great heart-maker can be the great heart-breaker."—Richard Baxter.

"A patriotism that inspires us to give all to our native land and die for it ought to teach us to live those same lives in the service that will best help our native land." —Albert Bryant.

"A Christian warrior should always carry his fighting Testament in his pistol-pocket. If you cannot carry around with you a double-barreled Testament, always carry a single-barreled one." —William Ashmore.

^a "Showing what imminent danger Jerusalem was in, when its enemies made so many bold advances towards it, and its friends could not make one bold stand to defend it."—M. Henry.

"Do not weaken and distress yourself by looking forward to things which you cannot see, and would not understand if you saw them."—Charles Kingsley.

^b For fig. of Assyria as lofty tree comp. Eze. xxxi. 5, 6, 8, 12, 13.

"God was wroth with the angels, and drove them out of heaven. God was wroth with Adam, and thrust him out of paradise. God was wroth with Nebuchadnezzar, and turned him out of his palace. God was wroth with Cain, and though he was the first man born of a woman, yet God made him a vagabond upon his own land. God was wroth with Saul, and though he was the first king that ever was anointed, yet God made his own hand his executioner."—Henry Smith.

the enemy." (32) As yet shall he remain, etc., Polychr., "This very day he will halt in Nob: his clenched hand he shakes against," etc. The prize seems to be within his grasp, and the conqueror insolently shakes his fist at Jerusalem.

Note on vs. 32.—This is a part of the description of the march of Sennacherib against Jerusalem. When he arrives near the city, he lifts up his hand and shakes it, to denote that he will soon inflict signal punishment upon it. How often may this significant motion of the hand be seen; it is done by lifting it up to the height of the head, and then moving it backward and forward in a cutting direction. Thus, when men are at so great a distance as to be scarcely able to hear each other's voice, they have this convenient way of making known their threatenings. Sometimes, when brawlers have separated, and apparently finished their quarrel, one of them will turn round and bawl out with all his might, and then shake his hand in token of what he will still do.—Roberts.

33, 34. (33) lop . . terror, when lo, "by an unseen stroke" this boastful conqueror is stricken down as a tree is felled by a woodman,^b the fig. of a sudden and fearful destruction. The word used signifies "beautiful branches," or "leafy boughs," with special reference to the pride of the officers, boasting of their forced and unopposed march. (34) thickets, referring to the soldiers. Lebanon, i. e. "the army of Asshur which is now standing opposite to Mt. Zion, like Mt. Lebanon with its forest of cedars, falls down."—Delitzsch. a mighty one, comp. xxxiii. 21; Ps. lxxvi. 5; xciii. 4. In the account of the fulfilment (xxxvii. 36) it is "the angel of the Lord," who is represented as destroying the camp.

Fall of pride.—If God seems to delay in his humblings, we may be sure it is only that the proud man may get finished the work which, all unknown to himself, God is making him do. Then we may well learn to be always thankful for grace received, talents entrusted, opportunities given, and achievements won; but never boast, never either think or say, "I have done it," "My arm hath gotten me this victory." Boast, if you must boast, like Paul, of what God has wrought in you and by you; but never boast of what you have wrought, for it is an ever-working and necessary law that "pride must have a fall," and the "Lord alone shall be exalted in that day."—R. Tuck. True fear of God.—Senator Rhett of South Carolina in reply to a challenge said: "But my second reason for not calling the Senator from Alabama into the field was of a still higher and more controlling nature. For twenty years I have been a member of the Church of Christ. The Senator knows it; everybody knows it. I can not and will not dishonor my religious profession. I frankly admit that I fear God more than I fear man." True courage is best evinced by the firm maintenance of our principles amidst all temptations and all trials.—The Field of Honor.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

The Messiah and His Kingdom vss. 1—9.—I. rod . . stem, R. V., "shoot out of the stock." "The imperial power of the world falls without hope, but in Israel spring is returning."—Delitzsch. stem of Jesse, or hewn-down stock of Jesse. "The idea is that the Davidic family shall become as obscure as it was formerly, when its head was a plain Bethlehemite citizen—(comp. 1 Sam. xxv. 10 ff and Mic. v. 2) and that on a sudden, someone of its members shall be divinely chosen to be a second David."—Polychr. Bib. Branch . . roots, R. V., "and a branch out of his roots shall bear fruit," shall come to maturity.

The Stem from the Rod of Jesse (vv. 1—9).—That this refers to the Lord is undoubted. Note—I. His descent. 1. Meanness or obscurity; 2. Progression; 3. Secret and mysterious operation. II. His personal and official endowments. 1. Their nature; 2. Their range; 3. Their durability; 4. Their purposes, that He might discriminate the characters of men, to defend the cause of the oppressed, to punish the workers of iniquity. III. The blessed state of things which will be realised under His administration. 1. The condition described; 2. The transformations effected; 3. The means of it.—Lyth.

^a "To further indicate its mean condition, the name of David, wh. would have suggested notions of dignity and splendor, is suppressed, and that of his father Jesse is employed, wh. conveys the ideas of rustic simplicity and obscurity."—Henderson.

"Nothing is of full compass in benevolence and philosophy and true wisdom that

Rooted in God.—There are trees that can be cut down, and they have no to-morrow; and there are others which, though cut down to the very surface of the earth, have sap within themselves, and have laid such hold upon the earth, and upon the whole solar system through the earth, that they will renew their youth, and be green next year. What is the symbol of our power? Is ours an influence that can be cut down and never revive? or are we so rooted in the Eternal that though persecution may impoverish us, and we may suffer great deprivation and depletion of every kind, yet we shall come up again in eternal youthfulness, and great shall be our strength and just pride?—Peop. Bib.

Immanuel.—The following phrases, as gathered from the Scriptures, may serve to illustrate this view of Christ. He is spoken of as "Jehovah; as Jehovah of glory; as Jehovah our Righteousness; as Jehovah above all; as Jehovah, the First and the Last; as Jehovah's Fellow and Equal; as Jehovah of hosts; as Jehovah of David; as Jehovah the Shepherd; as Jehovah for whose glory all things were created; as Jehovah the Messenger of the Covenant: invoked as Jehovah; as the Eternal God and Creator; as the Mighty God; as the Great God and Saviour; as God over all; as the True God; as God the Word; as God the Judge; as Immanuel; as King of kings and Lord of lords; as the Holy One; as the Lord from heaven; as the Lord of the Sabbath; as Lord of all; as Son of God; as the Only Begotten Son of the Father: as One with the Father; as sending the Spirit equally with the Father; as entitled to equal honor with the Father; as Owner of all things equally with the Father; as unrestricted by the law of the Sabbath equally with the Father; as unsearchable equally with the Father; as Creator of all things; as Supporter and Preserver of all things; as possessed of the fulness of the Godhead; as raising the dead; as raising Himself from the dead; as Eternal; as Omnipresent; as Omnipotent; as Omniscient; as discerning the thoughts of the heart; as Unchangeable; as having power to forgive sins; as Giver of pastors to the Church; as Husband of the Church; as the Object of Divine worship; as the Object of faith; as God, He redeems and purifies the Church unto Himself; as God, He presents the Church unto Himself; Saints live unto Him as God."—J. Bate.

2, 3. "The stormy scene of tumult and destruction (in ch. x) is succeeded by a marvelous picture of the just and perfect rule of the ideal Prince."—Driver. (2) the spirit of the Lord, "the spirits of the Lord mentioned here are prevailingly intellectual;" a predominant characteristic of the Holy Spirit in Bible teaching. rest, or permanently abide. In Christ dwells "the fulness of the Godhead bodily," wisdom and understanding, wisdom the special gift of the ruler, as called to judge difficult cases: understanding, or keen, quick discernment. counsel, the power to form wise plans. might, the faculty of carrying plans into execution. knowledge, practical acquaintance with the will of God. fear, that disposition wh. keeps us ever anxious to do God's will." (3) and shall make, etc., R. V., "and his delight shall be in the fear of the Lord." Not only possesses this "fear" himself, but delights to recognize it in others. after the sight, He will not depend upon appearances. He "knows what is in man," and He will judge unerringly.^a

Discernment.—How comes it that men who are religious are thought to be mentally inferior? They ought to be the highest minds in the world; they ought to have the candle of the Lord at their disposal—a candle which lets its revealing light fall upon all the secret corners and cunning devices. There should be no possibility of deceiving the spirit of righteousness which is in the renewed man; he will know the hypocrite by his very attitude. Yet it may be possible to deceive even the very elect. But we cannot deceive the Lord. The Lord looketh upon the heart; even though we have many qualities that are unworthy, yet he can see beneath them all, and detect the genuine seed, the real desire after His kingdom, and the real sympathy with His purpose. That is the difference between the bad man and the good man: the bad man endeavors to keep an outwardly reputable surface, and all his iniquity is within, at the very center and core of things; the good man's imperfections are many, and are broadly seen, but the more deeply you go does not begin at the lowest point, and work through all the strata to the very surface and uppermost line of things." — Peop. Bib.

"In the roots covered with earth, and only rising a little above it, there shows itself a netzer, i.e., a fresh, green shoot. In the historical account of the fulfilment, even the ring of the prophecy is noticed: the netzer, at first so humble and insignificant, was a poor despised Nazarene (Matt. ii. 23). — Delitzsch.

b Col. ii. 9.

"The person whose origin and descent are metaphorically described in the preceding verse, is here described by his personal qualities, as one endowed with the highest intellectual and moral gifts by the direct influences of the Holy Spirit." — J. A. Alexander.

a "Christ, the Judge of all, will have no respect of persons in judging.... He will examine the heart and pronounce His judicial sentence accordingly." — Wordsworth.

Christ is before God for me; I am before the world for Christ.

"The poor, who have no means of commending themselves to the eye; the meek, in whose mouth are no eloquent self-vindications to win the ear." —Spk. Com.

into his character the more rich he is; he is honest at the core. By this God will judge us. If we say, Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love Thee, though yesterday I denied Thee, the appeal will stand if it be the appeal of an honest man; the wound, the slight, will be forgiven, forgotten, on the sight of the first penitential tear, and the ardent desire to be better will be accepted, and answered like a prayer.—Peop. Bib.

Gifts of Christ to His Church (vs. 2).—I shall—I. Call attention to the particulars described of spiritual influence on Christ. 1. He had the spirit of wisdom and understanding; 2. Of counsel and might; 3. Of knowledge and the fear of the Lord. II. Show how the graces of spiritual influence flow from Christ to His people. 1. They first descended from the Apostles; 2. On the multitudes at the preaching of the Word; 3. These rich streams are not exhausted.—J. Ayre.

Power of Christ's Teaching.—The truths revealed in the life and teachings of Christ are of sovereign power, and are the most influential upon the motives and the conduct of human life. They go to the very root of moral consciousness. They reveal human character by applying to it a standard higher than any that was ever before applied to it. They define and mark the nature of sin in human conduct. They establish obligations upon immutable grounds, leaving them not to the shifting ingenuity of human reason, but imposing them according to Divine principles. They reveal the infinite reach of moral conduct and its eternal consequences. Thus they reveal to man the nature of himself, the nature of the government under which he lives, the nature of God, and the nature of immortality.—H. W. Beecher.

4. 5. (4) righteousness, the "right" irrespective of persons and conditions: absolute right. judge, in contrast to the corrupt princes (i. 23: x. 2) He will consider the cause of the poor and treat with equity the humble and oppressed. reprove with equity, etc., Polychr. B. "with equity will He give decision for the destitute in the land." smite the earth, Cam. B., "smite the oppressor." rod . . mouth, (comp. Rev. i. 6; Acts v:1-10) reveals "the spirit of might." His words have divine efficacy (Hos. vi. 5). (5) girdle, "the symbol of vigorous, unimpeded strength." faithfulness, truth in keeping promises. These will be the strength of the Messianic kingdom.

The Effects of Christianity upon Human Society (vss. 4-9).—I. How far is it the object of the Gospel to improve the social state? II. What are the social tendencies of Christianity? III. What have been its actual achievements?—J. Styles.

Christ the Power of the World.—Christ walked like a shadow in His day; and if you had asked at that time, "Where are the secrets of power in the world?" any Jew would have pointed to the old temple, and said, "There are the secrets of the world's power." If, as he said it, you had seen some Greek smiling, and you had asked him, "Where is the secret of power in the world?" he would have said, "Have you been in Athens? Have you seen her temples and statues? Have you seen the Parthenon? Have you seen her art and read her literature? Have you entered the depths of the learning of her Plato and Aristotle? The world's history is wrapped up in Athenian art and literature." And if, while he yet spoke, a disdainful Roman had passed by, and you had followed him and said, "Wherefore that smile?" he would have said, "The Jews and the Greeks are filled with superstitions, and are blinded as to the true source of the world's power. That power is centered in Rome, whose greatness is unequalled by that of any other nation on the globe." And how would Jew, and Greek, and Roman have joined in mirthful derision if you had pointed to that person, Jesus Christ, who was to be crucified, and said, "In that man is the secret of the whole world's power." But the Jews, the Greeks, the Romans, with their philosophies, their governments, and their power, have gone down, while this shadow has risen into greater and greater power, until it fills the world.—H. W. Beecher.

6, 7. "The rest of creation will sympathize with this reign of virtue and piety. Evil having been eradicated from the nature of man," it will also disappear among the lower animals. (Cheyne). The Bible throughout carries this idea of the close connection of nature with the c Eph. vi. 14; see Ps. xciii. 1.

"The girdle is mentioned as an essential part of Oriental dress, and that which keeps the others in proper place, and qualifies the wearer for exertion."—J. A. Alexander.

The death of Christ was a greater and more costly sacrifice than if the whole human family had perished eternally; the reason is, that it was not that of a mere man, but of God-man in one Person.

fall and redemption of man (comp. Gen. vi. 12; Hos. ii. 20; Rom. viii. 19-22). As in the primitive state (Gen. ii. 4 ff.), so in the future kingdom there is no antagonism betw. man and beast and no slaughter of domestic animals. (6) wolf .. lamb, "each animal is coupled with that one wh. is its natural prey."^a lie down, i. e. in the same pastures.^b little child, they will be so meek as not to need even a strong man's restraints. (7) lion .. straw, denoting a total change of habit.^c

Verses 6-9.—This remarkable prophecy of the idyllic state of the brute creation is imitated in the Sibylline Oracles (iii. 766 ff.) and more faintly echoed in the Fourth and Fifth Eclogues of Vergil. Similarly, an Arabic poet (Ibn Onein, quoted by Ges.) speaks of "a righteousness, through which the hungry wolf becomes tame."—The description is not to be interpreted allegorically, as if the wild beasts were merely symbols for cruel and rapacious men. Neither perhaps is it to be taken quite literally. It is rather a poetic presentation of the truth that the regeneration of human society is to be accompanied by a restoration of the harmony of creation (cf. Rom. viii. 19-22). The fact that tame and wild animals are regularly bracketed together shows that the main idea is the establishment of peace between man and the animals (Hos. ii. 20); the animals that are now wild shall no longer prey on those that are domesticated for the service of man. But the striking feature of the prophecy is that the predatory beasts are not conceived as extirpated (as Ezek. xxxiv. 25, 28) but as having their habits and instincts changed.—Camb. Bib.

The Influence of a Child.—A young man had been extremely profane, and thought little of the matter. After his marriage to a high-minded, lovely wife, the habit appeared to him in a different light, and he made spasmodic efforts to conquer it. But not until some years had passed did he become victor, when the glowing evil was set before him, by a little incident, in its real and shocking sinfulness. One Sunday morning, standing before the mirror shaving, the razor slipped, inflicting a slight wound. True to his fixed habit, he ejaculated the single word "God!" and was not a little amazed and chagrined to see reflected in the mirror the pretty picture of his little three-year-old daughter, as laying her dolly hastily down she sprang from her seat on the floor, exclaiming as she looked eagerly and expectantly about the room, "Is Dod here?" Pale and ashamed, and at a loss for a better answer, he simply said, "Why?" "Cause I thought He was when I heard you speak to Him." Then noticing the sober look on his face and the tears of shame in his eyes as he gazed down into the innocent, radiant face, she patted him lovingly on the hand, exclaiming assuringly, "Call Him again, papa, and I dess He'll surely come." Oh, how every syllable of the child's trusting words cut to his heart! The still, small voice was heard at last. Catching the wondering child up in his arms, he knelt down, and for the first time in his life implored of God forgiveness for past offences and guidance for all his future life, thanking him in fervent spirit that he had not "surely come" before in answer to some of his awful blasphemies. Surely "a little child shall lead them."—Old Test. Anec. Dawn of a New Era.—The Talmud says that after Adam and Eve had sinned, never having known night before, as the light grew paler, the wretched ones clasped one another in an agony of despair; then all grew dark, and they fell on the earth, and thought that God had withdrawn his light forever. They spent the night in tears. But a beam of light began to rise over the eastern hills, and the clouds blushed crimson, and the golden sun came back and dried the tears of Adam and Eve; and they greeted it with cries of gladness.—Baring Gould's Legends of the Patriarchs. Nothing could be more unlikely in the black night of Isaiah's prophecy than the dawning of a new day, but it came.

The Two Mothers and the Babe.—A young and beautiful woman, already a wife and mother, was living with her infant in a retired village in one of the remote provinces of France. Her husband and his father were both in Paris. During the disturbances which took place previous to the execution of the king, the father, having too openly expressed his opinions, was thrown into prison, and it was expected his

^a "These may be figures for men of corresponding animal-like characters." —Fausset.

^b "The Prophet furnishes a description of the peace and happiness to be enjoyed under the reign of Messiah, wh., for boldness and exquisite choice of imagery, far surpasses the sublimest passages in which the classical poets celebrate the renewal of the golden age." —Henderson.

^c "While the wolf, as a rule, attacks sheep-folds, a leopard can follow the goat along precipices where no wolf would venture, and the lion will carry off oxen, which neither leopard nor wolf could move." — J. G. Wood.

^c Col. iii. 12, 13.

"Pointing to so such well might Cornelia say, When the rich casket shone in bright array, 'These are my jewels!' Well, of such as he, When Jesus spake, well might the language be, 'Suffer these little ones to come to me.'" —Rogers.

At a preacher's meeting the query was started as to the ages at which the different ministers present were converted. It was ascertained that of those present twenty were converted under fourteen years of age; twenty-two under eighteen; thirteen under twenty-one; and four over twenty-one.

"Thus with something of the seer Must the moral pioneer
From the future borrow;
Clothe the waste with dreams of grain,
And on the mid-night sky of rain Paint the golden morrow."
—Whittier.

"There is something exceedingly thrilling in the voices of children singing. Though their music be unskillful, yet it finds its way to the heart with wonderful celerity. Voices of cherubs are they, for they breathe of Paradise; clear, liquid tones, that flow from pure lips and innocent hearts, like the sweetest notes of a flute, or the falling of water from a fountain!" — Longfellow.

son would share his fate. On receiving these sad tidings, the lady quitted her retreat, leaving her child to the care of a faithful friend. On reaching Paris, she sought the presence of the judges, and earnestly entreated them to pardon her father; but they were inexorable. Being at this moment deprived of the assistance of her husband, who had been obliged to fly, her perplexity was extreme, though her courage even then did not fail. Finding her efforts for the captive's deliverance of no avail, she petitioned for leave to share the prison of the venerable old man; touched by her devotion, the tribunal allowed her to spend several hours every day with the captive. She came like a sunbeam in his solitary cell, cheering his spirits with hope for the future. When the day of trial arrived, his daughter-in-law was permitted to attend him, and for three days sat at his feet,—on the third he was condemned and taken back to prison. The lady made her way through the crowd until she reached the top of a flight of stone steps leading from the hall to the street. On her arrival at this spot she became alarmed at perceiving a crowd of excited women with children in their arms, who, on seeing her about to descend, cried out, "Behold the daughter of a traitor!" Remembering that on that very spot the Princess de Lambella had been savagely murdered, she became terrified; but it was only for a moment. Observing a young woman with an infant in her arms, she met her halfway, saying, "What a fine child you have." The woman looked at her for an instant, and, presenting her babe, said, "Take it; and when you are in safety, return it to me." The lady took the child, and pressing it to her breast, walked down the steps. The crowd opened to let her pass; and, as if guarded by some invisible hand, she crossed the street in safety. As soon as the mother saw she had escaped the danger, she reclaimed her child; no words were spoken, but the women understood each other.—Paxton Hood.

I may not stay to see the day
When the great Saviour shall bear sway,
And earth shall glitter in the ray
That cometh from above;
But come it fast, or come it slow,
'Twill come at last, I surely know,
And heaven and earth shall feel the glow,
And men shall call it Love.

8, 9. (8) sucking child, "the most startling contrast of all, the innocent babe playing with the deadly serpent." asp, poss. the cobra; certainly a poisonous serpent. cockatrice, R. V., "basilisk's."^a (9) hurt nor destroy, this scene is not to be taken as allegorical, but as meaning literally that peace and not conflict shall prevail in all of God's creation, among men and beasts alike. holy mountain, Zion regarded as the seat of the Church. knowledge, etc., of His true nature. This is the great need of mankind, for as men know Him they become like Him. And when the whole earth is full of this knowledge His spirit will rule everywhere. The word "for" is explanatory. The preceding ideal condition will exist for the earth shall know God. The expression indicates also submission to that rule. the sea, poetical for the bed of the sea.

a "The cerast, or horned serpent,—a small viper, little more than a foot in length, so called from the feelers which are protruded fr. its head, while it lies hid in the sand. It is exceedingly venomous." — Michaels.

"A living, experimental, practical knowledge of God." — Naegelesbach.

Christ has a greater interest in you than you have in Him.

A colored Presbyterian deacon was in the habit of shutting his eyes, while he sang with great

The Millennial Glory.—

The animals, as once in Eden, lived
In peace. The wolf dwelt with the lamb, the bear
And leopard with the ox. With looks of love,
The tiger and the scaly crocodile
Together met, at Gambia's palmy wave.
Perched on the eagle's wing, the bird of song,
Singing, arose, and visited the sun;
And with the falcon sat the gentle lark.
The little child leaped from his mother's arms,
And stroked the crested snake and rolled unhurt
Among his speckled waves, and wished him home;

And sauntering schoolboys, slow returning, played
At eve about the lion's den, and wove
Into his shaggy mane fantastic flowers.
To meet the husbandman, early abroad,
Hasted the deer, and waved his woody head;
And round his dewy steps, the hare, unscared,
Sported and toyed familiar with his dog.
The flocks and herds o'er hill and valley spread,
Exulting cropped the ever-budding herb.
The desert blossomed, and the barren sung;
Justice and mercy, holiness and love,
Among the people walked; Messiah reigned,
And earth kept jubilee a thousand years.—Pollok.

10. ensign, the Messiah; He shall be lifted up as a sign to all nations; of Him shall all peoples seek knowledge: around Him, as Teacher, they shall gather. Comp. our Lord's word, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me."^b Gentiles, nations other than the Jews.^c rest, R. V., "resting place." The place of Messiah's dwelling in His Church. glorious, where He is manifest there shall be glory (John i. 14),—the glory of God,—the shekinah,—the divine splendor in its full revelation.

The Holy War (vs. 10).—Our Lord as an ensign—1. Musters His forces for the battle; 2. Marches with His forces to the battle; 3. Mingles with His forces in the battle.—F. W. Brown.

Ancient morality was essentially national and exclusive. Its creed was that a man was born not for himself, but for his parents, his family, and the state. The state was surrounded by others with which, unless some treaty had been concluded, it was at war. To do as much good as possible to one's own state, and as much harm as possible to all other states, was therefore the whole duty of a man.—Eccé Homo. The Reconciler of Men.—Christ inaugurated the empire of universal brotherhood and love. Wars have not yet ceased even among nations professing Christianity, but they are no longer openly gloried in by those who wage them; they are apologized for as sad necessities. The apology is often insincere, but the fact that it is made at all is a marvellous tribute to the influence and authority of Christ. Wherever His true followers meet, national distinctions are forgotten, and they feel drawn to each other by a mightier and sweeter bond. As the centuries pass away, the love of Christ becomes more and more the uniting power of the world.—Hom. Com.

11—13. (11) second time, differences of opinion prevail as to the meaning of this term. "If the standpoint (actual or ideal) of the prophecy be post-exilic, the most probable reference would be to the first return from exile under Cyrus. Otherwise, we must understand 'the first time' of the exodus from Egypt, which is hardly natural, although the prophecy does abound in allusions to that great deliverance." Camb. Bib. recover, or purchase. Pathros, Upper Egypt. Cush, Ethiopia.^a Elam. Elymais, in S. Media.^b Shinar, land on the Euphrates and Tigris. Hamath, in Syria; N. foot of Lebanon. islands, of the Mediterranean.^c (12) ensign, see vs. 10; xlix. 22, a signal to the nations to bring back the captives. corners, Heb. wings. (13) envy, wh. kept up separation bet. the kingdoms of Israel and Judah.^d One of the constantly repeated features of the time of Redemption will be the return of Israel to Jerusalem, the restoration of the city, and the reunion of the 12 tribes (comp. Joel. iii. 20; Amos ix. 15; Judges xxi. 3—6; Hosea ii. 2; iii. 5, especially Ezek. xxxvii. 15—22; Zeph. iii. 10).

Verses 11, 12.—The gathering of the "dispersed of Israel." It is of course impossible to disprove that in Isaiah's time scattered Israelites were to be found in all the countries mentioned at the end of vs. 11. Some might have been included among the captives whom Sargon settled in Elam, Babylonia and Hamath; fugitives from the Northern Kingdom might have taken refuge in considerable numbers in Egypt at the fall of Samaria; and the slave-trade might have carried small groups of Hebrews to the remoter regions. But the language here unction, "Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel!" and not seeing the contribution-plate. "Oh, yes!" said the plate-bearer; "but you just give something to make it fly."

^b Jno. xii. 32.

^c Ro. xv. 12; Ac. x. 45, 46, xxviii. 28.

"The Church, though despised by the world, having upon it the beauty of holiness, is truly glorious."—Mat. Henry.

When God gave us Christ, He gave us all gifts in one.

"Christ's love to God, and his love to men were not two great passions, but one. He loved man because he saw God in him. This must ever be the pulse of a powerful philanthropy—to see God in man. In the humblest—aye, in the most sinful human being—we see one whom God loves, whom the Saviour died for, and who may be an heir of the glory of Christ."—James Stalker.

^a i.e. Nubia and Abyssinia.

^b Or Persia.

^c Ps. lxxii. 10; Jer. ii. 10; Est. x. 1.

^d "This was one of the happy effects of the Assyrian and Chaldean captivities; they put an end to the rivalry between the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah."—Wordsworth.

seems to imply a Jewish dispersion on a large scale, and the only wholesale deportations that had taken place in Isaiah's time were those of Northern Israelites to the Assyrian Empire (2 Ki. xv. 29, xvii. 6). On the other hand, the references exactly fit the circumstances of the post-exilic period, when large colonies of Jews are known to have been spread over the lands here enumerated.—Camb. Bib.

The United States Seal.—The ordinary great seal of the United States is commonly seen; but the design of the reverse side I have never seen except on the outside of the postal cars and in the encyclopedia. The design is an unfinished pyramid; over it is an eye symbolizing God's providence, and the motto, "Annuit Cœptis." "He favors what has been begun;" and, underneath the motto, "Novus ardo seculorum," "A new order of the ages," and with Him not only the individual man, but the world will be completed.—Peloubet.

14—16. (14) fly, or swoop, as a bird of prey (Hab. i. 8), not a spiritual but a military conquest. "In passing from the second to the third part of this prophecy, we cannot but feel that we descend to a lower point of view and a less pure atmosphere of spiritual ambition. Isaiah, who has just declared peace between man and beast, finds that Judah must clear off certain scores against her neighbors before there can be peace between man and man. He admits, indeed, the reconciliation of Ephraim and Judah; but the first act of the reconciled brethren, he prophesies with exultation, will be to swoop down upon their cousins Edom, Moab and Ammon, and their neighbors the Philistines; he could not as yet perceive any way for the conversion of the rest of the world except through Israel's political supremacy."—G. A. Smith. Upon the shoulders, Polychr. B., "slope." spoil . . east, i. e. the Arabs of the Eastern desert. (15) utterly destroy, "several ancient versions read 'shall dry up' (comp. l. 2). the tongue, etc., i. e. the gulf of Suez. mighty wind, R. V., scorching wind. the river, i. e. the Euphrates (vii. 20; viii. 7). in . . seven, R. V., "into seven streams." (16) highway, or road clear of obstructions (xxxv. 8; xl. 3, 4; xlii. 16; xlix. 11, etc).

Harsh Discipline the Way to Joy.—A little child, dropped as a waif in New York, alas! made beautiful, now coming to be thirteen or fourteen years of age, without friends, and with many that have lustful eyes upon her, is met by the gracious missionary at the "Five Points." And he beholds her, and his heart yearns toward her. He finds out where she lives in her little chamber, as yet not quite fallen, not quite overborne, yet coarse and rude and already beginning to love the taste of the poison of flattery, already beginning to listen willingly, already beginning to calculate and to throb evil thoughts. He looks upon her, and is sad for her. While others would open her chamber door and endeavor to persuade her to dismiss her industry; while others say to her, "Go, flutter, and be gay: take life and enjoy it while you may," he loves her more than they do. They love as the swine loves the husk, which he chews for the juice, and spits out a rejected cud; but he loves that child with the consciousness of what her immortality is, of what is the treasure of the riches that is in her, if only it can be saved and educated. And he would shut the door. They would open it. He would rather see her weep. They would rather see her laugh. He would rather see her suffer, and go poorly clad. They would be glad if she would take temptation under the proffer of ribbons and jewelry. They would be glad to see her dressed in all these gewgaw trifles. He, gaining influence with her, seems to her, in her moments of temptation, like a hard master. And yet, tell me, if it was your child, and if, after years had passed by, you found that this wanderer from your house had been saved by this missionary, and brought up in cramped circumstances, and familiar with poverty, and that he had been a faithful teacher to her, so that at length, when she reached her majority, she was still a virtuous woman, and beginning to love virtue more than vice, would you not say that he had been the truest sympathizer? And who would sympathize most with you? Would it be that "indulgent deity" who should make the present hour pleasant to you, and leave you to the waste of an eternal undoing? or would it be One who loved you so much that He was willing to administer discipline a "The Heb. for shoulder is in Nu. xxxiv. 11, used also of a maritime coast." —Fausset.

"The prophecy was fulfilled, as regards Philistia, when the returned captives under Antiochus Epiphanes and Jonathan, etc., secured the seaboard of Canaan." —Henderson.

"Truth is quite beyond the reach of satire. There is so brave a simplicity in her that she can no more be made ridiculous than an oak or a pine." —J. R. Lowell.

"How many a Christian pilgrim would never have seen anything of the spiritual manna and the spiritual stream from the rock, had God listened to him, when, with fear and trembling, he besought Him not to lead him into a desert." —Krummacher.

"My burden is light." A light burden indeed, wh. carries him that bears it. I have looked through all nature for a resemblance of this, and I seem to find a shadow of it in the wings of a bird, which are indeed borne by the creature, and yet support his flight towards heaven." —Bernard.

and watching and pain, and wring tears, that through those tears He might open the fountain of future joys? Is not that the divinest and truest sympathy? Are there any of us that do not need just such a friend as this in Jesus Christ?—H. W. Beecher.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

1-3. (1) that day, of recovery and triumph. "This chap. is the conclusion of the first great division of the book. It consists of two short hymns of praise (vss. 1, 2, and 3-6), which are put in the mouth of the ransomed people." wast angry,^a a word found elsewhere in the Psalms only. Ps. ii. 12; lx. 1, etc. (2) my salvation, tracing the deliverance wholly to His providence and grace. Lord Jehovah, Heb. Yah-Yahveh, a reduplication of the sacred covenant name (ch. xxvi. 4), a verbal quotation of Ex. xv. 2. (3) with joy, produced by such perfect trust. draw water, at the feast of Tabernacles one of the ceremonies of late origin was the daily libation of water, supposed to have been suggested by this verse (Oehler), and referred to by Christ in John vii. 37:viii. 12. The water was brought in a golden pitcher, from the fountain of Siloah, through the water-gate into the Temple, and there, mixed with wine, it was poured on the sacrifice, with great rejoicing (Lowth).

Elim (vss. 1-3).—In this wilderness are wells, or fountains, from whence we may receive strength and comfort. Let us show—I. To what the privilege is traceable. 1. To the reconciliation affected by the Mediator; 2. To the penitence and faith of the recipient. II. In what the privilege consists. 1. God's unmerited yet abundant love to sinners; 2. The everlasting nature of the promises of God; 3. The finished work and constant intercession of our Lord Jesus; 4. The descriptions of the final home of the saints; 5. The presence and rich grace of the Holy Spirit. III. How the privilege should be regarded. To embrace it eagerly, we must have—I. The vessel of faith; 2. The chain of prayer. IV. In what manner the privilege should be embraced. "With joy." 1. Instance several considerations to lead to this joyous state of heart; 2. Show after what manner this joy should be expressed.—Stems and Twigs.

The Wells of Salvation.—It is said that while the French engineers were boring for water in the African desert, the Arabs looked on in silent wonder, until they saw the precious stream actually gushing forth, and then their joy knew no bounds; and sweet and precious as the cooling waters are now to the weary, laboring child of the desert, so precious were they to the people to whom the words of the Prophet were originally addressed; and the promise to them of an indefinite supply of that element would be highly appreciated by them, and well calculated to inspire their gratitude and joy.—Lessons from Jesus.

4, 5. (4) Praise, give thanks to; a quotation again from Ps. cv. 1. call upon, lit. "call by (means of) His name," i. e. use His name in solemn invocation. comp. I Ki. xviii. 24. Worship Him by the name Jehovah. (5) excellent things, i. e. He hath wrought triumphantly. known, R. V. "let this be known."

Joy of Communion with Christ.—No sooner do you pass the brow of the St. Gothard pass, on your way to Italy, than you perceive that, beyond all question, you are on the sunny side of the Alps. The snow lying there is nothing in comparison to the vast accumulation upon the Swiss side of the summit, the wind ceases to be sharp and cutting, and a very few minutes' ride brings you into a balmy air which makes you forget that you are so greatly elevated above the sea level. There is a very manifest difference between the southern side and the bleak northern aspect. He who climbs above the cares of the world, and turns his face to his God, has found the sunny side of life. The world's side of the hill is chill and freezing to a spiritual mind, but the Lord's presence gives a warmth of joy which turns winter into summer. Some pilgrims to heaven appear never to have passed the summit of religious difficulty; they are still toiling over the Devil's Bridge, or loitering at ^a "God's people can truly thank Him even for His severe discipline, which would not let them glide on smoothly to ruin. His wrath was but 'the jealousy' of true love." — Spk. Com.

Ro. vi. 17.

"It is the water that is so precious, not the wooden cup or the golden chalice that contains it. It is not new 'theories' and 'views' and 'opinions' that are precious, but the Word of the living God, which is the pure water of life, and of which whoso drink shall live; for the written Word all leads to the living Word — Jesus Christ, the Saviour of men." — Pul. Com.

"Take the Gospel. What is it? It brings us glad tidings of great joy. It is infinitely important, it is eternally interesting to us. It is our life. It is all our salvation, and it should be all our desire. Therefore we should receive it as a faithful and worthy of all acceptance. We should receive it as a dying man would a remedy, or as a condemned criminal would hail a reprieve. We should receive it with feelings superior to those with which we receive anything else. It is a subject which rises infinitely above all others in interest and importance, and demands all the energies of the soul." — Jay.

a "All honor and all salvation of Zion rest in this, that it has the Lord in its midst of it as its living and personal shield and fountain of life."
—Nagelsbach.

"It is the honor and happiness of Israel that the God who is in covenant with them, and in the midst of them, is infinitely great."
—M. Henry.

"It is recorded by Plutarch that when the Romans delivered a certain people from the tyranny of the Macedonians and the Spartans, the cry of the delivered men was so great that it dissipated the very air, and birds flying across that plane of the hemisphere fell down amazed. Have we ever rent the air with our cries and shouts of delight and thankfulness?"

"Revelation never volunteers anything that man could discover for himself, on the principle probably that it is only when he is capable of discovering it that he is capable of appreciating it."
—Drummond.

The ground, league beyond league, like one great cemetery is covered o'er with moldering monuments: and let the living wander where they will, they cannot leave the footsteps of the dead.

The Spanish mariners never touched upon new land without at once setting up the standard of Ferdinand and Isabella. Wherever the Christian goes, his first thought should be to take possession of all hearts in the name of the Lord Jesus.

Andermatt, or plunging into the deep snowdrifts of their own personal unworthiness, ever learning, but never coming to a full knowledge of the truth; they have not attained to a comfortable perception of the glory, preciousness, and all-sufficiency of the Lord Jesus, and therefore abide amid the winter of their doubts and fears. If they had but faith to surmount their spiritual impediments, how changed would everything become! It is fair traveling with a sunny land smiling before your eyes, especially when you retain a grateful remembrance of the bleak and wintry road which you have traversed; but it is sorry work to be always stopping on the Swiss side of the mountain. How is it that so many do this?—C. H. Spurgeon. Excellent things.—Is it true that God hath done excellent things—say for ourselves? Do not search ancient history for the excellent things done by God, but search your own little life; and if in that life no excellent things have been wrought, say so, and be dumb so far as this sacrifice of religious praise is concerned. You have a right to be silent. If your life has had no sunshine, no blessing, no help, no sympathy, you have a right to say in the sanctuary, I will not sing, and thus to chide God by your silence. But be sure you can say it. "Life" is a large term; it covers all the days of your breathing, from earliest infancy up till the present moment: it will certainly be a phenomenon without a parallel if any man can say that the sunshine never fell upon his life, that what good he has he has by his own strength and wit, and that he owes nothing to supernatural or superhuman power.—Peop. B.

6. Cry out and shout, so that men everywhere shall hear your good tidings (Comp. xxiv. 14; liv. 1). inhabitant, fem. inhabitress, the Church dwelling in Zion, daughter of Zion.* midst of thee, Zech. iii. 15, 17.

The Duty of Gladness (vs. 6).—Note two things: the person addressed, the admonition given. I. The truth upon which the admonition is founded. This includes—1. The character; 2. The greatness; 3. And residence of God, who is in the midst of His people universally, socially, individually. II. The exhortation enjoined. It teaches two things. 1. That as religion has to do with the feelings, it is absurd to place it in forms, etc.; 2. That religion is not only animated but rational, a reasonable service, etc.—W. Zarg.

Zion.—Is this the city of which such glorious things are spoken—that the Highest Himself should establish her, that she should not be moved? Where are His mighty promises of perpetuity? Where is that foundation which no power should ever shake—that Zion, in which the poor of His people were to trust? Brethren, look around you, and you behold the evidences of its existence, and of the eternal faithfulness of Him who is pledged to its immortality. A greater than Zion inherits her name; a greater than Zion bore it in the far-reaching scope of the prophetic vision. That "city of the great King" was but a perishable emblem of a "city whose builder and maker is God." It is true she was honored by His symbolic presence and sanctified by His sacred worship; it is true that for ages she alone, in a world of darkness, held the precious lamp of His truth; but what are these characters of honor to hers, whose every living stone is quickened by His indwelling energy, whose worship is no more in type and shadow, but in spirit and in substance; whose preaching and teaching, no longer shrouded in obscurity and limited to a corner of the earth, spreads over all lands, embraces the whole family of mankind, and makes even the course of that sun whose "going forth is from the end of the heaven and his circuit unto the ends of it, and from whose light nothing is hid," a faint image of the power with which she diffuses through all nations "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." (See also 2 Cor. iii. 10, 11).—Archer Butler.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

xiii. 1 to xiv. 23 treats of the fall of Babylon. Here begins the second division of Isaiah and the first of a series of oracles dealing with foreign nations. Ch. xiii has three main divisions: vss. 2—8, the impending attack; 9-16, the meaning of the judgment; 17-22, the fate of Babylon.—Camb. Bible. 1. burden,^b R. V. margin, "oracle concerning." The word means literally "the lifting up" (of the voice). did see, with prophetic insight (comp. i. 1 and ii. 1).

Typical Burdens (vs. 1).—I. The burden of Babylon, the doom of the empire of force. II. The burden of Egypt, the doom of craft and false wisdom. III. The burden of Tyre, the doom of unhallowed commerce; these burdens are illustrations of principles in themselves, they are also true of the Church.—Paxton Hood.

Babylon.—1. Name of place afterwards called Babylon was Babel = confusion (Ge. xi. 8, 9), or gate of Il, a Babylonian deity. 2. Situation: on the river Euphrates (Ge. xi. 31, cf. Jos. xxiv. 2, 3), about 300 miles from the mouth. 3. Description: if accounts of ancient writers (as Herodotus, Ctesias) are to be believed, it must have been of wonderful size and beauty. In shape, square; 120 furlongs each way. Walls 50 cubits thick, and 200 high (Jer. li. 53-58). "Upon the top of walls, and along the edges of them, they constructed buildings of a single chamber, facing one another, leaving room between for a four-horse chariot to turn. 100 brazen gates; houses three or four stories high. Taking the least of ancient measurements, Babylon must have = four or five times the size of London." 4. Present state of Babylon. Nothing remains but mounds of rubbish, and heaps of bricks covered with arrow-head characters. Already the investigations of Rawlinson, and others, have thrown much light on its ancient history, and strikingly confirmed the Scripture narrative.—Topics for Teachers.

The Need of Revelation.—It is well that there are some men who see what may be called the more majestic and overpowering aspects of God. Some of us are afraid almost to utter the great words which properly belong to the deity as descriptive of His nature and attributes and government. Herein what a wonderful difference there is between the Old Testament and the New, between the Hebrew and the Greek! Neither is sufficient alone: some men never look at the sky; they look only at the earth; others are not satisfied with looking at what is under their feet, they must with eager yet reverent eyes search the mystery of the heavens. We need all kinds of revelation in order that we may approximate to an idea concerning God's nature, so wondrous, yet so simple; so lifted up above all time and space as known to us, and yet walking by our very sides, and tabernacling within us as an invited guest.—Peop. Bib.

2, 3. "This prophecy differs from all that precede it in the remarkable circumstance that it stands unrelated to Isaiah's own age. The Jews are represented as in exile and about to be delivered (xiv. 1, 2)." Hence it is believed to have been written by some one during the exile.—Driver. (2) Lift . . mountain,^a i. e. raise the standard in a conspicuous place. exalt . . hand, summon them on with voice and hand, shouting to them and beckoning. gates . . nobles, i. e. through the gates of a city of princes, ancient dynasties which these Medes were to overthrow. (3) sanctified ones, or "consecrated ones," set apart to do God's work. Note that He is speaking of the Median armies. This is one of the many passages that refer to God's guidance of the history of other nations beside Judaea (comp. Amos i. and ix. 7; Is. xix. 2, 23, 25; Hab. i. 5, 6; Ezek. i. 9; Is. xlv. 22). even them that rejoice in my highness, R. V. "even my proudly exulting ones," "the phrase describes the exuberant spirits of the warrior."—Cheyne. (comp. Zeph. iii. 11).

Lifting Up the Banner.—Truly, in Christian warfare we might learn something from military enterprise. Have we put our banner in the right place? It is not enough to have a banner, we must be careful where we plant it; it may be mistaken for a tree, it may get entangled among the branches of great oaks or cedars: it is not enough to have a light, we must put it on the candlestick, and set it on the table, and not cover it with a bushel so that the darkness may be unrelieved by its presence: it is not enough to have intelligence, we must properly display it, use it for the benefit of those who are not so intelligent as we are: it is not enough to have schools, we must set the doors wide open, and compel the ignorant to enter that they may return from the sanc-

^a The Medes came from mountain districts. Reference is to the gathering of warriors under Cyrus, whom God made His agent for the destruction of Babylon.

"Escape means nothing more than the gradual emergence of the higher being from the lower and nothing less. It means the gradual putting off of all that cannot enter the higher state or heaven and simultaneously the putting on of Christ. It involves the slow completing of the soul and the development of the capacity for God." — Drummond.

^a "Great princes and armies are but tools in God's hand, weapons that He is pleased to make use of in doing His work, and it is His wrath that arms them, and gives them success."—M. Henry.

tuary of wisdom instructed and mentally fortified: it is not enough to have a church, we must open every door and every window, and bid all the people welcome—the more wicked, the more welcome; the more ignorant, if willing to learn, the more desired with the solicitude of sympathy and interest.—Peop. Bib.

4. 5. (4) The noise, etc., Polychr. Bib. translates:

"Hark! a tumult in the mountains as of a great multitude!
Hark! an uproar of kingdoms, of nations gathered together!
It is Jehovah Sabaoth mustering the warlike host."

the mountains, N. E. of Babylon, over which the Medes were to approach. kingdoms of nations, Medes, Persians, and Armenians, making up Cyrus's army. (5) far country, emphasizes the breadth of the sway of the Lord of Hosts, and His power to raise up His armies from unexpected and unknown quarters.^a

Every Man's Life a Plan of God.—The Christian minister has the right, without special vision, to declare to every man that God has a purpose to be fulfilled in his particular life, and that he is marshalling events and mustering "forces" in order that it may be carried out. It ought to raise our estimate of the sacredness and value of the life God has given us to live on the earth when we remember that "every man's life is a plan of God," and that by it He desires and designs to accomplish some special end.—Pul. Com.

6—8. (6) Howl, as those on whom sudden calamity comes. the day of the Lord, (ii. 12 ff.) i. e. His day of battle and victory, when His righteousness shall be vindicated, whether against the sinners of Israel or, as here, against other unrighteous nations. Not the final day of judgment. Instead of howling or fearing, Babylon was found feasting in self-security. destruction, or like a sudden stroke. the Almighty, i. e. El-shaddai, a title found first in Gen. xvii. 1 and xxviii. 3; xxxv. 11, etc., peculiarly a patriarchal name for God, and refers to Him as exhibiting special deeds of power.—Oehler. (7) faint, R. V. "feeble," the suddenness of the attack would prevent resistance, and fill all with the spirit of hopelessness. (8) amazed . . . another,^b trans., "Stupefied each will look at the other." flames, in the flush of excitement and alarm.

God's Instruments for Punishment.—God has two sets of instruments—natural agents, such as storm, lightning, blight, pestilence, etc.; and intellectual and moral agents, or persons. It depends entirely on his own will whether he will employ agents of the one kind or of the other. In dispensing good to man he employs largely natural agents, "making his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sending rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. v. 45). But in punishing men he seems to make use, to a greater extent, of persons. Now he raises up a tyrannical and oppressive kind, like Rameses II. or Nebuchadnezzar, to carry out his sentence of suffering; now he allows a democratic assembly to establish a reign of terror in a sinful land; anon he uses the arrows of savage hordes, or the guns and bayonets of disciplined hosts, to chastise an offending people. Once only has he ever used his power to strike with sudden death on a large scale, and even there he employed a spiritual agent; it was "the angel of the Lord," who "went out and smote in the camp of the Assyrians one hundred and fourscore and five thousand" (2 Kings xix. 35).—Pul. Com.

9—11. (9) cruel, unrelentingly severe. (10) stars, lit. their Orions.^c In this day of divine wrath even the heavens shall withhold their light" (Am. v. 18). The stars which Babylon has worshipped, and sun and moon, will cease to shine. (11) the world, which, so far as then known, seemed to be under Babylonian empire.

The Day of Jehovah.—The thought that God holds inquisition for evil and evil-doers is deeply stamped in Bible lore. There are heresies which he cannot and will not tolerate. They are not identical with what some call heresies. These are often departures from our fashions of life and thought; but it is only disagreement with him and his law of inward right that is the condemnable dissent. Again, it is his object to bring down the pride and arrogance of the haughty. How deeply marked, again, is this thought of overstepping our proper limits as the ^b Da. v. 6.

"He lives long who lives well; and time mis-spent is not lived, but lost. Besides, God is better than His promises, if He takes from him a long lease, and gives a freehold of a better value."—Fuller.

"What man made man may destroy; what God has made, God will preserve. The grass of infidel oratory withereth, the flower of Christian interpretation often fadeth, but the Word of our God shall stand forever."—R. S. MacArthur.

^c "Heb. Keshim. Keshil, the self-confident, is the title given to the constellation Orion."—Spk. Com.

^d "A fine specimen of the figurative manner in which the Heb. Prophets depict the horrors of national calamity. The metaphors of light and darkness are common; but when the effect is to be heightened, the writer represents the sources of light as being themselves affected. See Is. xiv. 23, xxxiv. 4; Eze. xxxii. 7, 8; Joel ii. 10, iii. 15; Am. viii. 9; Mat. xxiv. 29."—Henderson.

essence of sin, from the Fall onwards! It is fixed in the word "transgression." The "lust to seem the thing we are not" is at the root of display, of ambition, of domineering over others. The prophets saw in the bloated dominion of great states like Egypt and Assyria the effects of these unbalanced lusts, which must sooner or later topple the tyrants into ruin. And thus the purpose of judgment resolves itself into that of sifting mankind—to make the people "rarer than fine gold, and men than Ophir's treasures." When ill weeds are cleared away, there is a chance for good plants to flourish; and when a mass of human evil has disappeared, room is made for something of another quality, to renew the tradition of the Divine in man.—Pul. Com.

12, 13. (12) more precious, indicating the completeness of the national destruction. wedge of Ophir, R. V. "the fine gold of Ophir," the gold country of India that lay nearest to the Phoenicians, the finest gold being brought from this district." (13) shake the heavens, "by the outbreak of Jehovah's wrath the material universe is shaken to its foundations. Such representations are common in the descriptions of the day of the Lord, and are not to be dismissed as merely figurative." Cf. ch. ii. 12 ff.—Camb. Bib.

Dignity of Human Nature Shown from its Ruins.—Dr. Horace Bushnell has a fine sermon in 'New Life,' p. 16, entitled, "The Dignity of Human Nature shown from its Ruins." After speaking of many who "magnify the dignity of human nature, by tracing its capabilities, and the tokens it reveals of a natural affinity with God and truth. They distinguish lovely instincts, powers, and properties allied to God, aspirations reaching after God," he undertakes to "show the essential greatness and dignity of man from the ruin itself which he becomes;" and then he says, "Nor is it anything new, or a turn more ingenious than just, that we undertake to raise our conceptions of human nature in this manner, for it is in just this way that we are accustomed to get our measures and form our conceptions of many things; of the power, for example, of ancient dynasties, and the magnificence of ancient works and cities, such, for example, as Egypt, Rome, Thebes, Karnac, Luxor, or Nineveh. So it is with man. Our most veritable, though saddest, impressions of his greatness, as a creature, we shall derive from the magnificent ruin he displayed. In that ruin we shall distinguish fallen powers that lie as broken pillars on the ground; temples of beauty, whose scarred and shattered walls still indicate their ancient, original glory; summits covered with broken stones, infested by asps, where the palaces of high thought and great aspiration stood, and righteous courage went up to maintain the citadel of the mind—all a ruin now—archangel ruined."

14—16. (14) as the chased, or as it is with the chased roe. Comp. Jer. l. 16; li. 9, Ezek. xvii. 4: The multitude who had made Babylon their home for purposes of commerce now hurriedly flee to their native lands. (15) found, present in the city at the time of the siege, both the proper inhabitants, and the foreigners resident there. The ruin will be general. joined unto them, R. V. "taken," that is, in flight. (16) children, etc., "that the capture of Babylon should be marked by the atrocities here spoken of was no doubt to be expected from the character of the Medes, but no such crimes appear to have stained the actual victory of Cyrus. According to Babylonian records he took possession of the city peacefully. Cf. Ps. cxxxvii. 9; Nah. iii. 10; Hos. xiii. 16; 2 Kings viii. 12. The last half of the verse is repeated in Zech. xiv. 2."—Camb. Bib.

Hope in Misery.—When you see a surgeon performing a terrible operation on a patient, you are sure that he is confident that the patient will be restored to health. So when we look at the world as it is, we are certified that there is a better world to be. God would never have permitted the world to be, if He did not see how out of this present misery He could educe eternal and triumphant blessedness. Towards that better future God is leading on the world. The revulsion of feeling with which we read this prediction is one proof of it; there was a time when such incidents in the prosecution of a war would have been regarded as a matter of course. That it should not be so now marks an advance, and is a prophecy of further advances.—Hom. Com.

* 1 Chr. xxxix. 4. The locality of Ophir is still an open question.

"A banner long unused and laid away grows dusty and moth-eaten, and needs to be unrolled and shaken out, and borne high in air. So spiritual life decays in the confinement and darkness of the world; and that it may gain new vigor, our thoughts must now and then be unfolded and held high, and shaken in the air of heaven."—Sunday Teachers' Treasury.

"If we neglect the ordinary means of keeping a garden in order, how shall it escape running to weeds and waste? Or if we neglect the opportunities for cultivating the mind, how shall it escape ignorance and feebleness? So, if we neglect the soul, how shall it escape the natural retrograde movement, the inevitable relapse into barrenness and death?"—Drummond.

"Let us see that our knowledge of Christ is not a powerless, barren, unpractical knowledge. Remember, a holy calling never saved any man, without a holy heart. If our tongues only be sanctified, our whole man must be condemned."—Flavel.

^a At this time the Medes were subject to Assyria.

^b Isa. xxii. 3, 6.

"In many of those who seem utterly free from the love of money, it is only dormant. Many who appear to be utterly free from the love of money are so simply because they have never possessed more than sufficed for their bare necessities. Let them possess more, and avarice will show itself."

^c Travelers remark that the Bedawin Arabs still have a superstitious dread of lodging on the site of Babylon."—Spk. Com.

"The region was once most fertile, but owing to the Euphrates being now no longer kept within its former channels, it has become a stagnant marsh, unfit for flocks; and on the wastes of its ruins, bricks and cement, no grass grows."—Fausset.

"Out of such scenes as those the prophet depicts, a solemn voice seems to speak, declaring that human life and glory are held cheap in comparison with those profound and, from us, half-hidden, half-revealed ends towards which the whole creation moves."—Johnson.

"As the little living seeds dropped into the crack of the huge temple become the upspringing plants which push their way through the strong masonry and at length overturn the tall

17, 18. (17) Medes,^a became a leading power in 606 B. C. when they joined with the Chaldeans in over-throwing Assyria. Cyrus was originally a vassal-king of the Median empire, reigning over a narrow territory to which then the name of Persia was restricted. In 549 he overthrew the Median dynasty and in 538 conquered Babylon. regard silver, not to be bought off. They care not for money. They are after mastery. "They come not to rob but to displace." Xenophon tells us that "disregard of riches" was a characteristic of the Medes. (18) bows, "for wh. the Persians were famed."

Bows.—Both Herodotus and Xenophon mention that the Persians used large bows; and the latter says particularly, that their bows were three cubits long. They were celebrated for their archers (Jer. xlix. 35). Probably their neighbors and allies, the Medes, dealt much in the same sort of arms. In Psalm xviii. 34, and Job xx. 24, mention is made of a bow of brass. If the Persian bows were of metal, we may easily conceive that with a metalline bow of three cubits' length, and proportionably strong, the soldiers might dash and slay the young men, the weaker and unresisting part of the inhabitants, in the general carnage on taking the city.—Lowth.

19, 20. (19) glory of kingdoms, Isa. xiv. 4, xlvii. 5; Je. li. 41. The great central metropolis of many nations. beauty, etc., transl. "the proud boast of the Chaldeans," "it was the primitive dwelling place of the Chaldeans of the lowlands."—Delitzsch. as . . Gomorrah, i. e. as utterly and hopelessly destroyed. Comp. Gen. xix. 24 ff; Deut. xxix. 23; Jer. xlix. 18; Amos. iv. 11. (20) never be, Cyrus did not utterly destroy the city. Darius (in 518 B. C.) levelled most of its walls; other conquerors carried on the work and by the time of Strabo (60 B. C.) it was a perfect desert and has so remained.^c

Verses 9—20.—This passage bears a close resemblance to Ezekiel's dirge over the fall of Pharaoh and his host (Ez. xxxii. 19 ff.). Many questions of great interest and importance are suggested by both. The most important is how far such representations are to be taken as expressing the fixed belief of the writers or their age with regard to the state after death. Their affinities with Babylonian speculation on that subject, taken in connection with the fact that such elaborate descriptions of the underworld do not occur before the Exile, may indicate that the imagination of the writers had been influenced by their contact with the religion of their conquerors. In that case it may be reasonable to suppose that they freely availed themselves of the material thus laid to their hand merely as poetic imagery, without meaning to attribute strict objective reality to all the conceptions. At the same time there was a common basis of belief underlying the Hebrew and Babylonian ideas regarding the future state, and all that is essential to the understanding of this passage was probably familiar to the minds of the Israelites before the Exile. In the conception as here presented the following point is to be noted. Sheol, which is figured as a vast subterranean region, is the common gathering-place of all the dead. They exist there as shades, repha'im (vs. 9), a word which is usually explained to mean "feeble ones,"—weak, pithless adumbrations of the living form. These are represented as capable of being roused to a transient interest in human affairs by the arrival amongst them of so distinguished a personage as the king of Babylon; but their ordinary condition is one of utter inactivity, a sort of conscious death rather than life. It is true that the writer speaks only of kings and potentates, and throws little light on the state of the common man after death. Still the Old Testament as a whole knows nothing of separate spheres of existence for the righteous and for the wicked, and that idea is certainly not to be imported into the present passage.—Camb. Bib.

Re-Entrance of Nature.—Beware of arrogance, pride, worldliness, self-sufficiency; beware of the betrayal of trusts; nature will re-enter if we be unfaithful. If the gardener is too late by one day with his spade or seed or other attention, nature begins to re-enter; and if he tarry for a week he will find that nature has made great advances into the property. It is so with education, with the keeping up of intelligence, with the maintenance of healthy discipline; relax a month, and nature re-enters, and nature plays the spoiler. Nature is not a thrifty, careful husbandman. Nature has a function of desolation; she will grow weeds in your richest flower-beds if you neglect them for a day.—Peop. Bib. Fulfilment of prophecy.—Babylon also furnishes another instance. Surrounded by such scenes as the modern traveler describes, and comparing them with the pictures of history and prophecy, one may well exclaim with Brownlee:—

“Where are the cities which of old in mighty grandeur rose Amid the desert’s burning sands, or girt with frozen snows?
Is there no vestige now remains, their wondrous tale to tell,
Of how they blazed like meteor-stars, and how, like them, they fell?
Hark! hark! the voice of prophecy comes o’er the desert wide!
Come down, come down, and in the dust thy virgin beauties hide:
O ‘daughter of Chaldæa,’ thou no more enthroned shalt be,
For the desert and the wilderness alone shall tell of thee.
Though old Euphrates still rolls in his everlasting stream, Thy brazen gates and golden halls, as though they ne’er had been;
Where stood thy massy tower-crowned walls, and palaces of pride,
The dragon and the wild beast now therein securely hide;
The ‘besom of destruction’ o’er thee hath swept its way
In wrath, because thine impious hand on God’s Anointed lay.”

21, 22. (21) doleful creatures, howlers, owls, R. V., “ostriches.” dwellers in ruins, satyrs,^a probably demons are meant, the evil spirits whom Oriental peoples believe inhabit deserts and dangerous places. (22) desolate houses, R. V., “and wolves shall cry in their castles.” dragons, R. V., “jackals.” ‘All these animals mentioned are really found there, on the soil of ancient Babylon.’ Comp. Rev. xviii. 3: Jer i:39. Is. xxxiv. 14, 15. time is near, only a century and a half away. prolonged, by any reprieve or delay.

Babylon’s Effacement.—When Babylon was first deserted of its inhabitants, the Persian kings turned it into a park for hunting, and kept their wild beasts there. When the Persian empire declined, the beasts broke loose so that, when Alexander the Great marched eastward, he found Babylon a perfect desert. He intended to restore Euphrates to its ancient channel, but the design not having been completed, the river overflowed its banks, and the greater part of that once celebrated city became a lake or pool of water. Theodorus who lived about 400 years after Christ, tells us that Babylon was the receptacle of snakes, serpents, and all sorts of noxious animals, so that it was dangerous to visit it. Benjamin of Toledo, a Jew who visited it in 1112, informs us, that few remains of it were left nor were there any inhabitants within many miles of it. Rawolffe, a German who traveled to the east in 1572 found it very difficult to discover the place on which it stood, nor could the neighboring inhabitants give him proper directions.—Whitcross.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

1—3. This chapter contains a spirited triumphal song prepared for the hour of deliverance. vss. 1—4 are introductory and connect the song with the preceding prophecy. (1) have mercy, in restoring Israel after captivity, yet choose, yet again, “as if by a second act of electing grace,” strangers,^a “Proselytes,” from among the heathen, will return with them, as Ruth did with Naomi, having learned from the exiles to believe in God. (2) the people, of Babylon, for servants, Ezr. ii. 65. captives, the tables will be turned. (Comp. xlv. 14 and lvi. 6, 7.) This is retribution, but not necessarily revengeful. These masters will be inspired by a different spirit from their former oppressors. (3) rest, etc., in the gracious providence wh. brought Israel back to Canaan.

Without God:—Three ways a man may be said to be without God. 1. By profane atheism. 2. By false worship. 3. By want of spiritual worship. Great is the misery of those who are without God. God is a fountain of life; whoso is far from Him must perish.—Paul Bayne.

columns and the massive walls and lay the whole structure on the ground; so the seed of Divine truth, inserted in the temple of error, of vice, of tyranny, of idolatry, of iniquity, shall spring and grow, and thrust and overturn, until the frowning walls have fallen and the structure of sin is a harmless ruin.” —Pul. Com.

a “The Moco, or Macacus Arabicus, is at present found in Babylonla.” —Tristram.

“The essential idea is that Babylon should one day be inhabited exclusively by animals peculiar to the wilderness, implying that it should become a wilderness itself.” —J. A. Alexander.

About B. C. 20 the site of Babylon was described by Strabo as a vast desolation.

a “Tacitus, a heathen, attests the fact of numbers of Gentiles having become Jews in his time.” —Fausset.

See Est. viii. 17; Ac. ii. 9—12.

b “There would be a change of conditions bet. them and their oppressors.” —J. A. Alexander.

“Thou hast made us for Thyself, O Lord: and our heart is restless until it rests in Thee.” —St. Augustine.

“The rest of God is the rest of character and of love; and the rest for man is the rest of character and of trust — of that character which grows up out of the root "trust." —Pul. Com.

"The law produces legal conviction and leads to despair; the gospel produces evangelical conviction and leads to hope." — A. J. Gordon.

"The law slays the sinner, grace slays the sin." — Ada R. Haber-shore.

c "The passage, vss. 4—23, moves in lengthened elegiac measure like a song of lamentation for the dead, and is full of lofty scorn." — Herder. "A son of derision about the representative of the Babylonish world-power cannot be appropriate while one is in its power. When one is out of reach of his arm, then the long pent-up resentment may find expression." — Nagelsbach.

d "The Bab. monarchy bade fair to be an absolute, universal, and perpetual one, and in these pretensions vied with the Almighty." — Mat. Henry.

"'Tis liberty, fair liberty alone, That gives the fleeting flower of life its sweetness and perfume."

"They who live to the flesh are living crumbling lives, and are going towards dissolution all the time. It is only they who

Work of Christians.—You are forgiven and accepted. You owe all to Christ. You look forth from your position of safety, and behold a world lying in wickedness. You pity the sinful, as the Lord pitied you. Having been saved, you desire, as if by an instinct, to be a saviour. You begin. You grasp a fallen brother by the best band, a brother's love, and draw him to yourself that you may draw him to the Saviour. For a time you seem to have gained your brother. But after a while, at some unguarded moment, and through some unguarded opening, seven devils enter and dwell again in the partially reformed heart, and the last state of the man seems worse than the first. You are weary; but you must still work. Now is the time for toil: the rest remaineth. Two young men were disporting on the ice of a Scottish lake. One, approaching incautiously a treacherous spot, fell through. His companion came quickly to the rescue. Himself sometimes in the water and sometimes on the ice, he many times grasped the drowning man and drew him considerably above the surface; but each time the weight of the wet and paralysed body prevailed; each time it sunk again, until at last the worker's strength was exhausted, and the victim perished. Had you been there when for the last time that strong willing worker drew with all his might to save a sinking brother, and then lay down exhausted, leaving that brother to sink, you would have seen a workman wearied by his work. His hands were wearied with the greatness of his effort, and his heart was weary because the effort had failed. Such is the work to which Christians are called in the world, and such often, though not always, are the disappointments which they meet. At death the weariness of the worker will wholly cease.—Arnot.

4. proverb.^b R. V., "parable," "The Hebrew word (mashal) is used in a variety of senses. Originally signifying a similitude, it came naturally to denote a popular proverb or gnomic saying, and finally acquired the sense of a satire or taunt-song, as here (Hab. ii. 6; Num. xxi. 27). In ancient Israel wit seems to have passed into sarcasm as readily as in more recent times." — Camb. Bib.^d "How hath the oppressor," the opening words of the Ode. It should have been translated in poetic form and must be studied as a whole. "Its perfection as a work of art, its picturesque imagery, the delicate and subtle vein of irony by which it is penetrated will not endure partial quotation or paraphrase." — Driver. golden city ceased.—Camb. B., How is the oppressor stilled—stilled the insolent rage!

Triumph Over Enemies.—"The song of Deborah and Barak" expresses the feelings which have usually animated the victors in national contests from the beginning of the world to the present day. The poems of Homer show us the great warriors of the heroic age giving the freest possible vent to their passions of scorn and hatred on such occasions. The heroes of Germany and Iceland indulge in the same strain. North American Indians are said to have been equally outspoken. The "natural man" would, beyond all question, on every occasion of the kind, give free and unfettered expression to his feelings of triumph and delight, nor would he see any reason for checking his feelings, or making any effort to moderate them. Insult and scorn are but indications of hate, or of hate mingled with contempt for those who have been proved weak, and so seem to be legitimately bestowed on beaten foes. But the Christian may hate no man, may despise no man, knowing that each human soul is in God's sight of priceless value. Consequently, although he may rejoice in victory, and even compose songs of triumph, he is bound to avoid anything like insultation over the defeated. They are his brethren, they are souls for whom Christ died; they may be among those with whom he will hold sweet converse in the world to come.—Pul. Com. Oppression and Its Downfall.—There is no deeper passion, nor one more just, than the hatred of tyranny, in the human breast. If we look at the question from the point of view of the tyrant himself, his lot is odious. Xenophon represents Hiero of Syracuse lamenting to the poet Simonides his unhappiness. He must surround himself with guards whom he cannot trust. Intimate friendship, such as blesses the meanest of his subjects, must be to him denied. He cannot close the sleepless eye of suspicion. Amiable he may be and sympathetic by nature, yet his heart may not expand in the chilling atmosphere which surrounds him. The cruel necessities of power may even render the lot of the oppressor less enviable than that of the oppressed. The heart of the people in every land and age cries out against tyranny as an abuse of the moral order, a violence done to the nature of things. And the true prophet, ever feeling in unison with that heart, translating its dim yearnings into articulate oracles, denounces and predicts the downfall of tyranny as inevitable, if the kingdom of Jehovah on earth is a reality. "There remaineth a rest for the people of God."—"The empire is peace." These words, once uttered vainly by a potentate in our time, and soon sternly refuted by the roar of artillery from around the walls of his fair city and from a score of battle-fields throughout his pleasant land, contain the policy of the kingdom of the Messiah. Selfishness, ambition, tyranny of individual wills,—these are the most constant causes of restlessness and war. When "all man's good" shall be "each man's rule," such evils will be impossible; the "unsuffering kingdom" of the Messiah will come, and the meek will inherit the earth.—Pul. Com.

5, 6. (5) staff, sign of imperial power. rulers, better, tyrants, Gesenius. (6) continual stroke, Heb. "stroke without removing." Oppression ever maintained, and never relieved, is persecuted. . . hindereth, R. V., "with a persecution that none restrained." Camb. Bib. prefers a rendering which preserves the balance of clauses:—

"That struck the peoples in anger,—
With incessant stroke:
That trod down the nations in wrath,—
With unrelenting tread."

Sin Makes No True Friends.—Adversity is the test of faithfulness. Until the dark hour comes we cannot be quite sure whether our acquaintances are, or are not, our friends; then we "know the proof" of them. In the hour of Babylon's discomfiture there would be found "none to hinder" (ver. 6) her destruction. Her allies would fail her then; her dependencies would make no effort to save her; she would be "alone when she fell" (Eccles. iv. 10). The "friends" whom sinners make are not "friends in deed," for they will not prove to be "friends in need." If financial ruin, the loss of his good name, overwhelming bereavement, protracted sickness, the near prospect of death, should overtake a man, it is not to his ungodly companions he would resort, for to them he would look in vain. The man of God will not be without those who will graciously and generously intervene to "hinder" the calamity which impends, to alleviate the sorrows which are wounding the spirit.—Pul. Com. The False Staff.—Wicked men often have such power over others that they can use them for their evil schemes, and bribe them so that they tell no tales that shall bring shame and dishonor. But this does not last. Some "revealing hour" comes. The man that has been "lifted up" is laid low; he can no longer use his old power. Lost character has left him discrowned. Even worldly men will not trust him now. The Josephs are honored; the Daniels are trusted. The Mordecais are doomed. No staff will support in life or death but the old staff: "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

7, 8. (7) The whole earth, regarded as put in fear as long as Bab. remained in power; able to sing when Bab. was destroyed. (8) fir trees, before conquering armies forests are razed. And great nations despoil them for their own adornment, for palaces and temples and navies. Therefore at the fall of Babylon the very trees sing for joy.^c

"At thy fate the pine-trees rejoice
And Lebanon's cedars, saying:
No woodman comes up against us
Since thou art laid low."—Polychr. B.

Sympathy of Mind with Nature.—Socrates said that "trees did not live the life of faith that have before them 'the ages to come.' They are those who live toward happiness, singing more and more, rejoicing more and more, the circles and the waves of their experience running with wider and wider sweep."—Beecher.

^a Kingdoms won by violence are only maintained in subjection by continuous tyranny.

"As for him who smote the nations in wrath, his stroke shall not be removed; he that ruled the nations in anger is persecuted and cannot hinder it."—Trans. by Junius.

"There appears to exist a greater desire to live long than to live well! Measure by man's desires, he cannot live long enough; measure by his good deeds, and he has not lived long enough; measure by his evil deeds, and he has lived too long."—Zimmerman.

^b "One of the most characteristic trees of Lower Lebanon, the Aleppo pine, which is inferior only to the cedar." — Tristram.

^c For Assyria as a cedar, see Eze. xxxi. 3.

"I am glad to think I am not bound to make the wrong go right, But only to discover and to do. With cheerful heart, the work that God appoints." —Jean Ingelow.

b "Some of its tenants, once mighty monarchs, are represented by a bold personification as rising from their seats in astonishment at the descent among them of the humbled king of Babylon." —Fausset.

c "Who would have thought it? It is what thou thyself didst not expect it would ever come to when thou wast so hard upon us. Thou that didst rank thyself among the immortal gods, art thou come to take thy fate among us poor mortal men?" —M. Henry.

d "His body, once so dearly cared for and couched, has now maggots for a couch, and worms for a covering." —Nagelsbach.

The best Christian will be the best citizen. He who is most loyal to God's law will be most obedient to the law of the land.—H. B. Grose.

"A man goes to bed willingly and cheerfully, because he believes he shall rise again the next morning, and be renewed in his strength. Confidence in the resurrection would make us go to the grave as cheerfully as we go to our beds."

teach him anything, but man." Let us adapt the saying to religious feeling. The trees will yield no oracles but those which have been first heard in the inmost conscience. And if there are times when they seem to whisper of gladness, or to smile and clap their hands for joy, it is because God has already opened a fountain of perennial trust and hope within the soul. Then "fruitful trees, and all cedars" will praise the Lord, when the heart is filled with praise. "The outward face of nature is a religious communication to those who come to it with the religious element already in them, but no man can get a religion out of the beauty of nature. Those who have first made the knowledge of themselves and their own souls their care, its glory has ever turned to light and hope. They have read in nature an augury and a presage; they have found in it a language and a revelation."—Mozley.

9. Hell, translate "Sheol beneath." The prophet "accompanies in thought the shade of the king of Babylon as it journeys to the Underworld, and imagines the ironical greeting which there meets it from the lips of the other kings—still, as on earth, supposed to be invested with the panoply of state."—Driver. is moved, with expectancy. Those inhabiting it join in the joy at thy humiliation. stirreth up, urges all to unite in the triumph over thee. the dead, R. V., marg. "the shades." Heb. Rephaim. from their thrones, an indication of the idea that in the future life men continue their political and social relations, uninterrupted by death.

The Contemplation of Past Greatness.—From the depth of sorrow men learn to measure past blessings, from the lowest point of abject humiliation the height of previous greatness. Two things, in all history, in all legend, in the experience of daily life, impress the imagination, and through the imagination the moral conscience—the rise of the obscure into glory, and the fall of the great into ignominy. Such changes hint at a great law, the principle of which is one, the effects of whose operation are dual and diverse. The King of Babel had been as the morning star, the type of the Orient in all its splendor of intellectual light, heralding the dawn and the onward march of the sun. How true a proposition is it in reference to human culture, "Light comes from the East"! Babylonia was an early centre of such culture; and dimly through the records of the past we may there discern all those passions and energies at work in that great kingdom which lead first to external greatness, then to moral corruption, finally to external ruin.

10, 11. (10) Art thou, etc.,^c the language of wondering surprise. "There is uncommon beauty in the brevity of this address." (11) Thy pomp, etc., this is the continuance of the song, not the exclamation of the "shades" in Hades. Pomp is the expression and display of pride. grave, better, "Sheol," the place of departed spirits. viols, the music of the courts. worms,^d "his lot is far worse than that of other potentates. No kingly throne is reserved for him in Sheol, but as one who has been denied honorable burial on earth (vs. 19) he is laid in the 'recesses of the pit' (vs. 15) and makes his bed in corruption."—Camb. Bib.

Proud Monuments (vs. 11).—While some have studied monuments, others have studiously declined them, and some have been so vainly boisterous, that they durst not acknowledge their graves; wherein Alaricus seems most subtle, who had a river turned to hide his bones at the bottom. Even Sylla, that thought himself safe in his urn, could not prevent revenging tongues, and stones thrown at his monument. Happy are they whom privacy makes innocent, who deal so with men in this world, that they are not afraid to meet them in the next; who, when they die, make no commotion among the dead, and are not touched with that poetical taunt of Isaiah. Pyramids, arches, obelisks, were but the irregularities of vainglory, and wild enormities of ancient magnanimity. But the most magnanimous resolution rests in the Christian religion, which trampleth upon pride, and sits on the neck of ambition, humbly pursuing that infallible perpetuity, unto which all others must diminish their diameters, and be poorly seen in angles of contingency. To subsist in lasting monuments, to live in their productions, to exist in their names and predicament of chimeras, was large satisfaction unto old expectations, and made one part of their Elysium. But all this is nothing in the metaphysics of true belief. To live, indeed, is to be again ourselves, which being not only a hope but an evidence in noble believers, 'tis all one to lie in St. Innocent's churchyard, as in the sands of Egypt: ready to be anything, in the ecstasy of being ever, and as content with six feet as the moles of Adrianus.—Sir T. Browne.

12. Lucifer, in his splendor he is likened to the morning star; which was worshipped by the Babylonians under the name of Istar. The translation "Lucifer" (light-bearer) is quite correct, and is needlessly abandoned by the R. V.—Camb. Bib. cut down, hewn down. The metaphor is here changed, and the fig. taken from the demolition of the Asherahs, or idols erected to Ashtoreth (i. e. Venus, or the morning star).^b didst weaken, R. V., "didst lay low." Thou who didst prostrate others how prostrate art thou!

Lucifer.—There is no name we know so abused and misapplied as this truly beautiful name. Lucifer, the light-bringer, is the Latin equivalent of the Greek Phosphoros, which is used as a title of our blessed Lord in 2 Pet. i. 19, to which corresponds the phrase "bright and morning star" of the Book of Revelation (xxii. 16). Applied to Him the epithet is most expressive, for He is the true Light who enlightens every man who cometh into the world, and who has shed a flood of light upon life and immortality. But, unfortunately, the name has been given, almost appropriated, in the first place, to Satan, the "prince of darkness," who is the enemy and destroyer of light in the souls of men. The misapplication and degradation of a noble name arose, in the first instance, from a misinterpretation of Isa. xiv. 12, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O brilliant one [or bright star], son of the morning!" Our translators have used the word Lucifer here, and some expositors referred the whole passage, which is a highly poetical and beautiful description of the king of Babylon, to the devil; and so in common speech the evil one, who has no light in him, has been named Lucifer.

13—15. (13) exalt . . stars, fig. for supreme and universal dominion. "The Bab. thought the several constellations to be connected with particular nations, over whose destiny they dominated."—Spk. Com. mount, etc., "an allusion to Babylonian mythology, referred to in Assyrian inscriptions, the Mt. Aralu where the great gods assemble."—Camb. Bib. sides . . north, R. V., "the uttermost parts of the north."^a (14) like . . High, this was the height of presumption and wickedness.^b "In the wall-sculptures of the Assyr. palaces, the king has the symbols of deity assigned to him." (15) hell, "Sheol." sides, the most dismal parts of the land of darkness. These apparently are reserved for those who have not obtained honorable burial. Comp. vss. 18—20.

Christianity's Work of Destruction.—History enables us to look back and to measure events by the right standard. Regarded in this light, history is a continual testimony to the almightiness and the all-goodness of heaven. Where are the enemies of the faith? Mighty men have risen to put down the Cross: where are they to-day? Ponderous works have been written in order to disprove the Christian argument, or to divest it of its moral appeals: where are those works? Negation builds no churches. Destruction can point to no temple of paradise, no asylum of protection, no Bethlehem of promise. Christianity itself has a work of destruction to do; but it would be comparatively powerless if it did not connect its constructive with its destructive vocation. The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives but to save them. When Christ kills, He kills that He may make alive. This is the difference between Christianity and its opposing theories; the theories live in opposition only, but Christianity lives in positive and helpful faith.—Peop. Bib.

16, 17. (16) The scene now changes from Sheol to the earth, and the dead body of the king is seen on the battlefield. shall narrowly look, scrutinizing the body, "Is this really the king?" consider,^c thoughtfully, feeling its significance. (17) opened . . prisoners, R. V., "that let not loose his prisoners to their home?" i. e. that they might die in their own land and be honorably buried there.

Opposition to God, of No Avail.—The mightiest power is weaker than weakness itself when pitted against the throne of God. Enemies appear to be great in the distance. They are actually great when they are looked at simply within their own limits: see what learning they have; see what iron instruments the soldiers bring to the field of war;

"The appellation may have been applied to the king of Babylon, on account of the worship of the celestial bodies by the Chaldeans, and beg. they claimed to be under their special protection." — Wordsworth.

^b "These idols seem in some cases to have had horns, representing prob. rays of light." — Spk. Com.

"Ambition has but one reward for all:

A little power, a little transient fame,

A grave to rest in and a fading name."

—W. Winter.

^a "The starry region round the North Pole, high above the earth, always visible and luminous, is a natural type of the heaven of glory, the special abode of the Most High." — Birks.

^b Da. iii. 1, 13—15, viii. 8, 9—11.

"The Assyrian monarch was a thorough Eastern despot, . . . rather adored as a god than feared as a man." — Layard.

"Be always displeased at what thou art, if thou desire to attain to what thou art not; for where thou hast pleased thyself, there thou abidest." — Quarles.

^c Ps. lli. 7.

"The man who seeks one thing in life, and but one,

May hope to achieve it before life be done;
But he who seeks all things, wherever he goes,
Only reaps from the hopes which around him he sows,
A harvest of barren regrets."
—Owen Meredith.

a Diodorus says that the Egyptians paid far more attention to the dwellings of the dead than of the living.

For the disgrace of not being buried, compare 1 Ki. xiii. 22; 2 Chr. xxi. 20, xxxiv. 24.

b "He, the conqueror, was cast away into the heap, on the field of battle." — Spk. Com.

c "This prophecy was minutely fulfilled. On entering the city, the army of Cyrus marched straight to the palace, and meeting the king, who was coming out sword in hand, they slew him, and put all who followed him to the sword; and though Xenophon specially notices the permission given to bury the dead, he takes no notice whatever of the royal corpse." — Henderson.

a Strabo states that enormous hedgehogs were found in the islands of the Euphrates.

b "Babylon lay low, so that when it was deserted, and no care taken to drain the land, it soon became pools of water, standing noisome puddles, as unhealthful as they were unpleasant." — M. Henry.

see what mighty captains ride forth as if plumed already with victory before the battle begins; yet hear this voice of sarcasm, which says to them when they are stretched out upon the field of war, "Is this the man that made the earth to tremble?" How small he is, how weak, how utterly helpless now! And this is the fate of all who set themselves to counterwork the purposes of Providence.—Peop. Bib.

18—20. (18) lie in glory, R. V., "sleep in glory," embalmed and in a grand tomb. house, or mausoleum." (19) cast out, unburied. of thy grave, from being laid in thy grave. branch, or useless sucker, wh. the gardener cuts down, and flings away. and as .. slain, R. V., "clothed with the slain," i. e. surrounded by and covered with the slain. stones .. pit, i. e. those ordinarily slain in battle are covered with stones, but thou art exposed, open to all insult.° (20) shalt not be joined, etc., i. e. with the kings and nobles who have fallen in battle. because .. land, not a true king, therefore, but a tyrant even to your own people and hated by them. slay thy people, by thine ambitious wars. seed, or dynasty of the prostrate king. The entire dynasty was destroyed. The name of the goddess race was extinguished.

The Seed of Evil-doers.—As a matter of fact, we see that a wicked course of life is regarded as a shame. It is held up as a beacon to be avoided, whilst the career of the good is held up as a model to be followed. History is full of examples of men whose names are held in universal detestation, notwithstanding their connection with ingenuity, wealth and power. Each of us knows how well the fact is proved by myriads of examples in social life. A persistently wicked course is known to be a blighted one, and any attempt to invest it with glory or renown is felt to be wrong. We recoil even from the thought that it should be possible for such a course to command the homage of men. If it were possible for wrongdoing to gain for itself imperishable renown, we might tremble for the safety of those principles of righteousness and truth which have always been regarded as the main support and stay of good men. Reckless folly and wild presumption would become exalted and enthroned, and we might well shudder at the possibility that, under the attractions of successful wickedness, men would rush in masses, and bow down to Evil, declaring it to be their Good. This abandoned idolatry, this deep depravity, is now reached only in isolated cases, and such are regarded even by godless men as deplorable and hopeless. It is a hopeful fact that evil-doers have to carry on much of their work in the dark, for it is a sure token that, as the light widens and deepens, the works of darkness must fall; their covering will be removed, and their shelter will be gone.—Hom. Com.

21—23. (21) slaughter, or a slaughter-house. This is a Divine charge to the Medes and Persians. for his children, the spirit which has made such tyranny possible must not be reproduced. not rise, to take their father's place. (22) cut off, etc., wholly preventing the restoration of the dynasty. nephew, R. V., "son's son." "After the storming of Babylon by the Medes, the new Babylonian kingdom and royal house established by Nebopolassar vanished entirely from history. The last child was slain as the child of conspirators."—Delitzsch. (23) it, the site of Babylon. bitter, R. V., "porcupine." pools of water, by neglect of the canals, and flooding of the Euphrates. sweep it, i. e. sweep it away.

Force of Heredity.—Though there is a hereditary law in the matter both of evil and of good, it must not be understood that a man is hopelessly condemned because his ancestors were evil, or that a man is necessarily saved because his ancestors were good. The general law may be modified by particular instances. If any man, looking over a long list of progenitors, cannot find a good name amongst them, that is no reason why he himself should not repent and pray. On the other hand, a man may look through a long family record adorned with illustrious names, yet if he himself be not faithful, if he himself be not in Christ by the power of the soul's trust, wrought by the energy of the Holy Ghost, his family record will stand him in no good stead in the day of judgment. The renown of the hypocrite is a poor reward. The blessing that rests upon the righteous is itself of the quality of heaven.—Peop. Bib. The Overthrow of Evil.—It is a blessed thing to be engaged on the side of righteousness. First and most, because it is the cause of God, of man, of truth, on which we are leagued; and also because we are sure to win at last. The wise and the good may meet with many a check, but they will gain the victory; the unholy and the evil-minded may snatch many an advantage, but the end shall be a miserable disaster, an utter overthrow, a dragon-haunted desert. Let us see to it that we are fighting on God's side, and, once sure that we are, let us strike our blow for truth and wisdom, confident that, however strong and high stand the towers of sin, its citadel will be taken, its day will descend into darkness, its million-peopled streets become a doleful desert.

24, 25. "Vss. 24—27 are an announcement of Jehovah's purpose to destroy the Assyrians on the soil of Canaan. In spite of the absence of a title these verses cannot without violence be explained as a continuation of the oracle on Babylon. They bear every evidence of being a genuine prophecy of Isaiah; and both in form and substance they shew an obvious resemblance to those of ch. x. 5 ff. and ch. xviii. Some critics, indeed, regard them as a misplaced fragment of one or other of these chapters. Without going so far as this we may at least with some confidence assign the passage to the same period of Isaiah's ministry, probably the early years of Sennacherib's reign."—Camb. Bib. (24) purposed, in the great providential plan. (25) break, etc., by a sudden calamity. mountains, the army was destroyed on the hills near Jerusalem. his yoke, that laid by Assyria on Judah. "From the blow inflicted on Sennacherib Assyria never rallied."

The Strong Assurances of Jehovah.—He is represented here and in other passages as taking an oath that he will fulfill his word. But in such oaths he can appeal to no mightier name, he can invoke no power more awful than his own. Homer makes Zeus swear by the Styx, the dark river of the Underworld. And Zeus is himself subject to necessity, to fate. But the God of the Hebrews comprises in himself all the associations of woeful necessity, of irresistible fate; in a word, of law, of intelligence at one with will, of will equal to the execution of all the designs of intelligence. Where men are weak it is that the brain is separated from the hand and the foot. The thoughts that rise before them, they either cannot or they dare not translate immediately into fact. A chain of means, of secondary causes, lies between them and their ends. And so we have the great thinkers who cannot act, and the great actors who fail in thought. Magnificent poets, philosophers, dreamers, on the one side; on the other, magnificent conquerors—Alexanders, Napoleons; both stupendous failures. In God are united omniscience and omnipotence—the All-Thinker, the All-Doer. His purposes are equivalent to deeds; his deeds are living and visible thoughts.—Pul. Com.

26—28. (26) whole earth, regarded as conquered, and put under tribute by Assyria; all shall be delivered, as Judah will be soon. the hand . . . stretched out, a return in thought and phrase to ch. v. 25; ix. 12, etc., suggesting the place where these prophecies belong. (27) disannul it, with ref. to Sennac's taunts, and Babylon's pride. Delitzsch explains the place of this prophecy (22—27) by saying, "At a time when the prophecy against Assyria had actually been fulfilled, the prophet attached it to the still unfulfilled prophecy against Babylon to give a pledge of the fulfillment of the latter." (28) This verse and following four are an oracle against Philistia. year . . . died, prob. B. C. 727. The Philistines were finally subdued by Hezekiah.^b

Immutability of God's Counsels (vs. 27).—We will consider this subject—I. In a general view: the Scriptures continually represent God as having ordained everything from before the foundation of the world; His decrees to whatever they relate are unchangeable. II. In reference to the particular points specified in the context. 1. The deliverance of God's people; 2. The destruction of His enemies. Apply:—(1) On what a slender foundation are the hopes of the generality fixed; (2) On what an immovable foundation does the believer stand.—C. Simeon.

The Immutable Counsel of Jehovah.—Assyria and Babylon destroyed, heathendom must vibrate through all its extent, and totter to its fall. About a thousand years later, and we find Rome shaking beneath that outstretched hand. We may see the mementoes of that shock to-day, in the ruins of the Palatine and the Forum and the Sacred Way. Yet a "Truth is forced To manifest itself through falsehood; whence divorced By the excepted eye, at the rare season, for The happy moment, truth instructs us to abhor The false, and prize the true, obtainable thereby."

"It is some compensation for great evils that they enforce great lessons."
—Bovee.

"Evil events from evil causes spring."
—Aristophanes.

"To the estrangement of the soul from God the best of theology traces the ultimate cause of sin. Sin is simply apostasy from God, unbelief in God."
—Drummond.

"We are ruined, not by what we really want, but by what we think we do; therefore never go abroad in search of your wants. If they be real wants, they will come home in search of you; for he that buys what he does not want, will soon want what he cannot buy."
—Colton.

^a 2 Chr. xxviii. 18—21.

^b 2 Ki. xviii. 8.

"Consider what the hand is to man: it is the chief instrument by which he executes his purposes, — farmer, builder, artist, author, etc.; and by the hand of God is meant His executive force in all its varied forms. God has the means of doing all His will, and

He is not an unconcerned spectator of human affairs — these truths inspire God's people with hope, courage, and joy; and they ought to inspire with terror all who are in rebellion against Him."

"The perfection which the creatures possess they derive from God, and it is faintly shadowed forth after its archetype. The more of it they possess, the nearer they are to God and have the greater likeness to Him (Ro. xi. 35, 36; 1 Cor. iv. 7; Ac. xvii. 28, 29; 2 Cor. iii. 18; 2 Pe. i. 4)."—Arminius.

* Josephus calls the country occupied by the Philistines, Palæstine.

"Mythology is not religion. It may rather be regarded as the ancient substitute, the poetical counterpart, for dogmatical theology."—Hare.

"According to my view of the Unity of the Divine nature, God is one, as we meet Him in the Old Testament and the Oldest; in the New and the Newest. There are four Testaments: an Oldest and an Old, a New and a Newest. The Oldest Testament is the Nature of Things. The newest is Christ's continued life in the present influences of the Holy Spirit. The oldest and the newest are unwritten; the old and new are written; but the voices of the four are one."—Joseph Cook.

thousand years, and again she shakes, this time to her inmost conscience, beneath that hand, that voice of judgment. At the Reformation it might seem that the Almighty was about to make a short work in the earth. But a thousand years are in his sight but a day. "The mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small." Let us remember that the great cycles of history are repeated in small in the round of each man's life. The great world, the macrocosmos, is mirrored in the microcosmos, the small world of each conscience. Above every one of us the hand is outstretched—shall it be to bless or to curse? "To-day if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts."—Pul. Com. God's purpose of restoration will one day be accomplished. There may be many obstacles in the way. Difficulties may, to the eye of human calculation, seem actually insurmountable; the estimable forces of truth may appear unequal to cope with the overwhelming agencies of error and evil. But this our great hope is not a bold enterprise of man; it is the purpose of the living God, the Lord of hosts. "His hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?" Let the Christian worshipper offer expectant prayer; let the Christian workman go up to his post with holy confidence; for the purpose of God, though it be long delayed, shall assuredly be fulfilled.

29, 30. (29) Each verse of this oracle forms a strophe of four lines, as in vss. 30, 31, below. whole Palestina, R. V., "O Philistia, all of thee," alluding to the principalities into which Philistia was divided (comp. Is. ix. 8). is broken, rejoicing over the disaster to Israel is premature. That rod which has stricken Philistia before is to be re-established in more terrible form. serpent, prob. fig. for Uzziah, who put Philistia under tribute. cockatrice, R. V., "basilisk," fig. for Hezekiah, as a more overwhelming enemy. his fruit, or descendant, i. e. Uzziah's. (30) Trans.:-

"The poor will feed on my meadows,
And the needy will lie down securely;
But thy seed will I kill with famine
And thy remnant will I slay."—Polychr. B.

Note on vs. 29.—In Egypt, and other Oriental countries, a serpent was the common symbol of a powerful monarch; it was embroidered on the robes of princes, and blazoned on their diadem, to signify their absolute power and invincible might, and that as the wound inflicted by the basilisk is incurable, so the fatal effects of their displeasure were neither to be avoided nor endured. These are the allusions involved in the address of the Prophet to the irreconcilable enemies of his nation.—Paxton.

Death of an Individual.—The wicked nation, or the unprincipled party, or the unscrupulous man that indulges a feeling of security because some strong opponent is dead may, probably will, find itself (himself) miserably disappointed. The resources of a righteous providence are not exhausted, though a very pillar of justice be fallen. Or, on the other hand, the righteous may fear too much from the death of a powerful friend. Will not the good cause perish now that the tongue of its most able advocate is silent in death? Christianity did not perish with the departure of Christ or with the death of the apostles. The Father of spirits will not let righteousness expire for want of righteous men, whom he can create and endow and send forth into the world.—Pul. Com.

31, 32. (31) —

"Howl, O gate! Cry, O city!
Faint in all thy borders Philistia!
For out of the North comes the smoke of the foe,
And no straggler is found in his levies."—Polychr. B.

whole Palestina, R. V., "O Philistia, all of thee," i. e. let the cities and walls cry out and the whole country grow faint before the approaching doom. north, reference to the Assyrians. smoke, of signal fires, calling hosts together. none .. times, i. e. there shall be no stragglers or unwilling ones, when the call is made to muster for attack on thee. (32) "The oracle ends, in a manner characteristic of Isaiah, with a piece of practical advice to the political leaders of the state. Some words have probably dropped out of the first half of the verse." the messengers of the nation, "are no doubt Philistine envoys endeavoring to negotiate an alliance with Judah. They are probably to be regarded as actually waiting in Jerusalem while the court deliberates on the expediency of joining the rebellion. The prophet's answer is an unhesitating refusal."—Camb. B. founded Zion, the source of its strength is in God, not in its rocky fortresses nor its armies. and the poor . . . in it, R. V., "and in her shall the afflicted of his people take refuge."

Strength and Mission of the Church (vs 32).—All around are the evidences of the existence of the Church: what destiny there may yet be in store for the Church we do not know. I. The strongest, most fundamental title of protection is creation; no one frames an object in order to destroy it. Behold how God has loved the world, but to the Church His honor is pledged, its ultimate perfection is the reward of the sorrows of the Lord. II. How does the Church fulfill the promise that she should be the guide and friend of the poor? She is one vast institute for the benefit of the poor, the truths she teaches just those the poor need.—Archer Butler.

The Church's Mission.—It is in meeting his sorrow with tidings of glory to come, in brightening the gloom of his humble home with the hallowed light of eternity, in soothing his days of hard and heavy toil with her peaceful Sabbaths, in watching over his bed of sickness with a patience as unwearied as if his poor chambers were gorgeous with gilded ceilings and silken tapestry; it is in these things that the Church carries on that loveliest attribute of Her Lord, "Thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress."—Archer Butler.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

1, 2. An oracle on Moab occupies chs. xv.—xvi., of which ch. xv. describes the distress of Moab. (1) Moab,^a this country had prob. made common cause with Israel and Syria against Assyria; consequently it incurred the vengeance of Assyria. because, better, surely. Ar, or the city, i. e. the capital of Moab. laid waste, comp. Je. xlviii. brought to silence, R. V., "brought to naught." Kir, prob. Kir-chareseth.^b Or the word may mean a citadel. It was, in fact, the chief fortress of Moab. There is still a fortification there. (2) The best translation is:—

"Dibon's people go up to the sanctuaries to weep,
On Nebo and on Medebah Moab wails,
On all heads baldness, every beard shorn."—Polychr. B.

Dibon, a few miles S. of the Amon would be first to hear the news. Nebo, a mountain, and Medebah, a hill on which are still the ruins of a temple. baldness, the greatest mark of sorrow and mortification.^c Idolatry.—1. "God's many," true God—one. 2. Idolatry not confined to heathens, or worship of wood or stone idols (1 Cor. x. 14; Col. iii. 5; Phil. iii. 9). 3. Whatever, other than God, is enshrined in the heart as the chief object of affection is an idol.

"We do not bend the adoring knee
To demon gods 'neath forest tree;
And when the fair round moon returns,
No heart in votive rapture burns;
But wrong desire, and cherish'd sin,
And selfish care enshrin'd within,
And angry passions, prompt to wake,—
These are the idols Christians make.
The great Lord God enthron'd on high
He sees the soul's idolatry;
He claims the first love of our heart, Nor takes what is but His in part."

—Verses for Holy Seasons.

"There are a good many real miseries in life that we cannot help smiling at, but they are the smiles that make wrinkles and not dimples." — Holmes.

^a Comp. 1 Sa. xiv. 47; 2 Sa. viii. 2; 2 Ki. i. 1, iii. 4, 5; 2 Chr. xx. 1-30.

^b Isa. xvi. 7; 2 Ki. iii. 25.

^c Isa. iii. 24, xxii. 12; Am. viii. 10.

"Ponder deeply upon the moral of Night; the darkness should instruct us, remind us of our exhaustion, helplessness, and dependence upon others for security and rest, and should above all things lead us to put our confidence in him to whom the darkness and the light are both alike." — Peop. Bib.

"I'll give thee misery, for here she dwells; this is her house, where the sun never dawns; the bird of night sits screaming o'er the roof:

grim spectres
sweep along the horrid gloom, and nought is heard but wailings and lamentings." —
Rowe.

"There's nothing bright above, below, from flowers that bloom to stars that glow,
but in its light
my soul can see some feature, of the Deity." — Anon.

"I never knew a man in all my life who could not bear another's misfortunes perfectly like a Christian." — Pope.

* The word means the two poles.

"If one thing more than another is impressed on devout minds by a review of life, it is the marvelous way in which Divine wisdom has found the best, most adapted forms for judgment and chastisement to take. Chastise-ment sent by the Divine Father is always precisely corrective of the evil which has called for it, and
always precisely corrective to the individual and to the particular nation." — Pul.
Com.

"All things have their end;
Temples and cities, which have diseases like to man, Must have like death that we have."

3, 4. (3) tops, flat roofs. weeping, "running down with tears." (4) Heshbon, an Amorite city, twenty miles E. of Jordan. It had been taken by Moab after the carrying away of Israel. Elealeh, near Heshbon. Jahaz, "this site where Sihon gave battle to the Israelites (Nu. xxi. 23) has not been identified."—Camb. B. therefore, i. e. bec. of the sudden overthrow of their cities. his life . . unto him, R. V., "his soul trembleth within him," i. e. the soul of Moab.

Misery and Happiness.—The misery of human life is made up of large masses, each separated from the other by certain intervals. One year the death of a child; years after, a failure in trade; after another longer or shorter interval, a daughter may have married unhappily;—in all but the singularly unfortunate, the integral parts that compose the sum total of the unhappiness of a man's life are easily counted and distinctly remembered. The happiness of life, on the contrary, is made up of minute fractions; the little soon-forgotten charities of a kiss, a smile, a kind look, a heartfelt compliment in the disguise of playful rail-ery, and the countless other infinitesimals of pleasurable thought and genial feeling.—Coleridge. National Distress Leads Men to God.—Like the voyager, men can easily dismiss the thought of God when, for long times together, seas are calm and heavens are clear; but when the skies are black, and the wild waves shake the frail ship, and fear whitens every face, the soul begins to cry for a sight of God and a touch of His protecting hand. We are with God as our little children are with their mothers. They run about and play, taking little heed of her, until the head aches, and the pulse is high, and pain wearies; and then there is nobody in all the world will do but their mother. National distress brings nations back to the thought and love of God. The atheist, the agnostic, and the secularist have their chance when the sun shines; nobody wants such vain helpers when the tempests rage. Then nobody will do but the God of our fathers.—Pul. Com.

5-7. (5) My heart shall cry, even the prophet is moved with sympathy for Moab, with whom Israel was often on friendly terms. unto Zoar, in the remote south. his fugitives . . Luhith, R. V., "her nobles flee into Zoar, to Eglath-shelishiyah; for by the ascent of Luhith," etc. Luhith, a mountain-ascent in Moab. Horonaim, near Zoar. (6) Nimrim, the northern part of the country, which is overrun with the enemy and destroyed. (7) brook, etc. (Jer. xlviii. 36). "The fugitives have now reached the border of their own land, and prepare to cross into Edom. The boundary between the two countries was formed by the Wadi el-Asha ('valley of water-pits,' the scene of the miracle in 2 Ki. iii. 16 ff.). In all probability this Wadi is identical with the brook of the willows here mentioned."—Camb. Bib.

The Weeping Willow.—The Salix Babylonica, or the willow of Baby-lon, or our English weeping willow, is a native of the Levant, the coast of Persia, and other places in the East. The manner of its introduction into England is curious, and the story is as follows:—Pope, the cele-brated poet, having received a present of Turkey figs, observed a twig of the basket, in which they were packed, putting out a shoot. This twig he planted in his garden; it soon became a fine tree; and from this stock all our willows have descended.

8, 9. (8) Eglaim, Eze. xlvii. 10. Beer-elim, the well of the princes. (9) Dimon, prob. another form of Dibon. more, i. e. additions of the blood of the slain. lions, "an enigmatical description of a conquering foe, either Judah (Delitzsch), comp. Gen. xlix. 9., or more probably (see xiv. 29; xxi. 16, 17; xvi. 14) the Assyrians" (Cheyne and Camb. Bib.).

Despair the Desperation of the Soul.—

I can grapple

With certain ill, and bid it strike, and shrink not;
Woo danger with my sword, and dally with her
Like some pale bride, in battle won and ravish'd;
Making that pastime which is others' toil.
Give peril but a name, and I will seek it Front join'd to front. But when the laden bosom,
With its own weight oppress'd, sees not its foe,
And struggles with it knows not what,—some phantom

Like that which rides the sleeper in his dreams,
 Stifling all utterance, benumbing motion,
 And stagnating the life-blood at the heart,—
 Then I am but a coward.
 Fear, like a warder, sentinels my steps,
 And haunts me in a myriad shapes—not one,
 Yet all without a shape, and undefined.—Smedley.

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

1, 2. (1) Send ye .. wilderness, R. V., "send ye the lambs for the ruler of the land from Sela which is toward the wilderness." lamb, i. e. the tribute-lambs, which the prophet now exhorts Moab to pay to Judah, thus acknowledging allegiance and winning protection. the ruler, i. e. the king of Judah. Sela, or Petra. (2) as bird .. nest, R. V., "as wandering birds, as a scattered nest." wandering bird, "When the robber came to rifle their nest, they flew away. As soon as he retired, they came back, tho' timorously, to their old homes."—Spk. Com. fords of Arnon, their old neighborhood before they fled.

Demand of Tribute.—"Send ye the lambs of the prince of the land from Sela desert-wards to the mount of the daughter of Zion." In former days Mesha, the King of Moab, was said to be a "sheep-master," and he rendered a yearly tribute of a hundred thousand lambs, and a hundred thousand rams, with the wool, to the King of Israel till the death of Ahab (2 Kings iii. 4). What was then sent to Samaria must now be sent to Jerusalem. Under the form of this demand is signified an appeal to the people of Moab to submit to the house of David as their only hope of safety. Spiritually, the appeal may be construed as the call to nations and to men to submit to the spiritual rule of the Messiah, as anointed King and Saviour of the world.—Pul. Com.

3, 4. (3) Take counsel .. execute judgment, or apply counsel, arbitrate for us; Moab calls upon Judah "to adopt wise and effective measures to defend them from their enemies." make .. shadow, be to us as "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." (4) let mine outcasts, etc. "Let the outcasts of Moab sojourn with thee" (as protected guests).—Camb. B. extortioner, "the rest of this verse cannot, in this form, be uttered by the Moabites. We may either suppose that a word meaning 'until' has been lost, or (better) with Hitzig take the clauses as protasis to vs. 5, 'for when the extortioner,' etc. This is perhaps preferable to regarding it as a reflection of the prophet himself."—Camb. Bible.

Promised Relief.—During the long and terrible siege of Lucknow, the garrison resolved never to surrender; and the women and children under their protection determined never to fall alive into the hands of the bloody Sepoys. They sent a messenger through the enemy's lines to Sir Henry Havelock, who was approaching for their deliverance. He returned the reply, "Hold out: I am coming and will be with you soon." With a small force he had to fight his way, and even to await re-enforcements; but the devoted Havelock kept his promise. At length the sound of his guns was heard, and he was soon hailed as the deliverer. Besieged soul, your restless Lord sends you a similar answer. Hold out: He is coming to your relief.

5. And in mercy, if we follow Hitzig's view of vs. 4 this would be rendered "then in mercy." the throne,^a etc., Polychr. B. translates:—

"The throne is established by kindness,
 There sits upon it in faithfulness in David's tent
 A judge who is both zealous for judgment and Skilled in justice."

Infinitude of Mercy.—

Say not that any crime of man
 Was e'er too great to be forgiven:
 Can we within our little span,
 Engraft the viewless mind of heav'n?

"Though numberless drops be in the sea, yet, if one be taken out of it, it hath so much the less, though insensibly; but God, because He is infinite, can admit of no diminution. Therefore are men niggardly, because, the more they give, the less they have; but Thou, Lord, mayst give what Thou wilt without abatement of Thy store. Go od prayers never come weeping home: I am sure I shall receive either what I ask or what I should ask."—Bp. Hall.

God presides over all things and over all men. He shapes our courses. He loves the world, and bears it in His arms as a mother carries her child in her bosom. He watches over it. He smiles at the fantasies of tyranny, and mocks the helms of oppressors. He knows in His heart that the day is coming when every man shall sit under his own vine and fig tree, and none shall make him afraid.

"Self-trust is the essence of heroism."—Emerson.

^a "He foresees and foretells the destruction of the Assyrian power, under Sennac., and the prosperous times of Hezekiah, to whom, after that great deliverance, many brought gifts (2 Chr. xxxii. 22, 23). Doubtless Moab was among the number, and was received into the protection of Judah."—Wordsworth.

"Mercy turns her back on the unmerciful." — Quarles.

b Is. xlii. 11,
xxv. 9—12.

c "His boastful,
lying, treacherous,
random talk has no reality in it." — Wordsworth.

d "Or, the survivors for those who are lost." — Spk. Com.

"Pride lives with all; strange names our rustics give to helpless infants, that their own may live; pleased to be known, they'll some attention claim, and find some by-way to the house of fame." — G.
Crabbe.

"When the weak head with strongest bias rules,

Is Pride, the never-failing vice of fools." —
Pope.

"Pride hath no
other glass
To show itself, but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees." —
Shakespeare.

a "The traveler Leph brought so-called Heshbon wheat to England having 84 grains in the ear, wh. weighed four times as much as an English ear of wheat." — Nagelsbach.

b On the inscription at Khorsabau, Sargon says:
"The gods Assur,
Nebo, and Merodach, have given me the lordship of the nations."

c The ancient capital of the Ammonites, 15 miles from Heshbon.

"The call to meet some need comes in an hour
that we think
not. The door of

Shall we attempt with puny force
To lash back ocean with a rod?
Arrest the planets in their course?
Or weigh the mercies of a God?

Our mercies, like ourselves, may be Small, finite, and ungracious ever;
May spurn a brother's bended knee,—
But God forsakes the contrite, never!
Vast as Himself they shine above;
To eyes that look through sorrow's tear;
Great though the crime, great is the love,
If those who seek it are sincere.—Mackay.

6, 7. (6) pride of Moab, here the prophet seems to return from his vision of the future to the facts in the present. Moab, as yet, is proud, indeed, and boastful, but her lies will come to naught. Her professions will not deceive, Je. xlviii. 29.^b lies .. so, R. V., "his boastings are naught," i. e. not according to fact.^c (7) Therefore, on account of the refusal of the Jews to give an asylum to the Moabites. howl for Moab, i. e. the cry of lament from one locality meets that of the next.^d the foundations, R. V., "the raisin cakes," made of compressed grapes and used at religious feasts (Hos. iii. 1 R. V.). "The word never means foundations." Kir-hareseth, one of the principal fortresses (ch. xv. 1; 2 Ki. iii. 25). mourn .. stricken, R. V., "shall ye mourn, utterly stricken," crushed and spirit-broken.

Moab (vss. 6—11).—I. The sins of Moab—pride, wrath, falsehood. II. The sorrows of Moab—destruction of its cities, desolation of the land. III. Pity for Moab—human, Divine.—Lyth.

Pride.—The trouble with us is, our proud hearts refuse to accept the position in which God's Word places us. It charges us with sin and corruption, and we would like to excuse ourselves and harp a little upon the dignity of human nature. God tells us that without Him we can do nothing. We are apt to think that by our reasoning powers and high culture, we can of ourselves do wonders. Not until we accept the position of sinfulness and weakness are we prepared to receive His blessing.—A. C. Dixon. Allow God to take His place in your heart and life. Luther often said to people when they came to him about difficulties, "Do let God be God." Let God be all in all, every day in your life, from morning to evening. No more say, "I and God;" let it be "God and I." God first and I second; God to lead, and I to follow; God to work all in me, and I to work out only what God works; God to rule, and I to obey. Even in that order there is a danger, for the flesh is so subtle, and one might begin to think, "It is God and I. Oh, what a privilege that I have such a partner!" There might be secret self-exaltation in associating God with myself. There is a more precious word still—"God and not I; not God first and I second; God is all, and I am nothing."—Andrew Murray.

8. fields .. languish, additional reason for lamentation. Not the towns only but the wheat-fields and vineyards are destroyed. Heshbon was the western part of the high table land E. of Jordan.^a Sibmah, half a Roman mile from Heshbon town, and famous for its grapes. lords .. heathen, or the nations; a title claimed by the kings of Assyria.^b broken down, R. V. margin, "Her choice plants did break down the Lords of the nations," so strong was this wine of Sibmah! (so Cheyne and Camb. Bib.). they are come, i. e. the choice plants of this vine "had reached to Jazer^c on the north, strayed to the desert on the east, and passed to the (Dead) Sea on the west;" referring to the extensive cultivation of this famous vine.

Homiletic Hints.—I. Righteousness exalteth a nation. Happy is the people whose God is the Lord. II. Be thankful to Him by whom kings reign, for the civil and religious liberty of this land. III. Pray for the continued prosperity of this country. IV. Seek to increase the moral power of the nation by our individual piety. V. Fenced cities fail as places of refuge: the Lord is a strong tower, into which the righteous run and are safe. VI. Have you made Him your refuge?

Ratification of the Prophecy.—“After the lapse of almost three thousand years,” says Barnes, “every successive traveler who visits Moab, Idumaea, or Palestine, does something to confirm the accuracy of Isaiah. Towns bearing the same name, or the ruins of towns, are located in the same relative position he said they were; and the ruins of once splendid cities, broken columns, dilapidated walls, trodden-down vineyards, half-demolished temples, and fragments broken and consumed by time, proclaim to the world that those cities are what he said they would be, and that he was under the inspiration of God.” And how powerfully come back to us from such scenes those “truths which wake, to perish, never!” Amidst the gloom the word of prophecy shines as a light in a dark place. Its voice prevails over time; imparts warmth to the heart amidst the rigors of Providence; calls to mind with its persuasive strain long-slighted truths; teaches that while the state or the individual that is possessed of moral strength may be blessed in poverty; that there is a good which is not dependent on the fertility of a land, or the strength of its fortresses—which will survive the desolation of its fields, the downfall of its kings, the overthrow of its idols.

“Trade’s proud empire hastes to swift decay,
As oceans sweep the labor’d mole away,”

9-11. “These verses are among the most beautiful in the poem.” They describe the sympathy that the prophet feels for this people even while he denounces them. This human characteristic of prophecy, often revealed, should not be overlooked. (9) weeping of Jazer,^a i. e. weeping as genuine as Jazer’s own. Elealeh, Nu. xxxii. 3, 37. In later times occupied by Moab. for the shouting . . . fallen,^b R. V., “for upon thy summer fruits and upon thy harvest the battle shout is fallen.” The same word means the shout of the wine trader (Jer. xxv. 30) and the soldier’s war-cry (Jer. li. 14). (10) gladness, etc., comp. Je. xlviii. shouting, R. V., “joyful noise.” 33. treaders,^c these give place to the trampers. (11) bowels, used in Heb. as the seat of yearning compassion. like an harp, vibrating at the touch of the plectrum. The harp best expresses the wailings of grief.

The Failure of Harvest (vss. 9, 10).—It is—I. A grievous calamity. II. Not accidental. III. Generally traceable to moral causes. IV. Should call forth humiliation and repentance.—Lyth.

The Sadness of a Silent Land.—These verses bring before us the picture of a country from which, at the proper seasons, there rises no harvest and no vintage song. “Gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in its vineyard there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting.” In every age and every land the gladness of the people has found expression in the joy of harvest, and no picture of woe, want, and desolation could be so effective as this simple one of the harvest-fields from which arise no song.—Pul. Com.

12-14. (12) when it is seen . . . weary on, R. V., “when Moab presenteth himself, when he wearyeth himself upon,” etc. his sanctuary, that of Chemosh, the god of Moab. not prevail, not gain any relief by thus praying to a false god.^d Some commentators, guided by Jer. xlviii. 13—translate “When Moab presenteth himself . . . and does not prevail, then he shall be ashamed of Chemosh, and turn to Jehovah.” So Ewald and Cheyne. (13) since that time, the time “when Moab’s pride and resistance to God were first heard of.”—Spk. Com. The previous prophecies had been general, now the prophet fixes a time for the Divine judgments. (14) as . . . hireling, who will take care not to serve beyond the allotted time.^e condemned, or brought into contempt.

The Vanity of Human Glory (vs. 12).—I. What does it cost! II. How easily can God destroy it! III. How soon will it terminate! IV. Is it worth the price which men set upon it?—Lyth.

Ineffectual Prayer.—What is more sad in the life of superstition than this passionate resort to any means, however irrational, to wring a favor from the deities of special shrines and sanctuaries? As if the true help were not ever near; as if, that being neglected, there could be hope elsewhere! Calvin observes, “While idolaters have their ordinary temples and opportunity opens suddenly, unexpectedly; and unless one is ready on the instant to pass through, the door closes again.”—Anon.

Ps. lxxx. 8-11.

^a “It is not unlikely that the people’s means of subsistence were chiefly derived from their vineyards.” —Henderson.

^b “The battle shout instead of the usual harvest song.”—Fausset.

^c In Wilkinson’s Anc. Egypt. are repres. of persons treading out the grapes. Some six or seven, holding by as many ropes suspended from a common hook in the ceiling, stamp in the press or upper trough, and thus press out the juice, wh. flows into the trough below.

Je. xlii. 17; Lu. xix. 41.

^d “The term expresses the fruitless fatigue and trouble to wh. idolaters must submit in worshipping a deity from which no aid can be obtained.” —Henderson.

Je. xlviii. 13.

^e No specific historical account of the destruction of Moab is given, but we know that when they marched into Canaan the Assyrians usually ravaged the trans-Jordanic districts (see 1 Chr. v. 26).

"If we had prayed more we need not have worked so hard. We have too little praying face to face with God every day. Looking back at the end I suspect there will be great grief for our sins of omission—omission to get from God what we might have got by praying."—Andrew A. Bonar.

"Though the angels and saints have different degrees of glory, yet every one is perfectly happy and pleased. As the strings of an instrument differ in the size and sound; some are sharp and high, some grave and deep, others, a mean, so that if every string had judgment and election, it would choose to be what it is; so from the different degrees of glory in heaven, the most amiable and equal order appears that satisfies every one."—Bates.

^a Ge. xiv. 15, xv. 2.

"No Eastern city has been so often overthrown and rebuilt as Damascus."—Vitrina.

Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, was the agent in the fulfilment of this prophecy B.C. 740 (2 Ki. xvi. 9).

^bDamascus is almost the only one of all the cities of Biblical antiquity that flourishes still down to the present day."—Nagelsbach.

places of worship, if any uncommon calamity befalls them, they go to another temple more sacred than the rest, expecting that there they will be more abundantly favored with the presence of their god. In like manner, the Papists of the present day, when they are reduced to any uncommon danger (for this fault has existed in all ages), think that they will more readily obtain their wish by running to St. Claude, or to Mary of Loretto, or to any other celebrated idol, than if they assembled in some neighboring church. They resolve that their extraordinary prayers shall be offered up in a church at a great distance. It is in this sense that the prophet applies the term sanctuary to that most highly celebrated among the Moabites, and says they will go to it without any advantage." One cannot help thinking of those melancholy pilgrimages to Lourdes, that focus of superstition in our own times. So do men continue to hew out to themselves cisterns that hold no water; and so necessary still is the living word of prophecy, to remind the world that only in a genuine spiritual relation to the Eternal, only in a faith and worship which is independent of place, because ever fixed in the heart, can true comfort and help be found.—Pul Com. The Moabite Inscription.—The stone containing the inscription in question was a monumental altar erected by Mesa, king of Moab, at Karhah, after his revolt on the death of Ahab, to signalize his victories over Israel. Until his days, says, he, Chemosh was irritated against the land of Moab and oppressed it, but then became more favorable, and so Israel began to perish. Then a number of successes follow—his general, Omri, takes Medeba, erects several buildings in it, amongst them a temple (?) of Chemosh. Mesa himself builds Baal-Meon and Kirjathaim, fights against Israel at Jaazer (?), retires towards the land of Moab, and performs his devotions (?) to Chemosh at Kerieth, remaining with his men till the next day. Then by order of Chemosh he besieges Nebo (a great lacuna), Jahaz, and at last takes Dibon. Next he declares himself to have built Karhah, the walls of ha-Yearim and . . . with its gates and towers; he orders the people to dig cisterns in the interior of Karhah, and compels the Israelite captives (?) to surround it with a trench. Mesa also mentions the construction of a fortress or ford at the Arnon, the building of Beth-Bamoth, Bezer, of the fortifications of Dibbon, and other towns which he added to his land; he built also. . . Beth-Diblathaim and Beth-Baal-Meon, to which last he transferred some Moabites (?). Finally, at the command of Chemosh he fought against Horonaim (a great lacuna). All these towns, the conquest of which is here related, were acquired by Mesa after the death of Ahab, during the two years of his successor Ahaziah and the first year of Jehoram; at the end of these three years, as mentioned in Isa. xvi. 14, "the glory of Moab was contemned" by the expedition of the three kings, related in 2 Kings iii., in which all the newly-made conquests were lost.—Ad. Neubauer. [See also Vol. II. of this work, p. 890].

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEETH.

Oracle for Damascus, vss. 1—11. "One of the earliest and most crisp of Isaiah's prophecies. Of the time of Syria's and Ephraim's league against Judah, somewhere between 736 and 732."—G. A. Smith. 1—3. (1) Damascus, the metropolis of Syria.^a Now one of the most opulent cities of the East, with a population of over 100,000.^b ruinous heap, comp. figs. Mi. iii. 12. One one of the Assyrian inscriptions, Tiglath says, "Cities of the Damascus land I desolated like a heap of rubbish." (2) cities of Aroer, "represent the whole land east of the Jordan; there the judgment upon Israel began."—Delitzsch. none . . . afraid, bec. the country should be desolated even of ordinary enemies to flocks. (3) fortress, "perhaps: 'And the bulwark shall be removed from Ephraim,' meaning the kingdom of Damascus, which had been like a breakwater, sheltering Israel from the Assyrian onslaught. It is, however, equally possible to understand the 'fortress' collectively of the fortified cities of North Israel."—Cam. Bib. kingdom, or royalty. remnant . . . Israel, translate, "and the remnant of Syria shall be as the glory," etc.

Damascus (sketch of history).—According to Josephus (J. Ant. i. 6), Damascus was founded by Uz, son of Aram, grandson of Shem. First named in Scripture (Ge. xiv. 15) in connection with Abraham, whose steward, Eliezer, was a Damascene (xv. 2). Tradition asserts that Abram, on his way to Canaan, stayed some time at Damascus. Damascus reduced to subjection by David (2 Sam. viii. 5, 6; 1 Ch. xviii. 5, 6), who probably allowed a native prince, said to be Hadad (J. Ant. vii. 5, 2), to retain the throne. In time of Solomon, one Rezin took Damascus (1 Ki. xi. 23—25). Afterwards Ben-Hadad occupied the district (1 Ki. xx. 34), and his son, the foe of Ahab (xx., xxii.; 2 Ki. vi., vii.). To him succeeded Hazael (viii. 15), and then his son Ben-Hadad (xiii. 3, 24), in whose reign it may have been that Damascus was subjected by Jeroboam II., king of Israel (xiv. 28). We hear no more of Damascus till time of Ahaz, who, having asked aid of Tiglath-Pileser, the Assyrian, came, killed Rezin, and occupied Damascus, where he was met by Ahaz (xvi. 5—10). This predicted (Is. xvii.; Am. i. 3—5). Further troubles foretold (Jer. xlix. 27—32); fulfilled, according to Josephus (J. Ant. x. 9, 7), by invasion of Chaldeans. It afterwards passed into hands of Persians (Strabo. xvi. 2, 19), and for its strength was chosen by Darius as a store for his treasures. It afterwards became a possession of the Greeks, and from them passed under the Romans (J. Ant. xiv. 2, 3). In New Testament times it was the scene of St. Paul's conversion (Acts ix.), part of kingdom of Aretas, an Arabian (2 Cor. xi. 32); later it was reckoned to Decapolis. It grew in splendor under the Greeks, and when taken by Mohammedans, in A. D. 634, was one of chief cities of East. Taken by Turks 1006, and by Tamerlane 1400. It is still a great city under the Turks. Population 140,000, of whom 12,000 Christians, and as many Jews. In 1860, in consequence of a dispute between the Druses and Maronites, the Mohammedans massacred about 3,000 Christians. Many were rescued by Abdel-Kader. Fuad Pasha executed 160 for these outrages and by conscription made 11,000 of the inhabitants soldiers.

4, 5. Here follow three figures to describe the fate of Israel: wasting disease; harvesting of corn; and gathering of olives. In each case there is a remnant only left. (4) made thin, reduced to almost nothing. fatness . . lean, fig. taken fr. the growing leanness of a fat man in famine-time.^a (5) gathereth the corn, these fig. imply the clean sweeping away of the people from the land. with his arm, grasping them while he cuts off the ears of the grain. In the E. the straw is left in the field. gathereth ears, comp. Ruth ii. 2, 7, 15 ff. It is the figure of a gleaner. He will find but few ears, so thorough has been the previous harvesting. Rephaim,^b a fruitful plain S. W. of Jerusalem, sloping towards Bethlehem.

Moral and Religious Suggestions.—1. Association of Abram with ancient history of Damascus may illustrate the rescue from oblivion of interesting spots by incidents and casual allusions of sacred writings. 2. Eliezer served Abraham. The world is the servant of the Church (many irreligious men aided Noah in building the ark). 3. Eliezer of Damascus a faithful servant. Upright men among the heathen. How much of his goodness may be traced to his connection with the patriarch? 4. Most beautiful spots of earth have often been the scenes of greatest crimes and disasters. 5. No earthly paradise should cause us to forget the better land. "Here we have no continuing city." 6. The famous Damascus most celebrated as the scene of a memorable conversion. St. Paul's spiritual birthplace; next to Bethlehem, the most important and influential place of nativity in the world. 7. Beautiful places not always safe for good men. Paul by night fled from Damascus, and by night also Lot fled from Sodom. 8. The story of Naaman a comment on the world's incompetence to supply spiritual needs; and formal ablutions to cleanse away moral pollution.

6—8. (6) gleaning grapes, etc., better: "Yet a gleaning remains from it." shaking . . tree, "the first gathering of olives is by the hand, then the branches are shaken or beaten; but there is still a gleaning left."—Spk. Com. De. xxiv. 20. The reference is to the scattered few left in the land.^a (7) look to, under the pressure of exceeding calamity they would turn to Jehovah. Holy One, see Is. i. 4. (8) altars, associated with his former idolatrous confidences. groves, R. V. "the Asherim." "The Asherah or Sacred Pole was an emblem of divinity which seems to have stood regularly by the side of the altar in a Canaanitish sanctuary (Jud.

"That valley was fruitful; it was called in the old time 'The Valley of Giants.' The Philistines kept their eyes constantly upon it, and when the chosen people held the valley, and when it was filled with corn, then the Philistines fell upon it and took it away. So shall it be with men who try contests with God, who invite the Lord to battle." — People's Bib.

"Glories, like glowworms, afar off shine bright, but look'd too near, have neither heat nor light." — Webster.

^a "Or the fig. is that of a man in a consumption, that is become a mere skeleton, and reduced to skin and bones." — Gill.

^b The name is due to the belief that it was originally occupied by a section of the race of Canaanitish giants, Jos. xv. 8.

Proverbs: "You will never make a crab walk straight forwards." — Greek. "The wolf changes his coat, but not his disposition." — Latin. "Drive away nature, and back it comes at a gallop." — French. "What's bred in the bone will never be out of the flesh." — English.

^a "The gleanings here are the ignoble refuse who survived the deportation of the ten tribes by Assyria, not the pious remnant." — J. A. Alexander.

"One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning." — Lowell.

"From the lowliest depth there is a path to the loftiest height." — Carlyle.

"What we call life is a journey to death; and what we call death is a passport to life. True wisdom thanks Death for what he takes, and, still more, for what he brings. There is nothing formidable about death but the consequences of it; and these we ourselves can regulate and control. The shortest life is long enough if it lead to a better; and the longest life is too short if it do not." — Colton.

"Infancy is the perpetual Messiah, which comes into the arms of fallen men, and pleads with them to return to Paradise." — Emerson.

^a De. xxxii. 4, 15, 18, 30, 81; Is. xxvi. 4, marg.; 1 Co. x. 4.

A legend says that a powerful and rich king, troubled in heart in spite of all his possessions, went to a holy dervise, and asked him for the secret of happiness. The dervise led him forth in front of a high rock, on the top of which an eagle had built her nest. Then the dervise said, "Imitate that bird: build thy throne in heaven, and thou shalt reign there unmolested and in peace."

vi. 13, 25; Deut. xvi. 21; 2 Ki. xviii. 4, etc.). It is regarded by some as an artificial survival of the sacred tree, under which the altar stood; by others as the symbol (or image) of a goddess of the same name. Whether a goddess Asherah was actually worshipped is a much controverted point; if so, she was probably nothing more than an impersonation of the material symbol here referred to.—Camb. Bib., images, R. V. "sun-images," emblems of a Phœnician deity, Baal-Hammam, "Lord of the sun's heat."

Redemption of the Remnant.—This word, "The remnant shall return," is the standing word of promise and of hope for Israel. It contains the "law of Israel's history." The ring is gone, but the finger remains; the tree is felled, but the root-stump may yet send out suckers; from the bared harvest-field some gleanings may yet be gathered. And so Israel stands as the type of human life. All is not lost while conscience remains, while will may still exert its energy against evil, and in the reformation of the habits. But there must be this reformation, which begins with a looking up to God. The state of the soul depends on the direction of its gaze. We look where we love, and our looking may produce love.—Pulpit Com. "Yet."—That is a gospel word; that is the nature of an anthem. There is the token of hope, the signal of possible deliverance and return and enfranchisement. Something shall be left. Just one or two little ears—multiply them by God's intention, and they shall become a harvest: "two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough"—take them down, multiply them by the purpose of the divine love, and they shall become as a field of fruitfulness. Is it not so with us? We have something left yet: the little child is left; the business is not wholly ruined; we have good health or good spirits; we have a friend or two here and there, kindly voices are not wholly dead: what is the meaning of these remnants of things? These remnants mean that God wants us home again; wants to see us in tears of penitence; wants to meet us at the cross of Christ; wants to reclaim us from the power and the captivity of the devil; wants to make us in very deed his own children; wants to recover us from our wandering, and set us like a fallen star in the brotherhood of the suns, to go out no more forever. Return, O wanderer, to thy home!—People's Bible.

9—11. (9) forsaken bough, etc., probably the Sept. gives the proper reading "be like the deserted places of the Amorite and the Hivite, which they forsook before the children of Israel."—Camb. Bib. (10) rock, familiar Scr. term for God.^a plant, etc., with reference to the importation of foreign idols, and idolatrous systems, fr. Syria and Phœnicia. (11) day . . grow, R. V. "in the day of thy planting thou hedgest it in." shall be a heap, R. V. "fleeth away," i. e. In the beginning the undertaking will seem to be successful, but it will vanish in a day of great trouble. Polychr. B. translates vss. 10 b and 11 as follows: "Therefore, though thou plantest little gardens with shoots for Adonis, and stockest them with scions dedicated to a foreign god, even though as soon as thou plantest them thou fencest them in, and early bringest thy shoots to blossom, therefore the harvest shall vanish in a day of sickness and desperate pain."

O God, Thou Art my God.—Lord, I have viewed this world over in which Thou hast set me; I have tried how this and that thing will fit my spirit and the design of my creation, and can find nothing on which to rest, for nothing here doth itself rest; but such things as please me for a while in some degree, vanish and flee as shadows from before me. Lo! I come to Thee—the Eternal Being—the Spring of Life—the Centre of Rest—the Stay of the Creation—the Fullness of all Things—I join myself to Thee: with Thee I will lead my life and spend my days, with whom I am to dwell forever, expecting when my little time is over, to be taken up into Thine own eternity.—Arthur H. Hallam. "O God, who art the truth, make me one with Thee in everlasting love; I am often weary of reading and weary of working. In Thee alone is the sum of my desires. Let all teachers be silent: let the whole creation be dumb before Thee, and wilt Thou speak unto my soul?"—Thomas à Kempis.

12—14. "A short independent oracle springing from the same historical situation as the following chapter." It describes the annihilation of the Assyrians.—Camb. Bib. (12) Woe, etc., R. V. "Ah, the uproar of many peoples, which roar like the roaring of seas." many people, i. e. the various nationalities of which the Assyrian army was composed. rushing, indicating the haste of forced marches. (13) rebuke them, with reference to the sudden and overwhelming discomfiture of Sennacherib. rolling thing, etc., R. V. "like the whirling dust before the storm." (14) eveningtide, "the destruction of the Assyrian shall be accomplished between evening and daybreak. The expression denotes a very short space of time, as in Ps. xxx. 5; Job xxvii. 19; but the destruction of Sennacherib's army took place literally in the night (ch. xxxvii. 36)."—Camb. Bib.

The Destruction of Sennacherib (vss. 12—14).—I. The foe—numerous, mighty, furious. II. The invasion—sudden, alarming, terrible. III. The defence—sufficient, available. IV. The defeat—utter, signal, ruinous. V. The interval of suspense—short, transient. VI. The triumph—complete, inspires confidence.—Lyth.

Care of God.—"Do you see this lock of hair?" said an old man to me. "Yes; but what of it? It is, I suppose, the curl from the head of a dear child long since gone to God." "It is not. It is a lock of my own hair; and it is now nearly seventy years since it was cut from this head." "But why do you prize a lock of your own hair so much?" "It has a story belonging to it, and a strange one. I keep it thus with care because it speaks to me more of God, and of His special care, than anything else I possess. I was a little child of four years old, with long curly locks, which, in sun, or rain, or wind, hung down my cheeks uncovered. One day my father went into the wood to cut up a log, and I went with him. I was standing a little way behind him, or rather at his side, watching with interest the strokes of the heavy axe, as it went up and came down upon the wood, sending off splinters with every stroke in all directions. Some of the splinters fell at my feet, and I eagerly stooped to pick them up. In doing so I stumbled forward, and in a moment my curly head lay upon the log. I had fallen just at the moment when the axe was coming down with all its force. It was too late to stop the blow. Down came the axe. I screamed, and my father fell to the ground in terror. He could not stay the stroke, and in the blindness which the sudden horror caused, he thought he had killed his boy. We soon recovered—I from my fright, and he from his terror. He caught me in his arms, and looked at me from head to foot, to find out the deadly wound which he was sure he had inflicted. Not a drop of blood nor a scar was to be seen. He knelt upon the grass, and gave thanks to a gracious God. Having done so he took up his axe, and found a few hairs upon its edge. He turned to the log he had been splitting, and there was a single curl of his boy's hair, sharply cut through and laid upon the wood. How great the escape! It was as if an angel had turned aside the edge at the moment it was descending on my head. With renewed thanks upon his lips he took up the curl, and went home with me in his arms. That lock he kept all his days, as a memorial of God's care and love. That lock he left to me on his death-bed. I keep it with care. It tells me of my father's God and mine. It rebukes unbelief and alarm. It bids me trust Him for ever. I have had many tokens of fatherly love in my threescore years and ten, but somehow this speaks most to my heart. It is the oldest and perhaps the most striking. It used to speak to my father's heart; it now speaks to mine."

Our Comrades—

Unseen they walk beside us every day,—

The three, Faith, Hope, and Love;

True comrades, cheering us along the way

That leads above.

One cries: "Be brave; endure, as in the sight

Of him who conquered death!

He is thy shield and buckler; up, and fight!

Be brave!" cries Faith.

And one: "O, hasten on; the heavenly gates

Gleam yonder, up the slope!

There to receive and crown thee Jesus waits.

Haste!" whispers Hope.

"Let nothing disturb thee: nothing affright thee: all things are passing; God never changeth."—Longfellow.

"Our times are in His hand, who saith, 'A whole I planned.' Youth shows but half; trust God, see all, nor be afraid."—Browning.

"Thousands whose experiences of the delivering hand of God are not less signal, stop short at the powers of nature, and instead of bending the knee before the All-merciful God, content themselves to express with cold hearts their admiration of the changes of the destiny of man."—Tholuck.

"Heaven helps those who help others. No man is so sure of the divine assistance as he who has remembered the divine unselfishness. God is very present with those who dwell helpfully with others. God's hand takes hold of our work, when our work is done out of love in brotherly kindness. Diligent selflessness has the reward of diligence, but the curse of selfishness; diligent unselfishness has the reward of diligence and the blessing of heaven."—S. S. Times.

"Unlike the soldier on the battle-field, who, if he eats at all, snatches a hasty meal and, wearied and but half refreshed, hurries again to the fight, the Christian warrior pauses to rest and feast."

"He who God's will has borne and done,
And his own restless longings stilled;
What else he's done, or has foregone,
His mission he has well fulfilled."

And one: "Hast any here besides? O bring Them with thee; for above
Is room for all, and welcome from the King.
Bring them!" pleads Love.

Marching and fighting thus we onward move,
With Faith for general,
With Hope for banner-bearer, and with Love Watching o'er all.—R. G. Sutherland.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

a "The fig. of a disk with double wings is a symbol of Ethiopian royalty."—Canon Cook.

"The reference of the fig. may be to the protection wh. Egypt promised to the Jews." — Henderson.

b "Some take the reference to be to Ethiopia, and Israel is to send messengers of Sennac's defeat.
Then the words are regarded as indicating the vigor and martial energy of Tirhakah's people."—So Wordsworth.

"Like a blind spinner in the sun, I tread my days; I know that all the threads will run Appointed ways." — Helen Hunt.

"All I have seen teaches me to trust the Creator for all I have not seen."
—Emerson.

"A Christian man's life is laid in the loom of time to a pattern which he does not see, but God does; and his heart is a shuttle. On one side of the loom is sorrow, and on the other is joy; and the shuttle struck

This chapter contains a prophetic response to certain Ethiopian ambassadors who come seeking an alliance with Judah. 1, 2. (1) Woe... wings, R. V. "Ah, the land of the rustling of wings,"^a the allusion is to Egypt with its swarms of insects that abound around the Nile. Ethiopia, or Cush, the land beyond the White and Blue Nile. Highland Ethiopia. At the time referred to Tirhakah was king of Ethiopia, and a monarch of great military renown. The ultimate object of Sennacherib was the conquest of Egypt, so news of his destruction was good news for Tirhakah. (2) ambassadors, to Israel. "In 702 when Sennacherib had taken the field to chastise Phœnicia, Philistia and Judah, Taharga sent ambassadors to Jerusalem to announce the despatch of an Egyptian army, and to encourage Hezekiah to make a manful resistance to the invaders."—Polychr. B. sea, i. e. the Nile, still called "the sea" in Arabic. bulrushes, R. V. "papyrus," i. e. paper or reed canoes, easy of transportation on land and carrying one or two passengers on the river. saying, this word should be omitted. With the words "Go ye swift messengers" the charge of Isaiah to the ambassadors begins. He sends them back with the message that follows. Notice the courtesy with which he rejects their overtures. scattered and peeled, R. V. "tall and smooth," reference is to the martial and handsome peoples, like the Nubians of the Soudan.^b a nation... spoiled, R. V. "a nation that meteth out and treadeth down, whose land the rivers divide."

Lessons.—1. The providence of God over the Church. He shows that he takes care of the Church, and that, though he determines to chastise it, still he comes forward at the proper season to hinder it from perishing, and displays his power in opposition to tyrants and other enemies, that they may not overthrow it or succeed in accomplishing what they imagined to be in their powers. 2. The indestructibility of the spiritual life. This must not be confounded with the institutions in which it dwells for a time. But, understanding the "Church" in the spiritual or mystical sense, it cannot perish. 3. The self-concealment of God. The trial of faith in all ages. Oh that he would show his face, bare his arm, disclose his majesty, exert his power, appear as Judge to end once for all the strifes of the world! But we must learn to say, "God's in his heaven, all's right with the world." At the proper season he will come forth. 4. The unity of religion the prophetic ideal. "Mount Zion" was its ancient symbol; for us it is not Rome, nor any other city or mount,—it is the human heart, with all its pathos, its faith, hope, and love, its regenerate life and aspirations it is one spirit universal in mankind.—Pulpit Com.

Floods in Egypt.—Great injury has often been done to the lands contiguous to large and rapid rivers, especially when inundations have happened. Sonnini relates a circumstance of this kind, to which he was a witness in passing down the Nile. He says, "The reis and the sailors were asleep upon the beach; I had passed half of the night watching, and I composed myself to sleep, after giving the watch to two of my companions, but they too had sunk into slumber. The kanja, badly fastened against the shore, broke loose, and the current carried it away with the utmost rapidity. We were all asleep; not one of us, not even the boatmen stretched upon the sand, perceived our manner of sailing down at the mercy of the current. After having floated with the stream for the space of a good league, the boat hurried along with violence, struck with a terrible crash against the shore, precisely a little below the place from whence the greatest part of the loosened earth fell down. Awakened by this furious shock, we were not slow in perceiving the critical situation into which we were thrown. The kanja, repelled by the land, which was cut perpendicularly, and driven towards it again by the violence of the current, turned round in every direction, and dashed against the shore in such a manner as excited an apprehension that it would be broken to pieces. The darkness of the night, the frightful noise which the masses separated from the shore spread far and wide as they fell into deep water—the bubbling which they excited, the agitation of which communicated itself to the boat, rendered our awakening a very melancholy one. There was no time to be lost. I made my companions take the oars, which the darkness prevented us from finding so soon as we could have wished; I sprung to the helm, and encouraging my new and very inexperienced sailors, we succeeded in making our escape from a repetition of shocks by which we must at length all have inevitably perished; for scarcely had we gained, after several efforts, the middle of the river than a piece of hardened mud, of an enormous size, tumbled down at the very spot we had just quitted, which must, had we been but a few minutes later, have carried us to the bottom.”—Trav. in Egypt.

3, 4. (3) All ye, etc., here begins the answer which the ambassadors are to give. See what Jehovah can do! (4) take my rest, “I will hold me still, and look on in my place.”—Polychr. B. For a time it seemed as if God did not notice the progress of the Assyrians. consider, look on, watch, wait My time. clear .. herbs, R. V. “clear heat in sunshine,” “the points of comparison are apparently two: (1) the motionless stillness of the noon-tide heat and the fleecy cloud are an emblem of Jehovah’s quiescence. (2) As these natural phenomena hasten the ripening of the fruit, so all providential agencies appear to further and mature the schemes of Assyria. But the development is suddenly arrested just before its fruition.”—Camb. Bip.

Grace of God as Dew.—The grace of God is like dew to the barren and parched hearts of men, to make them fruitful. And there are many things wherein the proportion and resemblance stand. I. None can give the dew but God. It comes from above; it is of a celestial original; the nativity thereof is from “the womb of the morning.” None can give grace but God. II. Dew is the fruit of a serene, clear, and quiet heaven: for dew never falleth either in scorching or tempestuous weather, as philosophers have observed. In like manner, the grace, favor, and blessings of God are the fruits of His reconciled affection towards us. III. Dew is abundant and innumerable. Who can number the drops of dew on the ground, or the “hairs of little rain?”—for so they are called in the original, because of their smallness and number (Deut. xxxii. 2). So Hushai expresseth the multitude of all Israel: “We will light upon him as the dew falleth upon the ground.” Such is the grace of God unto His people after their conversion; unsearchable, it cannot be comprehended or measured, nor brought under any number or account (Ps. lxxi. 15, cxxxix. 17, 18). IV. Dew is silent, slow, insensible in its descent. You cannot see, hear, feel, or smell its coming; you see it when it is come, but cannot observe how it comes. In this manner was God pleased to fill the world with the knowledge of His Gospel, and with the grace of His Spirit, by quiet, small, and, as it were, by insensible means. V. Dew is of a soft and benign nature, which gently insinuateth and worketh itself into the ground, and by degree moisteneth and mollifieth it. In like manner, the Spirit, the Grace, the Word of God is of a searching, insinuating, softening quality. VI. Dew is of a vegetating and quickening nature. So is the Grace, and Word, and Spirit of God. VII. Dew is of a refreshing and comforting nature—causes the face of things to flourish with beauty and delight, especially in the hot countries of the East. So God promises to be unto His people in their troubles, “as a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.” His grace gives comfort, peace, joy, strength, and the beauty of holiness to them.—Bp. Reynolds.

No drop but serves the slowly lifting tide,
No dew but has an errand to some flower,
No smallest star but sheds some helpful ray;

alternately by each, flies back and forth, carrying the thread, which is white or black as the pattern needs. And in the end, when God shall lift up the dish-dressed garment, and all its changing hues shall glance out, it will then appear that the deep and dark colors were as needful to beauty as the bright and high colors.”—Beecher.

“This quiet observant waiting of God’s, the Prophet compares to that weather wh. is most favorable for maturing the harvest, warm days and dewy nights.” — Nagesbach.

“God would let the enemy proceed in the execution of his purposes until they were nearly accomplished.”—J. A. Alexander.

“The weakest among us has a gift, however seemingly trivial, which is peculiar to him, and which, worthily used, will be a gift also to his race.”—Ruskin.

“The serene, silent beauty of a holy life is the most powerful influence in the world, next to the might of the Spirit of God.”—Spurgeon.

“The dews of the evening most carefully shun; those tears of the sky for the loss of the sun.”—Chesterfield.

“When the end of God’s working is the persuasion of His fatherly love, then we find His means marvelously adapted and effective.”

"A certain emperor said to the Egyptians, 'Draw from me as from your river Nilus;' but what can be drawn from a man but hopes, which swell like bubbles of water till they burst? It is from God that we must draw, for He is a fountain which perpetually distill-eth, who quench-eth the thirst of all the world, and hath in Himself, but one want, which is that all men should still thirst for His bounty and have it."—Causin.

"Rowland Hill once conversed with a celebrated sculptor, who had been hewing out a block of marble to represent that great patriot, Lord Chatham. 'There,' said the sculptor, 'is not that a fine form?' 'Now, sir,' said Mr. Hill, 'can you put life into it? else, with all its beauty, it is still but a block of marble.' God put life into His creation, and man became a living soul. Christ puts new life into dead men."—Bp. H. Goodwin.

"It is curious to note the fact that Abyssinia (Ethiopia) is the only great Christian power in the E. at this day."—J. A. Alexander.

"Judgment was his strange act, mercy his delight. The grandeur of his character was indeed displayed in the former scene; but it was displayed, as was needful, on its sterner side. In this there was equal moral grandeur; but it was the grand-

And man by man, each giving to all beside,
Makes the firm bulwark of the country's power;
There is no better way.

5. 6. (5) afore, i. e. just before; when the invader is feeling perfectly sure of accomplishing his purpose; then, and in the most humiliating way, his desolation shall come. bud is perfect, etc., R. V., "when the blossom is over, and the flower becometh a ripening grape." "The ripening crops represent the maturing plans of the Assyrians: Jehovah looks on, and in appearance promotes them, as a favorable sun and sky advance the grape; but, just before maturity is reached, fruit and branch alike are violently cut away, i. e. the enemy's plans are abruptly intercepted."—Driver. cut off, fig. of ruinous destruction of a fruit tree. (6) left together, i. e. the carcasses of thousands of the Assyrian army. They shall be a prey to the ravenous mountain birds, who shall have a long feast on the slain. summer . . winter, i. e. for a whole year.

God Can Work.—1. God's working is well-timed. 2. God's working is full of energy. 3. God's working is always effective to its end.—Pul. Com.

Use of Nature to Man.—Every part of nature seems to pay its tribute to man, in the great variety of kinds or tribes, as well as the prodigious number of individuals of each various tribe, of all creatures. There are so many beasts, so many birds, so many insects, so many reptiles, so many trees, so many plants upon the land; so many fishes, sea-plants, and other creatures, in the waters; so many minerals, metals, and fossils, in the subterraneous regions; that there is nothing wanting to the use of man, or any other creature of this lower world. The munificence of the Creator is such, that there is enough to supply the wants and conveniences of all creatures, in all places, all ages, and upon all occasions. And this boundless variety is a most wise provision for the uses of this world in every age and in every place. God has created nothing in vain. Some things are for food, some for physic, some for habitation, some for utensils, some for tools and instruments of work, and some for recreation and pleasure, either to man, or to some of the inferior creatures themselves. It is evident that all the creatures of God (beasts, birds, insects, and plants) have, or may have, their several uses even among men. For although in one place things may lie neglected, and out of use, yet in another place they may be of great use. So what has been rejected in one age has been received in another; as the new discoveries in physic, and alterations of diet, sufficiently witness. Or if there be many things of little immediate use to man, in this or any other age, yet to other creatures they may afford food or physic, or be of some necessary use. How many trees and plants, nay, even the very carcasses of animals, the very dust of the earth, and the prodigious swarms of insects in the air and in the waters, of no apparent use to man, yet are food, or medicine, or places of retreat and habitation to birds, fishes, reptiles, and insects themselves; for whose happy and comfortable subsistence the bountiful Creator has liberally provided, as well as for that of man.—Derham.

7. In that time, when this revelation of Jehovah's power has been made. the present, R. V. "a present," of a people, read "from a people." The meaning is that then Ethiopia shall be converted and pay homage to Jehovah. Comp. Zeph. iii. 10; Ps. lxxviii. 31. scattered and peeled, R. V., "tall and smooth," (other changes as in vs. 2.) to the place, etc., the simplest explanation is that some present came fr. Ethiopia to Zion in grateful acknowledgment of this deliverance.

Earthly Judgments (vs. 7).—I. Are intended not to destroy, but to benefit mankind. II. Must ultimately command attention and belief. III. Then respectful homage will be presented in Zion. IV. Even the most distant and unlikely nations shall be converted unto Him.—Lyth.

Sometime.—

Sometime when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set,
The thing which our weak judgments here have spurned,
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,

As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans are right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

* * * * *

When we shall clearly see and understand,
I think that we will say, "God knew the best."—M. R. Smith.

God—the great first cause.—

Great System of perfections! mighty Cause
Of causes mighty! Cause uncaused! Sole root
Of Nature, that luxuriant growth of God!
First Father of effects! that progeny
Of endless series; where the golden chain's
Last link admits a period, who can tell?
Father of all that is or heard, or hears!
Father of all that is or seen, or sees!
Father of all that is, or shall arise!
Father of this immeasurable mass
Of matter multiform; or dense, or rare;
Opaque, or lucid; rapid, or at rest;
Minute, or passing bound! in each extreme
Of like amaze, and mystery, to man.
Father of these bright millions of the night!
Of which the least full godhead had proclaimed,
And thrown the gazer on his knee. Or, say,
Is appellation higher still Thy choice?
Father of matter's temporary lord!
Father of spirits! nobler offspring! sparks
Of high paternal glory; rich endowed
With various measures, and with various modes
Of instinct, reason, intuition; beams
More pale, or bright from day divine, to break
The darker matter organised (the ware
Of all created spirit): beams, that rise
Each over other in superior light,
Till the last ripens into lustre strong,
Of next approach to godhead. Father fond (Far fonder than e'er bore that name on earth)
Of intellectual beings! beings blest
With powers to please Thee! not of passive ply
To laws they know not; beings lodged in seats
Of well-adapted joys, in different domes
Of this imperial palace for thy sons;
Of this proud, populous, well-policed,
Though boundless habitation, planned by Thee;
Whose several clans their several climates suit;
And transposition, doubtless, would destroy.
Or, oh! indulge, immortal King, indulge
A title less august indeed, but more Endearing. Ah! how sweet in human ears;
Sweet in our ears and triumph in our hearts!
Father of Immortality to man!—Young.

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

"This chapter contains one of the most note-worthy and characteristic of Isaiah's foreign prophecies. A period of unexampled collapse and decay, affecting every grade and class of society is about to commence for Egypt, to be succeeded, ultimately, by the nation's conversion and spiritual renovation."—Driver. 1, 2. (1) Egypt,^a from 1500 to 1300 B. C. Egypt was the leading nation in culture, arts, and military prowess. In 730 the Ethiopians gained the upper hand. For some time now, (720) at the date of the prophecy, her power was waning. ^brideth .. cloud, the Scrip. sign of august majesty,^b Comp. Ps. xviii; 9-14.

eur of graciousness and grace."
—Morison.

"That you may find success, let me tell you how to proceed. To-night begin your great plan of life. You have but one life to live; and it is most important that you do not make a mistake. To-night begin carefully. Fix your eye on the fortieth year of your age, and then say to yourself, 'At the age of forty, I will be an industrious man, a benevolent man, a well-read man, a religious man, and a useful man, I resolve; and I will stand to it.' My young friends, pray to God that this resolution may stand like the oak, which cannot be wind-shaken." — C. Brooks.

"Come, let us fashion acts that are to be, when we shall lie in darkness silently."—George Eliot.

"If a man constantly aspires, is he not elevated?"—Thoreau.

^aEgypt stretched fr. the Medit. Sea on the N. to Ethiopia on the S., with the Red Sea on the E., and the Lybian desert on the W. It was intersected by the Nile throughout the whole of its length.

^b Da. vii. 13;
Mat. xxiv. 30;
Re. i. 7.

^c Of the colossal fig. of Rameses Dean Stanley says, "Nothing wh. now exists in the world can give any notion of what the effect must have been when he was erect." Ex. xii. 12; Je. xliii. 7-13.

"The cloud that appears to be nothing but vapor, may enshrine the Deity; the bush, yesterday so common that any bird might have alighted upon it, to-day burns with unseen, infinite energy."—Parker.

"But I," cried the fresh-hearted New Year, "I shall try to leave men wiser than I find them. I will offer them freely whatever good gifts Providence permits me to distribute, and will tell them to be thankful for what they have, and humbly hopeful for more."—Hawthorne.

"Poverty is the gift of God, as well as riches."—Vasor Powell.

^a The land of Eg. fell into a decline; every one did as he pleased; long years there was no sovereign for them that had the supreme power over the rest of things. The land of Eg. belonged to the princes of the districts. One killed another in jealousy.—From papyrus of Rameses III., discovered by Harris, in 1855.

^b Is. viii. 19.

"Do not think that years leave us and find us the same."—Owen Meredith.

^c "The king here mentioned is identified by J.

The majesty of the clouds, especially in storm, has naturally been considered a revelation of Jehovah's presence. idols, lit. nonentities, a striking word when the grandeur of the idol-figures of Eg. is considered." Moved, i. e. tremble with fear. heart . . melt, fig. for loss of national confidence. (2) against his brother, i. e. one part of the country against the other. Civil war does more mischief to a nation than foreign war.

Judgment Upon Egypt (vss. 1-17).—I. Effected by the direct interposition of God, a cloud comes from cloudless Egypt, comes from heaven, moves slowly. II. Affects its social conditions, puts contempt on its idolatry, dissolves the bonds of society, destroys its superstitious hopes, subjects it to an oppressive tyranny. III. Affects its physical conditions, dries up the river, ruins vegetation, destroys the fisheries, puts an arrest upon trade and manufactures. IV. Affects its intellectual condition: the wise become fools, the brave cowards, the industrious idle, the people are filled with dread of the anger of the Lord.—Lyth.

Historical Notes on Egypt.—Egypt is supposed to be a contraction of Aia-gyptos=land of Kyptos; or, the black land. According to ancient mythology, the name is derived from Egyptus, the son of Belus. 1. Egypt, the Mizraim of the LXX., is called Matzor (Is. xix. 6; R. V.); Eretz Hham=land of Ham (Ps. lxxviii. 51, cv. 23); Rahab (Is. xxx. 7; R. V. li. 9; Ps. lxxxvii. 4); Sihor (Is. xxiii. 3); and house of bondmen (Ex. xiii. 3, 14; Deu. vii. 8). In Scripture the name is often used in the singular Misr, and Bochart is of opinion that Mizraim, the dual form, refers to Upper and Lower Egypt. To this day the Arabs call it Misr. 2. Race: it was peopled by Mizraim's posterity (Gen. x. 6, 13, 14); idolatrous (Ex. xii. 12; Nu. xxxiii. 4; Is. xix. 1; Ez. xxx. 13); practised magic (Ex. vii. 11, 12, 22, viii. 7); were ruled by kings called Pharaohs (Gen. xii. 14, 15, xl. 1, 2; Ex. i. 8, 22); aided by a governor (Gen. xli. 41-44); and princes and counsellors (Gen. xii. 15; Is. xix. 11); people were superstitious (Is. xix. 3); hospitable (Gen. xlvii. 5, 6; 1 Ki. xi. 18); often intermarried with strangers (Gen. xxi. 21; 1 Ki. iii. 1, xi. 19; Chr. ii. 34, 35); hated shepherds (Gen. xlv. 34); abhorred sacrifice of oxen (Ex. viii. 26); they were not to be hated by Israel (Deu. xxiii. 7); received into congregation in third generation (Deu. xxiii. 8). 3. Customs: mode of entertaining (Gen. xliii. 32, 34); diet (Nu. xi. 5); embalming (Gen. l. 3). 4. Political character: proud (Ez. xxix. 3, xxx. 6); pompous (Ez. xxxii. 12); mighty (Is. xxx. 2, 3); ambitious (Jer. xlv. 8); treacherous (Is. xxxvi. 6; Ez. xxix. 6, 7); yet offered an asylum to strangers (Gen. xii. 10, xlvii. 4; 1 Ki. xi. 17, 40; 2 Ki. xxv. 26; Matt. ii. 12, 13). 5. Its armies: described (Ex. xiv. 7-9); captured Gezer (1 Ki. ix. 16); besieged Jerusalem (1 Ki. xiv. 25, 26); invaded Assyria and killed Josiah (2 Ki. xxiii. 29); deposed Jehoahaz, and made Judaea tributary (2 Ki. xxiii. 31-35).—Topics.

3, 4. (3) the spirit, "used here of intellectual power." counsel thereof, the sagacity of the rulers should fail.^a seek, for advice. charmers, etc., the sign of want of confidence in the government.^b "The power of cool and rational deliberation ceases: advice is sought by recourse to those magical arts for which in antiquity Egypt was celebrated."—Driver. (4) give over . . cruel lord,^c "the words suggest a foreign ruler and are quite applicable to any Assyrian monarch likely to undertake the conquest of Egypt. Esarhaddon in 672 and again Assurbanipal in 662 ravaged the country as far as Thebes; the Empire was broken up into twenty petty principalities, and all attempts at revolt were sternly suppressed until 645, when Psammetichus, one of the native princes, succeeded in shaking off the Assyrian yoke and uniting Egypt under his own sway."—Camb. Bib.

Temptation to Trust in Diviners.—I. The universal desire to pierce the unseen and the future. On this desire rests the success of modern spiritualism. II. Moral reasons why the future is hidden from us: 1. It is necessary for our probation. 2. It prevents procrastination by impression of the supreme value of now. 3. It keeps from self-security. 4. It makes our life a life of faith. III. Religion gives rest from the care about the future.—Pul. Com.

Geographical Notes, etc., on Egypt.—1. Situation: in Africa, at the N.E. corner. 2. Extent: about 480 miles long, by 250 at its widest. Area capable of cultivation about 16,000 square miles, or about half area of Ireland. 3. Boundaries: (Ez. xxix. 10) on north the Mediterranean; east, Red Sea and Isthmus of Suez; south, Ancient Ethiopia; west, Lybia.

4. Divisions: (1) Lower east, called also the delta. This portion borders on the Mediterranean south, and being enclosed by the two chief mouths of the Nile, takes the form of the Greek letter, "delta." This district is about 80 miles from north to south. (2) Central Egypt, or Heptanomis: extending about 150 miles further south. (3) Upper Egypt, or Thebais, reaching still further south about 250 miles. 5. Physical features: Egypt may be described as the valley of one great river—the Nile (Gen. xli. 1—3; Ex. i. 22). This river is constantly bringing down a quantity of alluvial soil, which it deposits throughout its whole course. At the delta this soil has been deposited to a thickness, in the banks, of 30 feet (Amos viii. 8). Hence Egypt is slowly undergoing a process of elevation. Little rain falls in Egypt, about four or five showers annually at Thebes (Deu. xi. 10, 11)—(Wilkinson). Absence of rain is compensated by copious night dews. 6. Productions: a great corn country; to this day its corn exportations very great. Turkey is mainly dependent on Egypt for corn, and it was anciently the granary of the Romans. It produces also large quantities of flax and cotton. The "fine linen" of Egypt was famous. Many birds, of different kinds, "the numbers numberless, of all manner of birds—vultures and cormorants, and geese, flying like constellations through the blue heavens; pelicans standing in long array on the water-side; hoopoes and zic-zacs, and the (so-called) white ibis, the gentle symbol of the god Osiris, in his robes of white;—walking under one's very feet."

5—7. (5) waters shall fail, either as result of act of Jehovah, or from lack of attention to reservoirs and dykes, owing to the chaotic civil conditions. sea, the Nile.^a wasted, or parched up, by withholding of the usual flood.^b (6) And they . . . dried up, R. V., "And the rivers shall stink: the streams of Egypt shall be diminished and dried up." The word translated "defence" in A. V. is a rare name for Egypt. reeds and flags,^c growing on the mud banks. (7) paper reeds, etc., R. V., "The meadows by the Nile, by the brink of the Nile, and all that is sown by the Nile, shall become dry, be driven," etc. "The meadows will become so parched that they blow away like ashes."—Delitzsch.

From the sources and springs of the mighty Nile up to the seat of thought, passion and motion in the mightier human heart, all are in the hands of Jehovah. Alike in every occupation of the industrial and of the political and intellectual world, let us own our dependence upon Him.—Pulpit Com.

The Paper Reeds.—The tourist in Egypt, looking for Bible illustrations, is likely to be disappointed when he finds no 'bulrushes' or "reeds," answering to those spoken of in the history of the infant Moses. No sign of flag, reed, or other aquatic plant appears, either along the Nile or elsewhere. Yet there must have been such plants in former times. The monuments depict them in great variety—the lotus being a favorite. And the rolls of papyrus found in the tombs testify to the existence of such plants, the papyrus having been made from the bark of the paper reed. How interesting to the Scripture student to find that the disappearance of these plants was specifically predicted by the Scripture writers! Says the Prophet Isaiah, "The reeds and flags shall wither; the paper reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks, and everything sown by the brooks shall wither, be driven away, and be no more." But the question comes, why do not aquatic plants now grow in Egypt? Are not the physical conditions now existing in this country the same which have always prevailed? And does the Divine fiat now resist natural laws, for the fulfilment of prophecy? I answer that aquatic plants,—which, as Herodotus testifies, were extremely valuable,—were reared, in the time of Egypt's prosperity, by artificial means—involving the preparation of reservoirs and "brooks." Thus, too, by means of "ponds" and "sluices," the fish were multiplied. And the prediction of Isaiah relates to the destruction of the nice arrangements of artificial life, on which depended the country's high prosperity. And how entirely natural that the bathing-place of Pharaoh's daughter should be a cultivated garden bordering the Nile, where seclusion could be had.—The Far East by Burt.

8—10. (8) fishers, upon whom one of the leading industries of Egypt depended. the brooks, R. V., "the Nile." (9) flax, from which linen cloth

D. Michaelis with Sethos, by Grotius, Gesenius, and others, with Psammetichus, by the Rabbins with Sennacherib, by Hitzig and Henderwerk with Sargon, by Clericus with Nebuchadnezzar, by Vitringa with Cambysses or Oechus, and by Cocceus with Charlemagne."—J. A. Alexander.

"We rise in glory as we sink in pride."—Young.

^a Is. xviii. 2, xxvii. 1; Nah. iii. 8.

"It was called a sea, not merely bec. of its normal breadth within its own banks, but also bec. it really spreads out like a sea at the time of its overflow."—Nagelsbach.

^b "The Nile, being the source of her plenty, was worshiped by the Eg.; and the Div. judgment on the Nile was like a smiting of her god."—Wordsworth.

^c Ex. ii. 3.

See also under verses 11, 12.

"See that you personally know and daily live upon Christ."

"What each day needs, that shalt thou ask. Each day will set its proper task."—Goethe.

^d "Both flax and cotton abounded in Eg., and the manufacturing of linen and cotton cloths afforded support to many thousands of its inhabitants. In ancient times linen was worn by the people generally; the priests officiated in linen dresses; and we know that the cloths forming the bandages of the nunneries are linen."—Henderson.

"Little minds are tamed and subdued by misfortune, but great minds rise above it."—Washington Irving.

"Losses, disappointments, ill tongues, loss of friends, houses, or country, are God's workmen, set on work to work out good to you, out of everything that befalleth you."—Samuel Rutherford.

^a Nu. xlii. 22; Ps. lxxviii. 43.

"I cannot recollect any (ruin of ancient city) that impressed me so deeply with the sense of fallen and deserted magnificence."—Macgregor.

^b Comp. Is. xli. 22, 26, xliii. 9, xlv. 21, xlviii. 14.

"The wind and the waves are always on the side of the ablest navigators."—Gibbon.

"If I shoot at the sun, I may hit a star."—P. T. Barnum.

"If there be some weaker one, Give me strength to help him on; If a blinder soul there be, Let me guide him nearer Thee; was made for the priests, and for mummy wrappings. It also depends for its growth upon the irrigation of the fields by the river. networks, R. V., "white cloth," i. e. cotton goods, the clothing of the great mass of the people.^d (10) And they shall be broken, etc., R. V., "And her pillars shall be broken in pieces, all they that work for hire shall be grieved in soul." Gesenius thinks the higher and lower classes of society are put together in this vs. as alike affected by the failure of the Nile. The higher classes being called the pillars or foundations of the state; the lower classes being mentioned as those who labor for hire.

The Wonderful Way in Which all Prosperity is Made Dependent on the First Gifts of God.—Man's riches are God's gifts. Man can never add to the wealth of the world by exchanges, which only vary the possessors. Air, rain, sunshine, water, electricity, coal, increase from field and beast, are man's riches; and these are first things that are absolutely dependent on God, and out of man's control. God withholds the rains, and a nation is in misery; God tempers the air, and plague sweeps away the multitudes; God stops the flood, and Egypt pines away in its helplessness. The source of all real good is God, in whose hands are the very springs and sources of all human happiness and prosperity.—Pul. Com.

Fish-ponds.—This may allude to the enclosures or weirs which the Orientals construct most skillfully for catching fishes. They put down across a stream a vast number of stakes, which extend some hundreds of yards, and which resemble a low hedge. When there has been a flood or influx of the tide, the water rises considerably above the tops of the stakes, and the fish go up with the flow; and whilst they are engaged in seeking food at the bottom of the stream, the water gradually and imperceptibly retires, till at length it becomes so shallow as to prevent them from escaping over the hedge. They are then easily taken. At other times the ground is so staked out as to leave a convenient opening, through which, when the fishes attempt to retire into the deep water, they are caught in nets placed there by the wily fishermen. Kings and men of high rank have large ponds, where fish are sacredly kept, none being allowed to molest them. In a few years the surface of the water exhibits a mass of living creatures.—Roberts.

11, 12. (11) Zoan, the ancient capital of the Pharaohs. Tanis, at the N.E. of Egypt.^a Here if anywhere should statesmen be found. But before this catastrophe their advice is worthless, fools, utterly foolish. "None seemed able to foresee the impending ruin, or avert the national calamities." how say ye, in your boastings, "The wisdom of Egypt was the hereditary possession of the priestly caste to which the early dynasties belonged. The counsellors are here introduced boasting of the purity of their descent from these kings and sages of the olden time. Read (in both cases) a son."—Camb. Bib. (12) Where, etc., appeal of the Prophet^b to Pharaoh. Where are your wise men? If there are any such let them declare what is about to happen to Egypt.

Additional Note on vs. 7.—Never had prophecy greater circumstances of improbability to overcome, and never was prediction more completely fulfilled. The indispensable papyrus in the time of Isaiah flourished through the whole of the Thebaid, Heptanomos, and the Delta, as the three divisions of ancient Egypt were named. Of its utility no European reader can form an adequate idea. Stringent laws were established for its protection and cultivation, and from its first appearance to maturity the papyrus was considered to be under the especial care of local deities; it was planted, tended, and cut with an almost religious ceremonial. Adaptable for various uses, not only paper, cloth, and brushes, but the roughest and most delicate manufactures were produced from it alike. Sails, cordage, and baskets for shipping, sandals, hats, skirts, carpets, chairs, and seats for domestic service were made of it. Men and animals fed upon the tender shoots. A syrup was obtained and medicine extracted from it. It formed the cradle of the Nubian baby; it decorated the canopy of Pharaoh's throne; it was scattered in processions through the streets; it was painted on the houses; it was wrought in granite on the temples. The Egyptian ladies twined the living blossoms in their hair, or wore it in chains around their necks as an amulet. Princes, priests, and peasants offered it on the altar in commemoration of the dead. The papyrus was the plaything of the child and the sceptre of the god, the glory of the country, the staple of its commerce, and the hieroglyphic emblem of its name. By withholding the supply of the papyrus, Ptolemy Philadelphus was enabled to repress the formation of a rival library by the Pergamean kings; while, by opening the markets of the Delta, the poetry of Greece and the philosophy of Rome were transmitted throughout the whole of the then known world. Alas for the permanence of mundane glories! thirty centuries of oppression, superstition, and neglect have dried up the artificial lakes in which the plant was cultivated. Rush after rush has been cut down to warm an Arab's bath, or litter a pasha's horse, and no successors have been planted. The hot wind of the south, and the sands of the desert, have exterminated the lovely paper rush in the empire of the Pharaohs, and there is not a single indigenous papyrus in the whole of Egypt proper. A stream in Sicily, and the marshes of Merom in Palestine, alone contain the nearly extinct vegetable; and in the conservatories of London, Sion, and Kew, England actually possesses more living papyri than can now be found from Syene to Alexandria.

13, 14. (13) Noph, or Memphis. "The second capital, and celebrated Necropolis of Egypt."—Henderson. Psammetichus made this the capital of the kingdom. Princes of Zoan and of Memphis are the very highest officials of all Egypt; not only princes but priests, the "wise men" of the land. But they have led Egypt astray in spite of their boasted wisdom. stay . . tribes, R. V. "corner-stone," of her castes." (14) perverse spirit, hostile influences as well as persons or spirits are used by God to be instruments of His wrath. (Comp. 1 Sam. xvi. 14—23; Ps. lxxv. 8; 1 Ki. xxii. 19—23.) Divine judgments on a nation may come as the confusion of its counsellors. God's judgments may as properly fall on minds as on bodies, or on estates. as a drunken, having lost all self-control, blundering about stupidly, this way and that, only to fall into greater shame.

Human Views of God.—One stands in Milan Cathedral, under the nave, and looks up into those mysterious depths, until it seems as though he would exhale and fly into space. There, in the brooding darkness, the feeling of reverence weighs upon his very soul. And the Milan Cathedral to him is that which it seems to be when the low-lying sun has shot through the window and kindled the whole interior. At the very same moment there stands upon the roof another man, and about him are those three thousand statues carved and standing in their several niches and pinnacles; and everything looks like the bristling frost-work in a forest of icicles; and far above and far on every side swell the lines of beauty. How different is his conception from that of the man who stands in the nave below! But, at the same time, a man stands outside looking at the cathedral's fretted front and its wondrous beauty and diversity, while a fellow-companion and traveler is on the other side looking also at the exterior. Here are four men—one before the structure, one behind it, one on the roof, and one in the interior; and each of them, as he gives his account of the Milan Cathedral, speaks of that which made the strongest impression upon his mind, and the most carried him away. But it takes the concurrent report of these four men to represent that vast work of architecture. Is it so with a man-built cathedral? and shall it not be so with the mighty God who is from eternity to eternity? Is there any man that can take the reed of his understanding and lay it along the line of God's latitude and longitude as if He were measurable as a city? Is there any man who can cast his plummet into the depths of the Infinite, and say, "I have sounded God to the bottom?" Is there any man that has an imagination by which he can fly so high that he can say, "I have reached the point above which God is not?" Is there any man who "by searching can find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" Each man learns a little, and learns that which he is most susceptible of learning. Each man has that conception of God which he is capable of receiving. Men's Minds a Sphere in Which God's Judgments May Work.—"The Lord hath mingled a perverse spirit in the midst thereof." Failure in recognizing men's minds and wills, as spheres of Divine operation, makes difficult to us such cases as that of Pharaoh, whose heart the Lord is said to have hardened; or that of the prophets in the time of Ahab,

Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant;
Let me find in Thy employ,
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to Heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good Seem my natural habitude."
—J. G. Whittier.

a "The class on which the whole Egypt. body politic rests, the priestly class, leads the whole land astray." — Nagelsbach.

Noph signifies the haven of the good, in reference to their being buried there. The Heb. word is Moph in Ho. ix. 6.

"I have had many things in my hands, and I have lost them all; but whatever I have been able to place in God's, I still possess." — Martin Luther.

"Hold thy peace!" says Wisdom to Folly. "Hold thy peace!" replies Folly to Wisdom. "Fly!" cries Light to Darkness; and Darkness echoes back, "Fly!" The latter chase has been going on since the beginning of the world, without an inch of ground gained on either side. May we believe that the result has been different in the contest between wisdom and folly?"—Hare,

"With what cracked pitchers go we to deep wells in this world." — E. B. Browning.

^a This prophecy need not be fixed to any precise historical event. When in a helpless condition, Egypt would be full of fear at the least threatening of Jehovah, from whom they had already suffered so much.

"The good man cares not who comes up the path, he can bring no danger to him. The honest soul is not frightened by the rustling of a leaf, no footfall shakes down the cowardice of his frail security; he says, I live in God, I am the servant of the living God, I know no will but God's; come, go, who will, who may, my foundation standeth sure, and is inscribed in letters of gold with this legend, 'The Lord knoweth them that are his.'"

^b Coverdale renders this clause, "and Heliopolis shall be one of them."

^c "A strange conception for one who wrote at a time when the old Egypt. priesthood seemed more powerful than ever!" — Spk. Com.

"Past blessings and graces are a sort of guarantee for future ones." — F. W. Faber.

"Man's best directed efforts accomplish a kind of dream. * * * God is the sole worker of realities." — Hawthorne.

amongst whom God had sent a "lying spirit." But the apostle distinctly taught that all the sides and all the forces of man's nature are in God's control, and that he can work his purposes through them all. Writing to the Romans (i. 28), Paul says of the Gentiles, "God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient." And the heathen have a motto which embodies the same truth, "Whom the gods would destroy they first dement"—a sentence involving a belief in the control of the gods over men's minds. A further illustration may be found in the prayer offered by David in the time of his extreme peril: "O Lord, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness" (2 Sam. xv. 31). This truth we can clearly see and fully accept.—Pul. Com.

15—17. (15) any work, i. e., no successful plan to avert trouble is carried out by any one, either by the leaders, or by the mob. branch or rush, fig. of high class and low. (16) unto women, easily frightened; quite lacking manly spirit. the shaking, etc., i. e. "by the repeated blows with which Jehovah smites them, comp. xxx. 32; x. 32; xl. 15."—Camb. Bib. (17) land of Judah, wh., being directly associated with Jehovah, will recall at once to the mind of Egypt their reasons for fearing His judgments.^a "The mere mention of the name of Judah will strike terror in Egypt into all that hear it."—Driver.

Infinite Knowledge of God.—A little child sits on the verandah and watches the worm. He is a voyager for his food on the leaf of the mulberry tree, and he goes eating, eating, eating. Let us suppose that some Divine Power enables that worm to be so far intelligent as to say, "It is said that there are beings who can understand this whole tree; but it does not seem to me possible. I can comprehend how there might be beings that should understand this leaf, and the next three or four; but to take in all the million leaves on this tree is a thing that transcends my conception. I do not believe it possible for any magnified worm to understand so much." It is not possible for any worm. But there is a little Sunday-school child sitting on the verandah, who looks on the tree and sees the whole of it; and not only sees the whole of it, but can individualise the leaves at its pleasure. How easy it is for that little child to take in that whole tree! and how hard it is for that worm to take in more than three leaves! And let that child grow up, and be educated, and trained in landscape-gardening, and it will take in, not merely a tree, but a whole forest. If one leaf is colored, if one twig is broken, if there is a dry branch, it does not escape his notice. Differences of hue, light, and shadow, the infinite diversities that come in forest life—he takes them all in, and has a kind of omnipresence in his consciousness of the facts of this whole matter. What could a worm understand or imagine of a being that is competent to take in the realm of philosophy, and that makes himself the measure of creation? He says, "It does not seem reasonable to me that anybody can understand more than twenty leaves. I cannot; and I do not see how anybody else can." And yet, do not you understand how a person can take in sections, and gradations, and ranks, and degrees infinitely above what a worm could understand? And have you anything more to do than to carry on that idea to imagine a Being before whom all eternity passes, and to whom all the infinite treasures of this eternity shall be just as simple as to you the leaves on the individual tree are? It only requires magnitude of being, infinity.—H. W. Beecher.

18—20. (18) five cities, there were some 20,000 cities in Egypt. Five is a small number, but marks a beginning, either through conversion or colonization. Large numbers of Jews, in later years, became resident in Egypt. city of destruction,^b one of these cities is Heliopolis (ir, ha-chères), "the city of the sun"; it shall be called "the city of destruction," (ir, ha-hères), the place where sun-worship is destroyed. A play on words, comp. Jer. xliii. 13. (19) altar, "in lieu of the obelisks and other heathen emblems with which Egypt abounded, there will henceforward be the tokens that it is a land devoted to Jehovah."—Driver.^c (20) saviour, prob. Alexander the Great, who delivered Eg. from the Persian yoke.

Homiletic Hints.—I. No power political, numerical, intellectual, physical, able to resist God. II. Love your enemies. III. Be assured of reformation of wicked, before you receive them into friendship. IV.

Jesus found an asylum but not a home in Egypt; the world a lodge, not a rest for the Church. V. Conversion of this land predicted; do not despair of the salvation of the worst. VI. How mighty is the grace of God. He is able to save to the uttermost—even you.—Topics.

O Pity Me.—

Immortal Love, within whose righteous will
Is always peace,

O pity me, storm-tossed on waves of ill,
Let passion cease;

Come down in power within my heart to reign,
For I am weak, and struggle has been vain.

The days are gone, when far and wide my will Drove me astray;

And now I fain would climb the arduous hill,
That narrow way,

Which leads through mist and rocks to Thine abode, Toiling for man and Thee, Almighty God.

—Stopford A. Brooke.

21, 22. (21) known, R. V. (margin) "make Himself known." This deliverer of Egypt shall be a revelation of Jehovah. And it will be successful. They shall know the Lord, recognize His presence, and begin to worship Him by sacrifices, etc. sacrifice . . . vow,^a "prophecy does not contemplate the abolition of sacrifices in the coming period of salvation, for the rites of worship in this future and enlarged kingdom of God are connected in respect to sacrifice and festival with the O. T. ritual."—Oehler. In this passage it is noteworthy that the worship in Egypt is instituted by the Egyptians themselves. (22) smite, in judgment. heal, in mercy.^b

Love of Mercy.—It is related that during the first few days of the reign of Queen Victoria, then between nineteen and twenty years of age, some sentences of a court-martial were presented for her signature. One was death for desertion. A soldier was condemned to be shot; and his death-warrant was presented to the queen for her signature. She read it, paused, and looked up to the officer who had laid it before her, and said, "Have you nothing to say in behalf of this man?" "Nothing: he has deserted three times," said the officer. "Think again, my lord," was her reply. "And," said the gallant veteran, as he related the circumstance to his friends (for it was none other than the Duke of Wellington), "seeing her Majesty so earnest about it, I said, 'He is certainly a bad soldier; but there was somebody who spoke to his good character; and he may be a good man for ought I know to the contrary.'" "Oh, thank you a thousand times!" exclaimed the youthful queen; and, hastily writing "Pardoned" in large letters on the fatal page, she sent it across the table with a hand trembling with eagerness and emotion.

23—25. (23) highway,^c leading through Palestine. The three countries shall be united in peace, under one faith and worship, for Assyria also will accept the rule of Jehovah. "Never before had the faith of prophet soared so high, or approached so near to the conception of a universal religion."—W. R. Smith. serve, the living God, as vs. 21. (24) the third, one of three, forming a triple union in the service of God. Note the position of Israel as between Egypt and Syria. a blessing, as promised, Ge. xxii. 18. (25) my people, become Mine by their union in My worship. work . . . hands, wh. has brought about their conversion. These titles have elsewhere been confined to Israel. inheritance, so actual Son and Head of the entire earthly family of God.

The Conversion of Jews and Gentiles (yss. 24, 25).—Consider—I. The event in which God expresses such delight: it is the conversion of the whole world to God; in this event God will greatly rejoice. II. The effect which the prospect of it should produce on us. It should prevail—1. To enlarge our philanthropy; 2. To raise our expectations; 3. To quicken our exertions.—Simeon.

Unity in Religion Joins Together the Bitterest Foes.—As, ultimately, the establishment of the kingdom of Christ among all the nations of the

"Apart from Thee all gain is loss,
All labor vainly
done;
The solemn shadow of thy cross
Is better than the sun."
—J. G. Whittier.

^a "Lit. fulfilled when Ptolemy Evergetes, after his victory over Selencus, B.C. 244, came to Jerusalem, and offered many sacrifices and made many presents," so that in his person Egypt did homage to the true God."—Spk. Com.

^b "The intention of healing is prominent all through the smiting." — Delitzsch.

For doctrine of this vs. comp. Job v. 17—19; Ho. v. 15, vi. 1, 2; Is. liv. 15—19.

^c A fig. for free, easy, peaceful communication.

"The Lord in going away from a people sometimes suddenly turns round and looks at them, and behold there is a smile where once there was a frown."—People's Bible.

"Adversity is like the period of the former and latter rains,—cold, comfortless, unfriendly to man and to animal; yet from thence come the flower and the fruit, the date, the rose, and the pomegranate."—Sir Walter Scott.

earth (ch. ii. 2) will produce a reign of universal peace, so that men will everywhere "beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks" (ch. ii. 4), so, on a lesser scale, wherever true religion prevails, asperities are softened, old enmities die out and disappear, a friendly spirit springs up, and former adversaries are reconciled and become friends. Assyria, Egypt, Israel, long the bitterest foes, were drawn together by a common faith in the later days of Judaism and the earlier ones of Christianity—felt sympathy one with another, and lived in harmony.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

1, 2. (1) Tartan, see 2 Ki. xviii. 17. Sargon, king of Assyria immediately before Sennacherib, from 722 to 705. The date of this prophecy is 711. "The expedition mentioned is minutely related in two of Sargon's inscriptions." Ashdod,^a prob, this town was taken in order to open the way to Egypt, and secure a defensive post on the line of the communications. (2) loose the sackcloth, "the prophets are frequently required to express the substance of the divine messages by symbolic actions. In many of these cases, however (especially in Ezekiel) it may be questioned whether the action really took place externally, as e. g. in Isa. xx:2, or whether it belongs merely to vision."—Oehler.^b For other examples comp. 1 Sam. xvi. 37; 1 Ki. xi. 30; Jer. xxvii. 2 ff; Ezek. xii. 1-7. "That he actually performed it cannot reasonably be questioned."^c—Camb. Bib. naked, i. e. in his under garment. Comp. 1 Sam. xix. 24; John xxi. 7.

Verse 2.—The act is: 1. Expressive of strong feeling; suited to Oriental effusiveness, though not to our colder habits. The mind needs, in moments of strong feeling, to see itself reflected in some outward form. We all acknowledge this in connection with the great epochs of life—the funeral, the wedding. The great heart of the prophet throbbing in sympathy with his nation, must signify his grief at its condition by some change in his attire. And then: 2. It is a means of impressing others. We speak, not only by our words, but by our appearance, our apparel, our manners. Let us at least learn this lesson, that life should be significant. It should mean something; not be neutral, utterly without emphasis; or dubious to the eye and ear, like heathen oracles and heathen symbols. Without affectation and folly, we can find a way to make others feel that we feel and think and have a purpose in existence.

Readiness to Do God's Will.—There is no use of life, but just to find out what is fit for us to do; and doing it, it seems to be little matter whether we live or die in it. God does not want our work, but our willingness to work; at least, the last seems to answer all His purpose.—Hawthorne.

3, 4. (3) three years, there is an interval of three years between vss. 2 and 3. Then comes the explanation of the long humiliation of Isaiah, as a protest against the reliance upon help from Egypt and Ethiopia. (4) lead away, Heb. lead the captivity, i. e. the captives. shame of Egypt, wh. made much of being poorly clothed.^a

Influence of Dress.—I have no intention to argue against gold chains, velvet caps, or sables, or anything of this nature; but, granting this furniture may be somewhat of a guard to authority, yet no public person has any reason to value himself upon it; for the design of this sort of state is only to comply with the weakness of the multitude. It is an innocent stratagem to deceive them into their duty, and to awe them into a just sense of obedience. A great man will rather contemn this kind of finery, than think himself considerable by it. He will rather be sorry that his authority needs the support of so little an artifice, and depends, in any measure, upon the use of such trifles. To stoop to the vulgar notion of things, and establish one's reputation by counterfeit signs of worth, must be an uneasy task to a noble mind. Besides, we are not to think the magistrate cannot support his office without fine clothes; for, if he is furnished with general prudence, with abilities particular to his business, and has a competent share of power, he needs not doubt his influence over the people.—Jer. Collier.

^d One of the 5 principal cities of Philistia, Jos. xiii. 3; 1 Sa. vi. 17. Psammetichus spent 29 years in its siege, the longest siege recorded in history. Now an inconsiderable village, called Esdud.

^e "The Heb. Prophets wore a mantle, or cloak, of half-cloth, as a badge of office, most prob. designed to indicate indifference to worldly refinement and indulgence." — Henderson.

^f "What he did was only at variance with custom (in order to call attention to the sign), but not at all inconsistent with decency." — Wordsworth.

^a "On the royal tombs at Thebes are representations of captives led away in triumph either in a state of complete nudity, or with a small scarf suspended round their loins and hanging down the front." — Henderson.

"Egypt was a big-mouthed, blustering power, believed in by the mob; to expose her required public, picturesque and persistent advertisement. So Isaiah continued his walk for three years." — Exp. Bib.

5, 6. (5) they, i. e. God's people; who were so much disposed to trust to Egypt for help. afraid, R. V., "dismayed," when they see what has happened to those on whose help they relied. their glory, i. e. the subject of their boasting. (6) isle, R. V., "coast-land," i. e. Judah in particular but all Palestine also, for all were involved and all would be alarmed. flee, R. V., "fled." how . . . escape, Egypt being reduced, no defence remained for Israel against the overwhelming power of Assyria.

Providential Escapes.—Two brothers were walking together, when a violent storm of thunder and lightning overtook them. One was struck dead on the spot, the other was spared; else would the name of the great reformer, Martin Luther, have been unknown to mankind. By the siege of Leicester, a young soldier, about seventeen years of age, was drawn out for sentry duty. One of his comrades was very anxious to take his place. No objection was made, and this man went. He was shot dead while on guard. The young man first drawn afterwards became the author of the Pilgrim's Progress. John Wesley, when a child, was only just preserved from fire. Almost the moment after he was rescued, the roof of the house where he had been fell in. John Knox was always wont to sit at the head of the table with his back to the window. On one particular evening, without being able to account for it, he would neither himself sit in the chair, nor permit any one else to occupy his place. That very night, a bullet was shot in at the window purposely to kill him: it grazed the chair in which he usually sat, and made a hole in the foot of a candlestick on the table.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

Driver, Cheyne and others refer this prophecy to a siege of Babylon by the Assyrians in Isaiah's own time, 710 B. C. 1, 2. (1) desert of the sea, "the country that was once a sea (Herod i. 184), and shall be so again."—Camb. Bib. whirlwinds, lit. sweepers. south, "in Babylonia the S. W. wind, which comes from the Arabian desert, was specially dreaded: see the images of the demon of this wind in our museums."—Polyc. Bib. it cometh, the judgment of God, by hostile armies. (2) grievous, hard, difficult to understand, and stern in character. treacherous, etc., "the lawless oppressor, Asshur-Babel, continues his ravages." Go up, i. e. against Babylon. sighing, i. e. of captive Israel. The conquest of Bab. by Cyrus secures deliverance for Israel.^b

Ch. XXI. Oracles on Babylon, Edom and Arabia.—These three short and difficult oracles form together one of the most singular passages in prophecy. Common to all three are (a) the obscure oracular utterance, in striking contrast to the terse lucidity of Isaiah's style, (b) the strongly-marked visionary element in the writer's experience, and (c) a certain readiness of sympathy with the foreign nations concerned in the predictions. These features indicate, if not identity of authorship, at least a peculiar type of prophetic inspiration, to which no complete parallel is found in the acknowledged writings of Isaiah. It is true that expressions characteristic of Isaiah occur in vss. 1—10, but they are hardly sufficient to remove the impression that the individuality of the writer is distinct from that of Isaiah. In the rest of the chapter the linguistic evidence is decidedly adverse to Isaiah's authorship.

Prophecy Must be Fulfilled.—Two rabbis approaching Jerusalem observed a fox running upon the hill Zion. And Rabbi Joshua wept; but Rabbi Eliezer laughed. "Wherefore dost thou laugh?" said he who wept. "Nay, wherefore dost thou weep?" demanded Eliezer. "I weep," replied Rabbi Joshua, "because I see what is written fulfilled. Because of Mount Zion, which is desolate, the poor walk upon it." "And therefore," said Rabbi Eliezer, "do I laugh; for I have thereby a pledge that as God has fulfilled His threatenings to the very letter, so not one of His promises shall fail; for He is ever more ready to show mercy than judgment."

3, 4. (3) loins . . . pain, the Prophet sympathizes with the sufferings of Babylon,^c as in the case of Moab (xv. 5). bowed down, etc., R. V., "I am pained so that I cannot hear: I am dismayed so that I cannot

^b "This was the cry of despair at Jerusalem. But in such despair was her only hope. The destruction of Egypt and Ethiopia by the arms of Sennacherib weaned her from looking any longer to earthly powers for help, and raised her eyes to heaven."—Wordsworth.

So high is grandeur to our dust,
So near to God is man,
When Duty whispers low, Thou must,
The youth replies, I can.
—Emerson.

^a "Babylonia with its surging masses of people, was like a sea desert, a wilderness of peoples."—Spk. Com.

^b The vision is given in 3 scenes: 1. Babylon in the height of its oppressions; 2. Media and Persia uniting for its overthrow; 3. Israel relieved by the Median success.

Elam, a part of Persia, is put for the whole.

"Every day is a vessel into which a great deal may be poured, if we will actually fill it up; that is, with thoughts and feelings, and their expression in deeds as elevated and amiable as we can reach to." — Goethe.

^c "The Proph. has lived in Bab., and with its people, until his rot seems bound up with theirs, and the first hearing of their suddenly approaching ruin fills him with dismay."—Mat. Arnold.

d "Too much confounded to hear, too much frightened to see." — Ewald.

"What can that man fear who takes care to please a Being that is able to crush all his adversaries." — Addison.

"Fear is a kind of gong which rings the mind into quick life: it is the soul's signal for rallying." — Beecher.

"As a father in a garden stoops down to kiss a child, the shadow of his body falls upon it. So, many of the dark misfortunes of our life are not God going away from us; but our heavenly Father stooping down to give us the kiss of his infinite and everlasting love." — Talmage.

"In the deepest night of sorrow God gives us so much to be thankful for that we need never cease our singing." — Coleridge.

a "Commonly of bull's hide, with the hair outwards; sometimes strengthened by one or more rims of metal, and studded with nails or metal pins. It was oiled that the enemies' weapons might glide off it." — Wilkinson.

"Religion does not make all Christians alike, nor give them the same work to do. There is an infinite variety of endowments, and great differences of capacity both in kind and degree, and a great diversity in the matter of oppor-

see,"^d so great is his mental distress at what he is told. night, R. V., "the twilight that I desired hath been turned into trembling unto me." The evening time, time of contemplation and visions, generally a joy, had become a time of terrible revelations.

Interpretation of Prophecy.—Prophecy was not addressed to the reason, nor to the statistical faculty, but to the imagination; and I should as soon think of measuring love by the scales of commerce, or of admiring flowers by the rule of feet and inches, or of applying arithmetic to taste and enthusiasm, as calculations and figures to these grand evanishing signals which God waves in the future only to tell the world which way it is to march.—Beecher.

Fear of God.—The pagan nations have ever stood in awe of deities, whose wrath they have deprecated, but whose love they have never dared to hope for. In the East India museum, in London, there is an elaborately-carved ivory idol, from India, with twelve hands, and in every hand a different instrument of cruelty. Papists put God far away, and trust to the intervention of priests, of saints, and of the Virgin. Prayers for a man must still go on after his death, and money be paid to buy God off from His vengeance. On the door of the Cathedral of St. Nicholas, in Fribourg, Switzerland, I saw a notice requesting the prayers of the charitable for a youth who had died a few days before, "fortified by the sacraments of the church;" and, inside, a painting of sundry persons in the flames of purgatory, with a contribution-box underneath, and this inscription, "Oh! rescue us; you, at least, who are our friends."—C. D. Foss.

Unfounded Fear.—

O, it is life indeed to live

Within God's kingdom strangely sweet;

And yet we fear to enter in,

And linger with unwilling feet.

We fear this wondrous rule of Thine,

Because we have not reached Thy heart;

Not venturing our all on Thee

We may not know how good Thou art.

—Jean Sophia Pigott.

5. 6. (5) Prepare, R. V., "They prepare," i. e. Babylon, not expecting a siege. This is what the Prophet sees in vision; the scenes connected with the destruction of Babylon. See the narration in Da. v., comp. Je. li. 39, 57. arise, the call of the Proph., who sees the danger to which the feasting princes are so heedless. anoint the shield, the usual custom before a fight. The shields were made of leather." (6) set a watchman, "the Lord bade him get on his watch-tower—this is the phrase for observing the signs of the times—and speak whatever he saw."—G. A. Smith.

Anointing the Shield.—The ancient warrior did not yield to the moderns in keeping his armor in good order. The inspired writer often speaks of furbishing the spear, and making bright the arrows; and the manner in which he expresses himself in relation to this part of the soldier's duty, proves that it was generally and carefully performed. But they were particularly attentive to their shields, which they took care frequently to scour, polish, and anoint with oil. The Oriental soldier seems to have gloried in the dazzling lustre of his shield, which he so highly valued, and upon which he engraved his name and war-like exploits. To produce the desired brightness, and preserve it undiminished, he had recourse to frequent unction; which is the reason of the Prophet's invitation: "Arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield." As this was done to improve its polish and brightness, so it was covered with a case, when it was not in use, to preserve it from becoming rusty. This is the reason the Prophet says, "Kir uncovered the shield." The words of David, which we read in his lamentation over Saul and Jonathan, may refer to this practice of anointing the shield, rather than anointing the king: "The shield of the mighty is vilely cast away, the shield of Saul, as though it had not been anointed with oil;" the word he being a supplement, the version now given is perfectly agreeable to the original text.—

Paxton. Watchmen.—We need in the Church quiet, observant, contemplative men. Yet there must be a limit even to a watchman's silence. The lifting of a finger may be enough in some instances, or the holding forth of an appointed signal. In other cases there must be a loud crying out, so that men may know what danger is imminent.—People's Bible.

7, 8. (7) R. V., "And when he seeth a troop, horsemen in pairs, a troop of asses, a troop of camels," he shall hearken diligently," etc. (8) R. V., "And he cried as a lion: O Lord, I stand," etc. Complaining of his long and weary watching all in vain, for he sees nothing. But even while he thus complains, the army suddenly comes in sight.^b

Lion Hunt.—In a lion hunt at Baroda, in the East Indies, in 1816, a small party of the gentlemen of the residency, accompanied by ten sepoy, after killing a lioness, went in search of her companion. After some time, the animal was traced by his footsteps to one of the high hedges which intersected a garden within a mile of the town. The party approached within eight yards, when two gentlemen and two sepoys fired; the animal then moved off to the other side of the hedge, groaning with rage and pain. Some pieces were instantly discharged, which, exasperating him, he rushed out, and nobly charged his assailants, his tail being curled over his back. In his advance he was saluted with great coolness with several balls from all the gentlemen and a few sepoys of the party who had come up; and though within a few yards of the object of his attack, he suddenly turned off and sprung upon a sepoy detached to the right, with whom he grappled, and afterwards by the violence of the exertion fell to the ground beyond him. At this moment the party gallantly, and for the humane purpose of saving a fellow creature, rushed forward, and with bayonets and swords put an end to the monster. The sepoy was wounded in the left shoulder, but not dangerously.—Percy Anec.

What Matter I or They.—

Others shall sing the song,
Others shall right the wrong,— Finish what I begin,
And all I fail of, win.

What matter I or they,
Mine, or another's day,
So the right word be said,
And life the sweeter made.—Whittier.

9, 10. (9) a chariot, etc., R. V., "a troop of men, horsemen in pairs." vanguard of a destroying host. The Prophet knows what it means, and raises the wail for Babylon fallen. images . . broken, Cyrus was an enemy to the Bab. idolatry.^c (10) "The application to Israel, addressed as 'my threshing (i. e. threshed one) and my child of the threshing-floor'—forcible figurative epithets of Israel as a nation crushed and down-trodden by the brutal tyranny of Babylon (cf. ch. xli. 15; Mi. iv. 12. f.; Jer. li. 33, etc.)."^d—Camb. Bib.

Note on vs. 9.—This is a prophecy, and yet speaks as if the event to which it relates had been already accomplished. It is common in Eastern speech, in order to show the certainty of anything which shall be done, to speak of it as having been already accomplished. Thus the Psalmist, in speaking of the iniquities of bad men as having already received their reward, evidently alludes to the certainty of future punishment. It is therefore of the first importance to know in what tense the verb is meant, as that alone will give a true view of the intention of the writer. In the Tamul language the past tense is often elegantly used for the future: thus, in the Nan-nool (the Native Grammar) this distinction is beautifully illustrated. Does a note require to be taken to another place in a very short time, the messenger, on being charged not to loiter on the way, replies, "I have already returned:" whereas he has not taken a single step of his journey. "My friend," asks the priest, "when do you intend to go to the sacred place and perform your vows?" "I have been and returned," which means he is going immediately. "Carpenter, if you are not quick in finishing that car, the gods will be tunity for service. Each has precisely what is fitted to his ability and circumstances, — no more, no less. Every man has just as many opportunities for service as he can use with advantage."—Taylor.

a "Cyrus had a great number of camels in his army, and his successor, Darius Hystaspis, is said to have gained a great victory over the Scythians by means of the number of asses in his service."—See Herodotus.

b The suddenness of the Median approach is vividly indicated by its coming in sight just as the watchman began to complain of his bootless watching.

"Who does not in some sort live to others, does not live much to himself."—Montaigne.

"Man's rank is his power to uplift."—Geo. MacDonald.

"The war-chariots, the cavalry moving in double file, the trains of asses and camels, correspond to the appearance of the Perso-Median army."—Spk. Com.

c The strong antipathy of the Medes and Persians to image-worship is well known. Their iconoclasm is a thing to which the ancient world supplies no parallel outside Israel."—Spk. Com.

d The Persians deem it unlawful to form images, or construct temples and altars, and charge those with stupidity who do so."—Herodotus.

e "Under the fig of a threshing-ground, and the son of a threshing-floor (i. e. the corn threshed upon it), the Prophet describes his own beaten, crushed, and pounded people." — Mat. Arnold.

Am. ix. 9; Mat. iii. 12; Re. xiv. 14, 15.

"He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper." — Burke.

"Let us learn upon earth the things which can call us to heaven." — Jerome.

"If ye seek for My help, and prove yourselves to be children of My faithful servant Abraham, then light will dawn upon you. Turn to Me with your whole heart, and I will receive you." — S. Jerome.

"An ear Quick to hear Eternal melody; An eye quick to see

All beauty, Christ, in thee; A mouth Seasoned with charity, Softer than soft wind of the South— Grant these, O Lord, to me!" — Anna E. Hamilton.

"That there is night in this world few will question. He must be a bold optimist who thinks everything as it is, is for the best possible in the best possible of worlds. Darkness still covers the earth. God's children, who have a glorious light within them, have a dark night all round about them. Night is the symbol of gloom and suffering; and it is the season of sin. It is moral night, because 'men love dark-angry with you." "My lord, the work is already done;" when perhaps some months will have to elapse before the work can be finished. But they also use the past for the future, to denote certainty as well as speed. Do the ants begin to run about with their eggs in their mouths, it is said. "It has rained," though a single drop has not fallen upon the ground. The meaning is, the sign is so certain, that all doubt is removed. "Why does that man go to the village? Does he not know the cholera is sweeping as a besom? Alas! Alas! he is already dead;" which means, he will certainly die. Should the friends of a young man inquire whether he may go to sea, the soothsayer says (if the signs are unfavorable), "He is already drowned." But the future is also used instead of the past, as in the case of the deliverer from Bozrah: "I will stain," for "I have stained." Should a man refuse to obey an officer, and inquire, "Where is the order of the king?" the reply is, "He will command," which strongly intimates that it has been done, and that other consequences will follow (1 Sam. iii. 13). See margin, 1 Kings iii. 13, also vi. 1, and xv. 25; 2 Kings viii. 16; Dan. ii. 28, also iii. 29; for all of which see marginal readings. See Dr. A. Clarke on Matt. iii. 17, also xxvi. 28, blood is shed, for will be shed.—Roberts.

11, 12. (11) Dumah, "a play on the name Edom." The word means, silent land. Seir, the principal mountain in Idumæa: S. of the Dead Sea, in Arabia Petræa. what . . night? "our translation, though picturesque, is misleading. The voice does not inquire, 'What of the night?' i. e. whether it be fair or foul weather, but 'How much of the night is passed?' literally 'What from off the night?' This brings out a pathos that our English version has disguised. Edom feels that her night is lasting terribly long." — G. A. Smith. (12) "The watchman's answer is designedly obscure. It may mean either that the seer has obtained no clear vision of the destiny in store for Edom; or that he foresees a transient gleam of prosperity to be followed by a new night of distress; or that hope is dawning for some and gloom settling down upon others." morning, i. e. the return of joy and prosperity. also the night, i. e. new calamities are in the future. return, come, R. V. marginal, "come ye again," i. e. the answer is not final: Let them ask at another time.

The Edomites were very impatient under the Babylonish yoke, and very importunate in their inquiries after deliverance; reiterating the question, "What of the night? Watchman, what of the night?" When will this dark and long captivity be ended? And now that their hopes are repulsed by the watchman's answer, they are exceedingly unwilling to relinquish them. Loth to depart with an answer so ungrateful, they linger, and inquire again and again, in hopes that the sentence may be reversed. But they are told that all their lingering is in vain. "If ye will inquire, inquire ye, return, come" again; yet shall your answer be the same. And what was the crime of the Edomites that should draw down upon them this heavy burden, this irresistible doom? Their inveterate hatred of the people of God (Obad. 10). Perhaps there was no nation whose treatment of Israel was so invariably spiteful, and whose enmity was accompanied with such aggravating circumstances. They were descended from Abraham and Isaac, and were treated by Israel, at the time they came out of Egypt, as brethren; but as they then returned evil for good (Num. xx. 14—21), so it was ever afterwards. Their conduct, on the melancholy occasion of Jerusalem being taken by the Chaldeans, was infamous (Obad. 10—16).—Andrew Fuller. Prophetic Declaration.—"The morning cometh." Always a musical note that. To the sufferer in the chamber of affliction, longing for the first beams of day; to the dismantled ship out far away on the melancholy sea; to the oppressed people waiting for deliverance; to the idolatrous Israel in returning to the true and living God. "The morning cometh." A thought to be meditated on in all long and weary nights of disappointment, disaffection, doubt, and trial. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Patience, poor heart! The morning cometh to the penitent Peter and the doubtful Thomas. "The morning cometh." Not for Israel only, but for the world. The nations that sat in darkness have seen a great light.—Pul. Com. A Curious Custom.—The following used to be, and perhaps now is, the curious mode in which watchmen announce the hours of the night at Herrnhuth, in Germany:—

- VIII. Past eight o'clock! O Herrnhuth do thou ponder; Eight souls in Noah's ark were living yonder.
- IX. 'Tis nine o'clock! ye brethren, hear it striking;
Keep hearts and houses clean, to our Saviour's liking.
- X. Now, brethren, hear, the clock is ten and passing;
None rest but such as wait for Christ embracing.
- XI. Eleven is past! still at this hour eleven,
The Lord is calling us from earth to heaven.
- XII. Ye brethren, hear, the midnight clock is humming;
At midnight, our great Bridegroom will be coming.
- I. Past one o'clock! The day breaks out of darkness;
Great Morning Star appear, and break our hardness!
- II. 'Tis two! on Jesus wait this silent season,
Ye two so near related, will and reason.
- III. The clock is three! The blessed Three doth merit
The best of praise, from body, soul, and spirit.
- IV. 'Tis four o'clock! when three make supplication,
The Lord will be the fourth on that occasion.
- V. Five is the clock! five virgins were discarded,
When five with wedding garments were rewarded.
- VI. The clock is six! and I go off my station;
Now, brethren, watch yourselves for your salvation.

Five verses containing the oracle on Arabia. A vision (13—15) and its interpretation (16—17). 13—15. (13) forest instead of the open pastoral plains. "In the time of the insecurity of the Assyrian invasion the traveling merchants have to go aside from their great trading roads in the evening to lodge in the thickets." travelling companies, wandering tribes. Dedanim, see Ge. xxv. 3; 1 Chr. i. 32. "They carried on commerce bet. Arabia and Tyre" (Eze. xxvii. 15). (14) Cam. B., "To the thirsty bring water, O ye inhabitants of the land of Tema, meet the fugitive with bread [suitable] for him." Tema is the modern Teima in the northern highlands of Arabia. Je. xxv. 23; Job. vi. 19. (15) grievousness, etc., or press of victorious battle.

True Courage and Gentleness go Hand in Hand.—The brave man is generous and forbearant, never unforgiving and cruel. It was finely said of Sir John Franklin by his friend Parry, that "he was a man who never turned his back upon a danger, yet of that tenderness that he would not brush away a mosquito." A fine trait of character—truly gentle, and worthy of the spirit of Bayard—was displayed by a French officer in the cavalry combat of El Bodon in Spain. He had raised his sword to strike Sir Felton Harvey, but perceiving his antagonist had only one arm, he instantly stopped, brought down his sword before Sir Felton in the usual salute, and rode past.—Smiles. Fleeting Honors of Life.—"I remember," observes one, "having heard a sensible person say he could never covet the office of chief magistrate of London, because that honor continued only one year. Might not the idea be justly extended to all the honors and enjoyments of this life? None of them are permanent."—Whitecross.

16, 17. (16) hireling, comp. similar expression, ch. xvi. 14. Kedar,* Ge. xxv. 13. They ranged from the desert of the Red Sea as far as Euphrates. "The glory of the wealthy pastoral tribe of Kedar (lx. 7)—here used to include by implication its less influential neighbors—will be past, and of its warriors only an insignificant remnant will survive."—Driver. (17) archers, the Ishmaelites were famed for their archery.^b

Uncertainty of Possession.—Our joy may be turned into sorrow; the root out of which came bud and blossom and fruit, beautiful to the eyes and to be desired to make one wise, may grow nothing but poison. We hold nothing certainly, with an assurance that cannot be broken, with guarantees that cannot be violated. When we grip any prize with our poor five fingers, the fingers themselves may fail to hold the blessing, and that which we thought secure may vanish in a moment. Make the best of the present time; realize what is written as soon as you can, turn it into positive, absolute property, into soul, into manhood, that cannot be taken away from you but by your own consent.—Peop. Bib.

ness rather than light.' Every true-hearted, earnest Christian is a watchman: he watches for his own soul, and for the souls of others; and he longs for the advent of the world's new morning, when the shadows shall flee away."—Hom. Com.

a "Region of thick underwood, rugged and inaccessible."—Faustset.

b "The inhabitants of Tema are called to perform the rites of hospitality towards the fugitives."—Henderson.

"The soul, secured in her existence, smiles at the drawn dagger, and defies its point."—Addison.

"Where life is more terrible than death, it is then the truest valor to dare to live."—Sir Thos. Browne.

a "All the Ishmaelites are called 'sons of Kedar' by the Hebrew rabbis."—Wordsworth.

b Ge. xxi. 20. "Care is no cure, but rather a corrosive, for things that are not to be remedied."—Shakespeare.

"We are ought never to be accepted unless it is offered by the hand of necessity."—Sir P. Sidney.

"Our life is scarce the twinkling of a star in God's eternal day."—Bayard Taylor.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

^c The flat roofs of Eastern houses are convenient for watchers.

^d For distress of sieges see 2 Ki. vi. 24, xviii. 9, 10.

"Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a cloud, and after summer evermore succeeds barren winter with his wrathful nipping cold; so cares and joys abound as seasons fleet."—Shakespeare.

"He is the happiest, be he king or peasant, who finds peace at home."—Goethe.

^e Comp. Je. ix. 1.

"Man is a child of sorrow, and this world has cares enough to plague us; but it hath means withal to soothe these cares; and he who meditates on others' woe shall in that meditation lose his own."—Cumberland.

"Men die, but sorrow never dies;

The crowding years divide in vain,
And the wide world is knit with ties

Of common brotherhood in pain."—Susan Coolidge.

^b "Elam here is treated as subject to Babylon; afterwards it was used by God as an instrument against it (Is. xxi. 2)." — Wordsworth.

The first fourteen verses consider "The Inexpiable sin of Jerusalem." 1-3. (1) valley of vision, a poetical name for Jerusalem. what aileth, etc., a question as of a stranger, who would know the reason of the prevailing excitement and distress. housetops,^c "the flat roofs of the houses are thronged by excited citizens keeping holiday, perhaps watching some public spectacle. The prophet, wandering disconsolate through the streets, ironically inquires the reason of this unseasonable demonstration."—Camb. Bib. (2) stirs, R. V. "shoutings," what means this cheering and joyfulness? not . . sword, as in open battle, but with famine, in the siege.^d (3) bound by the archers, Polyc. B., "without the shooting of a bow they were made prisoners," i. e. without having defended themselves.

Housetops (vs. 1).—The houses in the East were in ancient times as they are still, generally, built in one and the same uniform manner. The roof or top of the house is always flat, covered with broad stones, or a strong plaster of Paris, and guarded on every side with a low parapet wall. The terrace is frequented as much as any part of the house. On this, as the season favors, they walk, they eat, they sleep, they transact business, they perform their devotions. The house is built with a court within, into which chiefly the windows open; those that open to the street are so obstructed with lattice-work, that no one either without or within can see through them. Whenever, therefore, anything is to be seen or heard in the streets, every one immediately goes up to the house-top to satisfy his curiosity. In the same manner, when any one had occasion to make anything public, the readiest and most effectual way of doing it was to proclaim it from the housetops to the people in the streets.—Bp. Lowth.

4, 5. (4) Look away, and leave me to weep.^a (5) Polyc. Bib. and Camb. Bib. translate. "For a day of tumult and of trampling and of confusion has in store the Lord Jehovah of hosts: In the valley of vision they break down the wall and the crying sounds to the mountain." valley of vision is an obscure expression, thought by some to refer to some part of Jerusalem.

Anxiety Versus Trust.—One day, while Flattich, a pious minister of Wirtemberg, was sitting and meditating in his arm-chair, one of his foster-children fell out of a second-story window, right before him, down upon the pavement below. He calmly ordered his daughter to go down and pick up the child. On doing so, she found the child not only alive, but without having sustained the least injury. The noise occasioned thereby had called out a neighbor's wife, who reproached Flattich for his want of attention to his foster-children; for she had seen him quietly reposing in his arm-chair when the boy fell out of the window. While she was thus scolding, her own child, which she had brought along, fell from a bench in the room, and broke one of its arms. "Do you see, good woman?" said Flattich; "if you imagine yourself to be the sole guardian of your child, then you must constantly carry it on your arm. I commend my children to God; and, if they then fall, they fall into the arms of an angel."

Sorrow—

Do not cheat thy Heart and tell her,

"Grief will pass away.

Hope for fairer times in future,

And forget to-day."

Tell her, if you will, that Sorrow

Need not come in vain;

Tell her that the lesson taught her

Far outweighs the pain.—A. A. Proctor.

6-9. (6) Elam^b . . Kir, "Elam in the S.E., and Kir in the N.W., represent the limits of the Assyrian empire." uncovered the shield, wh. when not used had a protecting covering, or bag. (7) R. V. "and it came to pass," etc., "were full," etc., "horsemen set themselves," etc. at the gate, close up to thy gates. (8) discovered, R. V. "took away," i. e. revealed the defencelessness of the state. Polyc. Bib. translates "and the enemy drew aside the screen of Judah," and explains, "the capturing of the strong cities of Judah was like removing the screen of a sanctuary." armour . . forest, Solomon's cedar palace had been converted into an arsenal.^c (9) breaches, those occasioned by the neglect of previous governors, not those made by the enemy. waters . . pool, comp. Hezekiah's act.^d

Man's Trust in His Weapons.—It may be dangerous self-confidence to trust weapons only. It may be mere listlessness to trust God only. It is the essence of piety to brace ourselves to all noble and wise endeavor, and keep through all our doings a soul full of trustings in God. This is but illustration in the war-spheres of the universal rule, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do, of his good pleasure."—R. Tuck.

10, 11. (10) broken . . fortify, removing exposed houses, and repairing the walls with the materials. They numbered, or examined, the houses, to see which could be best spared or used. comp. Jer. xxxiii. 4. (11) ditch, R. V. "a reservoir," for storing water, when the springs outside the city were cut off. not . . maker, the people had confidence in their own schemes, not in the help of their Divine King.^a long ago, "to Isaiah, history is the evolution of a consistent, pre-determined plan of Jehovah; to the men of his day it was merely a confused struggle between opposing forces. Their failure to discern the hand of God in the events that had befallen them was the crowning proof of their spiritual insensibility; their ill-timed frivolity on this occasion seemed to the prophet to seal their fate."—Camb. Bib.

God in His Works.—While all things are of God, by God, and to God, and God is in all things, God is not all things, nor are all things God. This is Pantheism, and I wish to guard against this blunder of human philosophy. God is in His works as an author is in his book; as a builder is in his building; as a mechanic is in his mechanism, with this difference, God is the creator of the materials as well as the organizer and constructor of them in their multitudinous forms and relations. But whoever would affirm that the book was the author, or the author the book?—that the building was the builder, or the builder the building?—that the mechanism was the mechanic, or the mechanic the mechanism? Because God is said to be in nature, it does not therefore follow that God is nature, or nature, God. The Creator must have existed before His creation, as an author must have existed before his book, the builder before his building, and the mechanic before his mechanism. In the completion of His works, God was no more absorbed in and confounded with them, than at the completion of any work of man the author or workman thereof is absorbed in and confounded with it, so that an observer should regard them as inseparable and undistinguishable. No; God maintains an existence distinct from nature, though in nature, as its Conservator; and were all material things annihilated, He would still have a being, as a man may, though all his works may be utterly destroyed.—J. Bate.

12—14. (12) call to weeping, this was really the message that was in the calamity, to wh. the people would give no heed. baldness, ch. xv. 2; Mi. i. 16. (13) joy,^b etc., with the defeat of Egypt comes moral chaos in Jerusalem. "What had been a city of devotees becomes in a moment a city of revellers." (G. A. Smith) as men will do in a plague stricken city. eat . . die, see 1 Cor. xv. 32.^c "When the moment of danger came, it found the people so unprepared that not only was an ignominious disaster the result, but the survivors were demoralized, and abandoned themselves to despair, regardless of the future."—Driver. (14) till ye die, Divine response to their self-confident boastings. Reference is to the utter death, or desolation, of the city and the nation. Reference to the second death is not necessary.

Insensibility to Calamity.—In the midst of the distresses with which France was harassed in the reign of Charles VII., and whilst the English were in possession of Paris, Charles amused himself and his mistresses with balls and entertainments. The brave La Here, coming to Charles ^c 1 Ki. vii. 2—7, x. 21.

^d 2 Chr. xxxii. 4.

"Sin degrades everything, blights all the flowers, hushes all the music, turns back all the light; it hates the morning, because the morning reveals, detects, and makes stand out in ghastly clearness things that long to hide themselves in some merciful cloud."—Peop. Bib.

^a "They did not depend upon God for a blessing upon their endeavors, saw no need for it, and therefore sought not to Him for it, but thought their own powers and policies sufficient for them."—Mat. Henry.

"The gospel is not opposed to the search for truth in all fields. It welcomes all the discoveries of science, and gives the right hand of fellowship to all sincere investigation, knowing well that the works of God, rightly understood, will ever help us to understand the Word of God who did the works."—Peloubet.

"The best critics are they Who, with what they gainsay, Offer another and better way."

^b "Nothing more strikingly evinces the strength of human depravity than trifling and reckless bravery when men are on the brink of destruction."—Henderson.

^c Comp. Lu. xvii. 26—30.

"It has been disputed whether these words are expressive of contemptuous incredulity, or of a desperate determination to spend the residue of life in pleasure."—J. A. Alexander.

"On the tomb of Sardanapalus is said to have been written, 'Eat drink, and love; for the rest is little worth;' and yet the tomb itself is a witness that there hovers before the mind the thought of the future, in which man would still live and still be remembered by his fellows, even though only by means of the lifeless stone."

The foreign form of the name Shebna indicates that this officer was an alien, and prob. a heathen.

"The Prophet upbraids him with making provision for himself and his posterity in a land to wh. he was an alien, and from wh. he was so soon to be expelled."—J. A. Alexander.

"Man's will sometimes is strong, and carries him over and through great difficulties; but God is ever stronger than he, and grasps him with effectual restraints."—R. Tuck.

"Think of 'living'! Thy life, wert thou the 'pitifullest of all the sons of earth,' is no idle dream, but a solemn reality. It is thy own; it is all thou hast to front eternally with. Work, then, like a star, unobscured, yet unsetting."—Carlyle.

one day to talk to him on some business of importance, whilst the luxurious Prince was occupied in arranging one of his parties of pleasure, was interrupted by the Monarch, who asked him what he thought of his arrangement. "I think, Sire," said he, "it is impossible for any one to lose his kingdom more pleasantly than your Majesty."—Whitcross. Iniquity that Cannot be Purged in this Life.—There is an important sense in which the forgiving God "by no means clears the guilty." The child of the drunkard or the sensualist will not have the spirit of drink or of passion taken out of him, nor will he be renewed from his physical deterioration, because his father becomes a Christian in his later years. Consequences of wrong reach on until they get altogether beyond grasp. Do any wrong, and for the soul of the wrong there is forgiveness, and full restoration, in the Divine mercy, through the precious blood-shedding; but you may pursue all your life after the natural consequences, and you shall never overtake them, never master them, never remove them. On they go, carrying their burdens of woe to the third and fourth generation. And Isaiah reminds us that there are some special kinds of iniquity to which the rule must more especially apply, for whose consequences there can be no earthly purging.—Pul. Com.

15, 16. Here begins a new section telling of the removal of Shebna the prefect of Hezekiah (vss. 15—25). (15) "this treasurer, a Heb. word not elsewhere found," seems to mean "associate" or "administrator."—(Camb. Bib). Polyc. Bib. translates, "this prefect." Shebna, probably a partisan of the Egyptian alliance, and his office, the highest in the court, measures his influence with the king. (16) "what right hast thou here, and what kin hast thou here," etc.—Polyc. Bib. sepulchre here, in so conspicuous a place! The prefect, sure of his position, had made him a sepulchre among the nobles of Jerusalem.

Man's Plans for Himself Frustrated by God's Plan for Him.—The answering New Testament case to this is our Lord's account of the prosperous farmer, who had no room to bestow his fruits and his goods. He said to himself, "I will pull down my barns and build greater." But God said, "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee." In the passage before us, Shebna, in the full assurance that he will die quietly, and be buried honorably in the neighborhood of Jerusalem, proposes to build a tomb or sepulchre for himself. It would be one of the rock-hewn sepulchres on the slopes of the hills surrounding the holy city. God's plan for him was quite different to his plan for himself. He was to be carried away into captivity, and the fair creation of his energies would fall into ruins. "Man proposes, God disposes."—Pul. Com.

17—19. (17) R. V. "Behold, the Lord will hurl thee away violently as a strong man; yea, he will wrap thee up closely." That is he shall be forcibly thrust out of his lofty position and cast out of the land as one hurls a ball. (18) "He will roll, roll thee on, thou rolling-stone, like a ball thrown out on broad level ground; there shalt thou die."—G. A. Smith. and there . . . house, R. V. "and there shall be the chariots of thy glory, thou shame of thy lord's house;" the chariots in which he had paraded his power, driving about the city, should go with him. (19) station, as the highest officer of the court.

Verse 18.—The image is that of throwing a ball upon a level and smooth surface, so that it rolls to an indefinite length; without attrition or hindrance of an appreciable kind, away rolls the smooth ball over the smooth surface, far beyond the measurement of men. Let us take heed to this. We can build nothing that God cannot unroof. God may begin, and does begin, at either of two points in his work of debilitation. Say he will come down upon the wicked man and work out his judgment; he will take part of the roof away, and a roof is no stronger than its weakest point—even a roof yields to that general law—and through that unroofed space the storm will pour down in pitiless fury. But God has another way of working out his judicial purpose, a way very secret, and wholly beyond the control of men; in that way he touches the foundation line, takes off the cornerstone, and the whole fabric is shaken down, and none can hinder the fall. The entire volume of human history is full of illustration of this. None can tell in what way God will come; the great and blessed and all-saving truth is that he is coming, does come, must come, and none can hinder, and that his coming means judgment to the wicked and recognition to the good.—Peop. Bib.

20—23. (20) Eliakim, "a man with a father" in contrast to Shebna whose father is not mentioned. (21) robe, the sign of office. a father, not a tyrant, as Shebna in his egotism and pride had been. Father intimates that he would be to the people protector, counsellor, and friend. (22) key . . shoulder, the keys of the E. being often large, are carried hanging from a kerchief over the shoulder.—Fausset. The key was the emblem of office, as indeed it is still. "Among the Greeks the key was worn as a badge of sacerdotal dignity." open . . shut, Re. iii. 7. (23) "I will drive him in like a nail fastened in a firm place," (Polyc. Bib.) i. e. I will make his position secure that he shall not be removed. throne . . house, i. e. would be a great support to his family and kindred, by securing them office and honor.

A Nail in a Sure Place (vs. 23.)—I. The lesson of the nail: little things may be very important things. II. The lesson of the sure place. 1. Good words, in order that they may do good, need good memories, and the good memory is the sure place; 2. A good example in a fruitful life, is a "nail in a sure place;" 3. Faith fixed on a good object, is "a nail in a sure place." III. The lesson of the fastening. 1. In order to the fastening, a nail needs guiding; 2. Fastened; some things, once fixed, are fixed for ever; 3. In a good place fastened.—Preacher's Lantern.

The Key of the House of David.—The most ancient lock ever discovered is that described by Mr. Bonomi as having secured the gate of an apartment in one of the palaces of Khorsabad. He says, "At the end of the chamber, just behind the first halls, was formerly a strong gate of one leaf, which was fastened by a large wooden lock, like those still used in the East, of which the key is as much as a man can conveniently carry, and by a bar which moved into a square hole in the wall. It is to a key of this description that the Prophet probably alludes: 'And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder,' and it is remarkable that the word for key (muftah) in this passage of Scripture is the same in use all over the East at the present time."—Metal Trades' Advertiser. God-given Responsibility.—How one man becomes the head of the family, the strength of the nation, the leader of the people, the dependence of empires! Were that man to be taken out of his place, it would seem as though the whole nation would perish by his removal; were that character to fail, it would seem as if the whole Church would go mourning the rest of her days, sighing, sobbing, because the son of the morning had lost his centre and plunged into infinite night. That is what God does in society: he makes some men as nails and pegs, on which are hung great responsibilities; he makes some men as pillars on whom he rests all that is uppermost in the temple of his providence; he makes some men leaders, shepherds going in advance, that they may lead God's nations and flocks and households to his appointed place: let us recognize their character and their standing, and though we may not emulate their power, we can give them the joy of knowing that we never forget them in our tenderest prayers.—Peop. Bib.

24, 25. (24) hang, etc., a word of warning, perhaps written later, when abuses of trust in Eliakim's family shewed themselves. Upon this nail all the kith and kin of Eliakim would try to hang themselves, like kitchen utensils on a hook. vessels of flagons, prob. bottles or pitchers. (25) that day, when that happens the nail will break—or be broken down, and the family of Eliakim like that of Shebna come to disgrace. Not necessarily within the minister's life-time.

The Nail Removed.—How is it that man, once high in esteem and general confidence, came to be weighed in the balances and found wanting? Some weakness of flesh and blood, some undue leaning to one's kith and kin, some element of partiality or favoritism, is often the cause. "His family makes a wrong use of him; and he is more yielding than he ought to be, and makes a wrong use of his office to favor them! He therefore falls, and brings down all with him that hung upon the peg, and who have brought him to ruin through the rapacity with which they have grasped at prosperity."—Delitzsch. Note on vs. 25.—The Orientals, in fitting up their houses, were by no means inattentive to the comfort and satisfaction arising from order and method. Their furniture was scanty and plain;

"Job xxix. 16.

Is. ix. 6, 7.

Here poss. rather the peg on wh. things are hung in the house. A strong peg on wh. reliance can be placed.

"Men are to be estimated, as a Johnson says, by the mass of character. A block of tin may have a grain of silver, but still it is tin; and a block of silver may have an alloy of tin, but still it is silver. The mass of Eliakim's character was excellence; yet he was not without the alloy. The mass of Jehu's character was base; yet he had a portion of zeal which was directed by God to great ends."—Cecil.

"Minute events are the hinges on which magnificent results turn. In a watch, the smallest ratchet, cog or crank is as essential as the mainspring itself. If one fall out, the whole will stand still."—Cumming.

"When a man in power has given a situation to another, it is said of the favored individual, 'He is fastened as a nail.' 'Yes, his situation is fixed, he will not be moved.' 'What! has Tarnan lost his glory? I thought he had been fastened as a nail.'" — Roberts.

"Whatever there is in sorrow which is not judgment is discipline. And of this latter, we must all have our share; we shall find our future will be very different from that which we picture it now: boyhood will not prove to be all that childhood imagines; still less will manhood be what youth supposes; friends will forsake us, schemes will be thwarted, hopes will be extinguished, props will be cut in twain, clouds will come up and rains will pour down, as we little think to-day. The hour will come when the nail that now seems so fast will be removed, and all that hangs upon it be brought to the ground." — Pul. Com.

"If a sheep stray from his fellows, the shepherd sets his dog after it, not to devour it, but to bring it again: even so our Heavenly Shepherd, if any of us, His sheep, disobey Him, sets His dog of affliction after us, not to hurt us, but to bring us home to consideration of our duty towards Him." — Cawdray.

a "Tyre sustained 3 sieges by Asiatic powers, the first by Shalmanezzer, in the reign of Hezekiah, B.C. 717; the second by Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 573; and the third by Alexander the Great, B.C. 332." — Henderson.

b Eze. xxvii. 12, 25.

"The practical point to keep in view is that commercial nations are always in peril of getting to merely use other nations, and so to neglect their responsibilities to them."

but they were careful to arrange the few household utensils they needed so as to not to encumber the apartments to which they belonged. Their devices for this purpose, which, like every part of the structure, bore the character of remarkable simplicity, may not correspond with our ideas of neatness and propriety, but they accorded with their taste, and sufficiently answered their design. One of these consisted in a set of spikes, nails, or large pegs, fixed in the walls of the house, upon which they hung up the movables and utensils in common use that belonged to the room. These nails they do not drive into the walls with a hammer or mallet, but fix them there when the house is building; for if the walls are of brick they are too hard, or if they consist of clay, too soft and moldering, to admit the action of the hammer. The spikes, which are so contrived as to strengthen the walls, by binding the parts together, as well as to serve for convenience, are large, with square heads like dice, and bent at the ends so as to make them cramp-irons. They commonly place them at the windows and doors, in order to hang upon them, when they choose, veils and curtains, although they place them in other parts of the room, to hang up other things of various kinds. The care with which they fixed these nails, may be inferred as well from the important purposes they were meant to serve, as from the promise of the Lord to Eliakim: "And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place." Pins and nails, Dr. Russel observes, in a manuscript note, are seldom used (at Aleppo) for hanging clothes or other articles, upon which are usually laid one over the other, on a chest, or particular kind of chair. This intelligent writer does not refuse that they are occasionally used in modern times; and it is evident from the words of the Prophet, that it was common in his time to suspend upon them the utensils belonging to the apartment: "Will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon?" The word used in Isaiah for a nail of this sort is the same which denotes the stake, or large pin of iron, which fastened down to the ground the cords of their tents. These nails, therefore, were of necessary and common use, and of no small importance in all their apartments; and if they seem to us mean and insignificant, it is because they are unknown to us, and inconsistent with our notions of propriety, and because we have no name for them but what conveys to our ear a low and contemptible idea. It is evident from the frequent allusions in Scripture to these instruments, that they were not regarded with contempt or indifference by the natives of Palestine. "Grace has been showed from the Lord our God," said Ezra, "to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in His holy place;" or, as explained in the margin, a constant and sure abode. The dignity and propriety of the metaphor appears from the use which the prophet Zechariah makes of it: "Out of Him cometh forth the corner, out of Him the nail, out of Him the battle bow, out of Him every oppressor together." The whole frame of government, both in Church and State, which the chosen people of God enjoyed, was the contrivance of His wisdom, and the gift of His bounty: the foundations upon which it rested; the bonds which kept the several parts together; its means of defence; its officers and executors, were all the fruits of distinguishing goodness; even the oppressors of His people were a rod of correction in the hand of Jehovah, to convince them of sin, and restore them to His service.—Paxton.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD.

1. Tyre,^a situated partly on a rocky island close to the coast of Phœnicia, and partly in a wide and fertile plain upon the coast itself, the chief Phœnician city, "pioneer of commerce, parent of colonies, mistress of the sea," ships, plying between Tyre and Tarshish. These ships, homeward bound, are met on their arrival at Cyprus by the intelligence that the harbors of Phœnicia are closed to them. Tarshish, prob. Tartessus in Spain,^b the farthest point of their voyages, and the chief centre of the produce they carried.

Tyre.—Few of the cities of the past were, in their way, more flourishing and wealthy than the celebrated Tyre. The Hebrew Prophets, being commanded to foretell its overthrow, on account of the wickedness of the inhabitants, delivered their predictions with great minuteness and circumstantiality (see Isa. xxiii.; Jer. xxv.; Ezek. xxvi.—xxviii.; Amos i. 9, 10; Zech. ix. 1—8; Joel iii 4—8). That these predictions have been literally accomplished, let the present state of this once famous city bear witness. Concerning that state, Dr. Thomson thus writes: "It (an insignificant village) is all that remains of her. But weep not for Tyre; this very silence and repose are most eloquent and emphatic on themes of the last importance to the Christian faith. There is nothing here of that which led Joshua to call it 'the strong city,' more than three thousand years ago (Josh. xix. 29); nothing of that mighty metropolis which baffled the proud Nebuchadnezzar and all his power for thirteen years, until every head in his army was bald, and every shoulder peeled in the hard service against Tyrus (Ezek. xxix. 18); nothing in this wretched roadstead and empty markets to remind one of the times when merry mariners did sing in her markets; no visible trace of those towering ramparts which so long resisted the utmost efforts of the great Alexander; all have vanished like a troubled dream.

2, 3. (2) "Extinct are the inhabitants of the coast, the merchants of Phœnicia, who traversed the sea, whose messengers were on many waters," etc. (Pol. Bib.) Zidon, stands for Phœnicia as a whole, as it was the oldest of the Phœnician settlements. R. V. "And on great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the Nile, was her revenue: and she was the mart of nations." The harvests of the Nile were carried to all lands by Tyrian ships, and the Tyrian revenue largely came from this carrying trade. Sihor, prob. a name for the Nile. Jer. ii. 18. mart of nations, Egyptian corn being first warehoused at Tyre, and thence conveyed to ports on the Mediterranean.

Wealth of Tyre's Trade.—The Phœnician empire, it has often been remarked, presents a very close analogy to that of Great Britain; but even more entirely than in the case of Great Britain the glory of that empire was the wealth of its trade, and the character of the people was the result of their mercantile habits. A little strip of land, one hundred and forty miles long, and never more than fifteen broad, with the sea upon one side and the mountains upon the other, compelled its inhabitants to become miners and seamen. The hills shut off the narrow coast from the continent to which it belongs, and drove the increasing populations to seek their destiny by way of the sea. These took to it kindly, for they had the Semite's born instinct for trading. Planting their colonies all round the Mediterranean, exploiting every mine within reach of the coastland, establishing great trading depots both on the Nile and the Euphrates, with fleets that passed the Straits of Gibraltar into the Atlantic and the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb into the Indian Ocean, the Phœnicians constructed a system of trade, which was not exceeded in range or influence till, more than two thousand years later, Portugal made the discovery of America and accomplished the passage of the Cape of Good Hope. From the coasts of Britain to those of Northwest India, and probably to Madagascar, was the extent of Phœnician credit and currency. Their trade tapped river basins so far apart as those of the Indus, the Euphrates, probably the Zambesi, the Nile, the Rhone, the Guadalquivir. They built ships and harbors for the Pharaohs and for Solomon. They carried Egyptian art and Babylonian knowledge to the Grecian archipelago, and brought back the metals of Spain and Britain. No wonder the prophet breaks into enthusiasm as he surveys Phœnician enterprise! And on great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the Nile, was her revenue; and she was the mart of nations.—Exp. Bib.

4, 5. (4) the strength of the sea, R. V. "the stronghold of the sea." The fine figure of the lonely sea denying that she ever had children is somewhat marred by the introduction of this clause, as if the poet had corrected himself by an afterthought, and changed the subject of personification from the sea to Tyre. One is tempted to remove the words as a gloss. I travail not, "after all her pains and care, she is left childless. The family which she had reared, and advanced to high dignity, has perished."—Spk. Com. (5) R. V. "When the report cometh to Egypt, they shall be sorely pained at the report of Tyre," not only from friendliness to Tyre but also because Assyria is the enemy of Egypt.*

"Our reverence for the past is just in proportion to our ignorance of it."—T. Parker.

a "The produce of the Nile, called Sihor, or the Black River."—Wordsworth.

"Though Egypt abounded in grain, yet the inhabitants left its exportation to foreigners."—Henderson.

"'Tis Use alone that sanctifies Expense And Splendor borrows all her rays from Sense."—Pope.

"Fell luxury; more perilous to youth Than storms or quicksands, poverty or chains."—Hannah More.

"Peter the First, King of Portugal, to restrain luxury, and prevent the ruin of families, absolutely forbade all his subjects to buy or sell any of their commodities without immediate payment, and made the commission of that offence death!"—Percy Anec.

"Tyre bewails her childlessness by reason of her captivity."—Wordsworth.

a See Eze. xxix. 18, 19.

"The biggest blaze is not a sign of the most heat. A straw-pile will give a brighter blaze than a ton of coal."

"Life lies before us as a huge quarry lies before the architect; he deserves not the name of an architect except when out of this fortuitous mass he can combine with the greatest economy and fitness some form, the pattern of which originated in his spirit."—Goethe.

"Order is the sanity of the mind, the health of the body, the peace of the city, the security of the state. As the beams of a house, so is order to all things."—Robert Southey.

"Praise the sea, but keep on land."—G. Herbert.

"In every object here I see Something, O Lord, that leads to Thee;
Firm as the rocks thy promise stands,
Thy mercies countless as the sands,
Thy love a sea immensely wide, Thy grace an ever flowing tide."
—John Newton.

"It is a city remarkable for posterity, both for the antiquity of its origin and for its frequent change of fortune."—Quintus Curtius.

"The duration of time is no guarantee against the coming of judgment; Tyre was a 'joyous city, whose antiquity was of ancient days,' but judgment would fall upon her in God's chosen time."—Paul. Com.

The Voice of the Sea (vs. 4).—It speaks—I. Of the greatness and goodness of God. II. Of the vastness and grandeur of the forces of nature. III. Of the ingenuity of man. IV. Of the dangers of those who sail upon it. V. Of our duty to those who sail upon it.—G. Brooks.

Tyre and the Sea.—How proud had Tyre been! How she thrived upon her corn trade in Egypt! Egypt had no timber, and therefore could not build ships; and if she had had a whole Bashan full of oaks she never would have cut a plank, for Egypt from time immemorial detested the sea. You never caught an Egyptian on the sea if he could stow himself away anywhere else. The Tyrian liked the sea, did not care how broad it was, or deep; he had a spirit of locomotion and daring and enterprise, and wherever the corn was the man of Tyre might be seen. Tyre enriched herself with the harvests of the Nile; she thought Sihor flowed for her advantage; the harvest of the river was her revenue, and she was a mart of nations. Honor to whom honor is due. She had acquired a great position in the world, and therefore she must have had elements of character of conspicuous value.—Peop. Bib.

Dangers of the Sea.—Nathaniel, an assistant to the Moravian missionaries in Greenland, when engaged in the seal fishery, being in company with another brother, who was yet inexperienced in the management of a kayak (a Greenland boat), met a Neitersoak, the largest kind of seal, which he killed. He then discovered his companion upon a flake of ice, endeavoring to kill another of the same species, and in danger; he therefore left his dead seal, kept buoyant by the bladder, and hastened to help his brother. They succeeded in killing the seal; but suddenly a strong north wind arose, and carried off both the kayaks to sea; nor could they discover any kayaks in the neighborhood. They cried aloud for help, but in vain. Meanwhile the wind rose in strength, and carried both the kayaks, and also the piece of ice, swiftly along with the waves. Having lost sight of the kayaks, they now saw themselves without the least hope of deliverance. Nathaniel continued praying to his Saviour, and thought with great grief of the situation of his poor family, but felt a small degree of hope arising in his breast. Unexpectedly, he saw his dead seal floating towards him, and was exceedingly surprised at its approaching against the wind, till it came so near the flake of ice that they could secure it. But how should a dead seal become the means of their deliverance? and what was now to be done? All at once, Nathaniel resolved, at a venture, to seat himself upon the dead floating seal; and by the help of his paddle, which he had happily kept in his hand when he joined his brother on the ice, to go in quest of the kayaks. Though the sea and waves continually overflowed him, yet he kept his seat, made after the kayaks, and succeeded in overtaking his own, into which he crept, and went in quest of that of his companion, which he likewise found. He also kept possession of the seal; and now hastened in search of the flake of ice, on which his companion was most anxiously looking out for him; having reached it, he brought him his kayak, and enabled him to secure the other seal, when both returned home in safety. When relating his dangerous adventure, he ascribed his preservation not to his own contrivance, but to the mercy of God alone.—Whitecross.

6, 7. (6) to Tarshish, see vs. 1. Flee as far away as possible. (7) joyous city, ch. xxii. 2. Being a prosperous city it was full of feasting and pleasure-seeking, antiquity, "the Tyrian priests asserted that their temple had been built 2,300 years previously."—Herodotus. own feet, R. V., "whose feet carried her," etc., refers not to flight but to the long journeys that her merchants had been accustomed to take.

Notes on Tarshish.—Situation: prob. Tartessus, "a city and emporium of the Phœnicians in south of Spain." Proof—1. Similarity of name. Tartessus=Tarshish in Aramaic form (Bochart). 2. The connection between Tarshish and Tyre, as once between Tartessus and Phœnicians. "Tartessus was founded by the Phœnicians (Arian). 3. The articles supplied by Tarshish are precisely those known to have been obtained from Spain (Ez. xxvii. 12). "Ships of Tarshish" is a term denoting a certain class of vessel, i. e. those fitted for long voyages, as "East Indiaman" was a name for ships, some of which might never go to the East Indies. Ships trading to Tarshish (Tartessum) sailed from Joppa (Jonah i. 3, iv. 2). But a navy of Tarshish—i. e. of large trading vessels—also sailed once in three years to other regions from the Red Sea (1 K. ix. 26, x. 22). —Topics.

8—12. (8) crowning city, or “the crown-giver,” Tyre is rightly so-called, inasmuch as some of her colonies (Kition, Tarshish and Carthage) were ruled by kings, subject to the mother-city. traffickers, or traders. (9) Lord of hosts, the real Lord even of idolatrous Phœnicia. stain, or pollute. Show that no true honor can belong to any nation apart from the fear and service in righteousness of the one living God. Man’s pride against God must everywhere be humbled.^a (10) The third strophe (vss. 10—14), as usually explained, deals mainly with the emancipation of the Phœnician colonies from the somewhat stringent control of Tyre. But the passage presents many difficulties; and from the utter uncertainty as to the meaning of vs. 13 the general sense is doubtful. as a river, R. V., “as the Nile,” in its flood goes where it will without hindrance, so you are at liberty. strength, R. V., “there is no girdle about thee any more,” i.e. no hindrance. (11) against, etc., R. V., “concerning Canaan,” i.e. Phœnicia. (12) oppressed, etc., or thou “outraged virgin-daughter.” “The epithet ‘virgin’ is applied to Zidon as a fortress hitherto unviolated by a conqueror. It is an almost inevitable inference that the calamity here described is the first she has known, at least within living memory. This would apply to the campaign of Shalmaneser, but not to that of Sennacherib.”—Camb. Bib.

Note on Chittim.—(Chittim) Cyprians, by some thought—to Hittites. Cyprians were a race descended from Javan, of family of Japheth (Gen. x. 4; 1 Ch. i. 7, Kittim). Phœnicians traded with Cyprus; one of their settlements there being Citium, on south-east coast. People of Citium= Kittai of the Greeks. The name given to this settlement, spread over the whole island, and to the people who after occupied settlements which had been Phœnician.

13, 14. (13) Behold, this verse reverts to the fact that Babylon, wh. was agent of the destruction of Tyre, should presently be itself destroyed. was not, etc., R. V., “is no more; the Assyrian hath appointed it for the beasts of the wilderness; they set up their towns; they overthrew the palaces thereof; he made it a ruin.” Polyc. B. translates: “Behold the land of Chaldea; they have appointed Tyre for desert-beasts; they have razed the palaces thereof;” etc. dwelt . . wilderness, i.e. for the beasts of the desert. This would be the issue of all its founder’s ambitious schemes.^b he brought, i.e. God, discomfiting their schemes of universal empire. (14) strength, or stronghold.

Tyre.—

The wild and windy morning is lit with lurid fire;
The thundering surf of ocean beats on the rocks of Tyre—
Beats on the fallen columns, and round the headland roars,
And hurls its foamy volume along the hollow shores,
And calls with hungry clamor, that speaks its long desire:
“Where are the ships of Tarshish, the mighty ships of Tyre?”

Within her cunning harbor, choked with invading sand,
No galleys bring their freightage, the spoils of every land;
And like a prostrate forest, when autumn gales have blown,
Her colonnades of granite lie shattered and o’erthrown;
And from the reef the pharos no longer flings its fire,
To beckon home from Tarshish the lordly ships of Tyre.

Where is the wealth of ages that heaped thy princely mart?
The pomp of purple trappings, the gems of Syrian art?
The silken goats of Kedar, Sabaea’s spicy store;
The tributaries of the islands thy squadrons homeward bore,
When in thy gates triumphant they entered from the sea
With sound of horn and sackbut, of harp and psaltery?

Howl, howl, ye ships of Tarshish! the glory is laid waste:
There is no habitation; the mansions are defaced.
No mariners of Sidon unfurl your mighty sails;
No workmen fell the fir-trees that grew in Shenir’s vales,

^a “To show the vanity of their efforts to defy themselves.” — Spk. Com.

Eze. xvii. 3, describes their luxury even in their shipping. See also Eze. xviii. 2, etc.

“A beggar being once asked what he was, answered: ‘I am a king!’ ‘Where is thy kingdom?’ ‘It is in my soul. I can so rule my external and internal senses that all the faculties of my soul are subject to me.’ And who doubts that this kingdom is better than all the kingdoms of the world?” — Francis Taylor.

^b “Some take this as indicating the rude and unlettered condition of the Chaldeans previous to their settlement in Babylon.” — Henderson.

“If a man, sick on his bed, burning of a fever, fetching his breath with straitness and shortness, looking like earth, says he is well in health, we do not believe him; so if we see men swelling with pride, flaming with lust, looking earthy with covetousness, and yet flattering themselves with hope of salvation, we cannot credit them, all the world cannot save them.” — Adams.

“God sometimes answers at once; sometimes he gives us some better thing in the place of the particular thing we ask; sometimes he answers by the very contrary of what we wished, and out of that springs the particular thing that we prayed for."

a "It was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar much about the time that Jerusalem was, and lay as long as it did in its ruins."—Mat. Henry.

"Silly man is like the foolish chickens; though the kite comes and takes away many of their fellows, yet the rest continue pecking the ground, never heeding their owner, never minding their shelter. Death comes and snatches away one man here, a second there; one before them, another behind them, and they are killed by death, undone for ever; yet they who survive take no warning, but persist in their wicked, ungodly ways (Job iv. 20, 21).—Swinnoek, 1673.

b Prob. Cyrus, who befriended the Jews; also encouraged the Tyrians to rebuild their city.

Better to be a "publican," like Zacchæus, if one-half of the gains made be devoted to feeding the poor, than to follow the most elevated calling and appropriate all the proceeds to one's self. "Gain" becomes "godliness," when the great wealth, which is the result of high qualities wisely employed, and blessed by God in such employment is made an offering to him, in the person of his Church or of his poor.

And Bashan's oaks that boasted a thousand years of sun,
Or hew the masts of cedar on frosty Lebanon.

Though silent and forgotten, yet Nature still laments
The pomp and power departed, the lost magnificence.
The hills were proud to see thee, and they are sadder now;
The sea was proud to bear thee, and wears a troubled brow;
And evermore the surges chant forth their vain desire—
"Where are the ships of Tarshish, the mighty ships of Tyre?"
—Bayard Taylor.

15, 16. (15) forgotten, i. e. put into obscurity and comparative poverty. one king, better, one dynasty," "during the reign of one line of kings."—Pol. Bib. shall Tyre, etc., R. V., "it shall be unto Tyre as in the song of the harlot," referring to a well known ballad. (16) Take a harp, this is the quotation from the song, a verse of six lines of two words each, in the Heb.

Insensibility to Moral Danger.—A plough is coming from the far end of a long field, and a daisy stands nodding, and full of dew-dimples. That furrow is sure to strike the daisy. It casts its shadow as gaily, and exhales its gentle breath as freely, and stands as simple and radiant and expectant as ever; and yet that crushing furrow, which is turning and turning others in its course, is drawing near, and in a moment it whirls the heedless flower with sudden reversal under the sod! And as is the daisy, with no power of thought, so are ten thousand thinking sentient flowers of life, blossoming in places of peril, and yet thinking that no furrow of disaster is running in toward them—that no iron plough of trouble is about to overturn them. Sometimes it dimly dawns upon us, when we see other men's mischiefs and wrongs, that we are in the same category with them, and that perhaps the storms which have overtaken them will overtake us also. But it is only for a moment, for we are artful to cover the ear, and not listen to the voice that warns us of danger.—Beecher.—They say of the silly ostrich that when she hides her head in the sand, and does not see her pursuers, she thinks she is safe; that is the policy of many men. They spread their sails, and get up the steam, and go with double speed straight ahead. What, not look at the chart! No, they do not want to know whether there are rocks and breakers ahead. Arrest that captain, put him in irons, and find a sane man to take charge of the vessel. Oh for grace to arrest that folly which is the captain of your bark, and put sound sense in command, or else a spiritual shipwreck is certain.—Spurgeon.

17, 18. (17) visit Tyre, in restoring merely, b turn to her hire, R. V., "return, etc., i. e. shall resume her former lucrative activity; her commerce is put into the figures of this vs. (18)holiness to the Lord," i. e. dedicated to God, used by Him. No evidence here of conversion of the Tyrian merchants—but only of God's purposes for his people. dwell before, etc., i. e. for the Jewish people. The prophecy is of a time when the Lord will restore her commerce to Tyre,—not for her own sake, but for the sake of Israel.

Commerce of Tyre.—Of all the cities of antiquity, Tyre was the most celebrated for the extent of its commerce. The Tyrians obtained the productions of the East, of which it was the grand emporium, by sailing up the Red Sea or Arabian Gulf, and then passing across Arabia Petrea to Rhinocolura. Alexander seems to have determined on the destruction of Tyre, in order to found a city which he might dignify with his name, and enrich with the commerce of the East; for which Alexandria was placed in a better situation than Tyre. Of Tyre, "whose merchants were princes, whose traffickers were the honorable of the earth," there now exist scarcely any traces. Some miserable cabins arranged in irregular lines, dignified with the name of streets, and a few buildings of a rather better description, occupied by the offices of the government, compose nearly the whole of the town. It still, indeed, makes some languishing efforts at commerce, and continues to export annually to Alexandria cargoes of silk and tobacco, but to a very trifling extent. "The noble dust of Alexander traced by the imagination till found stopping a beer-barrel," would scarcely afford a stronger contrast of grandeur and debasement than Tyre at the period of its siege by that conqueror, and the modern town of Soor erected on its ashes.—Percy Anec.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

1-3. (1) Behold, "the chapter is mainly an announcement of the last judgment, but partly also a gloomy survey of the actual state of the world. The writer feels that he is living in the last days, and in the universal wretchedness and confusions of the age he seems to discern the 'beginning of sorrows.' His thoughts glide almost imperceptibly from the one point of view to the other, now describing the distress and depression which exist, and now the more terrible visitation which is imminent."—Camb. Bib. "With the very first verse the prophecy leaps far beyond all particular or national conditions: 'Behold, Jehovah shall be emptying the earth and rifling it; and He shall turn it upside down' and scatter its inhabitants." This is expressive and thorough; the words are those which were used for cleaning a dirty dish. To the completeness of this opening verse there is really nothing in the chapter to add. All the rest of the verses only illustrate this upturning and scouring of the material universe."—G. A. Smith. (2) priest, or prince. "All ranks and classes shall fare alike." (3) land, R. V., "earth." Lord . . word, absolute certainty of the impending judgment.

Desolation and Misrule.—"The government of the Turks in Syria is a pure military despotism, that is, the bulk of the inhabitants are subject to the caprices of a faction of armed men, who dispose of everything according to their interest and fancy. In each government the pasha is an absolute despot. In the villages, the inhabitants, limited to the mere necessities of life, have no arts but those without which they cannot subsist. There is no safety without the towns, nor security within their precincts." Volney.—"Few men left." After estimating the number of inhabitants in Syria in general, Volney remarks, "So feeble a population in so excellent a country may well excite our astonishment; but this will be increased, if we compare the present number of inhabitants with that of ancient times. We are informed by the philosophical geographer, Strabo, that the territories of Yanmia and Yoppa, in Palestine alone, were formerly so populous as to bring forty thousand armed men into the field. At present they could scarcely furnish three thousand. From the accounts we have of Judæa, in the time of Titus, which are to be esteemed tolerably accurate, that country must have contained four millions of inhabitants. If we go still further back into antiquity, we shall find the same populousness among the Philistines, the Phœnicians, and in the kingdoms of Samaria and Damascus." Though the ancient population of the land of Israel be estimated at the lowest computation, and the existing population be rated at the highest, yet that country does not now contain a tenth part of the number of inhabitants which it plentifully supported, exclusively from their industry, and from the rich resources of its own luxuriant soil, for many successive centuries; and how could it possibly have been imagined that this identical land would ever yield so scanty a subsistence to the desolate dwellers therein, and that there would be so few men left?—Keith.

4-6. (4) mourneth,^a throughout the chapter this language is more than figurative and indicates that sympathy between nature and man taught everywhere in the Scripture. haughty people, lit. "the height of the people," i. e. the noblest of the people. (5) defiled, i. e. desecrated.^b "That the land of Israel is profaned by the sins of its people, is a prominent idea in the O. T.; the conception is here extended to the whole earth." everlasting covenant. "An allusion to the covenant with Noah. (Gen. ix. 1-17.)." A covenant with the race, which the world has broken. (6) curse, or penalty to wh. the party who breaks the covenant is subject.^c desolate, R. V., "found guilty."

Judgment.—Who does not rejoice that there is a spirit of judgment in the universe? A languishing world should give us pleasure; a fading tree, provided that tree is an upas tree, should make us shout for joy.

^a "The fig. is that of a bottle or other vessel drained of its contents by being turned upside down."—J. A. Alexander. Comp. Eze. xxi. 27.

^b De. iv. 27. xxviii. 64. xxx. 3.

^c "This accumulation of antitheses strikingly marks the indiscriminate ruin in wh. the inhabitants of Judah should be involved. No distinction would be made bet. the diff. ranks and conditions of life."—Henderson.

"Let not those that are advanced in the world set their inferiors at too great a distance, because they know not how soon they may be put upon a level with them."—Matthew Henry.

"To each his sufferings; all are men Condemned alike to groan; The tender for another's pain, The unfeeling for his own."—Gray.

^a Is. iii. 26; He. iv. 3.

^b "Therefore they must be driven out, as Cain was driven out of Eden."—Knobel.

^c De. xxix. 20.

"Many a man who postpones his penitence till he cannot help it, postpones his penitence till it cannot help him, and will not see the Lord turning till he turns and looks upon him in judgment. Then, indeed, he goes out to weep. But it is out into that night which knows no dawn."—Drummond.

a Je. vii. 34, xvi. 9, xxv. 10; xxvi. 13; Ho. ii. 11.

"Character is consolidated habit, and habit forms itself by repeated action. Habits are like paths beaten hard and clear by the multitude of light footsteps which go to and fro. The daily restraint or indulgence of the nature, creates the character which, whether it be here or there, settles the destiny." — J. Baldwin Brown.

b "Which, having set at naught Divine law and order, had fallen back into a state of chaos." — Spk. Com.

"Such would be the quantity of rubbish collected before the houses that were left, that they would be quite inaccessible." — Henderson.

Comp. Is. xxiii. 1; Je. xlii. 19.

c "With a great tumult the gate is battered down." — Horsley.

"Christ says, 'I am the way.' Wherever you are, at whatever point of experience, at whatever stage of sin, this way begins where you are, and you have but to take it and it leads to God. From your person, as you are at this moment, there leads a way to the Father." — Marcus Dods.

d "Men shall be scarce as the single olives left to be shaken down, or the few grapes left to be gleaned, after the harvest is gathered. Those who remain shall glorify God and His dealings." — Mat. Arnold.

a "It may be noted that 'it was chiefly in

When the bad man is brought to justice, righteous men should sing the praises of God. When the thief is caught, when the evildoer feels the cold hand of justice on his neck, they who look on should bless God for these guarantees of legitimate and useful civilization. That there is a perdition for the Iscariots of the world is a source of profound satisfaction to those who love righteousness. Were Iscariot to be free of heaven, there would be no heaven to long for. The curse is personified as a beast of prey—"therefore hath the curse devoured the earth."—Peop. Bib.

7-9. (7) new wine, must. No one is left to attend to the newly-gathered grapes. merryhearted, with prob. ref. to the joy usually shown at the vintage-season. (8) tabrets, timbrels. A kind of drum, or tamborine. a "Music is the common token and accompaniment of mirth." (9) be bitter, i. e. by reason of national calamities they should lose all appetite for that which had been associated with joy and song.

The Consequences of Sin are Meant to Wean From Sin.—The penalty annexed to it is, in the first instance, corrective, not penal. Fire burns the child, to teach it one of the truths of this universe—the property of fire to burn. The first time it cuts its hand with a sharp knife, it has gained a lesson which it will never forget. Now, in the case of pain, this experience is seldom, if ever, in vain. There is little chance of a child forgetting that fire will burn, and that sharp steel will cut; but the moral lessons contained in the penalties annexed to wrong-doing are just as truly intended to deter men from evil, though they are by no means so unerring in enforcing their application. The fever in the veins and the headache which succeed intoxication are meant to warn against excess. On the first occasion they are simply corrective; in every succeeding one they assume more and more a penal character, in proportion as the conscience carries with them the sense of ill-desert. — F. W. Robertson.

10-12. (10) of confusion,^b or "of chaos," Gen. i. 2. house . . shut up, because every man is in fear of enemies and suspicious of his fellows. (11) for wine, R. V., "because of the wine," the vineyard having been destroyed. A fig. for the entire cessation of all joyousness, and all good fellowship. (12) gate . . destruction, or, "into ruins is the gate beaten down."^c

Hugh Miller has told how, by an act of youthful decision, he saved himself from one of the strong temptations so peculiar to a life of toil. When employed as a mason, it was usual for his fellow-workmen to have an occasional treat of drink, and one day two glasses of whiskey fell to his share, which he swallowed. When he reached home, he found, on opening his favorite book,—"Bacon's Essays,"—that the letters danced before his eyes, and that he could no longer master the sense. "The condition," he says, "into which I had brought myself was, I felt, one of degradation. I had sunk, by my own act, for a time, to a lower level of intelligence than that on which it was my privilege to be placed; and though the state could have been no very favorable one for forming a resolution, I in that hour determined that I should never again sacrifice my capacity of intellectual enjoyment to a drinking usage; and with God's help, I was enabled to hold by the determination." It is such decisions as this that often form the turning-point in a man's life, and furnish the foundation of his future character. And this rock, on which Hugh Miller might have been wrecked, if he had not at the right moment put forth his moral strength to strike away from it, is one that youth and manhood alike need to be constantly on their guard against. It is about one of the worst and most deadly, as well as extravagant, temptations which lie in the way of youth. Sir Walter Scott used to say "That of all vices, drinking is the most incompatible with greatness." — Smiles.

13-15. (13) "Yea, thus will it be throughout the earth in the midst of the peoples, as at the shaking of the olive-trees,"^d as at the gleanings of the grapes, when the vintage is done." — Polyc. Bib. The images are borrowed from ch. xvii. 6, and are used in the same sense. (14) from the sea,^a "the prophet hears songs of praise ascending from distant parts of the earth, hailing the coming day." (15) in the fires, R. V., "in the east," strictly "the (regions of) lights." The idea would then be that the West calls on the East to join in the praise of Jehovah.

Verse 13.—Explaining the figure used in this verse, Thomson says, "Early in autumn the olive berries begin to drop of themselves, or are shaken off by the wind. They are allowed to remain under the trees for some time, guarded by the watchman of the town—a very familiar Bible character. Then a proclamation is made by the governor that all who have trees go out and pick what has fallen. Previous to this, not even the owners are allowed to gather olives in the groves. This proclamation is repeated once or twice, according to the season. In November comes the general and final summons, which sends forth all Hasbeiya. No olives are now safe unless the owner looks after them, for the watchmen are removed, and the orchards are alive with men, women, and children. Everywhere the people are in the trees, 'shaking' them with all their might, to bring down the fruit. The effort is to make a clear sweep of all the crop; but, in spite of shaking and beating, there is always a glean- ing left. These are gathered by the very poor, who have no trees of their own; and by industry they collect enough to keep a lamp in their habita- tion during the dismal nights of winter, and to cook their mess of pottage and bitter herbs."

16. uttermost part, lit. the wing. glory to the righteous, etc., this is the song which the writer hears from certain far away lands, but as for himself he sees only reason for lamentation. leanness, R. V., "I pine away, I pine away," or in Polyc. Bib. "But I say: For me, misery; alas for me!" treacherous, etc., trans. "The deceivers deceive, with deceit the deceivers deceive." A wailing over the sad defection and wickedness of the Prophet's own people.

The Glory of the Righteous.—There are divers kinds of glory. But God's glory is the glory of the cross! There is an empty glory of self-righteousness, but that is not the glory of the righteous. Far from it. The glory of strength is to help the weak. The glory of wisdom is to enlighten the ignorant. The glory of righteousness is to shape into order that which is wrong. Yes. Glory to the righteous! for they are the salt of the earth, the safety of the nation.

17, 18. (17) Fear . . snare, "Terror, and Pit and Snare upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth!"—G. A. Smith. The fig. in the verse is taken from the hunted animal, which is driven into the pit, or the snare. (18) windows . . open, recalling the desolations of the Divine judgment in the time of the flood.^b

A Hardened Conscience Alarmed.—Richard Crowninshield was a murderer. As long as he thought the evidence of his crime was concealed he was cheerful and confident even in prison. He was a very desperate, hardened, strong-minded, remorseless villain. He was the leader of a knot of infidels, who jeered at all sacred things, and taught young men in habits of abandoned wickedness. There were accessories to his crime, not one of whom, as he thought, was suspected; and he knew that so long as that was the case, not a link of condemning evidence could be obtained against him. At length a letter, intercepted in the postoffice, led to the arrest of one of his accomplices. That arrested man was carried into the gaol at midnight; but so profound was the sleep of that hardened murderer, that all the clanging of the bolts and bars of the prison, at that unusual hour, did not wake him. The next morning the sheriff came into his cell and entered into familiar conversation with him. He was standing calmly at the foot of his truckle bed. "Well," said the sheriff, "did you hear the noise last night?" "No; what noise? I slept well." "Why, did you not know that they had arrested Frank Knapp, and brought him here last night at mid- night?" The strong, guilty man put his hand to the wall to steady him- self, but, unable to conceal his feelings, or to recover from the shock, fell back senseless on the bed. The recoil, the scorpion sting, had reached him at last; his sin had found him out; the sword had pierced through the rocky casement around the conscience of the desperate criminal, and was grinding in his soul. What passed that night none can tell, nor how long the man endured the terrible conflict with conscience and despair. But when the sheriff entered his cell next morning, he was hanging dead, self-murdered. Such is the power of sudden overwhelming evidence, bringing the sense as well as the proof of guilt into the soul. Men would flee from it, if they could, at the last day. If there were still a third lands bordering on the Mediter- ranean that the first Christian churches rose," —Spk. Com.

"We hear prom- ises and praise to the righteous, but our actual experience is that of misery."—J. A. Alexander. Je. v. 11.

"Sweetest the strain when in the song The singer has been lost." —Elizabeth Stu- art Phelps.

^a Comp. Je. xlviii. 43, 44.

"'Fear' is the term applied to the cords with feathers of all colors which, when fluttered in the air, scare beasts into the pitfall, or birds into the snare." —Fausset.

Lu. xxi. 34, 35.

^b Ge. vii. 11, etc.

"When earthly comforts shall be taken from us, and at the day of judgment, then an ill con- science, look where it will, it hath a matter of terror."—Sibbes.

"They who look to time and chance for deliv- erance are only deluding them- selves with a hope which will certainly 'make ashamed' those that cherish it." —Pul. Com.

"Every charac- ter has an in- ward spring. Let Christ be it. Every action has a keynote. Let Christ set it."— Drummond.

a "It is rent and fractured; it bursts open in fissures: its basement gives way: then it totters, sways rapidly to and fro, and falls." — S p k. Com.

b "Heb. a hanging couch, suspended from the trees by cords, such as Niebuhr describes the Arab keepers of lands as having, to enable them to keep watch, and at the same time be secure from wild beasts." — Fausset.

c Ps. xxxviii. 4.

b "What Isaiah here predicts is the subversion for a season of the entire Jewish polity, or the removal to Babylon of those who ministered in the temple, and of the royal state." — Henderson.

c "For sun, moon, etc., as symbols of governments and rulers, comp. Joel ii. 31, iii. 15; Is. xlii. 10; Mk. xlii. 24, 26; Re. xx. 11.

"Eternal Spirit of the chainless Mind.

Brightest in dungeons, Liberty thou art.

For there thy habitation is the heart—

The heart which love of thee alone can bind;

And when thy sons to fetters are consign'd—

To fetters and the damp vault's dayless gloom,

Their country conquers with their martyrdom." — Byron.

"To accept the will of some men is hard; but God touches our feelings, awakens our confidence, commands our reverence, and world into which souls could plunge out of the eternal world by a second self-murder, they would do it.—Cheever.

19, 20. "Broken, utterly broken, is the earth; shattered, utterly shattered, the earth; staggering, very staggering, the earth; reeling, the earth reeleth like a drunken man: she swingeth to and fro like a hammock." — G. A. Smith. (19) broken down, the fig. of a house ruined by an earthquake." (20) like a cottage,^b or "hammock suspended between the branches of a tree, liable to be tossed hither and thither in a storm." transgression . . heavy, the material fabric of the earth is, as it were, crushed beneath the accumulated guilt of its inhabitants (comp. vs. 5, xxvi. 21.^c—Camb. Bib.

Danger Leads to Seeking God.—As the child, fearing nothing, is so fond of his play that he strays and wanders from his mother, not so much as thinking of her; but if he be scared or frightened with the sight or apprehension of some apparent or approaching danger, presently runs to her, casts himself into her arms, and cries out to be saved and shielded by her: so we, securely enjoying the childish sports of worldly prosperity, do so fondly dote on them that we scarce think of our Heavenly Father; but when perils and dangers approach, and are ready to seize upon us, then we flee to Him, cast ourselves into the arms of His protection and providence, crying and calling to Him by earnest prayer for help and deliverance in this our extremity and distress.—Downname.

21—23. (21) high ones,^b "the 'host of the height' is equivalent to the 'host of heaven' (Jer. xxxiii. 22; 1 Kings xxii. 19; Neh. ix. 6). That celestial beings of some kind are meant appears clearly from the emphatic contrast with the 'kings of the earth' in the second half of the verse."—Camb. Bib. (22) shut . . prison, comp. Jude 6; 2 Pet. ii. 4; and the book of Enoch xviii. 14, 16; xxi. 6. (23) moon, etc.^c figures of speech to indicate the glorious splendor of the restored Israel. ancients, R. V. margin, "before his elders shall be glory."

The Reign of Christ Glorious (vs. 23).—To give you some idea of the Messiah's advent, as it is here described, I will endeavor to set before you—I. The nature of His kingdom: differs from all others, laws are not restrictive only, but preceptive. II. The extent of His kingdom: always extending, will presently be universal. III. The happiness of His subjects: estimated by honor, wealth, enjoyment. IV. The glory of His reign: Christ will reign in every heart and soul. Apply:—1. What you should effect on earth; 2. What blessedness awaits you in the eternal world.—C. Simeon.

Kingdom of God to be Prayed and Worked for.—Wise work is cheerful, as a child's work is. Now, I want you to take one thought home with you, and let it stay with you. Almost every one has been taught to pray daily, "Thy kingdom come." Now, if we hear a man swear in the streets, we think it very wrong, and say he takes God's name in vain. But there's a twenty times worse way of taking His name in vain than that. It is, to ask God for what we don't want. He does not like that sort of prayer. If you don't want a thing, don't ask for it; such asking is the worst mockery of your King you can mock Him with; the soldiers striking Him on the head with a reed was nothing to that. If you do not wish for His kingdom, don't pray for it. But if you do, you must do more than pray for it; you must work for it. And to work for it, you must know what it is; we have all prayed for it many a day without thinking. Observe, it is a kingdom that is to come to us; we are not to go to it. Also, it is not to be a kingdom of the dead, but of the living. Also, it is not to come all at once, but quietly; nobody knows how. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Also, it is not to come outside of us, but in the hearts of us: "The kingdom of God is within you." And being within us, it is not a thing to be seen, but to be felt; and though it brings all substance of good with it, it does not consist in that: "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost;" joy, that is to say, in the holy, healthful, and helpful spirit. Now, if we want to work for this kingdom, and to bring it and enter into it, there's just one condition to be first accepted. You must enter into it as children, or not at all: "Whosoever will not receive it as a little child, shall not enter therein." And again, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." "Of such," observe. Not of children themselves, but of such as children. I believe most mothers who read that text, think that all heaven is to be full of babies. But that's not so. There will be children there, but the hoary head is the crown. "Length of days, and long life and peace," that is the blessing; not to die in babyhood. Children die but for their parents' sins; God means them to live, but He can't let them always; then they have their earlier place in heaven: and the little child of David, vainly prayed for; the little child of Jeroboam, killed by his mother's step on its own threshold—they will be there. But weary old David, and weary old Barzillai, having learned children's lessons at last, will be there too; and the one question for us all, young or old, is, Have we learned our child's lesson? It is the character of children we want, and must gain at our peril.—Ruskin.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

I. "Here the prophet transports himself to the period of deliverance, and identifying himself with the redeemed community, utters in their name a hymn of thanksgiving."—Driver. Lord, better Jehovah. my God, comp. Ex. xv. 2, 11; Ps. cxviii. 28, cxlv. 1, etc. wonderful things, lit. wonders: as Ex. xv. 11.^a counsels of old, R V., "even counsels of old, in faithfulness and truth." Original plans and purposes. God keeps to them, working them out in the course of long years. He, the covenant-maker, is also the covenant-keeper."

The Language of Real Piety (vs. 1).—Piety has often been counterfeited, true piety knows nothing of guile. This is the language of—I. Choice. II. Assurance. III. Enjoyment. IV. Expectation. V. Gratitude.—Theta in 100 Sks.

Seeking First the Kingdom of God.—A recruiting officer in Massachusetts heard that a young man was ready to enlist, and hastened to call upon him. He was put off with the statement that he was not ready yet. The call was several times repeated, with like results. This vacillation seemed strange to those who knew the young man's straightforward character. Afterwards he confessed that he did not wish to enlist till he felt himself ready to die. He was profane and wicked, as were all his friends and associates, save one sister. He did not have confidence enough to communicate his feelings to any one, but purloined his sister's Bible, and began to read at the beginning, to learn how to become a Christian. He came to the Commandments in course, and in them thought he had found that which would prepare him to enlist. He learned them by heart, and then tried to keep them. He was conscious of breaking only one, that against profanity. Against this he struggled; but the more he struggled, the more he swore. He then thought he would try prayer. He could not put off the recruiting officer much longer. He knelt, and cried out in much abasement and excitement, "Lord, help, help!" His prayer was answered. He passed the provocations of the next day without an oath. When the recruiting officer next came, he put down his name, and said, "Now I am ready to face anything; rebels or death." He went before the Church, and told his experience, and was reminded that he had said nothing about Jesus. His explanation was, that he had not got to Him yet in his Bible. He had read to the Psalms, but thought he must begin at the other end to find Jesus. He went to the army, as every one should enter the battle of life, a happy Christian, ready to do, suffer, or die.

2, 3. (2) a city, Babylon, the world-renowned city. heap, or pile of rubbish.^a defenced city, or citadel. Fortified city. of strangers, i. e. of strangers and enemies to Israel. (3) strong people, "therefore (many) a strong people shall glorify Thee, (many) a city of terrible nations shall fear Thee." No special city is meant.—Camb. Bib. (Comp. Da. iv. 34. 35, vi. 25—27.)

Goodness of God.—As the sun sends forth a benign and gentle influence on the seed of plants, that it may invite forth the active and plastic power from its recess and secrecy, that, by rising into the tallness and dimensions of a tree, it may still receive a greater and more refresh-so to us his will seems most beautiful, ever right, ever wise, ever gracious. And we know the spirit of his kingdom—it is the obedience which love renders."—Pul. Com.

^a Ps. xl. 5, cl. 2.

^b He. vi. 17, 18.

"If a person was to attend the levee of an earthly prince every court-day, and pay his obsequance punctually and respectfully, but at other times speak and act in opposition to his sovereign, the king would justly deem such a one an hypocrite and an enemy. Nor will a solemn and stated attendance on the means of grace in the house of God prove us to be God's children and friends,—if we confine our religion to the church walls, and do not devote our lips and lives to the glory of that Saviour we profess to love."—Salter.

^a "Heaps' is a graphic picture of Nineveh and Babylon, as they now are." —Fausset.

Je. II. 26, 37; Re. xix. 1—3.

"When men do anything for God, the very least thing, they never know where it will end, nor what amount of work it will do for Him. Love's secret therefore is to be always doing things for God, and not to mind because they are very little ones." — F. W. Faber.

b "The Chaldean paraphrase has, a storm which overthrows a wall. And this is prob. the right sense; a storm so violent that it sweeps down walls before it." — Mat. Arnold.

c "As clouds quell heat, so God quells the tumult of the 'strange children.'" — Mat. Arnold.

"God could relieve His people as speedily as when a thick cloud floating across the sky cools the atmosphere." — Spk. Com.

a "The lees, or sediment, of wine produced by the bubbles of fixed air, which during fermentation rise to the surface, and bring along with them the skins, stones, or other grosser matters of the grapes, thus forming a scum, which, after a time, breaks and falls to the bottom." — Henderson.

"Who does not recognize, in the unrivalled excellence of the blessings the Gospel conveys, the most powerful arguments for missionary exertion? Who can think of the Gospel feast, in contrast with the famine of the heathen, without wishing that they also might be bidden to the heavenly entertainment?" — Hom. Com.

ing influence from its foster-father, the prince of all the bodies of light, and, in all these emanations, the sun itself receives no advantage, but the honor of doing benefits: so doth the Almighty Father of all the creatures. He at first sends forth His blessings upon us, that we, by using them aright, should make ourselves capable of greater; while giving glory to God, and doing homage to Him, are nothing to His advantage but only to ours; our duties towards Him being vapors ascending from the earth, not at all to refresh the regions of the clouds, but to return back in a fruitful and refreshing shower; and God created us, not that we can increase His felicity, but that He might have a subject receptive of felicity from Him.—Bp. Taylor.

4. 5. (4) thou, i. e. Jehovah. strength, or stronghold. blast . . wall, as a storm of rain beats upon a wall, so the Bab. persecution beat upon the captive Jews." (5) shalt bring down, etc., better, "humblest the pride of aliens." even the heat, etc., R. V., "as the heat by the shadow of a cloud, the song of the terrible ones shall be brought low." The meaning is that as natural heat, however intense, is abated by an intervening cloud, so Jehovah has means of bringing to an end the fiercest oppression to which His people can be exposed.—Camb. Bib. The song of the terrible ones may be their song of triumph when victorious over God's people.

The Storm and the Refuge (vs. 4).—I. Of what do storms remind us? 1. That this world is a place for storms; 2. That this life is a time for storms; 3. That every storm is raised and guided by the hand of God; 4. Every storm so raised is benevolently designed. II. What does the refuge suggest? 1. It is well that the refuge is God, and no creature; 2. God is often spoken of as a refuge; 3. The refuge must be outside the storm, or so much stronger as to resist its influence. Apply:—(1) Expect storms, and wonder that they are so few; (2) What refuge have we against the next storm? (3) How welcome we are to this refuge! (4) What can we do to aid those who are out in the storm?—S. Martin.

The Shadow of a Cloud.—About mid-day, when the heat was very oppressive, a small cloud, scarcely observable to the eye, passed over the disc of the burning sun. Immediately the intense heat abated, a gentle breeze sprang up, and we felt refreshed. The immediate relief afforded us by the interposition of a small and almost imperceptible cloud, taught us the lesson of the Prophet, with what Divine ease and speed God can relieve His suffering Church, and bring low her proudest enemies.

6. 7. The text here is connected with the concluding thought of ch. xxiv. (6) this mountain, i. e. Zion. fat things, richest meats. wines on the lees, i. e. matured wines: bettered by having been kept.^a well refined, carefully strained. (7) destroy, cause to disappear. face of the covering, the covering of sorrow, worn over the head in time of mourning (comp. 2 Sam. xv. 30, xix. 4; Jer. xiv. 3, 4; Esther vi. 12), this will be destroyed for sorrow will be at an end.

The Feast for All People (vss. 6, 7).—I. The feast here promised and described. 1. The place where God engages to make the feast; 2. The feast itself: the Gospel; 3. The provisions carefully selected, dearly purchased, supremely excellent, highly gratifying; 4. The guests for whom the feast is provided. II. The benefits which result from attendance at the feast. 1. Removal of darkness; 2. Conquest over death; 3. Deliverance from sorrow; 4. Justification from reproach. Apply:—(1) Come; (2) When you come expect what is promised; (3) And let your deportment be answerable to the entertainment.—Alpha in 400 Sks.

Jehovah's Feast after Reconciliation.—The picture in this text is based upon the familiar custom in Judaism of associating a sacrificial feast with a thank offering or peace offering. Such feasts were highly festive and joyous occasions. As an instance of the custom, reference may be made to the scene of the anointing of King Saul. Samuel made a feast, after sacrifice, to which some thirty persons were bidden (1 Sam. ix. 19, 22). "According to the Mosaic law, the fat pieces of the victim were to be devoted to Jehovah immediately by burning, and the next best piece, the breast, mediately by giving it to his servants the priests;" the rest was a foundation for a feast in which the offerers shared. The "wines on the lees" are those kept long, that have become old and mellowed. "Full of marrow" indicates superior quality. The first reference may be to the joy of the returned captives when God permitted a revival of Jerusalem; but the full reference must be to the spiritual provisions of Messianic times.—Pul. Com.

8. R. V., "He hath swallowed up death forever."^b "A promise not only to the Jewish nation (as Hos. xiii. 14), as a community, but to all its believing individual members, a necessary inference from the next clause."—Cheyne. wipe . . faces, as Re. vii. 17, xxi. 4. "When Jehovah removes the veil he sees the tears and wipes them away." rebuke, etc.,^c the shame of their degradation in captivity.

The Universal Extent of the Blessings of Christianity.—"The Lord of hosts shall make unto all people a feast of fat things." 1. They are adapted to all people. 2. They are sufficient for all people. 3. They were designed for all people. 4. The wide world shall, sooner or later, partake of them.—Hom. Com.

Life Triumphs Over Death.—In Christ life rules, hope rules, goodness rules, eternity rules. Man may despairingly look upon his partially raised schemes, and say, "Alas! I shall die." But the Christian man builds on bravely and hopefully. He knows that beneath all the outward show he is raising a structure of character on which death has no power, and he says, "I shall never die." The difference that is made by our letting death rule our thoughts and hopes and endeavors, and letting Christ rule them, may be illustrated by the change wrought in the land of Persia, when Zoroaster proclaimed that Ormuzd, the Good, was the real ruler of humanity. When Zoroaster came, the religious instincts of the people were debased, the divinity worshipped was malevolent, the moral tone was low, the social habits were vicious, the land of Iran was overgrown with thorns and weeds; men were idle, negligent, like the surfeited inhabitants of Sodom, given up to sensuality; they thought of their divine ruler as evil, malicious, cruel; they had the crushing, despairing, disheartening sentiments which always follow the belief that death, the representative of evil, rules. Zoroaster brought back the old and lost truth that God rules—not evil, not death. Evil is subject to God. The good God is the God of life, and life is mightier than death; of light, and light triumphs over darkness. Ormuzd was the god of production, and if they would sow and plant and weed, they would be sure to win, under his benediction, a glorious triumph over waste and barrenness and death. We are not yet free as we should be from the notion that death still reigns. We have not yet opened our hearts fully to the glorious truth that Jesus, the conqueror of death, now reigns. Above everything else our age wants to yield its allegiance to Christ, ruling in morals, in education, in literature, in science, in politics, in commerce, and in society; triumphing now over all the forms of evil that death can symbolize.—Pul. Com.

9. in that day,^a vss. 9—12 introduce a song of which the theme is the manifestation of God in the humiliation of Moab. Evidently "that day" is not the day of final judgment; and this section is not connected in thought with what immediately precedes. In Polyc. Bible it is printed separately. Others think vs. 9 alone is "a brief strain from the hymn of the redeemed" (Cheyne), and vss. 10—12 a prophecy against Moab.

Waiting on God.—"This is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us." 1. Waiting on God. 2. Waiting for God. 3. Waiting on when all is dark. 4. Waiting still, when commotions and troubles surround us. 5. Bidding us wait for Him, a way of the Lord's dealing with us. 6. Making it hard to wait, a sign of God's severer dealing with us. 7. And waiting sanctified to our soul-culture. These are subjects very suggestive to Christian meditation.—Pul. Com.

The Overflowing Goodness of God.—We know God by the superabundance of the festival. He never gives merely enough. Yet he never exercises his dominion in wantonness and prodigality, but always with that economy which waits upon the wisest generosity. If we sin against the light we insult the whole noontide. It is no little artificial light that flickers in the infinite darkness that we despise, but a whole firmament of glory. If we sin against Providence, it is against a full table that we rebel; and it is upon an abundant harvest that we pronounce our curse. The Lord leaves nothing half done, does nothing with a grudging hand, keeps b 1 Co. xv. 54.

c "The reproach of failure cast on the people of righteousness."

—Mat. Arnold.
"A little while, Pursue the way of faith;

Though tollsome be the path,
Some day the darksome haze will vanish quite,
And on thy sight Celestial morn will drop its changeless light."

"Can any duty be more obviously founded in reason and justice, humanity and pity, than that of sending the bread of life to our perishing fellow-creatures? The most hateful and inexcusable of all monopolies is the monopoly of Christian truths and consolations."—Hom. Com.

"He who fears death has already lost the life he covets." —Cato.

a "Those who have trusted God thro' the darkness will, when the returning light comes, say, 'This is the God of whom we have spoken, and for trusting in whom we have so often been derided. We have waited long, but He has come at last, to vindicate His truth and our reliance on Him.'"
—J. A. Alexander.

"An ill conscience when it should be most comforted, then it is most terrible. At the hour of death we should have most comfort, if we had any wisdom."—R. Sibbes.

a The people of the E. all swim "hand over hand," alternately raising each arm out of the water, and thus never presenting the whole breast, but only one side, to the stream. Among the Assyrian sculptures which represent persons in the act of swimming, there is not one which gives a different testimony.

"If you wish to be held in esteem, you must associate only with those who are estimable." —Bruyere.

b "God's salvation shall be in place of walls and bulwarks to His Zion. See Is. lx. 18—22." —Mat. Arnold.

c As a nation they are regarded as being righteous, because they had given up their idolatry, and again entered into covenant with Jehovah.

Ps. cxviii. 19, 20.

"When this corruptible has put on incorruption, and this mortal has put on immortality, when standing within that city where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest, will the redeemed of the Lord shout this song as never before: 'We have a strong city,' etc." —Hom. Com.

back nothing for his own enrichment. Doth not the goodness of the Lord lead thee to repentance? What a noble companion would Goodness make for any man who longed to see home again! Goodness, beginning with the spring, passing into the summer, reddening and purpling with the hospitable autumn—yes, and not scorning the field of snow and the wind all frost, for even there God keeps sanctuary and the Most High his testimony. Sinners, therefore, with an infinite turpitude are they who force their way to the lowest nature, to their original type, to the hell that awaits unrighteousness, through goodness so vast, so delicate, so infinite.—Parker.

10—12. (10) rest, i. e. in order that He may continue at, and complete, His work of grace. Moab, put here as the symbol of all Israel's remaining enemies, trodden down, as worthless straw is by the foot of cattle. under him, R. V., "in his place," i. e. where he stands. dunghill, better, dung-pit, cesspool. The word used is Madmenah, which seems to refer to the Moabitish town so called. (11) R. V. "And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst thereof," represents Moab as trying to swim in the dung-pit into which he has been cast. to swim, i. e. hand over hand. spoils, R. V., "the craft," spells of sorcery. (12) In R. V. tenses are all past, "hath he brought down," etc.

God's Protecting Hand.—I. Of every enterprise we should ask, "Is it right?" If wickedness be in "the mountain," God's protecting hand will not rest upon it. A just cause creates a good conscience, and hence inspires strength. It is only the just man who feels that God "teaches his hands to war and his fingers to fight, so that a bow of steel is broken by his arms." II. Material force allied with injustice will eventually become weak as straw, vile as a dung-heap. The strong places of Moab had no inherent lastingness, because built in a godless spirit (Ps. cxxvii. 1). III. Forts and castles, ironclads and armies, can never save an unrighteous nation from decay. National selfishness, oppressive enterprises, weaken the strongest defences, corrupt the richest treasures. Babylon became a marsh, Nineveh a forsaken mound, Tyre a deserted rock. The walls of Moab were levelled with the dust. By justice only can peoples be strong. If God be in the city, its walls will be lasting as the hills.—William Parkes.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

1, 2. A third poem of four stanzas to be sung in the great coming Day (1—6; 7—10; 11—15; 16—19). (1) that day, the day of Jehovah's kingdom. strong city, Jerusalem is strong, not by reason of its condition and fortifications, but because specially under the Divine protection. walls and bulwarks,^b by the bulwarks we understand the trench with the ante-mural earthworks exterior to the wall. About this time another prophet writes, Zech. ix. 6. (2) truth, i. e. troth, faithfulness. The prophet conceives of this city as empty—just as God has builded it—and he calls that the gates be opened that the faithful ones may enter in.^c

Prophetic Vision.—What salvation is there in the world? what sense of divine communion? what identity with God? what confidence that time and space are only stumbling-blocks, and the real city is a city of fellowship with infinite ideas and purposes, infinite love and truth? Who is there that does not leave early Sacrament to talk about the coldness of the morning? So contradictory may men be, and superbly foolish, that they can open their eyes from looking upon God to remark upon the phenomena of space! We need the spirit of transport, the spirit that lifts itself into third heavens, and asks, Are there no higher heights; are there no seventh heavens? In such rapture we see most of the spiritual universe. We are only critics, not rhapsodists. The poet is the man we want, because he speaks ultimate truths; he puts into a line a whole revelation, he wraps up in a sentence all the births of the ages, forgetting the pang and throe and misery in the holy issue. But who can be in the spirit and in the body at the same time? Who can see salvation as a temple and praises as a cathedral whilst he is victimized and laughed at by his own five senses? We need prophets, therefore, who have the seeing eyes—the eyes that see what to others is invisible; and they must put up with our impertinence and rudeness for a time; they can bear it, for our ingratitude hardly reaches them; they have flung their music upon the world, and vanished from the world's vengeance and anger.—Peop. B.

3. "The man of steadfast mind Thou keepest in welfare, for in Thee is his trust."—Polyc. Bib. This verse "states the conditions of membership in the ideal Zion; a 'steadfast mind' may share the 'peace' which the ideal city is to enjoy."—Driver. perfect peace, lit. peace, peace, the quietness of perfect trust in the Almighty One. stayed,^a fully reliant. trusteth, "implies entire repose of faith, such as leads a man to cast away human anxiety."—Spk. Com.

Perfect Peace.—I. The Author of this peace is none other than God Himself. Earthly honors, riches, friendships, leave the heart devoid of enduring peace, because they can do nothing to dispel the sense of guilt and the consequent apprehensions of the future. We cannot have peace unless we have God for our portion. II. The peace which God imparts to His people is "perfect." 1. In its source; 2. In its measure; 3. In its adaptation to our needs. It erects its brightest monuments on the ruins of earthly hopes. III. If this perfect peace is to be ours we must link ourselves on to God by a simple, earnest, childlike faith. 1. This is essential; 2. This is sufficient. IV. It is the duty, as it is the privilege, of all believers to seek for "perfect peace."—David Magee.

Christian in the World.—I remember an illustration in a black folio of the seventeenth century: As a watch, though tossed up and down by an agitation of him who carries it, does not on that account undergo any perturbation or disorder in the working of the spring and wheels within; so the true Christian's heart, however shaken by the joltings it meets with in the pressure and tumult of the world, suffers no derangement in the adjustment and action of its machinery; the hand still points to eternity.—R. A. Wilmott.

Rest.—

When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean,
And billows wild contend with angry roar,
'Tis said, far down beneath the wild commotion,
That peaceful stillness reigneth evermore.

Far, far beneath the noise of tempest dieth,
And silver waves chime ever peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er he flieeth,
Disturbs the sabbath of that deeper sea.

So to the heart that knows Thy love, O Purest,
There is a temple, sacred evermore,
And all the babble of life's angry voices
Dies in hushed silence at its peaceful door.

Far, far away, the roar of passion dieth,
And loving thoughts rise calm and peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er he flieeth,
Disturbs the soul that dwells, O Lord, in Thee.

Oh, rest of rest! Oh, peace serene, eternal!
Thou ever livest; and Thou changest never,
And in the secret of Thy presence dwelleth Fulness of joy, forever and forever.

—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

4. for ever, i. e. always and altogether. Jehovah, or Jah: the Eternal, Immutable, and Covenant-Keeping God. strength, R. V., "an everlasting rock;" lit. "a Rock of Ages."^b We may read: "for the Lord Jehovah is a Rock of Ages."

Perfect Trust, Perfect Peace (vs. 4).—Man must trust; he has no resources of his own. I. The true object of supreme trust, "the Lord Jehovah. 1. His sufficiency; 2. His graciousness; 3. His immutability. II. The character of the trust enjoined. 1. Absolute; 2. Unquestioning; 3. Comprehensive; 4. Continuous. III. The result of such trust, "perfect peace." 1. Fearlessness of present foes; 2. Calmness amid pres-

^a Ps. cxl. 8, cxli. 8.

"Faith is not only intended to pacify the conscience and purify the heart, but also to rescue the mind from earthly troubles. Our passage through life is attended with storms; we sail upon a boisterous sea, where many tempests are felt, and many are feared, which look black, and bode mischief, but pass over. Now, faith is designed for an anchor, to keep the mind steady, and give it rest." — Hervey.

"To be the sun is to be bright; to have peace is to have perfect peace. This is the sublimity of faith. The end of discipline is not to make men critical, facetious, pedantic, pharisaic, self-sufficient; the end of all life-discipline is to make men complete, and completeness is peace. Where there is want of peace there is want of completeness." — Parker.

^b Is. xlv. 17; De. xxxii. 16; 1 Sa. ii. 2.

"The eternity and immutability of God are here alleged as a ground of the most unlimited confidence on the part of the people." — Henderson.

"Those that trust in God shall not only find in Him, but receive from Him, everlasting strength that will carry them to everlasting life, to that blessedness which is for ever." — Mat. Henry.

"As a garrison seizes and retains a stronghold, so 'the peace of God' takes military possession of the soul, and beats off all outside assailants. It has an active as well as a passive side, like a staff which we can draw forth for a fight as well as lean on for rest."—G. R. Miall.

"Family pride entertains many unsocial opinions." — Zim-morah.

ent peril; 3. Contentment in the midst of want; 4. Tranquility in the prospect of the future.—Stems and Twigs.

Lean Hard.—It seemed as if I could not sit without support through the service, and oh! how desirable seemed rest! God sent it in an unexpected way, for a woman came and seated herself directly behind me, so that I could lean on her, and invited me to do so. I declined, but she drew me back, saying, "If you love me, lean hard." And then came the Master's own voice, repeating the words, "If you love me, lean hard!" and I leaned on Him too. I wondered that I was not weary that night nor the next morning; and I have rested ever since, on those sweet words, "If you love me, lean hard!"—Fidelia Fiske. Comfort of Believing.—I envy not quality of the mind or intellect in others; nor genius, power, wit, or fancy; but if I could choose what would be most delightful, and, I believe, most useful to me, I should prefer a firm religious belief to every other blessing; for it makes life a discipline of goodness; creates new hopes when all hopes vanish; and throws over the decay, the destruction of existence, the most gorgeous of all lights; awakens life even in death, and from corruption and decay calls up beauty and divinity; makes an instrument of torture and shame the ladder of ascent to Paradise; and, far above all combinations of earthly hopes, calls up the most delightful visions and plains and amaranths, the gardens of the blest, the security of everlasting joys, where the sensualist and the sceptic view only gloom, decay, annihilation, and despair.—Sir H. Davy.

5, 6. "The hostile city is humbled to the dust; and the poor may now walk unhindered over its ruins."—Driver. (5) bringeth down, or, hath brought down. lofty city, Babylon is again in the Prophet's mind. (6) foot . . down, a fig. for the exultation of the Jews in the final overthrow of the city of their foes. "The feet of the afflicted trample upon it, the steps of the helpless."—Polyc. Bib.

Pride Fettered.—

Prayer is the net that snareth him; prayer is the fether that holdeth him: Thou canst not nourish pride while waiting as an almsman on thy God,—Waiting in sincerity and trust, or pride shall meet thee even there: Yea, from the palaces of Heaven hath pride cast down his millions. Root up the mandrake from thy heart, though it cost thee blood and groans,

Or the cherished garden of thy graces will fade and perish utterly.

—Tupper.

7. "The path for the righteous is good fortune; a road for the righteous Thou levellest."—Polyc. Bib. In that ideal city the way of the righteous will be free from trouble. uprightness, or straightness. weigh . . just, or make level. "Thou makest his way straight before his face."

The Righteousness of God and His People.—I. Righteousness is the characteristic of God and His redeemed people. 1. God Himself, His laws, His providential government, are all signalized by perfect rectitude; 2. God's people share in the same righteousness. The grace of God produces a new nature which assimilates them to the Divine nature. II. When righteousness characterizes a person it will dictate his conduct. He is erect in his moral manhood.—J. Rawlinson.

An Upright Farmer.—A farmer called on the late Earl Fitzwilliam, to represent that his crop of wheat had been seriously injured in a field adjoining a certain wood, where his lordship's hounds had, during the winter, frequently met to hunt. He stated that the young wheat had been so cut up and destroyed, that, in some parts, he could not hope for any produce. "Well, my friend," said his lordship, "I am aware that we have frequently met in that field, and we have done considerable injury; and if you can produce an estimate of the loss you have sustained, I will repay you." The farmer replied that, anticipating his lordship's consideration and kindness, he had requested a friend to assist him in estimating the damage, and they thought that as the crop seemed quite destroyed, £50 would not more than repay him. The earl immediately gave him the money. As the harvest, however, approached, the wheat grew, and in those parts of the field which were most trampled, the corn was strongest and most luxuriant. The farmer went again to his lord-

* With special reference to the straight course prepared for them in the providence of God, by which to return to Palestine.

"Amidst the shakings of the nations and the storms of life, it is delightful to know that the sceptre of universal power is in the hand of Infinite Love. He reigneth, be the earth ever so unquiet."—Sam'l Thodey.

"Some seem to imagine that all demands of righteousness are met by the acceptance of ship, and being introduced, said, "I am come, my lord, respecting the field of wheat adjoining such a wood." His lordship immediately recollected the circumstance. "Well, my friend, did not I allow you sufficient to remunerate you for your loss?" "Yes, my lord, I find that I have sustained no loss at all, for where the horses had most cut up the land, the crop is most promising, and I have therefore brought the £50 back again." "Ah!" exclaimed the venerable earl, "this is what I like; this is as it should be between man and man." He then entered into conversation with the farmer, asking him some questions about his family—how many children he had, etc. His lordship then went into another room, and returning, presented the farmer with a cheque for £100, saying, "Take care of this, and when your eldest son is of age, present it to him, and tell him the occasion that produced it."

8, 9. (8) the way . . for thee, i. e. have stood by the way along which we expected and desired Jehovah to appear—in judgment. The rest of the verse should be translated as in R. V., "to thy name and to thy memorial is the desire of [our] soul." "Name" and "memorial" are synonymous, as in Ex. iii. 15; Ps. cxxxv. 13; Jehovah's memorial is that by which He makes Himself to be remembered (see vs. 13).—Camb. Bib. (9) in the night, of affliction. early, i. e. earnestly. when, and not till then. thy judgments, the manifestation of God in punishment of evil.

Seeking God in the Night.—I. We desire God in the night of our sorrows. Thick clouds come over the heart. Alone in the darkness it seeks His face. II. We desire God in the night of our doubts. These will come. Old evidences do not afford the same basis of faith. In this temporary eclipse of faith we want God Himself—the living God. III. We desire God in the night of our separations. They must come. Be the tie ever so tender, it must be cut. Then the soul cries out, "O God, be not far from me." IV. We desire God in the night of our own departure. Death is a dark hour. But One can lighten that.—Pul. Com.

I Will Remember Thee.—Dr. Jessup, the Syrian missionary, says that when his father, long a Vice-President of the American Board of Missions, had been twice paralyzed, his memory gone, and even his own house no longer recognized, he was at home when he got into his church, or remembered the Missionary Board, and wrote a letter to its representatives, full of the spirit of missions. He could conduct family prayers as well as ever, and was perfectly sound in mind and memory as to the Redeemer's kingdom. It was like the disintegrated quartz falling away from the pure gold.—O. T. Anec. Judgment Teaching Righteousness.—Not only the Church but the world will learn two great lessons, viz., that God is righteous, and be led into the way of righteousness. In The Hand of God in History we read that "the devastating wars of Napoleon I. produced a shock which taught all Europe that Jehovah is the God of nations." The Emperor Alexander of Russia, who from that time to his death is believed to have been an humble follower of Jesus, once observed that "the burning of Moscow lighted the flame of religion in my soul." Professor Tholuck says that "when Germany was called to contend for freedom, this memorable event awakened religious desires in hearts that had remained strangers to every Christian sentiment. The inhabitants of Prussia felt that the moment was come for the display of the eternal justice which governs the world, and from that time the heart of the king was opened to the truths of Christianity." When cholera raged in Great Britain, thousands who never thought seriously before felt that it was high time to awake out of sleep, and turned unto the Lord.

10, 11. (10) favour, or mercy. To the wicked mercy seems only weakness, so he despises "goodness and forbearance." the land of uprightness "is the Holy Land; even there, surrounded by the institutions of a pure religion, the wicked outrages the dictates of morality, having no eyes for the majesty of Jehovah."—Camb. Bib. (11) R. V., "Lord, Thy hand is lifted up, yet they see not; but they shall see Thy zeal for the people, and be ashamed; yea, fire shall devour Thine adversaries." The hand of God has been manifest to the eye of faith. But some are blind and for them only terrible judgments will suffice.

Obdurateness.—All is lost upon him. Let the summer-day rain all its gathered clouds upon the sand of the desert, and it will not make Christ and the experience of spiritual feeling, while they overlook the demands of human relationships. Others confine their view to men. They imagine all demands are met, when they are fair and honorable in their dealings with men, while God is left out of consideration. The Divine idea of righteousness is not thus partial.—Hom. Com.

* "God's character was connoted by His Name, and was handed down in the historical memorial of His deeds of love and power."—Spk. Com.

"Night appears to be a time peculiarly favorable to devotion. Its solemn stillness helps to free the mind from that perpetual din which the cares of the world will bring around it; and the stars looking down from heaven upon us shine as if they would attract us up to God."—C. H. Spurgeon.

Miss Frances E. Willard died Feb. 18, 1898. Her last words as she was passing into the other world were, "How beautiful to be with God!"

James II., after his defeat at La Hogue, expressed his satisfaction thereat, because what God orders is best, and nothing is well done which is not done by Him.

* "The wrath of God, as a sudden, rapid, irresistible and utterly destroying agent."—J. A. Alexander.

"Shall our very next neighbor's house be on fire, and we look on as men unconcerned in the danger? It cannot be, it must not be. There is, without a ill doubt, the same combustible stuff—the same, if not greater sins—lodged in our hearts, and the same punishment hovering over our heads; it is, therefore, high time to look about us."—Donne.

b Ps. xxx. 7; Pr. x. 7.

"We have all to fight the same lions, tread the same road, try the same gates, fall by the same difficulties. Such is the mystery of this disciplinary life! Blessed are they who can speak of other lordships in the past tense, in a tense that is completed, saying, 'Other lordships have had dominion over us, but the lordships and their rulings have vanished and ended, and now we stand in the empire of God.'"—Peop. B.

a "In doing all this Thou hast made an exhibition of Thy power, justice, truth, and goodness."—J. A. Alexander.

b "This verse contains an image of anguish accompanied with expectation, to be followed by joy that will cause the anguish utterly to be forgotten."—Faust.

Bishop Reynolds says: "A godly heart is like those flowers which shut when the sun sets, and a garden of it; all the rich rain will be swallowed by the burning lips, and at eventide the desert shall thirst as with the thirst of fire: otherwise, the world would be converted to-day, and would have been converted at the very time of the revelation of the Son of man. The spirit of discontentment is in some men, and do what you will for them you find no flowers in their conduct, no fruit upon their life-tree, nothing but leaves, and the leaves half-grown, as if ashamed to be seen upon branches so unfruitful, so unblessed. Doth not the goodness of God lead thee to repentance? Think of it! health, and children, and love, and prosperity, and social honor, and all these a staircase leading thee—no where! All these marble steps should conduct thee to heaven. But as soon as the earthquake ceases men begin again to curse and swear, and as soon as the earth is felt to have recovered from her vibrations men go back to the tavern and drink themselves to death; when the heavy thunder ceases, and the vivid lightning withdraws itself, men come from the sanctuary of the cellar to repeat their brutalities in their higher chambers.—Parker.

12—14. (12) for thou also, etc., "for even our whole work thou hast wrought for us," i. e. all that we have achieved has been due to thy working for us. (comp. Ps. xc. 16, 17). (13) other lords, the reference is to foreign despotisms, an invasion of Jehovah's sovereignty. (14) dead,^b "Dead men do not live; shades do not arise: wherefore Thou visitest," etc.—G. A. Smith and see margin R. V.

A Penitential Confession.—The dominion of evil in human souls is: 1. Multiform. It assumes many shapes. The gods the Jewish people served were numerous as the nations under whose influence they fell. So the form of evil most congenial to a man's own nature is sure to assail him. 2. Wrongful. The language implies that God ought to have had the dominion. Then it must be wrong to give it to others. He is the rightful sovereign on every ground. 3. Voluntary. It has been entirely with our own consent.—J. Rawlinson.

Peace Through the Gospel.—"Some years ago," says a Belgian pastor, "I visited a gardener, and induced him to obtain a New Testament. This displeased his wife so much that she begged me one day to leave her husband alone. My wife continued to see him, and while speaking of flowers and plants she spoke of the Gospel. Although professing unbelief, he would say, 'I respect you, for you are good and sincere, but I would not allow a priest to speak to me so.' The man fell ill, and was for a long time laid up. My wife used to read the Scriptures to him. A few days before his death I went to see him, and he answered all my questions in a most touching manner. A priest, furious at his receiving my visits, threatened him with damnation. 'Let me die in peace,' he answered, 'I now believe in the Gospel.' The priest left him, and he died in peace. His widow, his son, and the whole family now attend our chapel regularly."

15—17. (15) art glorified, "thou hast glorified thyself" by thus exalting Israel.^a hadst . . earth, R. V. "thou hast enlarged all the borders of the land." (16) visited thee, sought Thee as penitents and suppliants. (17) in thy sight,^b better "because of Thee," i. e. Thy chastening hand.

Encouragements to Prayer.—1. Abraham's servant prays—Rebekah appears. 2. Jacob wrestles and prays—Christ is conquered. Esau's mind is wonderfully turned from the revengeful purpose he had harbored for twenty years. 3. Moses cries to God—the sea divides. 4. Moses prays—Amalek is discomfited. 5. Joshua prays—Achan is discovered. 6. Hannah prays—Samuel is born. 7. David prays—Ahithophel hangs himself. 8. Asa prays—a victory is gained. 9. Jehoshaphat cries to God—God turns away his foes. 10. Isaiah and Hezekiah pray—185,000 Assyrians are dead in twelve hours. 11. Daniel prays—the dream is revealed. 12. Daniel prays—the lions are muzzled. 13. Daniel prays—the seventy weeks are revealed. 14. Ezra prays—God answers (Ezra viii. 21—23). 15. Nehemiah darts a prayer—the king's heart is softened in a minute (Neh. ii. 6). 16. Elijah prays—a drought of three years succeeds. 17. Elijah prays—rain descends apace. 18. Elisha prays—Jordan is divided. 19. Elisha prays—a child's soul comes back. Prayer reaches eternity. 20. The Apostles pray—the Holy Ghost comes down. 21. The Church prays ardently in a prayer-meeting—Peter is delivered by an angel.—J. Campbell.

Divine Help Sought by Prayer.—For help in duty or, in danger prayer is an unfailing source of strength. When King William IV. expired at Windsor Castle about midnight, the Archbishop of Canterbury immediately hastened to acquaint the Princess Victoria of her succession to the throne. On receiving the momentous intelligence the youthful Queen became much agitated, but her first words were, "I ask your prayers on my behalf." They kneeled down together, and our Queen began her reign in the spirit of Solomon of old, by imploring from the King of kings "a wise and understanding heart."—The Children's Hour.

18, 19. (18) brought . . wind, "the reference is to the futility of all the self-originating schemes and hopes of the Jews in Babylon, which had for their object their political regeneration. They humbly acknowledge that deliverance did not come until God delivered. fallen, R. V. margin "been born," i. e. the mother nation has brought forth no children to people the world."—Camb. Bib. (19) R. V. "Thy dead shall live; my dead bodies shall arise." "The answer to the utterances of disappointed hopes in vs. 18 is the promise of the Resurrection. The speaker throughout is the community, and the words are addressed to God, with the exception of an apostrophe to the buried Israelites in the middle of the verse." for thy dew, etc., better, "for a dew of lights is thy dew" (O Lord), i. e. a heavenly supernatural dew, which falling on the dead, restores them to life.—Camb. Bib. cast out the dead, better, "bring forth the shades." (Rephaim).

The Doctrine of the Resurrection here presented is reached through the conviction, gradually produced by the long process of revelation, that the final redemption of Israel could not be accomplished within the limits of nature. It became clear that the hopes and aspirations engendered by the Spirit in believing minds pointed forward to the great miracle here described, and thus the belief in the resurrection was firmly bound up with the indestructible hopes of the future of Israel (cf. Rom. xi. 15). The idea is exhibited in a form which is immature in the light of New Testament teaching, but it practically represents the highest development of Old Testament revelation on this subject. The only passage which is slightly in advance of this is Dan. xii. 2, and even there a universal resurrection is not taught. Here the hope is restricted to Israelites (see vs. 14) and no doubt to those Israelites who had departed this life in the faith and fear of God. On the other hand, the teaching of this vs. is quite different from such passages as Hos. vi. 2; Ezek. xxxvii. 1—14. There, rising from the dead is but a figurative clothing of the idea of national regeneration, whereas there can be no doubt that here a literal resurrection of individuals is foretold.—Camb. Bib. Beautiful Death Scene.—When one of Martin Luther's children lay on her deathbed, the great man approached her, and said to her, "My dear little daughter, my beloved Margaret, you would willingly remain with your earthly parents; but, if God calls you, you will go with your Heavenly Father." "Yes, dear father, it is as God pleases." "Dear little girl," he exclaimed, "O how I love you! The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." He then took the Bible, and read to her the passage: "Thy dead men shall live; together with My dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." He then said, "My daughter, enter thou into thy resting-place in peace." She turned her eyes toward him, and said, with touching simplicity, "Yes, father!"

20, 21. (20) "Resumes the connection of the prophetic discourse, interrupted since xxv. 8; and this continues to the end, broken only by the lyrical passage, xxvii. 2—6. The contents, however, are of a somewhat mixed character, and the divisions are clearly marked."—Camb. Bib. come, the prophet bids the people withdraw into the privacy of communion with God, whilst the judgment—that, viz., described in xxiv. 1-12, 17-20—visits those who are doomed to perish by it."—Driver. Comp. Mat. vi. 6; Job xiv. 13; Dan. xi. 36. (21) punish . . earth, the heathen nations that had oppressed Israel. blood, the innocent blood shed upon it."

The Duty of Retirement.—I. Make time for devout reflection. In busy, outwardly active times, when there is an imperious demand on every hand for "work," there is urgent need to enter into the solemn and sacred chamber of meditation. II. Compel each day to yield its hour of direct intercourse with God. We cannot live spiritually upon public de-open again when the sun returns and shines upon them."

"From the mountain of prayer did the great Captain of humanity conduct all His wars and gain all His conquests."—Lange.

a "Sublimely recovering himself, the Prophet cries that God's saints, though they are dead, shall live, and, with the lifeless but re-animated body of the restored exiles, shall found the kingdom of righteousness, after the present distress." — Mat. Arnold.

b This verse is regarded as indicating a prevalent belief in the resurrection of the dead.

"As no writer could draw a figure from what was unknown to himself, so, if he sought to teach, he would not draw one from what was unknown to his readers. As Isaiah could not talk about a resurrection if he had never known the idea and the words to express it, so he would not expect to be understood unless his readers were also familiar with it."—Hom. Com.

"The whole life of a philosopher is the meditation of his death."—Cicero.

a Ge. iv. 11.

b "These words may be applied almost exclusively to the retribution which awaited the Chaldean for the slaughter of God's people."—J. A. Alexander.

"He has gained on behalf of his people the comforting certitude that a great exhibition of the Divine justice is on the point of taking place; and his counsel is to withdraw from the doomed into the privacy of communion with God."—Cheyne.

c De. xxxii. 41, 42; Is. xxxiv. 5; Eze. xxi. 3, 4, 5.

"We are assured, though there be many windows and ports and doors for temptation to enter at, there is but one key to let us out or to lock us up against it, God's assistant or preventive grace."—Archde. King.

"We cannot refer the serpent or the dragon to the storm-cloud, or lightning, as some have done. Something much deeper seems to be meant. The dragon is symbolic, in ancient thought generally, of the power of death, of the underworld, into which humanity in its sinfulness and weakness is prone to fall. Jehovah will overcome this fiendish power: such seems to be the meaning of the prophecy."—Johnson.

a Ps. lxxx. 8; Is. v. 1.

b Comp. Is. v. 6.

"Not the superiority of its soil to that of the surrounding country makes the vineyard, but its separation. It is not because the saints are by nature better than others that they are God's vineyard, but because they are set apart by Him. The idea votion, the soul needs private, individual fellowship with God. III. Take up the attitude of reverent expectation. Having done all, it is our duty to wait on the Lord.—Pul. Com.

Christian Security.—Faith is the Christian's foundation, and hope is his anchor, and death is his harbor, and Christ is his pilot, and heaven is his country; and all the evils of poverty, or affronts of tribunals and evil judges, of fears and sad apprehensions, are but like the loud winds blowing from the right point,—they make a noise, but drive faster to the harbor. And if we do not leave the ship, and jump into the sea; quit the interest of religion, and run into securities of the world; cut our cables, and dissolve our hopes; grow impatient; hug a wave and die in its embraces,—we are safe at sea, safer in the storm which God sends us, than in a calm when we are befriended by the world.—Bp. Taylor.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

1. "In this chapter the prophet dwells upon particular aspects of the coming future—sometimes the judgments on Israel's foes being foremost, sometimes the period of felicity which is to ensue."—Driver. sore, i. e. hard, unrelenting. sword, fig. for Jehovah's judgment.^c leviathan, perhaps the kingdom of Asshur Babel. piercing serpent, R. V. "swift." crooked serpent, the curved and winding river the Euphrates. dragon, the usual Bible symbol for Egypt.

Spiritual Wickedness in High Places Powerless to Resist God.—As Isaiah was, somehow or other, brought into contact with the dualistic doctrine of the Zoroastrians (ch. xlv. 5-7), it was important that he should bear witness to the impotency of the powers of evil when they matched themselves against Jehovah. The Zoroastrians taught that there were two great principles, one of good, and the other of evil, whom they called respectively Ahura-mazda and Angro-mainyus, who were both of them uncreated and independent one of the other, and between whom there had been from all eternity, and always would be, a bitter contest and rivalry. Both principles were real persons, possessed of will, intelligence, power, consciousness, and other personal qualities. The struggle between them was constant and well-balanced, with certainly no marked preponderance of the good over the evil. It was probably to meet this doctrine, and prevent its having weight with his disciples, that Isaiah taught so explicitly the nothingness of the highest powers of evil in any contest with the Almighty. He had already stated that, at the end of the world, God would visit and punish "the host of the high ones that were on high," as well as the kings of the earth upon the earth (ch. xxiv. 21). He now presents evil in a threefold personal form of the highest awfulness and grandeur, and declares its conquest, in this threefold form by Jehovah. God is to "punish" the two leviathans with his sword, and actually to "slay the dragon." The triumph is complete, final, unmistakable. Evil can do nothing against good, but is wholly overcome by it.—Pul. Com.

2, 3. Here follows "a fourth song of thankfulness, in which the redeemed nation expresses, under the figure of a vineyard its sense of the divine protection under which it rests."—Driver. (2) day, of judgments. unto her, to the captive and afflicted Church of God. red wine, better "a pleasant vineyard."^a (3) keep it, defend, and watch over it. water . . moment, or, at moments, i. e. whensoever it is needing refreshment. The sign of constant care.^b hurt it, in the coming time of commotion and calamity.

The Watchfulness that Never Sleeps.—"By night and by day." In the darkness and in the night. For the darkness is no darkness to God. As Sentinel he never sleeps. Our watch-fires die out, and the beasts of the forest break into the camp in the silent hours of darkness. We cannot "keep." But the soul is too precious to be left to finite watchfulness. The Tower of London contains no jewelled crowns so rich in value as the nature that contains the pearl of great price. The temple of Jerusalem had costly vessels and sacred altars; but the temple of the soul has in it the true Shechinah. This is God's promise. This is his own testimony to himself; and it is a promise to wear as an amulet on the heart in such a world as this.—Pul. Com.

4—6. (4) Fury .. me, "wrath have I none." He had chastised them, but He does not "keep His anger for ever." set .. battle, R. V. "would that the briars and thorns were against me," etc. "I would march upon them," i. e. upon the foes who have overrun Israel. (5) Or, i. e. or else. If any would be saved, hold .. strength, i. e. escape My severity by embracing My goodness. (6) R. V. "In days to come shall Jacob take root," .. "and they shall fill," etc.^c Verse 6 is attached to the song but forms no integral part of it.

Taking Hold of God's Strength.—I. In what God's strength consists. Almightyness, wisdom, truthfulness, justice and mercy. Christ is God's strength. II. How may man take hold of God's strength? 1. By submission. 2. By prayer. 3. By obedience. 4. By implicit trust in God's mercy. III. The results. Divine strength is infused into our minds. We partake of the Divine nature.—William Parkes.

The Father Subdued.—The Rev. R. Toller's most affecting illustrations (and the power of illustrating a subject was his distinguishing faculty) were drawn from the most familiar scenes of life; and, after he became a father, not unfrequently from the incidents which attach to that relation. An example of this will afford the reader some idea of the manner in which he availed himself of images drawn from the domestic circle. His text was, "Let him take hold of My strength, that he may make peace with Me; and he shall make peace with Me." "I think," said he, "I can convey the meaning of this passage, so that every one may understand it, by what took place in my own family within these few days. One of my little children had committed a fault, for which I thought it my duty to chastise him. I called him to me, explained to him the evil of what he had done, and told him how grieved I was that I must punish him for it. He heard me in silence, and then rushed into my arms, and burst into tears. I could sooner have cut off my arm than have then struck him for his fault: he had taken hold of my strength, and he had made peace with me."—R. Hall.

7—9. (7) "Hath Jehovah smitten Israel as He smote those that smote it? Is Israel slain as Jehovah's slain ones are slain?" i. e. Is Israel exterminated?"^d—Driver. (8) R. V. "In measure when thou sendest her away, thou dost contend with her; he hath removed her with his rough blast in the day of the east wind."^e In measure, not in excess, has Jehovah "contended" (comp. Jer. ii. 9) with His people when He put it from Him. The "rough blast" passed over the nation but did not destroy it.—Driver. (9) this, the graciously ordered captivity. stones .. sunder, destroying all idol-symbols, as a sign of utter abandonment of idolatry. the graves, etc., R. V. "so that the Asherim and the sun-images shall rise no more,"^f this was the "fruit" or purpose of the captivity.

Judgment and Chastisements.—These verses set forth two modes of apprehending the afflictions and sorrows of life, and help us in estimating the distinction between the modes. I. The distinction between judgments and chastisements. In a sense we may say that judgments are ends in themselves, and chastisements are means to a higher end. Then has God two ways of dealing with men? God's final end is always recovery. But he works over indefinitely long periods; and his immediate end may not always be remedial. II. The purpose of judgment apprehended as chastisement. Apprehended as only judgment, our mind is overborne by our calamity. Apprehended as chastisement, the mind is started with new and trustful thoughts. The trouble may at first crush, but soon we learn to accept it calmly.—R. Tuck.

Object of Divine Punishment.—The object of punishment, then, is not destruction. When God sends his rough wind he does not send it as a wind of judgment, for the purpose of destroying men, carrying them tempestuously away into abysses on which the sun never shines. Let us understand the spirit and the purpose of Providence. When God tears a man down, it is to do the man good; when the rough wind comes into a man's estate and uproots the oldest trees, it is to make way for other growths of a kind more approved and more fruitful. If we could grasp this doctrine and commit ourselves to it, then the wind might blow at noonday and at midnight and we should say, The Lord is sifting, separating, taking away the dross, taking away the wicked, taking away the mean, and he will leave behind the pure silver, the true character, the of separation as regards the Church is made conspicuous in every age." — Rhyddleithol.

^c "The metaphor is borrowed from the practice of horticulture, and was naturally suggested by the subject of the preceding verses."—Henderson.

"Israel has its voice in every land and every age, pleading for the foundation-principles of religion, which are the unity and spirituality of God. Israel is a tree whose branches overspread the earth; these are its leaves, and these leaves are for the healing of the nations that are diseased and dying of idolatries and sensuousness."

^d "Assyria and Babylon were left without remnant, not so Israel." — Spk. Com.

"Exile was in God's eyes a sufficient punishment for Israel, and his putting away idolatry is a sufficient title for readmission to God's favor. Not such is Babylon's punishment and end, for Babylon is 'a people of no understanding.'" — Mat. Arnold.

^e "He winnoweth, purgeth, with His rough blast of affliction in the day of the east wind." — Wordsworth.

^f The Jews were wholly cured of idolatry in the time of their captivity. "Repentance is to leave The sins we loved before; And show that we in earnest grieve, By doing so no more."

"He tempers the wind to the shorn lamb."—L. Sterne.

c Is. v. 17, xvii. 2, xxxii. 17.

"The greatest test of character is to be found in what is common rather than extraordinary. It is easier for the soldier to be faithful in the rush of battle, when sustained by a catching enthusiasm, than to maintain a high tone of consistent principle under the many trials of daily drill."—Macleod.

*"As one travels in Europe for the first time, he is struck with the colored uniform worn by servants. He makes inquiries and is informed that the servants of such a nobleman wear yellow; of such, green; so the servants of the various noblemen are easily recognized wherever seen. So the servant of God bears his mark, and the servant of the devil bears his mark."—G. E. Reed.

"Despondency is not a state of humility; on the contrary, it is vexation and despair of a cowardly pride."—Fenelon.

a "God's threshing-floor would be a vast one, wherever Israel was scattered, from the Euphrates to the brook of Egypt."—Wordsworth.

"Under the fig of sifting corn is announced the final collection and restoration of all the true Israel, however outcast and scattered."—Mat. Arnold.

noble soul. God will never destroy anything that has in it virtue, health, reality of value. Then let the great wind blow; let us be thankful for the sifting wind. Many of us would never sift ourselves. We are so blinded that we mistake chaff for wheat in many instances, and we think there is some value even in the dross when we cannot part with pleasures that give the palate even one moment's joy. The whole process of sifting must be done from without.—Parker.

10, 11. (10) R. V. "For the defenced city is solitary, an habitation deserted and forsaken, like the wilderness," a description of the desolation of Jerusalem, which only through such suffering would be brought to repentance. calf feed, the sign of its abandonment to desolation. (11) women come, the duty of gathering fuel in the East devolves on the women. The fine fruit trees would come to this sad ending. no understanding, words which describe the folly of the people of Israel.

Desolation.—Josephus describes Galilee, of which he was the governor, as "full of plantations of trees of all sorts, the soil universally rich and fruitful, and all, without the exception of a single part, cultivated by the inhabitants. Moreover," he adds, "the cities lie here very thick, and there are very many villages which are so full of people, by the richness of their soil, that the very least of them contained above fifteen thousand inhabitants." Such was Galilee at the commencement of the Christian era, several centuries after the prophecy was delivered; but now "the plain of Esdraelon, and all the other parts of Galilee which afford pasture, are occupied by Arab tribes, around whose brown tents the sheep and lambs gambol to the sound of the reed, which at nightfall calls them home." The calf feeds and lies down amid the ruins of the cities, and consumes, without hindrance, the branches of the trees; and, however changed may be the condition of the inhabitants, the lambs feed after their manner, and, while the land mourns, and the merry-hearted sigh, they gambol to the sound of the reed. The precise and complete contrast between the ancient and existing state of Palestine, as separately described by Jewish and Roman historians and by modern travelers, is so strikingly exemplified in their opposite descriptions, that, in reference to whatever constituted the beauty and the glory of the country, or the happiness of the people, an entire change is manifest, even in minute circumstances. The universal richness and fruitfulness of the soil of Galilee, together with its being "full of plantations of all sorts of trees," are represented by Josephus as "inviting the most slothful to take pains in its cultivation." And the other provinces of the Holy Land are also described by him as "having abundance of trees, full of autumnal fruit, both that which grows wild, and that which is the effect of cultivation." Tacitus relates that, besides all the fruits of Italy, the palm and balsam tree flourished in the fertile soil of Judæa. And he records the great carefulness with which, when the circulation of the juices seemed to call for it, they gently made an incision in the branches of the balsam, with a shell, or pointed stone, not venturing to apply a knife. No sign of such art or care is now to be seen throughout the land. The balm tree has disappeared where long it flourished; and harder plants have perished from other causes than the want of due care in their cultivation.—Keith.

12, 13. (12) beat off, rather: Jehovah shall thresh out from the corners of the River (the Euphrates) unto (those of) the brook of Egypt, i. e. all that grows between those limits.^a The term "beat out" is applied both to the beating of olives from the tree (Deut. xxiv. 20) and to the beating out of grain with a staff—a more careful process than the ordinary methods (xxviii. 27; Jud. vi. 11).—Camb. Bib. one by one, either that none be lost, or so that only the true Israelites be brought back. (13) trumpet, the proclamation of liberty to all who had been under the sway of the Babylonian and Egyptian kings. "Such proclamations were made by Cyrus, Cambyses, Darius, etc." Egypt, to wh. country many had fled in the time of the captivity.

The Return of God's Absent Ones.—The relation of God to all his absent children. I. The breadth of His kingdom. God's rights and claims extend to all peoples, to all classes. He looks everywhere for fruit to be beaten off, to be gathered in, at the time of harvest. II. The need of his interposition. This fruit which God is seeking is spiritual; it is the reverence, the love, the worship, the obedience, of his own children. But these his sons and daughters are: 1. Afar off. They are outcasts, a long way from home. 2. Or they are at the point of extinction. Those who have not been fascinated and won by ruinous seductions, are a mere remnant, and even their life, like Elijah's, is at stake. III. His summons to return. The "great trumpet" is being blown; its notes are sounding far and wide. "The voice of Jesus sounds o'er land and sea," saying, "Return unto thy Rest;" "Come unto me, all ye that labor." IV. His distinguishing kindness. God does not content himself with issuing a general proclamation which each man may interpret and apply. He comes to every human soul himself. In the Person, and by the direct influence of his Holy Spirit, he makes his appeal to the individual heart and conscience. V. The gathering-place of his returned ones. All they who return unto God (1) gather at his house on earth for worship there; and (2) meet in the heavenly city, the new Jerusalem, for "nobler worship there."

The Gospel Trumpet.—As chaplain I was a little while in the army. Early every morning we were awakened by a trumpet sounding the réveille. At that sound all the troops arose from the tents, hastened to their places in the line, and answered the roll-call. That done, they went to their morning rations. We who are the soldiers of Christ cannot always be marching and fighting. The evening will come. The shadows will gather, and we must go to the white tents of the grave. There we shall sleep soundly. But the night will pass along, and the first thing we shall hear will be the trumpet-call sounding the réveille of the resurrection; and we shall come up and fall into the long line of light, the trophies of Christian conflict gleaming in the unsetting sun. The roll shall be called, and we shall answer to our names; and then we shall go to the morning repast of heaven (1 Cor. xv. 52—55).—De Witt Talmage. Rev. Dr. Waugh.—The following pleasing occurrence was related by a zealous missionary to the heathen: On the 13th of April, 1814, the late Rev. Dr. Waugh preached at Bridport. His text was, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish, and shall worship the Lord in the holy mountain at Jerusalem" (Isa. xxvii. 13). The words "ready to perish" furnished him with solemn, awful, melting views of the miserable condition of the heathen. The "blowing of the great trumpet" drew forth every feeling of his mighty mind. He did blow it, indeed, with power and sweetness too. It was the trumpet of the Gospel. It suited him. He loved it. It was sweet melody from his lips. It proclaimed salvation! After expatiating for some time on this particular, he raised his voice with uncommon energy; his eyes flashed fire as he spake; he seemed as if he would have sprung over the pulpit to his auditors, while he exclaimed, "We want men of God to blow this great trumpet to the heathen, and we must have them! The heathen are 'ready to perish,' and they will perish, if the great trumpet does not bring them the joyful sound. I say again, we want men of God to blow this great trumpet, and we must have them!" Then, after this peal of thunder, he paused, and, in a softened melting tone, inquired, "Is there not one young disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ present who has love enough in his heart to his Divine Master to volunteer his services, and to say, 'I will go!'" This word reached my heart; it penetrated my inmost soul. I silently said, "Yes, Lord, if Thou wilt help me, I will go. There is not in this congregation a greater debtor to mercy; and perhaps there is not one present who has more ardently longed to be engaged in missionary work. If Thou wilt accept me, O Lord, I will go."

"To preach practical sermons, as they are called, that is, sermons upon virtues and vices, without inculcating those great Scripture truths of redemption, grace, etc., which alone can incite and enable us to forsake sin and follow righteousness—what is it but to put together the wheels, and set the hands of a watch, forgetting the spring, which is to make them all go?"—Bp. Horne.

"I remember one of my parishioners at Halesworth telling me that he thought 'a person should not go to church to be made uncomfortable.' I replied that I thought so too; but whether it should be the sermon or the man's life that should be altered so as to avoid the discomfort, must depend on whether the doctrine was right or wrong."—Abp. Whately.

"To show that the good of man was the will of God, to show that doing good to one another is the chief duty of man—this was at once the object of Christ's coming into the world, and the proof that he had begun a new epoch in the history of mankind."—Dean Stanley.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

1, 2. (1) Woe to, chapters xxviii to xxxiii constitute a book in themselves, having six portions, each beginning with a Woe! This chapter contains four separate discourses: 1—6, 7—13, 14—22, 23—29. crown of pride, "the proud coronet." "The prophet fuses two images together—that of the revellers with their chaplets of flowers (Lam. v. 16) and of the picturesque Samaria" with its crown of towers and the greenery of its vines and olives."—Polyc. Bib. drunkards, comp. Am. iv. 1; Hos. vii. 5;

* For refs. to Samaria see 1 Ki. xvi. 24; Am. iii. 9, iv. 1, vi. 1.

Samaria was built on a beautiful fruitful hill, strong by nature, from its insulated situation in the middle of a deep and broad valley, and rendered still more so by the fortifications that were erected for its defence." — Henderson.

^a Eze. xxx. 24. Samaria was taken by Salmanser, about B.C. 721.

^b "The regular season for ingathering of figs is from Aug. to Nov., so that a ripe fig in June is regarded as a rarity, and eaten with the greater relish... The immediate eating of the fruit is only mentioned as a sign of eagerness or greediness." — J. A. Alexander.

^c "As soon as he has got it into his hand, he can't keep it there to look at, or forbear eating it, but greedily devours it and swallows it down at once." — Gill.

^d "To the gate, i.e., of the enemy; not only repelling his attack in Judaea, but driving him back into his own fortifications." — Henderson.

"Turn back war at the gate; i.e. war which has advanced even up to the gate of the besieged city." — Spk. Com.

"How fearfully the vice of drunkenness had spread is seen from the fact that even priests and prophets drunkenness was a characteristic sin of Samaria. glorious . . . flower, R. V. "and to the fading flower of his glorious beauty." (2) "The reason for the woe of vs. 1. Render: Behold Jehovah hath a mighty and strong one, like a tempest of hail, a destroying storm; like a flow of mighty overflowing waters, which casts down to the earth with violence." — Camb. Bib. Ref. is to the king of Assyria."

Samaria.—The city of Sebaste, the ancient Samaria, beautifully situated on the top of a round hill, and surrounded immediately with a rich valley and a circle of other hills beyond it, suggested the idea of a chaplet, or wreath of flowers, worn upon their heads on occasions of festivity; expressed by the proud crown and the fading flower of the drunkards. That this custom of wearing chaplets in their banquets prevailed among the Jews, as well as among the Greeks and Romans, appears from Wisdom ii. 7, 8. The Beast In Us.—Sir Thomas Browne says: "We are all a composition of man and beast, wherein we must endeavor to hold the reign of man above the beast and to make sense sit at the feet of reason." That beast in us, that gross sense, is easily roused. No wise man will needlessly put himself in companionships which stir it into life. Nothing more quickly waken it than intoxicating drink.

3, 4. (3) trodden under feet, or, with feet. The fig. of the city as a garland on the drunken at feasts is carried on. (4) fading flower, a withering garland. hasty fruit, R. V. "the first ripe fig," that ripens in June is esteemed a delicacy, but it very readily drops from the tree." eateth it, swalloweth greedily." The idea is that Samaria, when taken, would be instantly destroyed.

Life a Spring-time.—Let us look at spring as the emblem of human life. The Bible so regards it. "He cometh up like a flower," etc. First. Both in spring and human life there are vast capabilities of improvement. Spring is the season when Providence submits to the agriculturist what sort of harvest he shall have. With skill and industry he may, during the spring days, make nature yield him wonderful results. The cloud, the sky, the dew, the shower, the soil of spring, have special powers for the future. So is human life. Out of the human soul now seraphic powers, and forms, and faculties may grow. Secondly. Both in spring and human life there is remarkable changeability. No season so changeable as spring; alternate cloud and sunshine, storm and calm, cold and heat, "make up the April day." What an emblem of human life! What a scene of vicissitudes! Thirdly. Both in spring and human life there are many fallacious promises. Spring is the season of promise. The rich bud and blossom of fruit trees, the strong green stalks of the cornfields, have often created bright hopes, which in autumn have been terribly disappointed. So in life. Look at youth, etc. Fourthly. Both in spring and human life there is nothing can substitute for the present. No other season can do the work of spring. The man who neglects his field in the spring may toil on it to the utmost in summer without effect. So it is with life. There is no period that can be substituted for the present.—Thomas.

5, 6. (5) that day, "points to the indefinite future of the Messianic age." — Camb. Bib. residue, i. e. to the remnant left of Israel and Judah. (6) sitteth in judgment, "Jehovah is not only the beauty of the redeemed nation but the source of all civic and martial virtues." — Camb. Bib. turn . . . gate,^d God would be also with the armies. "The two great requisites of civil government are here described as coming from Jehovah." — J. A. Alexander.

The Glorious Crown.—Oh, that we were all invested with this crown of holiness, dignity, and beauty. How many are content with the gilded coronets and fading chaplets of the world. You remember the scene in the "Pilgrim's Progress," part ii., which has been made the subject of a painting by Sir Noel Paton—the man raking straw while one held a glittering crown over his head. Make Christ your boast. The crown of pride shall be hurled to the ground, the garlanded revellers shall sink in their own corruption, the honors which men so eagerly seek are as a fading flower, but this crown shall sparkle for ever on the believer's head (Dan. xii. 3; Ps. xc. 17). — William Guthrie.

7, 8. (7) they, R. V. "these." Having described Samaria the prophet goes on to say—but the people of Jerusalem are no better. have erred, see Le. x. 1—9. err in vision, "they reel during their visions, they totter while giving judgment," i. e. even the religious leaders of the people are unfitted for their most sacred offices by drunkenness. (8) vomit, the revolting consequences of excess.

Erring Through Strong Drink.—Mr. J. W. Kirton, author of "Buy your own Cherries," etc., tells a painful story of a clergyman of the Church of England—a man of such power that he filled every seat and aisle with a congregation, and wherever he preached cleared out the chapels and churches for miles round. Souls were converted, and a blessed influence rested on the town. By-and-by a whisper got abroad that he was fond of drink, and ultimately it proved to be too true. He was seen staggering in the streets; the bishop instituted inquiries, and the case turned out so bad that the clergyman's gown was taken from him, and he was deprived of his living. All restraint seemed then removed. He wandered about the town, sold his library, and spent the money in drink amongst the worst characters in the town where he had preached the gospel for years. His plate followed, then his furniture, and ultimately he marched to the work-house and asked for admission. He was received, and week after week he went with the other paupers into the very church where he used to preach. His friends took compassion upon him, took him out of the work-house, put him into a cottage and started him as a schoolmaster; but he eventually "broke out" again, spent all he had in drink, had another attack of delirium tremens, and was taken, a hopeless maniac, to the county lunatic asylum.—Old Test. Anec. Drunkenness.—It is not so much the money that drunkenness wastes as the misery it produces—the domestic, temporal, and eternal misery—which most of all appals us. As to the expense of this vice, great as it is, that we least deplore, for the loss of money, we hate it least. On the contrary, we should be content were the money and the vice to perish together. We should be content to pay that hundred million as yearly tribute, would this enemy to God and man, this foe to our peace and piety, leave these shores. We wish to keep, and were it possible to get back, something far more precious than money. Give that mother back her son, as he was on the day when he returned from his father's grave, and in all the affection of his uncorrupted boyhood, walked to the house of God with a widowed weeping woman leaning on his arm. Give that grieved man back his brother as innocent and happy as in those days when the boys, twined in each other's arms, returned from school, bent over the same Bible, slept in the same bed, and never thought that the day would come when brother should blush for brother. Give this weeping wife, who sits before us wringing her hands in agony, tears dripping through her jewelled fingers, and the lines of sorrow prematurely drawn on her beautiful brow; give her back the man she loved, such as he was when her young heart was won, when they stood side by side on the nuptial day, and receiving her from a fond father's hands, he promised his love to one whose heart he has broken, and whose once graceful form now bends with sorrow to the ground. Give me back, as a man, the friends of my youthful days, whose wrecks now lie thick on this wreck-strewn shore. Relieve us of the fears that lie heavy on our hearts for the character and the souls of some who hold parley with the devil by this forbidden tree, and are floating on the outer edge of that great gulf-stream, which sweeps its victims onwards to most woful ruin. Could this be done, we would not talk of money. The hundred millions which drink costs this land is not to be weighed or even mentioned with this. Hearts are broken which no money can heal. Rachel is "weeping for her children," refusing to be comforted.—Guthrie.

9—11. (9) Whom, etc. "Whom is he going to teach knowledge, and upon whom is he trying to force 'the Message' as he calls it. Them that are weaned from the milk and drawn from the breasts?" Does he take us for infants?—G. A. Smith. doctrine, R. V. "the message." (10) precept, etc., "We must conceive the abrupt, intentionally short, reiterated and almost childish words of verse 10 as spoken in mimicry, with a mocking motion of the head, and in a childish, stammering, taunting tone."—Ewald. (11) stammering, "but Isaiah turns upon them with their own words: 'You call me, Stammerer! I tell you that God, Who speaks through me, and Whom in me you mock, will one day speak again to were addicted to it, and that not only in their private life, but they even performed their official functions in a state of intoxication." — Nagelsbach.

"A tree in South America, called the Judas Tree, has beautiful scarlet blossoms, but it has a deadly opiate. The insects are charmed with it. But under and all around this tree there are millions of dead carcasses lying." — Old Test. Anec.

"Not only has the author of Proverbs pointed out the evils which attend those who tarry long at the wine, but all the precepts and denunciations against drunkenness, all the details of the flagitious arts perpetrated under its influence, which are recorded in the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, are directed against the inordinate drinkers of wine. It is needless to say more respecting them, but refer them to that Sacred Volume, with the hope that it may guide them to salutary contrition and penitential sorrow." — Hodgkin.

a Heb. "Tsav la-tsav, tsav la-tsav; Kav la-kav, kav la-kav; zeelr sham, zeelr sham."

^b Some refer this to the Assyrians, as people of another tongue, by whom they should be punished.

"Try to gain a little for God, a little for heaven, a little more of grace every day. Do this in little things and you will accomplish great things. Here a little and there a little will carry you on from step to step, from grace to glory."—G. B. Cheever.

"As light to the sun, as the heart to the body, as weight to the hammer, as the foundation to the building, as point to the spear, as edge to the sword, as fruitfulness to the tree, so is Christ in preaching; and preaching without Christ can no more enlighten the world than the sun without light, etc., etc."—John Bate.

^a "They may despise the instruction given to them as puerile, but they shall have no other: and being thus left to act according to the dictates of their own supposed wisdom, they must utterly perish."—Henderson.

1 Pe. ii. 8; Mat. xxiii. 37.

you in a tongue that shall indeed sound stammering to you.^b When those far-off barbarians have reached your walls, and over them taunt you in uncouth tones, then shall you hear how God can stammer."—G. A. Smith.

The Precept, the Line, and the Little (vs. 10).—I. The lesson of the precept is in order that we may be right and do right. II. The lesson of the line is in order that we may be right and do right; we must try over and over again. III. The lesson of the little is that we must not be discouraged if we do not make great advances.—Preacher's Lantern.

"Here a Little, and There a Little."—A friend called on Michael Angelo, who was finishing a statue. Some time afterwards he called again; the sculptor was still at his work. His friend, looking at the figure, exclaimed, "You have been idle since I saw you last!" "By no means," replied the sculptor; "I have retouched this part, and polished that; I have softened this feature, and brought out this muscle; I have given more expression to this lip, and more energy to this limb." "Well, well," said his friend, "but all these are trifles." "It may be so," replied Angelo; "but recollect that trifles make perfection, and that perfection is no trifle." Perpora and His Pupil.—Perpora, the great Italian music master, kept one of his pupils learning the same lesson for three years. The pupil began to murmur, but the master was firm. Four, five, six years passed, and yet he was still at the same, until at last, when he began to fear he, might after all, be just at the beginning, the great teacher set him free with the words, "Go, my son, for thou hast nothing more to learn," and he found himself the first singer of Italy. So God keeps teaching us the same lesson over and over again—our utter nothingness, our complete helplessness, and our perfect sinfulness.—Old Test. Anec. The Claims of Children.—Dr. Leonard Bacon once preached a sermon on what he called the obverse side of the Fifth Commandment—the duty of parents to be worthy of honor. The child is born into the world with this right. His pure eyes look to his elders for example. His soul waits for impulse and inspiration from them. Woe unto that parent who, by unworthy character, causes one of these little ones to stumble; it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea.—Christian Union.

12, 13. (12) This . . . rest, R. V. "This is the rest, give ye rest to them that are weary," i. e. cease your warfare. (13) But, etc., R. V., "Therefore shall the word of the Lord be unto them," etc., all that they had scoffingly said about Isaiah's message; a monotonous, intolerable succession of judgments."—Camb. Bib.^a Little Things.—A holy life is made up of a number of small things; little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles of battle nor one great heroic act of mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloam that "go softly" in the meek mission of refreshment, not the "waters of the river, great and many," rushing down in noisy torrents, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknessness, little follies, indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of the flesh; the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life.—A. R. Bonar.

Rest.—Ministers are said to be behind the times when they offer in Christ's own name rest to weary souls; teachers are said to have fallen astern when they speak of refreshing, and comfort, and high inspiration nerving the soul to the discharge of moral duty; and they are supposed to be contemporaneous prophets who chatter the gossip of the day, and annotate the newspaper which to-morrow will be forgotten.—Parker.

Rest is not quitting
This busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to one's sphere.
'Tis loving and serving
The highest and best;
'Tis onward, unswerving:
And this is true rest.—Goethe,

14, 15. (14) scornful, Ps. i. 1; Pr. xxix. 8; i. e. "the politicians who rested all their hopes upon the alliance with Egypt," and treated Isaiah's warnings with scorn. (15) said, by your conduct, if not in actual words. covenant with death, we have arranged a plan by which we are no longer afraid of defeat by death." scourge, the invasion of the Assyrian army, like a mighty flood; "the reference probably is to false grounds of confidence, such as false oracles (Ezek. xiii. 6—8; Mic. ii. 11), Isaiah putting his own language into their mouth."—Camb. Bib.

Mr. Whitefield.—An extraordinary attestation to the excellence of Mr. Whitefield as a preacher was furnished by Hume, the historian, well known for his infidelity. An intimate friend having asked him what he thought of Mr. Whitefield's preaching, "He is, sir," said Mr. Hume, "the most ingenious preacher I ever heard: it is worth while to go twenty miles to hear him." He then repeated the following passage, which occurred towards the close of the discourse he had been hearing: "After a solemn pause, Mr. Whitefield thus addressed his numerous audience: 'The attendant angel is just about to leave the threshold, and ascend to heaven. And shall he ascend, and not bear with him the news of one sinner, among all this multitude, reclaimed from the error of his ways?' To give the greater effect to this exclamation, he stamped with his foot, lifted up his eyes and hands to heaven, and with gushing tears, cried aloud, 'Stop, Gabriel! Stop, Gabriel! Stop, ere you enter the sacred portals, and yet carry with you the news of one sinner converted to God.' He then, in the most simple but energetic language, described what he called a Saviour's dying love to a sinful man, so that almost the whole assembly melted into tears. This address was accompanied with such animated yet natural action that it surpassed anything I ever saw or heard in any other preacher." Happy had it been for Mr. Hume if he had received the doctrine, as well as admired the manner, of the preacher! But the pride of a false philosophy steeled his heart against the truth, and thus prevented his yielding to its converting and sanctifying influence.

16, 17. (16) a stone, this stone is the one immovable and basal element in history—Jehovah's covenant with Israel. This covenant relation is established, and confirmed and strengthened by all divine guidance. "Not diplomacy but faith in God is the true insurance against disaster."—Polyc. Bib. believeth, relies on the covenant of Jehovah, symbolised in this Zion-foundation. make haste, "No need of swift couriers to Egypt, and fret and fear of poor political brains in Jerusalem."—G. A. Smith. (17) R. V. "And I will make judgment the line and righteousness the plummet," comp. 2 Ki. xxi. 13. These are the guides by which to build on this sure foundation.

The Sure Foundation (vss. 16, 17).—I. God has Himself laid the foundation for human happiness. II. He calls men to build their hopes upon that Foundation alone. III. Nevertheless men neglect that Foundation in favor of inventions and devices of the world. IV. God will critically and exactly try every man's foundation and superstructure. V. The issue will be in one case entire ruin, and in the other triumphant to every believer.—The Corner Stone.—I remark—I. That a great difference exists between a mere general dependence on Christ, and a conscious, intimate life with Him. II. That this intimate, daily life with Him is the great aim of the Gospel. III. That men, and wise men too, deem it impossible and delusive for a mortal man to live by faith in an invisible Being, and thus enjoy communion with Him. IV. That the Saviour is very precious to His followers as their hope and foundation.—H. W. Beecher.

Note on vs. 16.—Every promise is dated, but with a mysterious character; and for want of skill in God's chronology, we are prone to think God forgets us, when, indeed, we forget ourselves, in being so bold to set God a time of our own, and in being angry that He comes not just then to us. We are over-greedy of comfort, and expect the promise should keep time with our own hasty desires, which, because it doth not, we are discontented. A high piece of folly! The sun will not go faster, for setting our watch forward; nor the promise come the sooner, for our attending it. God seldom comes at our day, because we seldom reckon right, yet He never fails His own day.—Gurnall (1670).

b "Their foundation (and confidence) was their falsehood and deceit, by the aid of which they hoped that they would have nothing to fear from death and Hades."—Nagelsbach.

"They thought themselves as sure of their lives, even when the most destroying judgments were abroad, as if they had made a bargain with Death, upon a valuable consideration, not to come till they sent for him."—Mat. Henry.

"'Scorners,' in the language of Scripture, are those who set at nought God's prophets, or His messages, or His Holy Word, or His Church, or His ministers."—Pul. Com.

a The fig. is taken fr. the foundations of Sol.'s temple, 'the remains of which have been preserved to the present day, and appear almost in destructible.' Ewald,

"If you had a bridge to cross which had stood for centuries and over which thousands of people had passed every day with entire safety, you would feel no hesitation in making use of it yourself. So is Christ set before you—a tested foundation of hope."—Hawes.

* "They flattered themselves that they had prepared an easy and secure couch to slumber upon; their carnal wisdom and Pharisaic righteousness — how miserably insufficient should it prove." — Spk. Com.

"Those that do not build upon Christ as their foundation, but rest in a righteousness of their own, will prove in the end thus to have deceived themselves; they can never be easy, safe, nor warm: the bed is too short, the covering too narrow." — Mat. Henry.

* See also 2 Sa. v. 18—24.

"Mercy is God's right hand, that He is most used to. Wrath is 'strange work'—He is unused to it."

"Mockery is the most annoying form of attack; it is most keenly felt; it is most difficult to answer. It serves the purpose when argument fails. One grinning Voltaire may do more execution than many reasoning Humes." — J. Rawlinson.

* "The general idea of the parable is this. The whole world is the field of the Divine Husbandman. He plants it with different kinds of crops, each of which is 18—20. (18) covenant, vs. 15. disannulled, obliterated, as the writing on a wax tablet is wiped out. (19) From the time, R. V. "As often as it passeth through," it will be a repeated scourge. and it shall be a vexation, etc., R. V. "And it shall be naught but terror to understand the message," then the prophecies you shall hear shall be only terrible. (20) bed,^a etc., "a proverbial expression for the intolerable situation which the politicians are preparing for themselves and their country."—Camb. Bib.

God's Indisposition to Smite.—It is a strange work, a strange act, to God (ver. 21). To confer and to sustain life, to impart blessing, to multiply riches, to enlarge the mind, to strengthen and sanctify the soul, to fill with hope and joy,—this is the work which is natural, congenial, pleasant to him whose Name is love. But to visit with penalty, to smite rather than to spare, to inflict sorrow and humiliation,—this is strange, ungenial, joyless to the heavenly Father. "As I live," saith God, "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." He delighteth in mercy, but he is constrained to punish.—Pul. Com.

Covenanting with Liars.—You cannot make any binding covenant with a bad man, much less with all evil, symbolized and typified in the word death or hell. The bad man will serve you so long as it suits his purpose to do so. A man who will tell lies for you will tell lies to you. A man who will make you rich through robbery will make you poor through the same means when it suits his purpose to do so. You cannot enter into a binding agreement with a liar.—Peop. Bib.—Inadequate Religion.—Human nature is impure. It needs cleansing as well as pardon. Some imagine this is accomplished by sacramental grace, through baptism, which is supposed to regenerate; and the mysterious influence of the consecrated bread and wine. All this is inadequate. No outward rite can effect an inward and spiritual change. There must be a new nature. There must be a love of holiness and a living growth into holiness. There must be a new birth. There must be the conviction of sinfulness; the acceptance of Christ; the surrender to the authority of Christ. For this the Gospel provision is adequate. There is the word of God which proclaims the mercy and offers the inducement. There is the Holy Spirit which changes the heart. Be not satisfied with inadequate religion. Remember the solemn importance of possessing an adequate religion.—J. Rawlinson.

21, 22. (21) Perazim, see 1 Chr. xiv. 11,^a Gibeon, see 1 Chr. xiv. 17. strange, because performed with foreigners against his own people. (22) be ye not, a final appeal to the scoffing ones, (vs. 14) not to resist Jehovah. consumption, burning up, Da. ix. 27. "A strict decree of destruction."—Polyc. Bib.

His Strange Work (vs. 21).—I. It was strange there should be occasion for the work. II. It was strange because foreign to His heart. III. It was strange on account of the method He adopted. IV. It was strange because unusual. V. It was strange, for it excited wonder on all hands.—Stems and Twigs.

Scorners Abased.—Armies revolt, melt away by sickness and desertion, suffer defeat, become demoralized, surrender themselves; a police fails and fraternizes with revolution; a treasury becomes exhausted; allies draw back in the hour of danger, as the Egyptians did in Israel's greatest need; and the mighty potentate who has scorned God and his laws finds himself, together with his advisers, brought to shame, defeated, ruined. So with the "scorners" whose mental pride has puffed them up. God can abase them in a moment by mental disease, brain-softening, paralysis, sense of depression, disgust with life. How the bold atheist trembles, and wishes that he could retract his daring speeches, when he is struck down by sickness, crippled, bed-ridden, palsied perhaps. God does not always launch his bolts in this life; but he can at any time do so, and he does it with sufficient frequency to leave men without excuse if they do not note, and profit, by his warnings.—Pul. Com.

23—25. "The discourse closes with a parable of comfort addressed by the prophet to his own circle of friends. It is drawn from the occupations of agriculture."—Driver.^a (24) all day, "Is the ploughman never done with his ploughing, with the opening and harrowing of ground?"—Polyc. Bib. Does the preparatory process go on for ever? (25) fitches, anise.

cummin, cultivated for its aromatic seeds. R. V. "And put in the wheat in rows, and the barley in the appointed place and the spelt in the border thereof." Each kind of seed is treated appropriately.

Physical Husbandry the Effect and Emblem of Divine Teaching (vs. 23).—I. Physical husbandry is the effect of Divine teaching—all true secular ideas, as well as spiritual, are from God. 1. This suggested by a priori reasoning; 2. Sustained by Scripture; 3. Implied in the doctrine of Providence. II. Physical husbandry is the emblem of Divine teaching. 1. Moral fruitfulness is the great end of God's dealings with man; 2. To realize this end, God employs a great variety of instrumentalities. Conclusion:—Divinity of life; man the organ of Divine thought, and the object of Divine operation.—Homilist.

Affliction Inevitable.—We must all go through some kind of threshing process. The fact that you are devoting your life to honorable and noble purposes will not win you any escape. Wilberforce, the Christian Emancipator, was in his day derisively called "Doctor Cantwell." Thomas Babington Macaulay, the advocate of all that was good long before he became the most conspicuous historian of his day, was caricatured in one of the Quarterly Reviews as "Bubble-tongue Macaulay." Norman M'Leod, the great friend of the Scotch poor, was industriously maligned in all quarters. All the small wits of London took after John Wesley, the father of Methodism. If such men could not escape the mauling of the world, neither can you expect to get rid of the sharp, keen stroke of the tribulum. All who will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution.—The Purpose of Affliction.—It is from God, and the end ever kept in view is the good of the soul and its productiveness. The ploughman does not plough for ploughing's sake. He opens the soil, turns up the furrows, breaks the clods with the harrow, and all to prepare for the sowing of the seed. And so far the tiller is an image of God and of his operations on the spirit of man. There is seeming severity of method, but ever beneficence in the end. Again, there is variety of method in God's husbandry of the soul. As the farmer adapts his plans to the soil and to the kind of grain, selects the best modes of preparing the ground, of sowing the grain, of collecting the harvest, of separating the corn from the chaff. "He does not always plough, nor always sow, nor always thresh. He does not deal with all lands and all grains in the same way. Some he threshes in one mode, some in another, but he will be careful not to break the grain or destroy it in threshing it. However severe may appear to be his blows, his object is not to crush and destroy the grain, but to remove it from the chaff and save it. In all this he acts the part of wisdom, for God has taught him what to do. So with God."—Pul. Com.—God's Chastening.—When God chastens us, it is not that He means to destroy us, but because He has set His heart on saving us, because He has appointed us to life and not to death. He works with discrimination. He employs various methods, sends sorrows of all sorts and sizes, that He may adapt Himself to every man's needs, and to all our varieties of place, time, and circumstances. Just as the husbandman varies his treatment of the soil, and allots to each kind of seed a soil and place suitable to its kind; just as, after the harvest has been gathered in, he employs only such instruments as are best adapted for separating the different kinds of grain from the straw and the chaff. With like wisdom and discretion God deals with us, assigning to each of us our proper station and lot, and, when we sin against Him, adapting His judgments to our several needs. The sorrows, losses, bereavements which befall us are but as the sharp edge of the share, or the keen teeth of the harrow, and are intended to prepare us to receive the good seed, and to bring forth much fruit.—Cox.

26, 27. (26) All this is done in obedience to an inherited, almost instructive, wisdom, which rests ultimately on Divine inspiration. See vs. 29. discretion, for the adaptation of treatment. (27) fitches .. staff, bec. the seeds are readily detached from the seed-pods. rod, stronger than the staff, bec. the seed-pods of cummin are harder. The method suitable for each kind of grain is employed by the husbandman.

The Necessity of the Spirit of Wisdom.—Ploughing is not an art of our discovery. We discover somewhat of the plough, but the ploughing is a far greater thing than the plough. We mistake the instrument treated with a tillage and culture fitted to it. He does each of His works of moral and spiritual agriculture in its proper season; and all the world will be His threshing-floor, in which each kind of grain will be dealt with in a manner suited to its character."—Wordsworth.

"There are men who suppose they are the Lord's favorites, simply because their barns are full, and their bank account is flush, and there are no funerals in the house. It may be because they are fitches and cummin, while down at the end of the lane, the poor widow may be the Lord's corn. You are little pounded, because you are little worth, and she bruised and ground, because she is the best part of the harvest. By carefulness of the threshing, you may always conclude the value of the grain."—Hom. Com.

Co-worker in Christ! be content to sow little seeds for Him; be patient to wait a long time for their growing; be strong to endure much opposition; be hopeful, expecting sublime fruitage; these are the chief lessons.

* "His judgments are usually in the line of our offences; by the nature of the judgment we may usually ascertain the nature of the sin."—Barnes.

"God's government of the world comprehends the minutest attention to detail with an all-comprehending unity of design."—Spk. Com.

"The practical idea conveyed is, that God mingles mercy with His judgments."—Henderson.

"To the child of God yearning for holiness, there is something exceedingly precious and delightful in approaching a command that seems to be naturally impossible; because he realizes that the Lord gave the Word, and that it is for the Lord to make possible of fulfilment in His child that which he commands. Surely we can say with Augustine, 'Give what thou commandest, and then command what thou wilt.'"—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

"If there have been raised up in our own country men mighty in the exhibiting and establishing truth, and if in the lapse of time we grow indifferent to the truth, and perhaps even half inclined to the errors which were exposed and expelled, will it not be made a matter of accusation against us that ours is the land in which those worthless dwelt?"—Hom. Com.

for the music in many instances. We think that having fashioned a hammer we have sundered a rock; we suppose that because we have made a mechanical arrangement we have got into the very secret of creation and are working from the internal centre. Ploughing was in man at his very creation. Almost the first thought he had was about ploughing. But he had no plough. Given the inspiration of ploughing, and the plough will soon be found. Given the desire to find God, and God will soon be forthcoming. Given the passion for reading, and books will be procured if they cannot be bought or borrowed. The spirit of wisdom will find out the sanctuary of understanding. What is wanted is the spirit, the genius, the inspiration, the overwhelming spiritual impulse.—Peop. Bib.

28, 29. (28) Bread . . bruised, or crushed in the mill: break it, R. V. "and though the wheel of his cart and his horses scatter it, he doth not grind it." He does not go on threshing forever, but gathers it for grinding. (29) This also, the application of the parable is that God follows method and reason in all that he does. Man is taught by Him and reflects the divine method.

The Wonderfulness of God's Counsel (vs. 29).—I. Its nature is wonderful—reconciliation. II. Its formation is wonderful. 1. Its gradualness; 2. Its instruments. III. Its propagation is wonderful. 1. The character of those to whom its propagation was first entrusted; 2. The class to whom it was first offered; 3. The pressing of it on those who frequently reject it.—Homilist.

Divine Providence.—Mr. John Craig, a distinguished minister, and colleague of Knox, having gone to reside in Bologna, in a convent of Dominicans, found a copy of Calvin's Institutes which God made the means of his conversion to the reformed faith. He was seized as a heretic soon after, and carried to Rome, where he was condemned to be burnt; but on the evening preceding the day of execution, the reigning pontiff died, and according to custom the doors of all the prisons were thrown open. All others were released; but heretics, after being permitted to go outside the walls, were reconducted to their cells. That night, however, a tumult was excited, and Craig and his companions escaped. They had entered a small inn at some distance from Rome, when they were overtaken by a party of soldiers sent to recapture them. On entering the house, the captain looked Craig steadfastly in the face, and asked him if he remembered having once relieved a poor wounded soldier in the neighborhood of Bologna. Craig had forgotten it. "But," said the captain, "I am the man; I shall requite your kindness; you are at liberty: your companions I must take with me, but for your sake I shall treat them with all possible lenity." He gave him all the money he had, and Craig escaped. But his money soon failed him; yet God, who feedeth the ravens, did not. Lying at the side of a wood, full of gloomy apprehensions, a dog came running up to him with a purse in its teeth. Suspecting some evil, he attempted to drive the animal away, but in vain. He at length took the purse, and found in it a sum of money, which carried him to Vienna.—Whitcross.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

1, 2. (1) Ariel, R. V., "Ho Ariel, Ariel," a symbolic name for Jerusalem. Word prob. means altar-hearth. This best fits the reference to "sacrifices." kill sacrifices, R. V., "let the feasts come round," once or twice more, keeping up the yearly round of feasts; the outward sign of obedience. (2) "Then will I distress Ariel, so that there will be moaning and bemoaning, and it will become to me a true Ariel."—Polyc. Bib. as Ariel, a real altar-hearth, where many will be consumed.

Verses 1—8.—The impending humiliation and deliverance of Jerusalem. Jerusalem, apostrophized by the mystic name of "Ariel," is at present gay and careless and secure, the festal calendar follows its accustomed course, and this state of things may endure for a short time longer (1). But already in vision the prophet sees her beset by hosts of enemies, and reduced to the lowest depths of despair (2—4) when suddenly the Lord Himself, arrayed in the terrors of earthquake and tempest, appears in judgment (6), and in a moment the scene is changed. In the very hour of their triumph, the enemies of Zion are disappointed of their expectation, and vanish like a vision of the night (7, 8).—Camb. Bib. Divine Corrections Through Temporal Distress.—The Mosaic system had established the idea that men would be sure to get good things by being good. This was founded in truth, but it involved men's having right ideas of what are "good things," and what is "being good." Men made it mean that they would be sure to get temporal blessings if they made large outward show of goodness. And therefore temporal distresses and anxieties were precisely the things that would awaken men to a sense of their mistake, and to a worthier apprehension of Divine claims. Temporal safety and blessing did not attend such goodness as theirs, and so they were led to suspect their goodness. So we, finding our religion fail us in the evil day, are brought to see that formal religion never can be acceptable unto him who "desires truth in the inward parts."—Pul. Com.

3, 4. (3) a mount, R. V., "a fort." forts, R. V., "siege works," comp. Ezek. iv. 1. (4) Explains the "moaning and bemoaning" of vs. 2. The verse reads: "And thou shalt be laid low, speaking from (beneath) the earth, and thy speech shall come humbly from the dust; and thy voice shall be like (that of) a ghost (coming) from the earth, and thy speech shall squeak from the dust." The allusions in the latter half of the verse are explained under ch. viii. 19. The figures signify the utter abasement and exhaustion of the "joyous city."—Camb. Bib.

Recognizing God's Hand in History.—Carlyle says in a note to Cromwell's fourth speech to Parliament, that "the Bible of every nation is its own history." This note is drawn from Carlyle by Cromwell's frequent insistence, that we must ever be turning from forms and rituals to study God's will and ways in history. And that speech of Cromwell is perhaps the best sermon ever delivered on the subject of this chapter. For he said: "What are all our histories but God manifesting Himself, that He hath shaken, and tumbled down and trampled upon everything that He hath not planted!" And again, speaking of our own history, he said to the House of Commons: "We are a people with the stamp of God upon us, . . . whose appearances and providences among us were not to be outmatched by any story." Truly this is national religion:—the reverential acknowledgment of God's hand in history; the admiration and effort of moral progress; the stirring of conscience when we see wrong; the expectation, when evil abounds, that God will bring justice and purity to us if we labor with Him for them.—Expos. Bib. Note on Verse 3.—Movable towers of wood were usually placed upon the mount, which were driven on wheels fixed within the bottom planks, to secure them from the enemy. Their size was not always the same, but proportioned to the towers of the city they besieged, the front was usually covered with tiles, and in later times the sides were likewise guarded with the same materials; their tops were covered with raw hides, and other things, to preserve them from fireballs and missive weapons; they were formed into several stories, which were able to carry both soldiers and several kinds of engines. All these modes of attack were practiced in the days of Isaiah, who threatens Jerusalem with a siege conducted according to this method: "And I will encamp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount; and I will raise forts against thee." The Prophet Ezekiel repeats the prediction in almost the same words, adding only the name of the engine which was to be employed in battering down the walls: "Thou also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and portray upon it the city, even Jerusalem; and lay siege against it, and cast a mount against it; set the camp also against it; and set battering-rams against it round about."—Paxton.

5, 6. (5) strangers, R. V., "foes," a prophecy that the enemies of Israel in their seeming hour of victory should be suddenly overcome, as happened in the siege by Sennacherib. (6) Thou, R. V., "she," i. e. Jerusalem. The last words of vs. 5 belong here. "And then suddenly—full suddenly she shall be visited," etc. God will come to her rescue. thunder, etc., ch. xxviii. 17.

False Security.—The saint's sleeping time is Satan's tempting time;

"All things have rest—why should we toil alone? We only toil who are the first of things, and make perpetual moan, still from one labor to another thrown; nor ever fold our wings, nor cease from wanderings." — Tennyson.

"Nothing so much offends God as pride, haughtiness of heart, presumption; and when this is manifested by his people, they may expect to be abased to the very dust, until their spirit has been renewed and they have learned humility under his correcting hand." — Pul. Com.

"My soul repairs its fault

When, sharpening sense's hebetude, She turns on my own life! So viewed,

No mere mote's breadth but seems immense With witnessings of providence:

And woe to me if when I look Upon that record, the sole book Unsealed to me, I take no heed Of any warning that I read!"

—Browning.

"I grow weary of the perpetual spurring on of God's people to service, — as if any father ever cared so much to have his children toiling for him as loving and trusting him, — and the more so as the God-possessed Christian invariably does serve." — C. I. Scofield.

a "Dreams, in their development, have breath, and tears and tortures, and the touch of joy; they leave a weight upon our waking thoughts; they make us what we were not—what they will, and shake us with the vision that's gone by." —Byron.

"If we can sleep without dreaming, it is well that painful dreams are avoided. If, while we sleep, we can have any pleasing dreams, it is, as the French say, tant gagne, so much added, to the pleasure of life."—Franklin.

* Ro. xi. 7, 8.

"The wisdom of the ancients—where is it? It is wholly gone. A school-boy to-day knows more than Sir Isaac Newton knew. His knowledge has vanished away. You buy the old editions of the great encyclopædias for a few pence. Their knowledge has faded away. And all the boasted science and philosophy of this day will soon be old."—Drummond.

"A true and genuine impudence is ever the effect of ignorance, without the least sense of it."—Steele.

b "These verses teach the moral impossibility of those understanding Divine revelation whose minds are under the dominion of sin.... The point of comparison lies in the disinclination or aversion of the mind." — Henderson.

every fly dares venture to creep on a sleeping lion. No temptation so weak, but is strong enough to foil a Christian that is napping in security. Samson asleep, and Delilah cut his locks. Saul asleep, and the spear is taken away from his very side, and he never the wiser. Noah asleep, and his graceless son has a fit time to discover his father's nakedness. Eutychus asleep, nods and falls from the third loft, and is taken up dead. Thus the Christian asleep in security may soon be surprised, so as to lose much of his spiritual strength.—A 17th Century Divine.

7, 8. (7) munition, or fortress; the stronghold of Zion. as a dream, comp. the sudden destruction of Babylon. (8) dreameth, but gets no satisfaction.* The description suits the bootless attack of Sennacherib.

Note on vs. 8.—As the simile of the Prophet is drawn from nature, an extract which describes the actual occurrence of such a circumstance will be agreeable. "The scarcity of water was greater here at Bubaker than at Benown. Day and night the wells were crowded with cattle lowing, and fighting with each other to come at the trough. Excessive thirst made many of them furious: others being too weak to contend for the water, endeavored to quench their thirst by devouring the black mud from the gutters near the wells; which they did with great avidity, though it was commonly fatal to them. This great scarcity of water was felt by all the people of the camp, and by none more than myself. I begged water from the negro slaves that attended the camp, but with very indifferent success: for though I let no opportunity slip, and was very urgent in my solicitations both to the Moors and to the negroes, I was but ill supplied, and frequently passed the night in the situation of Tantalus. No sooner had I shut my eyes, than fancy would convey me to the streams and rivers of my native land; there, as I wandered along the verdant bank, I surveyed the clear stream with transport, and hastened to swallow the delightful draught; but, alas! disappointment awakened me, and I found myself a lonely captive, perishing of thirst amid the wilds of Africa.—Mungo Park.

9, 10. (9) R. V. "Tarry ye and wonder: take your pleasure and be blind;" your amazement and blindness with regard to the prospect I lay before you is no evidence against its truth (Driver). not with wine, not this time, but by a spirit of infatuation. (10) Lord .. sleep, God's judgments coming upon men's minds and feelings as truly as on men's bodies and circumstances.^a the prophets .. covered, Polyc. Bib. "and covered your heads."

Priestly Terror.—The ignorance which prevailed in reference to the Scriptures, when Luther was raised up by God to reform the Church, in the beginning of the sixteenth century, was indeed surprising. Conrad, of Heresbach, a grave author of that age, relates the following saying of a monk to his companions, "They have invented a new language, which they call Greek: you must be carefully on your guard against it; it is the matter of all heresy. I observe in the hands of many persons a book written in that language, and which they call the New Testament: it is a book full of dangers and poison. As to the Hebrew, my brethren, it is certain that whoever learns it becomes immediately a Jew." Evils of Ignorance.—That sovereign and universal Truth which illuminates intellectual nature, as the sun enlightens the material world. He who has never received this pure emanation of Divinity is as blind as those who are born without sight: he passes through life in darkness like that which involves the polar regions, where the night is protracted to half the year; he believes himself to be wise, but is indeed a fool; he imagines that his eye comprehends every object, yet he lives and dies without seeing anything; or, at most, he perceives only some fleeting illusions by a glimmering and deceitful light; some unsubstantial vapors, that are every moment changing their color and shape, and at length fade into total obscurity.—Fenelon.

11, 12. "A distinction is drawn between the ignorance of the educated and that of the uneducated classes. The man of culture is like one who will not break the seal of a sealed book that he may read it; the man in the street cannot read it even if unsealed. The passage is interesting as illustrating the diffusion of literary education in Isaiah's time (cf. Jer. v. 4, 5)."—Camb. Bib. (11) of all, i. e. the vision throughout. (12) not learned, makes no profession of skill.^b

Heart Learning.—There is a learning of the heart, and herein we find the sphere of inspired genius, inspired intuition—that marvelous instinct, sagacity, soul-power, which knows without having been to school. “How knoweth this man’s letters, having never learned?” There are people who never can get away from the idea that heaven is to be scaled by a ladder: they forget that there are wings. There are many ways to truth, to God, to rest, not known by those who live simply in the letter. When the Bible is fully opened, annotated from beginning to end as with light, it will be done by the meek soul, the modest spirit. He will see most who first excludes the visible: then by pureness of heart and simplicity of motive, he may see God.—Peop. Bib.

13, 14. “This spiritual insensibility of the people is the outcome of its whole religious attitude, which is insincere, formal, and traditional. The contrast implied is that between a religion of mere ritual and one of moral fellowship with God.”—Camb. Bib. their fear, R. V., “their fear of me is a commandment of men which hath been taught them,” or “but a precept of men learned by note.”—Pol. Bib. precept of men, as distinct from the revealed will of God. The religion in our Lord’s days was almost entirely an elaborate and painful system of human precepts. (14) proceed to do, “Therefore, behold, I will deal with it again in a fashion so wonderful and astonishing that the wisdom of their wise men will be lost and the discernment of their discerning ones will disappear.”—Pol. Bib. wisdom . . . perish,^a they will be as absolutely silenced before it as if they had become fools and ignorant.

Jargon Without Knowledge.—I heard two persons on the Wengern Alp talking by the hour together of the names of ferns; not a word about their characteristics, uses or habits, but a medley of crack-jaw titles, and nothing more. They evidently felt that they were ventilating their botany, and kept each other in countenance by alternate volleys of nonsense. They were about as sensible as those doctrinalists who forever talk over the technicalities of religion, but know nothing by experience of its spirit and power. Are we not all too apt to amuse ourselves after the same fashion? He who knows mere Linnaean names but has never seen a flower, is as reliable in botany, as he is in theology who can descant upon supra-lapsarianism, but has never known the love of Christ in his heart.

“True religion’s more than doctrine,
Something must be known and felt.”—Spurgeon.

Illustrative of vs. 14.—One Mr. Soper, while residing at Alfriston, in England, having been called to the knowledge of the truth, separated himself from his former gay associates. Some of these giddy youths, meeting him one day when going to the chapel, thus addressed him: “Well, Soper, you seem to be very zealous for religion; we shall soon hear that you are a preacher. Come, can’t you preach us a sermon?” Soper very gravely replied, “No; I will name a text and will leave you to preach the sermon.” Then, with great emphasis, he recited the above passage: “Beware, therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the Prophets: Behold, ye despisers, and wonder and perish; for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in nowise believe, though a man declare it unto you.” The words fell with such a weight upon their minds that not one of them could make a reply, nor did they ever ridicule him any more.—Whitcross.

15—17. Here begins the third “Woe,” against the political intrigue with Egypt. (15) seek deep, etc., or lay their plans in utmost secrecy, thinking thus to hide them from God.^a (16) R. V. “Ye turn things upside down! Shall the potter be accounted as clay; that the thing made should say,” etc. turning . . . down, or attempt to subvert the divine plans. potter’s clay,^b “You evidently confuse things, you are the clay, not the potter.” work say, etc., see ch. xlv. 9. no understanding, and therefore man, the creature, must take his affairs out of the hands of God his Creator. (17) Lebanon, “which now produces vines only on its slopes, will then bear them even on its highest points, while the land which already bears vines and trees shall then be like a splendid forest.”—Pol. Bib. A millennial picture of the time when nature shall, with man, be redeemed and renewed.

2 Co. iii. 14, 15;
Ac. xiii. 27.

“The power of a petition is not in the roof of the mouth, but in the root of the heart.”—Trapp.

^a “Their politic contrivances for maintaining Judah’s national existence, and their whole method of reasoning about Divine things.”—Spk. Com.

Comp. the Divine judgment in hardening Pharaoh’s heart.

1 Co. i. 19—21.

“The world has a right to look worshipers, as they come out of church, in the face, and ask them, What do you bring away from your altar, your psalm, your sermon, your benediction? What gifts have you to distribute in your neighborhood?”—Bp. Huntington.

“We do not need to be preaching in public in order to carry Christ to others. We can always find a congregation if we wish. The workshop, the warehouse, the college, the home, will yield us hearers, if our hearts are set on winning men to Christ.”—A. McLaren.

^a “The reference is to the secret plan which many of the Jewish nobles had of seeking Egyptian aid against Assyria, contrary to the advice of Isaiah.”—Fausset.

^b “Another rendering is, ‘Ye invert the order of things, putting yourselves instead of God;’

just as if the potter should be esteemed as the clay."—Horsley.

Mi. iii. 12; Is. xxxii. 15; Mat. xxi. 43; Ro. xi. 12.

"Not only does Nature annually revive in spring from her winter's trance, but throughout the universe exhaustion is continually occurring at irregular intervals, and recoveries from exhaustion, i.e. revivals, are the only mode by which Nature is recruited and enabled to maintain herself."—Pul. Com.

"God never meant that man should scale the heavens

By strides of human wisdom. In his works, Though wondrous, he commands us in his word

To seek him rather where his mercy shines."

—Cowper.

a Ja. ii. 5.

"Acquaint thyself with God, if thou wouldst taste

His works. Admitted once to his embrace, Thou shalt perceive that thou wast blind before;

Thine eye shall be instructed; and thine heart Made pure shall relish, with divine delight

Till then unfelt, what hands divine have wrought."

—Cowper.

The Millennium Fast Approaching (vs. 17).—I. The event anticipated. 1. The event in prediction in my text relates to one great event, the conversion of the whole world to Christ. This accords best with the words of the text, with the general strain of prophecy, and is most clearly marked in the context. 2. And a most glorious event it will be. II. The evidence of its near approach. 1. The Prophet judged it near in his day; 2. Much more may we consider it near at this time. Efforts making for its accomplishment. Actual commencement of a work of grace in many places. Apply:—(1) Let us look forward with holy earnestness to this blessed time; (2) Let us pray for the hastening of this long wished for day; (3) Let us each one try to help it forward.—C. Simeon.

"The instinct of worship is so strong within the soul that men everywhere worship something. It may be the hideous fetish of the African or the artistic statue of the refined Greek, but something the Greek and the barbarian must have. When that young mother, in the days of Solomon, arose in the morning and found a dead child by her side instead of her own living one, how severe must have been the shock! Had there been no child by her side, no dead substitute, she might have thought that her own child lived somewhere and might sometime be found. But that dead substitute at first nearly killed her by despair. It is bad to withdraw a living heart from the Lord, but to substitute a dead one is first to rob God and then wickedly insult Him."—Wm. Parkes.

Note on vs. 17.—The storms and tempests which, gathering on the highest peak of Lebanon, burst on the plains and valleys below, are often severe. When De la Valle was traveling in the neighborhood of that mountain, in the end of April, a wind blew from its summits so vehement and cold, with so great a profusion of snow, that though he and his company "were in a manner buried in their quilted coverlets, yet it was sensibly felt, and proved very disagreeable." It is not therefore without reason that Lebanon, or the White Mountain, as the term signifies, is the name by which that lofty mountain is distinguished: and that the sacred writers so frequently refer to the snow and the gelid waters of Lebanon. They sometimes allude to it as a wild and desolate region; and certainly no part of the earth is more dreary and barren than the Sannin, the region of perpetual snow. On that naked summit, the seat of storm and tempest, where the principles of vegetation are extinguished, the art and industry of man can make no impression; nothing but the creating power of God Himself can produce a favorable alteration. Thus, predicting a wonderful change, such as results from the signal manifestations of the Divine favor to individuals or the Church, the Prophet demands, "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field?" The contrast in this promise, between the naked, snowy, and tempestuous summits of Lebanon, and a field beautiful and enriched with the fairest and most useful productions of nature, expresses, with great force, the difference which the smiles of Heaven produce in the most wretched and hopeless circumstances of an individual or a nation.—Paxton.

18, 19. (18) deaf, the spiritually obtuse. Comp. fig. of sealed book in vss. 11, 12. (19) The meek, comp. ch. lxi. 1; Mat. iii. 5, xi. 29, etc. The meek are they who submit themselves to the righteousness of God, as contrasted with those who "go about to establish their own righteousness," poor, see Mat. v. 3.^a

Gospel to be Preached Simply.—Of the works of a famous alchemist of the thirteenth century it is said that "whoever would read his book to find out the secret would employ all his labor in vain." All the gold makers who have written upon their favorite mystery are in the like predicament; no one can comprehend what the secret is which they pretend to divulge. May we not shrewdly guess that if they had any secret to tell they would put it in intelligible language, and that their pompous and involved sentences are only a screen for their utter ignorance of the matter? When we hear preachers talking of Divine things in a style savoring more of metaphysical subtlety than of Gospel plainness; when the seeking sinner cannot find out the way of salvation because of their philosophical jargon, may we not with justice suspect that the preacher does not know the Gospel, and conceals his culpable ignorance behind the veil of rhetorical magniloquence? Surely if the man understood a matter so important to all his hearers as the way of salvation, he would feel constrained to tell it out in words which all might comprehend.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Meekness does not mean timidity (2 Tim. i. 7); not the craven spirit of the coward, but the quiet power of the strong man (Prov. xxviii. 1). It does not mean the absence of courage, but the absence of that ignorant and arrogant self-sufficiency which Peter showed when he said, "Though all men forsake Thee, yet will not I." It is that calmness of spirit which grows not out of reliance on self, but out of reliance on God. It is recorded of one whose courage at times had flashed up like a consuming fire, "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth." His meekness was not feebleness, but a calm strength; quiet endurance in the doing of duty under difficulties. He was not provoked by the wrong-headedness or irritated by the ingratitude of the nation he wished to serve, but he quietly bore their stubbornness, and persisted in doing them good against their will. Hence a quiet doing and a quiet bearing of the will of God is one constituent in this quality of the mind "meekness." It does not mean that equableness of disposition which comes from nature, so much as that calmness of spirit which comes from grace.—Hom. Com.

20, 21. (20) terrible one, "For tyrants will have then disappeared," Pol. Bib., oppressors of the poor, or foreign tyrants. scorner, or scoffer at the idea that God overruled. watch for iniquity, i. e. for the opportunity of doing evil. (21) R. V., "in a cause," i. e. find out occasions for condemning men.^b Comp. the judicial treatment of our Lord, and of Stephen. reproveth . . . gate,^c would not allow any one publicly to denounce their wrong-doing. Comp. their treatment of Isaiah and Jeremiah. turn aside the just, from his right. for a thing of naught, on an empty pretext.

Religious Progress.—We might have expected in advance that all growth and progress would have been regular and gradual. But the fact is otherwise. In all the fields of human energy, in art, in science, in philosophy, in religion, long periods of comparative deadness and apathy occur, during which there is scarcely any perceptible advance at all, followed by shorter intervals of activity and energy, when progress is made "by leaps and bounds." The scientific energy of the last half-century is a case in point. The history of the Church, dispassionately viewed, shows a manifest progress; but the progress has been far from uniform. Many centuries have been centuries of stagnation. Religion has just kept itself alive, and that has been all. Then some stir has come from within or from without, and a rush of vitality has supervened, which has exercised an influence for good on all later times. Indifference to doctrinal truth was overspreading the world, when the dogmatic revival of the fourth century at once saved the faith, and advanced it. The expansion of the Church, which is a special mark of its life, had almost ceased, when missionary zeal broke out suddenly in the West, and the seventh and eighth centuries saw the conversion of England, Scotland, Friesland, Batavia, Switzerland, and most of Germany. A general deadness and dulness had come over Christendom between the eighth and the eleventh centuries, when the Crusades, which were a political necessity, produced the revival of the twelfth and thirteenth. The greatest revival of all was the Reformation, which recovered spiritual religion when it seemed almost lost, and exerted a purifying influence even in those parts of Christendom which most opposed it. Lesser revivals have been—in Germany Pietism, in France Jansenism, among ourselves Methodism and the Church movement still in progress. It seems scarcely too much to say that, without revivals, religion—even the Christian religion—would perish.—Pul. Com.

22—24. (22) redeemed Abraham, "there is no incident in the Biblical history of Abraham to which the expression "redeem" is specially appropriate; there is, however, a late Jewish legend about his being delivered from a fiery death prepared for him by his heathen relations (Book of Jubilees, ch. xii.)."—Camb. Bib." not now, in the time the Prophet is foretelling. wax pale, "with shame and disappointment at the wicked degeneracy of his posterity, and fear as to their punishment."—Henderson. (23) sanctify, etc., the idea of the vs. is that the time would b"Lead men into sin by words, i. e. supplying them with some plausible reason to excuse sin, or to tempt to sin."—Spk. Com.

c Am. v. 10.

"He who knows the language he speaks, speaks in all companies with perfect confidence and therefore with perfect ease. It is the uncertain grammarian that sits in silence, or picks his way daintily and in-offensively over commonplaces which nobody can remember."—Peop. Bib.

"If new-got gold is said to burn the pockets till it be cast forth into circulation, much more may new truth!"—Carlyle.

a "The phrase may be naturally understood, either as signifying deliverance fr. danger, and the Divine protection generally, or in a higher sense as signifying Abraham's conversion and salvation."—J. A. Alexander.

Ho. iii. 5; Zec. xii. 10; Ac. vi. 7; Ro. xi. 26.

The light of the Gospel often shines upon men as the sun upon a dead wall,—it meets with no entrance.

Mr. Baxter says: "Some holy Non-conformists I have known that would rarely mention God, but with their hats put off, or bowing down their heads, and it hath often affected me more than a sermon."—Old Test. Anec.

come when the Jews would rejoice in welcoming the Gentiles as "fellow heirs," children of God with them. (24) erred in spirit, i. e. the unbelieving Jews (ch. xxviii. 7). "The blinded and refractory Jews should at length embrace the doctrines of the Gospel."—Henderson.

Harmony of Gospel Truth.—Christ did not commit to the care of His Church any one class of truths and duties, or any number of classes of doctrines and obligations, but all of them. Christians are, therefore, to teach all the doctrines, and inculcate all the duties found in the Scriptures. There is no sectarianism in inspiration. The Holy Spirit is the Spirit of truth, and of the entire body of truth "as it is in Jesus." Sectarianism divides the doctrine of the Spirit into its various hues, and sects and parties are formed by good men attaching themselves to one class of colors, whereas "the true light" is made up of all colors. We would never live in an atmosphere of rainbows; it might appear more beautiful than clear daylight, but it would not be so useful for the world. In a lens, no one class of rays gathered into a focus will burn an object; this is done only by a concentration of all the rays. It was by exhibiting the whole counsel of God that Paul produced in his converts the kindlings of repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. If the churches think it proper to put forth the vivid hues of beauty and splendor, in their respective creeds and theological systems, let them also exhibit them with all the blendings and softenings, the harmony and symmetry of the bow in the cloud, the sign of peace and good-will to the whole earth.—F. W. Jenkyn.

^b "Jewish ambassadors were at the time on their way to Egypt to seek aid against Assyria." — Fausset.

^c Is. xx. 5; comp. fig. in Is. xviii. 1.

"In time of trouble go not out of yourself to seek for aid; for the whole benefit of trial consists in silence, patience and resignation. In this condition divine strength is found for the hard warfare, because God Himself fights for the soul." — M. Molinos.

"Sacerdotalism is just the 'man-trust' which prophets denounce. In public life and association the tendency is to lean on, and worship, material strength. We seek the help of riches for the carrying out of all our religious schemes. We fly to men rather than to God." — Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE THIRTIETH.

A series of oracles on the Egyptian Alliance. 1—3. (1) rebellious children,^b inasmuch as they have sought alliance with Egypt, without the approval of the Lord. not of me, "carrying out a purpose which is not mine, and concluding a treaty contrary to my spirit, thus adding sin to sin."—Pol. Bib. covering, lit. "a drink offering" accompanying the conclusion of a treaty. (2) walk, etc., or, who are now on the way down to Egypt. (3) your shame, bec. Egypt will prove unable to help you.^c

Influence of Confidence.—Mr. Pillsbury, warden of the State Prison in Connecticut, once received into the prison a man of gigantic stature, whose crimes had for seventeen years made him the terror of the country. He told the criminal, when he came, he hoped he would not repeat the attempts to escape which he had made elsewhere. "It will be best," said he, "that you and I should treat each other as well as we can. I will make you as comfortable as I possibly can, and I shall be anxious to be your friend; and I hope you will not get me into difficulty on your account. There is a cell intended for solitary confinement; but we have never used it, and I should be sorry ever to have to turn the key upon anybody in it. You may range the place as freely as I do: if you trust me, I will trust you." The man was sulky, and for six weeks showed only gradual symptoms of softening under the operation of Mr. Pillsbury's cheerful confidence. At length, information was brought of the man's intention to break the prison. The warden called him, and taxed him with it: the man preserved a gloomy silence. He was told it was now necessary for him to be locked in the solitary cell, and was desired to follow the warden, who went first, carrying a lamp in one hand and a key in the other. In the narrowest part of the passage, Mr. Pillsbury, a small, light man, turned round and looked in the face of the stout criminal. "Now," said he, "I ask whether you have treated me as I deserve. I have done everything I could to make you happy. I have trusted you; but you have never given me the least confidence in return, and have even planned to get me into difficulty. Is this kind? And yet I cannot bear to lock you up. If I had the least sign that you cared for me—" The man burst into tears. "Sir," said he, "I have been a very demon these seventeen years; but you treat me like a man." "Come, let us go back," said the warden. The convict had free range of the prison as before; and from that hour he began to open his heart to the warden, and cheerfully fulfilled his whole term of imprisonment.

4. 5. (4) "For though [his vassals] the princes are in Zoan, and his messengers go as far as Hanes, none wins aught but disappointment from a people which can avail nothing, which brings no help, but disappointment and disgrace."—Pol. Bib. Zoan, or Tanis, N.E. frontier of Egypt, and the scene of the great plagues. Hanes, further south; the same as Tahpanes, the Anysis of Herodotus. (5) R. V. "They shall be ashamed," etc. ashamed, bec. they get nothing but promises, and Egypt utterly fails them in the evil day."

Responsibility for Companions.—Mention is made of two travelers that walked together to the same city, whereof the one was wise, the other foolish. And when they came where two ways met, the one broad and fair, the other strait and foul, the fool would needs go the broader way; but the wise man told him, though the narrow way seemed foul, yet it was safe, and would bring them to a good lodging; and the other, seeming fair, was very dangerous, and brought them to a desperate inn. Yet because the fool would not yield to any reason, but believed what he saw with his eyes, rather than what he heard with his ears, the wise man, for company's sake, was contented to go the worse way; and being both robbed by thieves, detained in their company, and at last apprehended with the robbers, and carried before the magistrate, these two began to accuse one another, and each to excuse himself. The wise man said he told his fellow the dangers of that broad way, and therefore he only was to be blamed because he would not yield unto his counsel; but the fool had so much wit to reply, that he was a very silly creature, and knew neither the way, nor the dangers of the way, and therefore he was to be excused and the wise man to be condemned because he would follow such a fool's counsel. Whereupon the judge, having heard them both, condemned them both,—the fool because he refused to follow the counsel of the wise, and the wise man because he would not forsake the fool's company.—Spencer.

6. 7. (6) He dwells upon the dangers of the desert between Palestine and Egypt (comp. Deut. viii. 15; Jer. ii. 6) to magnify the folly of the ambassadors. the south, i. e. the Negeb, or southern districts of Canaan. "The beasts of the south are the young asses and camels on which the present or subsidy was conveyed to Egypt."—Henderson. into the land, better, through a land, the wilderness district between Canaan and Egypt. flying serpent, a kind wh. springs from the trees on its prey. (7) help in vain, "to a people who can profit no one, whose help is but vapor and emptiness."—Pol. Bib. therefore, etc., R. V., "therefore have I called her Rahab that sitteth still." He describes Egypt "as a worthless, procrastinating power, loud in the making of promises, but sitting inactive" when the time comes for performing them.—Driver.

Trust.—One evening when Luther saw a little bird perched on a tree, to roost there for the night, he said, "This little bird has had its supper, and now is getting ready to go to sleep here, quite secure and content, never troubling itself what its food will be, or where its lodging on the morrow. Like David, it 'abides under the shadow of the Almighty.' It sits on its little twig content, and lets God take care."

8. 9. (8) table, or tablet." "Since a 'book' is mentioned along with the tablet, it is probable that Isaiah at this time wrote down a summary of all his deliverances on the subject of the Egyptian alliance. Not improbably the 'book' so prepared was the basis of the present collection of prophecies, ch. xxviii.—xxxii. The incident is closely parallel to that referred to in ch. viii. 16, where Isaiah prepares documentary evidence of his prophetic actions after his advice had been rejected by the court and people."—Camb. Bib. (9) lying children, since they desire not even to know the truth. But it shall be revealed against them.

Dislike to Ministerial Fidelity (vs. 9).—I. State the truths which are usually obnoxious to such persons. Spirituality of Divine law. Depravity of human nature, etc. II. The causes of this dislike of ministerial fidelity—absolute unbelief, refinements of modern society, wounded pride, painful forebodings of future misery. III. The folly, sin and danger of a desire to suppress the faithful voice of truth, and to be flattered with the smooth language of deceit. Its folly is apparent from the a "Egypt gives them promises, but no substantial help; while the alliance brings down on Israel the anger of Assyria."—Spk. Com.

Je. xlii. 6; also Je. ii. 36.

"All is of God that is, and is to be; And God is good." Let this suffice us still, Resting in child-like trust upon his will, Who moves to his great ends, unthwarted by the ill.

—Whittier.

"Be still, my soul!—the Lord is on thy side; Bear patiently the cross of grief and pain; Leave to thy God to order and provide,— In every change he faithful will remain."

"The Prophet sees the ambassadors of Israel carrying costly presents through the waste howling wilderness, for the purpose of securing the Egyptian alliance."—J. A. Alexander.

a "Some think that two distinct inscriptions are commanded, one on a tablet, for temporary use, and one on parchment for preservation; but the terms used are probably equivalents."—J. A. Alexander.

Zec. vii. 11, 12. vs. 9, 10. H. Marriott, 400.

"Why, friends, you needn't borrow any trouble about the old Book; it is going to stand. Some people think it is a back number; you and I will become back numbers, but this Book is going to remain."—D. L. Moody.

"It is the virtue of few words to render plain that which thousands have obscured; as one glass will transmit a bright image of the sun, where hundreds produce but darkness and confusion." — Macculloch.

a Comp. Je. v. 31, xi. 21, xxvi. 8—24; Am. ii. 12.

b Isaiah here prob. translates not what the people said by word of mouth, but what they virtually said by their wilful and wayward doings.

"No man can mortgage his injustice as a pawn for his fidelity." — Edmund Burke.

"The spendthrift is getting poorer every month for many years, but bankruptcy comes on him suddenly at last. The dishonest man is getting hopelessly involved for years, but his reputation is blasted in an hour. Passion may have been winning the mastery from youth upwards, but at a certain point it blazes forth, and the life-blood is shed. Penalty generally comes at last with seeming suddenness, like the breaking wall that has long bent but comes down in a moment." — Pul. Com.

"As the Orientals most frequently construct their walls of clay or soft brick, dried in the sun, they are extremely liable to rend, and be washed down by rain." — Henderson.

consideration that no concealment of the situation of the sinner can alter his condition in the sight of God: it is sinful in its origin, its nature, its consequences. Its danger is equal to its sin and folly.—T. A. James.

A Word May Save a Soul.—The Pious Baker.—A baker who traveled the country disposing of his bread, stopped at a public house, where he was waited on at table by a young girl. When opportunity offered, he asked the girl if she loved the Saviour. She answered that she did not. He then in earnestness and simplicity unfolded to her the way of salvation, and urged her to accept Christ as her Saviour. The words were but few, and he returned home. Again he found himself at the same public house, but now an older woman served the table. She recognized him, and asked him if he remembered the former visit. He did. "Do you remember the girl that served you?" "I do." "She was my daughter; and O, how can I thank you for the few words you said to her on the subject of religion. They were the means of her conversion; and O, dear sir," bursting into tears, "they prepared her for a sick and dying bed, to which she was suddenly brought. She often referred to the interview, and she passed away in triumph. She is now with that Saviour you made known to her."

10, 11. (10) smooth, the popular man was not he who declared the truth, but he who uttered what the people liked to hear. deceits, or illusions. (11) out of the way, give us something new. We are tired of these prophecies that run forever in the same path, the same rut. Holy One of Israel,^b "trouble us no more with Israel's Holy One!"—Pol. Bib. "They are weary of the monotony with which a prophet like Isaiah appeals constantly to the Divine right by which he speaks, and which he urges on his opponents."—Driver.

The Swearer Reproved.—Three gentlemen were traveling from the north to London by the mail train, and, as people generally do, sat without speaking to one another for a considerable time. At Rugby, while taking refreshments, the bell rang, and the train was off almost before one of the three had time to take what he required. Angry, he entered the carriage, uttering an oath. This led to a conversation between him and one of the passengers, who in a kind and gentlemanly way expostulated with him on swearing. The conversation continued till they reached a London junction, where the third passenger left them. Thus alone, the gentleman who had begun the conversation proposed they should engage in prayer. They did so, and when the train reached Euston-square they exchanged cards and parted. A little while after, the one who resided in London received a letter from his fellow-traveler, stating that in consequence of that conversation he had given his heart to God, and in the great city in which he lived had erected a Gospel-hall.—Christian World.

12, 13. (12) this word, viz., the warning against going for help to Egypt. oppression, better, "perverseness and crookedness" as contrasted with the straight way of truth and faith in God. perverseness, "and trust in wile and policy."—Pol. Bib. (13) "Disaster will follow their policy with the necessity of a natural law. The best translation seems to be: Therefore this guilt shall be to you as a rent descending (lit. 'falling') (and) bulging out in a high wall, whose crash comes, etc. The slight beginnings of transgression, its inevitable tendency to gravitate more and more from the moral perpendicular, till a critical point is reached, then the suddenness of the final catastrophe,—are vividly expressed by this magnificent simile. Comp. Ps. lxi. 3."—Camb. Bib.

A Remarkable Preservation.—A few years ago a circumstance occurred in connection with these words, which is remembered with thankful hearts by those who met with a providential escape. A carriage passed a high wall, which was precisely in the condition described in the text—indeed, no words could have better described its state; and it was remarked by those seated in it how very dangerous it was in a high road, and where so many were coming and going. The words were scarcely spoken, and the danger passed, than a terrible crash was heard. The breaking had come "suddenly at an instant," and the road behind was utterly impassable from the stones and rubbish of the fallen wall.

14. "Yea, it breaks, as one dashes an earthen pitcher to pieces, shattering it ruthlessly, so that among its shattered pieces not a sherd is found," etc.—Pol. Bib. break it, i. e. the Jewish nation, which these politicians thought to preserve. sherd, broken piece of earthenware. pit, "cistern."

Potsherds.—It must be remembered that nearly all the cooking utensils in the East, all the domestic vessels, were made of earthenware; so that not to have a potsherd, a fragment, left, betokens the greatest misery. Even Job, in all his poverty and wretchedness, was not so destitute; for he had "a potsherd to scrape himself withal." "A sherd to take fire from the hearth." This allusion may be seen illustrated every morning in the East. Should the good woman's fire have been extinguished in the night, she takes a potsherd in the morning, and goes to a neighbor for a little fire to rekindle her own; and as she goes along, she may be seen, after proceeding a few steps, now and then blowing the burning embers, lest the small spark should expire. The Jews were not to have a sherd out of which they could drink a little water. Pumps not being in general use in the East, the natives are obliged to have something in which to convey water from the well or tank. Of a very poor country it is said, "In those parts there is not a sherd out of which you can drink a little water." "The wretchedness of the people is so great, they have not a sherd with which to take water from the tank."—Roberts. Sin and Death.—When we find it stated that the wages of sin is death, we are in the heart of the profoundest questions of theology. What before was merely enmity against society becomes enmity against God, and what was "vice" is "sin." The conception of a God gives an altogether new color to worldliness and vice. Worldliness it changes into heathenism, vice into blasphemy. The carnal mind, the mind which is turned away from God which will not correspond with God, this is not moral only, but spiritual death.—Drummond.

15—17. (15) returning and rest, "the first expression describes the external policy," the second the attitude of mind, demanded by the occasion. On the one hand, averseness to war (Mic. ii. 8), renunciation of earthly help and a wise passivity in international affairs; on the other, calm reliance on Jehovah: in this last, the prophet says, they would have manifested the truest 'strength' or courage."—Camb. Bib. quietness, etc., that waiting for God, and waiting on God, which the Scriptures so often commend.^b (16) flee upon horses, these being introduced from Egypt are the symbol of Egypt. help.^c (17) thousand . . . one, the reversal of the promise, De. xxxii. 39. beacon, tree bereft of branches,^d stripped and solitary.

Salvation (vs. 15).—Your attention is invited—I. To the blessing, salvation. II. To the manner of obtaining it. 1. By returning to God from whom we have wandered; 2. By rest, at the foot of the cross, on the Word of God.—J. Mannering.

Human Means Unavailing for Salvation.—When some one was enlarging to Coleridge on the tendency for good of some scheme which was expected to regenerate the world, the poet flung up into the air the down of a thistle which grew by the road-side, and went on to say, "The tendency of that thistle is towards China; but I know, with assured certainty, that it will never get there—nay, it is more than probable that, after sundry eddyings and gyrations up and down, backwards and forwards, it will be found somewhere near the place where it grew. Such has ever been the issue of those boasted schemes of human wisdom which have professed to change the heart of man. Human nature is in this respect like the salt sea—all the rivers that run into it have not changed its saltness. The sun is daily evaporating its waters; but does not drink up one particle of that saline ingredient. If men will drink of its bitter waters, they sicken and madden, and die. It is thus with that malignant nature which we inherit and propagate; all human means have failed to purify it, and it stimulates to madness, disease, and death."—McCusker.

18. wait, "therefore Jehovah longs to be gracious to you," therefore He lifts Himself up to show mercy to you: for Jehovah is a God of justice;^b happy are all who long for Him!"—Pol. Bib.^c The language is much more gracious than suggested by the R. V. exalted, "lifts Himself," etc., to be in readiness to show mercy if you make it possible.

Waiting upon God (vs. 18).—We consider—I. The character of God,

"You will find that a little sin will shake your trust and disturb your peace more than the greatest sufferings; yea, in those sufferings, your assurance and joy in God will grow and abound most if sin be kept out. So much sin as gets in, so much peace will go out."—E. Leighton.

^a "Retraction from the unlawful measures and negotiations." — Grotius.

^b La. iii. 25, 26, etc.

^c "The riding upon horses refers to the Egyptian cavalry, which they expected would be sent for their deliverance." — Henderson.

De. xvii. 16; Ho. xiv. 3.

^d "Solitary, like a flag-staff." — Wordsworth.

"The idea suggested by this last clause is that no two of them should be left together." — Hitzig.

"As the play of the lightning is more brilliant during the darkness of the night, so God's mercy shines out most gloriously through the murky night of man's sin." — Hom. Com.

^a Comp. Ho. v. 15.

^b "Who will not let His children go uncorrected, yet will order His chastisement with never-failing equity; allowing mercy her full rights." — Spk. Com.

^c Ps. ii. 12, xxxiv. 8; Pr. xvi. 20; Je. xvii. 7.

"Blessed be God's voice; for it is true, and falsehoods have to cease before it!"—Carlyle.

a God of judgment. Therefore—I. He is able to teach His children; 2. And how to correct them. II. God's appearances on account of His people are sometimes delayed. He does not always appear on behalf of His people—I. In answer to prayer; 2. In relieving them from their afflictions; 3. In explaining Himself with regard to their afflictions; 4. In affording the joys of salvation. III. Your duty in the meantime. Waiting includes—I. Calmness of mind; 2. Attention; 3. Patience; 4. Expectation. IV. The blessedness that will attend the exercise of waiting for Him. 1. The work itself is blessed; 2. It will prevent matter for bitter reflection; 3. His coming will amply recompense their waiting.—W. Jay.

Man Waiting for God.—"Blessed are they that wait for Him." We have seen how He waits for us to be gracious unto us, to be exalted in having mercy upon us, and we should wait in humble faith to receive these priceless blessings, bringing our empty vessels that they may be filled. The blessedness of so waiting is set forth in numerous passages of Scripture. What entire satisfaction and peace do they enjoy who take this attitude of soul described as waiting on the Lord! In waiting for man we are often disappointed and deceived, but how can we ever exhaust the Divine mercy and goodness? O happy soul that waits for God, and rejoicing in the plentitude of His goodness sings,

"I must have all things and abound Since God is God to me."

d Comp. Ho. xiv.
1—3, 4, etc.

e "The teachers shall no more be forced to hide themselves from persecution, but shall be openly received with reverence."—Maurer.

"The veil taken away, thou wilt behold Him, no longer dimly revealed thro' the similitudes of the law, and the enigmas of prophetic vision, but manifested in the flesh."—Spk. Com.

Ps. xxxii. 8; Is. xlii. 16, lviii. 11; Jno. xvi. 13, 14.

"Look! the clay dries into iron, but the potter molds the clay: Destiny to-day is master—man was a master yesterday."—Arnold.

As the radiation of the sun's beams of yesterday will not suffice for to-day, so neither will the grace which you received a week or a month ago be sufficient for the present moment.

"In the days of unfettered liberty and universal privilege the Christian Church

If God had not first waited for us, we never would have waited for Him. He took the initiative. Why should any of us keep God waiting longer? Are your sins too great? Have you been proud and rebellious? It is precisely to such the promise is made. God is waiting now to be gracious, but the day of grace will soon be past.—William Guthrie.

19—21. (19) For the people, etc., better, "For, O people in Zion that dwellest in Jerusalem." weep no more, shalt lie no longer under the heavy burden of Divine chastisement. cry, the cry of the penitent. when, etc., "so that when He has heard it, He has already answered you."—Pol. Bib. (20) removed, etc., R. V., "hidden," the verb is in the singular. Better read "Yet will not thy Teacher any longer withdraw Himself, but thine eyes will constantly see thy Teacher," (Pol. Bib.) the reference is Messianic. (21) hear a word, the warning, guiding word of the great Teacher.

The Unerring Monitor (vs. 19).—I. There is a way from earth to heaven. 1. Divine; 2. Ancient; 3. Revealed; 4. Direct; 5. Circumscribed. II. From this way there are many diverging paths. 1. The right, adding to God's method of salvation; 2. The left, omissions; 3. Tendency to turn to right or left. III. The means provided for our security, the Word. 1. Infallible; 2. Living; 3. Speaking. Apply:—(1) Place ourselves under its guidance; (2) Carefully listen; (3) Follow its directions.—F. Burns.

The Tenderness of the Gospel.—What then is the nature of this so marvelous transforming message of the Gospel? It is a story, a simple story, such as a child will feel and weep over; such as a sage of seventy winters cannot fathom. It tells of a law holy as that eternal heart from which it springs; it paints the portrait of the righteousness consummate which images that law in the life; it celebrates the triumph of the moral conquest that makes the enfranchised conscience sovereign of man. Yet this were no more than others could in their measure rival. But, oh! a tale more touching than all this solemn strain is its exclusive privilege to unfold. It speaks,—it alone can speak of One whose purity, too perfect to brook one unatoned sin in the vast universe of His creation, was accompanied by a love too tender to endure that one pang should continue to exist for which His own high wisdom could provide a remedy; of a love which drew the living Author of the law from His transcendent abode into our narrow nature, that He might quench the lightnings of His own avenging justice in streams of His own human blood. It tells of that inexpressible attachment of which all human relationships (for it names them all) are too weak to be the faintest shadows of a Creator who is father and brother, and husband of His redeemed; and by all the insults of His humiliated life, by His despised poverty and His accumulated wrongs, by a sight which made the angels tremble and weep, though—mystery of unfathomed ingratitude!—men, its objects, can slumber as they listen, or wake to scoff. By the groans of Gethsemane and its bloody sweat, by the nails and thorns of Calvary, by the last dark tortures of an expiring God, it prays us to love Him in return! This may fail to move, but it is certain that this appeal to the grateful affections is the legitimate path to the great object of a renovation, that it is a justifiable path, that it is a practicable path, that if it fail, no other that men have ever devised can offer a chance of success.—Butler.

Take Heed—

"How wrought I yesterday?" Small moment now,
To question with vain tears, or bitter moan,
Since every word you wrote upon the sands
Of yesterday, has hardened into stone.

"How shall I work to-day?" O soul of mine:

To-day stands on her threshold, girt to lead
Thy feet to life immortal; strive with fear;
Deep pitfalls strew the way; take heed—take heed!

—Augusta Moore.

22—24. (22) covering of, see vs. 1. The reference is to the gold or silver covering or plating of the idol images. cast . . away, R. V. "cast them away as an unclean thing." (23) rain of thy seed, "And He will give rain for thy seed . . . and thy wheat, the produce of thy ground, will be rich and nourishing."—Pol. Bib. (24) ear the ground, or till the ground. clean provender, or salted food.

Note on vs. 24.—In these words the Prophet foretells a season of great plenty, when the cattle shall be fed with corn better in quality, separated from the chaff, and (as the term rendered clean in our version properly signifies) acidulated, in order to render it more grateful to their taste. The evangelist clearly refers to the practice, which was common in every part of Syria, of ploughing with the ass. In rice-grounds, which require to be flooded, the ass was employed to prepare them for the seed, by treading them with his feet. It is to this method of preparing the ground that Chardin supposes the Prophet to allude when he says, "Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass." They shall be blessed under the future reign of the promised Messiah. In times anterior to His appearing, their country was to be made a desolation; briars and thorns were to encumber their fields; their sumptuous dwellings were to be cast down; their cities and strongholds levelled with the dust. But when Messiah commences His reign times of unequalled prosperity shall begin their career. The goodness of Jehovah shall descend in fertilizing showers, to irrigate their fields, and to swell the streams which the skill and industry of the husbandman conducts among his plantations, or with which he covers his rice-grounds. Secure from the ruinous incursions of aliens, and in the sure hope of an abundant harvest, he shall scatter his rice on the face of the superincumbent water, and tread it into the miry soil with "the feet of the ox and the ass." Prosperous and happy himself, he will consider it his duty, and feel it his delight, "to do good and to communicate,"—to succor the widow and the fatherless, to open his doors to the stranger, to diffuse around him the light of truth, and to swell, by the diligent and prudent use of all the means that Providence has brought within his reach, the sum of human enjoyment.—Paxton.

25, 26. (25) mountain . . rivers, to a dry country like the hill country of Palestine this was the greatest of blessings. slaughter, when the towers fall, "poetic allusion to the day of the Lord, when all his enemies are destroyed." (26) light, etc., The light which now is enough for a week will then be concentrated in a single day, "night and day alike will be preternaturally bright"; this is a part of the general expectation that nature shall share the glory of the Messianic Kingdom. breach, vs. 14.

The Bliss of Being Reconciled to God (vs. 26).—Refer to history of context, and point out other seasons when this promise receives its fuller accomplishment. I. At the first reconciliation of the soul with God. 1. The convictions of an awakened conscience are as deep wounds; will delight itself in God; its songs of peace and of hope will arise from every valley; its life will be touched and lighted with the sunshine of a holy gladness. The light of God's countenance will rest upon it, and it will rejoice greatly in his salvation." — Clarkson.

a "The Bab. captivity effected this change in the Jews thoroughly, as regards gross idol-worship. For their deliverance from subtler forms of idolatry, a higher purification was needed (Phil. iii. 8)." — Spk. Com.

"If you count the sunny and the cloudy days of the whole year, you will find that the sunshine predominates." — Ovid.

"It shows a weak mind not to bear prosperity as well as adversity with moderation." — Cicero.

"A description of the height to which agriculture would be carried, by means of artificial irrigation, after the overthrow of the Assyrians." — J. D. Michaelis.

"What shall the universality and copiousness of the rivers and streams of water profit us, if we will not drink of them? In the natural world a man would be nothing benefited, though the light of the sun was augmented sevenfold, if he studiously closed and sealed every opening by which it entered his dwelling, or if he placed an impervious bandage tightly over his eyes whenever he went abroad (John xii. 36)."

—Packer.

"God can do much work in a short time. Many are the examples in the Acts of the Apostles. And, blessed be God, there are now many living proofs that He is still mighty to save." — J. Wesley.

There seems to be a mixed reference in these verses to the calamities of Judah in Hezekiah's days, and to the final destruction of Judah's enemies.

As well may you try to write upon a sheet of water, or engrave upon rotten wood, as to convert a heart without the grace of God.

"The dominion of any sinful habit will fearfully estrange us from His presence. A single consenting act of inward disobedience in thought or will is enough to let fall a cloud between Him and us, and to leave our hearts cheerless and dark."
—H. E. Manning.

"Truth is the bond of union and the basis of human happiness. Without this virtue there is no reliance upon language, no confidence in friendship, no security in promises and oaths."
—Jeremy Collier

"God sent his slingers upon earth,
With songs of sadness and of mirth,
That they might touch the hearts of men.
And bring them back to heaven again."
—Longfellow.

2. Reconciliation with God heals those wounds; 3. And this is a season wherein the knowledge and joy of the soul are much enlarged. II. At any return of the soul to God after a season of darkness. 1. God finds it necessary sometimes to hide His face from His people, and then their wounds open afresh; 2. But the return of God to the soul binds up this breach; 3. And this is also another season of peculiar instruction and comfort. The full accomplishment of the text will take place—III. At the hour of the Christian's dissolution. 1. God never entirely withholds His chastening rod in this world; 2. But at death there is an end of all that is penal and painful; 3. Then will this promise be fulfilled to the utmost extent. Inference:—(1) They who have never been wounded in their souls on account of sin are yet strangers to all spiritual light and happiness; (2) They who feel a wounded spirit should labor to improve their convictions to the utmost.—Studies for the Pulpit.

The Way to be Saved.—The Hindoo's Confession.—When one of the converted Hindoos came to be baptised, he made this confession. He said he had been for years searching for a way of happiness in Poojahs (holy places in the river, etc.), but all in vain; but when he heard the word of Christ he could not rest. He sat up a whole night in distress of mind. He had great fears about his sins. When asked how he lost them, he said, "They went away in thinking of Christ." Thus we shall never get rid of our fear in any other way than by thinking on Christ, His atoning sacrifice, His finished righteousness, His great love, His free promise, His willingness to save. It was this that made another Hindoo say, when he was asked how he hoped to be saved, "I am a sinner, I have nothing to give to God, but if a rich man become a poor man's surety, he may trust in him; thus I place my trust in Christ Jesus."

27, 28. (27) the name of the Lord appears here to be synonymous with what is elsewhere called the "glory of Jehovah" (cf. the parallelism, ch. lix. 19; Ps. cii. 15) i. e. the visible manifestation of His presence. It may have the same sense in ch. xviii. 7, the Temple of the future being conceived as the scene of a perpetual Theophany (Ezek. xliii. 2 ff.). Amongst the later Jews the expression "the Name" was commonly used, out of reverence to avoid the use of Jehovah (cf. Lev. xxiv. 11).—Camb. Bib. cometh from far, "in Jud. v. 4; Deut. xxxiii. 2, the Theophany comes from Seir or Sinai; here its origin is left indefinite, Jehovah's coming is like that of the thundercloud which appears on the distant horizon, no eye having observed the mysterious process by which it was formed. In what follows the figure of the storm is inseparably blended with an anthropomorphic representation of Jehovah." the burden. R. V., "in thick rising smoke." (28) reach . . neck, R. V., "And his breath is as an overflowing stream that reacheth soon unto the neck." Is. viii. 8. sieve of vanity, the sieve that separates the chaff of their vanity, vain plans and schemes. people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. Assyrians, whom Jehovah will turn aside from their purpose thwarting their plans.

God's Name.—What is a person's name? That word or expression in which the person is called up or represented to us. When I mention or hear a name, it calls up before me the whole man, what I know of him, and also the impression he has made on me. The name of a king includes his honor, his power, his kingdom. His name is the symbol of his power. And so each name of God embodies and represents some part of the glory of the Unseen One. And the name of Christ is the expression of all He has done, and all He is and lives to do as our Mediator.—Andrew Murray. A Case of Retribution.—A gentleman, who was very ill, sending for the late Dr. Lake, told him that he found he must die, and gave him the following account of the cause of his death:—He had, about a fortnight before, been riding over Hounslow Heath, where several boys were playing at cricket. One of them striking the ball, hit him just on the toe with it, looked him in the face, and ran away. His toe pained him extremely. As soon as he came to Brentford, he sent for a surgeon, who was for cutting it off. But unwilling to suffer that, he went to London. When he arrived there, he immediately called another surgeon to examine it, who told him his foot must be cut off. But neither would he hear of this; and so, before the next day, the mortification seized his leg, and in a day or two more struck up into his body. Dr. Lake asked him whether he knew the boy that struck the ball? He answered, "About ten years ago, I was riding over Hounslow Heath, where an old man ran by my horse's side, and begged me to relieve him, and said he was almost famished. I bade him begone. He kept up with me still; upon which I threatened to beat him. Finding that he took no notice of this, I drew my sword, and with one blow killed him. A boy about four years, who was with him, screamed out that his father was killed! His face I perfectly remember; that boy it was who struck the ball against me, which is the cause of my death."—Whitecross.

29, 30. Songs of rejoicing arise within the city, while the Assyrians are slaughtered under its walls. (29) solemnity, R. V. "feast," the pass-over-memorial of national deliverance, the only festival that included a nocturnal ceremony, in the O. T. times. with a pipe, "It is said that each band of pilgrims on its way to Jerusalem was headed by a person who played the flute."—Vitranga. Mighty one, R. V., "Rock." (30) glorious voice, lit. the majesty of His voice, in the exertion of His power. lighting down, in stroke of judgment.

Music at Night.—Music is considered far more enchanting at night than at any other period; "it gives cheerfulness to darkness, and pleasure to the heart." Their favorite proverb is, "the day song is like the flower of the gourd," i. e. devoid of smell. Nothing is more common than for adults to sing themselves to sleep: thus, as they recline, they beat a tabret and chant the praises of their gods, till through heaviness they can scarcely articulate a word. At other times the mother or wife gently taps the instrument, and in soft tones lulls the individual to repose. In the night, should they not be able to sleep, they have again recourse to the same charm, and not until they shall have fairly gone off in fresh slumbers will their companions have any rest. Hence, in passing through a village or town at midnight, may be heard people at their nightly song, to grace the festive scene, to beguile away their time, to charm their fears, or to procure refreshing sleep. The Jews then were to be delivered from the proud Assyrian's yoke, and again to have their pleasant song in the night.—Roberts.

31—33. (31) smote . . rod, "Assyria will be terror-stricken at the voice of Jehovah when He smites with the rod."—Pol. B. (32) grounded staff, R. V. "and every stroke of the appointed staff," tabrets and harps, signifying the joy of the redeemed ones. battles of shaking, "battles of waving"—the figure is of Jehovah waving his enemies, as the priests wave the victim that is about to be sacrificed on the altar. Comp.—G. A. Smith. (33) Tophet, or a place of burning* (2 Ki. xxiii. 10). The place in valley of Hinnom where fires constantly burned the refuse. R. V., "for a Topheth is prepared of old;" this is the close of the drama, not an ordinary battle but a solemn holocaust is already prepared by Jehovah. It is deep and wide, to receive an army of corpses, and with fire from heaven will its flames be lit.

Miracles of Providence.—On the 5th of August, 1530, an awful crisis for the Reformation, when the firmest seemed to swerve, and the boldest to tremble, Luther thus wrote to Chancellor Bench: "I have recently witnessed two miracles. This is the first: As I was at my window, I saw the stars and the sky, and that vast and glorious firmament in which the Lord has placed them. I could nowhere discover the columns on which the Master has supported His immense vault; and yet the heavens did not fall. And here is the second: I beheld thick clouds hanging above us like a vast sea. I could neither perceive the ground on which they reposed, nor cords by which they were suspended; and yet they did not fall upon us, but saluted us rapidly, and fled away."

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIRST.

1, 2. This chapter is remarkable for three very unusual descriptions of God. They rise in climax, enforcing three truths:—that in the government of life we must take into account God's wisdom (1-3),—we must be prepared to find many of His providences grim and savage-looking (4); but we must also believe that He is most tender and jealous for His people, (5-9).—G. A. Smith. (1) Egypt for help, see ch. xxx. 1—3.^b chariots, "in Assyrian sculptures chariots are represented drawn by three "Singing songs when we are well out of fears is easy work; singing songs even while struggling with our fears is the beautiful triumph of faith."—Pul. Com.

"When men seek to entice you to forego communion with God and to follow the world with them, let your face shine with the brightness that comes from your communion with the Master, and they will cease to trouble you. Christians can sometimes do more by shining for God, than by speaking for Him."—Andrew A. Bonar.

a "It is universally agreed that the destruction of the Assyrian king is here described as a burning of his body at a stake, or funeral pile."—J. A. Alexander.

"If plety be thus debarr'd access on high; and of good men, the very best be singled out to bleed, and bear the scourge,—what is reward, and what is punishment? But who shall dare to tax Eternal Justice?"—Congreve.

b "That the Egyptians were noted at a very early period for their attention to the breeding of horses, and their using them in chariots, appears fr. Gen. xlvii. 17. 1. 9; Ex. ix. 3. xiv. 7. 9."—Henderson.

"They had come to consider obedience to God's law a piece of old-world simplicity; which debarred them from the advantages of Eg. culture and intelligence." — Spk. Com.

"Would not infinite wisdom, engaged on their side, stand them in more stead than all the policies of Egypt?" — Mat. Henry.

horses, and with three men in them." (2) is wise,^c and therefore able to deal with this rebellious people. evil, "brings trouble," the house, i. e. the whole race. the help, i. e. the Egyptian helpers.

The Fear of Hell Peoples Heaven.—There is a legend that the devil once put on a monk's hood, and went into the pulpit and preached hell and its terrors. As he knew his subject so well, he sent all his congregation into transports of terror, ready to say they believed anything, or to confess or promise anything, so that only they might escape such horror and despair. And when he returned from his mission, his friends bitterly reprimanded him, and said, "What have you done? Don't you know that men say, 'The fear of hell peoples heaven'? You have ruined and undone your own kingdom." But he replied, "Never fear; I know what I am doing. The heaven which the fear of hell peoples is one of my own devising (for its roots are in selfishness), and the more men seek that, the better for me! Since thus shall they never know that love of God, which is the one thing that utterly defeats and thwarts me."—Old Test. Anec.

God's Superior Wisdom.—After Moscow Napoleon is reported to have exclaimed, "The Almighty is too strong for me." But perhaps the most striking analogy to this satire of Isaiah is to be found in the "Confessions" of that Jew, from whose living sepulchre we are so often startled with weird echoes of the laughter of the ancient prophets of his race. When Heine, Germany's greatest satirist, lay upon a bed to which his evil living had brought him before his time, and the pride of art, which had been, as he says, his god, was at last crushed, he tells us what it was that crushed him. They were singing his songs in every street of his native land, and his fame had gone out through the world, while he lay an exile and paralyzed upon his "mattress-grave." "Alas!" he cries, "the irony of Heaven weighs heavily upon me. The great Author of the universe, the celestial Aristophanes, wished to show me, the petty, earthly, German Aristophanes, how my most trenchant satires are only clumsy patchwork compared with His, and how immeasurably He excels me in humor and colossal wit." That is just a soul writing in its own heart's blood this terrible warning of Isaiah: Yet God also is wise.—Exp. Bib.

3. men, Heb. adam, made out of the ground. Only creatures. flesh, strikingly contrasted with spirit, or spiritual aid, such as God can give.^a "That men could not stand against God, or flesh against spirit, Isaiah's contemporaries did not need to be taught; what separated him from his hearers was the conviction that there is but one Divine Person, and one spiritual power in the universe, viz.: Jehovah and His moral government as revealed in the consciousness of the prophet."—Camb. Bib. he that helpeth, i. e. the Egyptian. fall, R. V. "stumble." he that is holpen, i. e. the people of Judah. "Fulfilled when Nebuchadnezzar invaded Judæa and Egypt."—Henderson.

The Arm of Flesh.—Regiments of cavalry have a very imposing aspect to the eye which looks upon and judges by the surface of things; they seem invincible, overwhelming, an invaluable ally when the enemy is approaching. And not only the well-equipped cavalry in time of war; but, in time of peace and in the ordinary life of men, the sagacious counsellor, the wealthy merchant, the influential statesman or courtier, the eloquent and admired speaker or pleader,—these men seem to have in them a source of strength on which we may build, or to which in the time of peril we may repair. But "the Egyptians were men, and not God," their promised word might be broken, their overtures might turn out to be selfishly made and to be unscrupulously withdrawn; their cavalry might be ridden down by troops still stronger than they. Being but men and but horses, they might prove—as they would prove—nothing better than a broken reed, which would pierce the hand that leaned on it (ch. xxxvi. 6). And the human strength on which we are all so inclined to lean will very likely prove to be nothing more or better. How often the sagacity of the prudent, the riches of the wealthy, the influence of the great, the eloquence of the orator, fail us at our hour of need, and we "go down to our house" bitterly disappointed, or perhaps stricken, stripped, ruined! "The arm of flesh will fail you."—Pul. Com.—Spiritual Natures.—It is the law of Divine wisdom that no spirit carries with it into ^a "The antithesis of flesh and spirit, like that of God and man, is not metaphysical, but rhetorical, and is intended simply to express extreme dissimilitude or inequality."—J. A. Alexander.

Comp. Je. xxxvii. 5-7, xlv. 1, 2.

"The grace of Jesus, which is infinitely pure, like the fountain from whence it flows, cannot unite with the love of sensual pleasure and true enjoyment of the world. If, therefore, thou desirest the heavenly gift, thou must banish from thy heart every affection that obstructs its entrance."—Thomas a Kempis.

another state and being any habit or mental qualities except those which may be connected with its new wants and enjoyments; and knowledge relating to the earth would be no more useful to these glorified beings than their earthly system of organized dust, which would be instantly resolved into its ultimate atoms, at such a temperature: even on the earth the butterfly does not transport with it into the air the organs or the appetites of the crawling worm from which it sprung. There is, however, one sentiment or passion which the moral or spiritual essence carries with it into all its stages of being, and which in these happy and elevated creatures is continually exalted; the love of knowledge or of intellectual power, which is, in fact, in its most ultimate and perfect development, the love of infinite wisdom and unbounded power, or the love of God. Even in the imperfect life that belongs to the earth, this passion exists in a considerable degree; increases even with age; outlives the perfection of the corporeal faculties, and at the moment of death, is felt by the conscious being; and its future destinies depend upon the manner in which it has been exercised and exalted.—Sir H. Davy.

4, 5. (4) "In a very striking figure the prophet represents Jerusalem as the helpless prey in the grasp of Jehovah, and shows how impossible it is that any earthly power should intervene for its deliverance."—Camb. Bib. lion, frequent image of the power of God.^a roaring, better growling,^b to prevent any from attempting its rescue. multitude of shepherds, representing the combination to deliver Judah from the Divine judgments. fight for, better, 'against.' (5) birds flying, "as little mother birds hovering," i. e. over their young, when they see danger threatening the nest. Strong as a lion, tender as a mother bird.^c passing over, with allusion to the destroying angel passing over Israel when Egypt's firstborn were destroyed.^d

Calmness Under Excitement.—There was a heavy swell from the westward, which, coming on in broadly heaving undulations, gave the idea of power indeed, but of power in repose, as when a lion crouches in his lair with sheathed talons and smoothed mane and half-closed eyes. But no sooner does each broad swell, dark and polished, come into contact with these walls and towers of solid rock, than its aspect is instantly changed. It rears itself in fury, dashes with hoarse roar, and apparently resistless might, against the opposition, breaks in a cloud of snowy foam, which hides the rocky eminence, and makes us for a moment think the sea has conquered. But the next, the baffled assailant is recoiling in a hundred cascades or writhing and grovelling in swirls around the feet of those strong pillars which still stand in their majesty, unmoved, immovable, ready to receive and to repel the successive assaults of wave after wave with ever the same result.—Gosse. The Albatross.—The albatross has often served poor Jack a good turn for food when his larder has run low, or when he has been cast upon some desolate sea-bird island; and many anonymous anecdotes are told in the fore-castle respecting them. But the most remarkable I have heard, bordering indeed upon the marvelous and incredible, if not itself a providential miracle, is the following, contained for substance in a letter from an officer of the eighty-third regiment of the English army to his friends in Montreal. While the division to which the writer belonged was on its way to the Orient, being at the time a short distance eastward of the Cape, one of the men was severely flogged for some slight offense. Maddened at the punishment, the poor fellow was no sooner released than, in sight of all his comrades and the ship's crew, he sprang overboard. There was a high sea running at the time, and, as the man swept on astern, all hope of saving him seemed to vanish. Relief, however, came from a quarter where no one ever dreamed of looking for it before. During the delay incident on lowering a boat, and while the crowd on deck were watching the form of the soldier struggling with the boiling waves, and growing every moment less distinct, a large albatross, such as are always found in those latitudes, coming like magic, with an almost imperceptible motion, approached and made a swoop at the man, who, in the agonies of the death-struggle, seized it and held it firm in his grasp, and by this means kept afloat until assistance was rendered from the vessel. Incredible as this story seems, the name and position of the writer of the letter, who was an eye-witness of the scene,

"Leaning on Him,
make with reverent meekness
His own thy will,
And with strength from Him shall thy utter weakness Life's task fulfil."

—J. G. Whittier.

^a Ho. v. 14, xl. 10, xlii. 7, 8; Am. iii. 8; Re. v. 5.

^b The word used denotes a suppressed sound.

^c Mat. xxiii. 37.

^d "This promise of Div. defence is conditioned on vs. 6, that God's people turn from their deep falling away from Him." —Nagelsbach.

Dr. Wolff relates that he and his companions in travel remained two nights in a village inhabited by the tribe Shih, who are shepherds. While sleeping with them under the trees, they were constantly disturbed by the attempts of lions to enter the sheepfold, and the efforts of the shepherds to expel them. Dr. Wolff says that so great was the noise occasioned by the roar of the lions, that the force of the description in the text could be easily felt.

"Not the thunder of men's anger, but the quiet evening breeze of men's humble prayer, goes right in to the throne of God." —R. Tuck.

Truth is a strong citadel. However often besieged, it remains invulnerably secure. The arrows of falsehood may often assail it; but unharmed, and unshaken, it stands out in serene majesty, immutable as its Author, imperishable as eternity.

a "An argument enforcing repentance is drawn from the preceding promises of Divine interposition."—Henderson.

Is. II. 20, xxx. 22.

Grace is the very opposite of Nature, and if we were to sum up the evidence of growth in grace in one word, we should say that it is to grow less and less like ourselves.

b "He shall have no confidence in his strongholds, and will not halt in his flight till he has arrived at Nineveh."—Wordsworth.

2 Kl. xix. 35, 36.

c "The true explanation of the clause seems to be that which supposes an allusion both to the sacred fire on the altar, and to the consuming fire of God's presence, whose altar flames in Zion and whose wrath shall thence flame to destroy His enemies."—J. A. Alexander. "Enthusiasm is needed; without it we have no motive force. Evil will yield to nothing else than to the heart aflame with piety, the tongue of Heaven-kindled fire."—Johnson.

places its authenticity beyond a doubt. But for the assistance thus afforded, no power on earth could have saved the soldier, as, in consequence of the tremendous sea running, a long time elapsed before the boat could be manned and got down, all this time the man clinging to the bird, whose flutterings and struggles to escape bore him up. Who, after this, should despair? A raging sea—a drowning man—an albatross; what eye could see safety under such circumstances? or who will dare to call this chance? Is it not rather a lesson intended to stimulate faith and hope, and teach us never to despair, since, in the darkest moment, when the waves dash, and the winds roar, and a gulf seems closing over our heads, there may be an albatross at hand with a commission to save us from Him of whom it is said, "As birds flying, so will the Lord of Hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also He will deliver it, and passing over He will preserve it."—Cheever.

6, 7. (6) "Contains the only summons to repentance in this whole series of discourses. It must be understood as implying that the deliverance of Jerusalem is conditional upon a national repentance. The verse is connected with vs. 7; and the thought is that the approaching deliverance will be a decisive manifestation of the sole deity of Jehovah, which will put idolatry to shame; and therefore the prophet calls on his hearers to realize the magnitude of their sin in having forsaken the one true God."—Camb. Bib. Turn ye, see Ho. xiv. 1. from whom, etc., R. V., "from whom ye have deeply revolted, O children of Israel" deeply revolted, even with deliberate plan and purpose." (7) cast away, as the sign that they had for ever abandoned their trust in them.

A Day of Awakening.—There is to be a day of awakening, a day memorable for its religious penetration; men are to see that they have been making idols where they thought they were making deities. When men become ashamed of their religion, and pray that its very name may not be mentioned to them; when they seek out of their secret places idols of silver and idols of gold, and say, Throw them anywhere—but let it be out of sight! then has come to pass the realization of divinest prophecy. Who would have all his old ideas named to him? Though they be innocent, yet they be so imperfect, so poor, so shallow, so wanting in insight and sagacity, their own thinker would not hear of them any more, but would say with somewhat of penitence and shamefacedness, but with no sense of guilt, When I was a child, I thought as a child: I am a man now, and I have seized a wider philosophy: spare me the recollection of infantile thinking.—Peop. Bib.

8, 9. (8) not . . man, R. V. "not of man; and the sword, not of men, shall devour him: and he shall flee from the sword, and his young men shall become tributary." Refer. may be, in the first case, to Sennacherib's overthrow, by the unseen visitation of God. (9) pass . . stronghold, "he shall overpass his rock from terror." ensign, "the banner of Jehovah protecting the Jews."—Maurer. whose fire, hearth and altar fire; the sign that God regards Jerusalem as His house, and therefore will defend it.

An Evil Conscience.—An ill conscience is no comfortable companion to carry with thee. An ill conscience is like a thorn in the flesh. A thorn in the hedge may scratch you as you pass by it; but a thorn in the flesh rankles with you wherever you go; and the conscience, the ill conscience, the conscience that is ill at ease, it makes you ill at ease. You cannot have peace so long as you have an evil conscience, so long as there is that continual monition flashing across your mind: "Judgment cometh, death cometh: am I ready?" Many a time, when you go to your worldly scenes of pleasure, this conscience, like the finger writing on the wall of the palace of the king of Babylon, alarms and frightens you. You tell nobody about it. Strange thoughts strike across your mind. You have no rest. Can a man rest on a pillow of thorns? Can a man rest with the heartache? Can a man rest with his soul disturbed with the horrors of guilt? I tell thee there is no rest to thee till thou comest to Christ. He alone can calm a conscience.—S. Coley.—Wrong Fleeing From Revenge.—See the vivid picture of Carver fleeing from Dombey (Dickens): "Shame, disappointment, and discomfiture gnawing at his heart, a constant apprehension of being overtaken: the same intolerable awe and dread that had come upon him in the night returned unweakened in the day: . . . rolling on and on, always postponing thought, and always racked with thinking . . . pressing on . . . change upon change . . . long roads and dread of night . . . and still the old monotony of bells and wheels and horses' feet, and no rest."

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SECOND.

Pol. Bib. divides, "The Messianic Age described (1—8): Warning to the fine ladies of Jerusalem, (9—14): The Regeneration of Israel, (15—20)." "or rather, royalty—putting aside the person altogether."—Cheyne.^a princes, the subordinate authorities. in judgment, or justly; "when this crisis, described in chap. xxxi., is past, society will be regenerated, kings and nobles will be the guardians of justice and great men the protectors of the poor."—Driver.

The Ideal Reign.—When Isaiah wrote he may have had grounds for the charitable belief that his sovereign would really be equal to the demands providentially made upon him. But the prophecy is Messianic. Its anticipations are only fully realized in the kingdom of Christ. Weber says, "The picture which the prophet paints here of the Church of the last time is the picture of every true congregation of Christ. In it the will of the Lord must be the only law according to which men judge, and not any fleshly consideration of any sort. In it there must be open eyes and ears for God's work and word; and if in some things precedence is really allowed to the children of this world, still in spiritual things the understanding must be right and the speech clear. Finally, in it persons must be valued according to their true Christian, moral worth, not according to advantages that before God are rather a reproach than an honor."—Christ's Righteousness.—Salvation, through the transference of righteousness from the Saviour to the sinner, may be thus illustrated:—Before you stands a bath, as it is called—a large vessel full of acid liquor. At one end, immersed in the fluid, hangs a sheet of silver; while above, and passing from side to side, is extended a thread of metal, ready to be connected with a powerful battery, which, when I saw the process, was concealed in a room below. A vessel of common metal being produced was hung on the wire, and plunged into the bath; in which I may remark, the fluid was so clear that you could see to the bottom. The wire on which it was suspended was then connected with the electric battery; and what happened? A very remarkable result. By means of the mighty, though unseen agent that was thus brought into action, the particles of silver were taken from the sheet of it, and passing invisibly through the translucent fluid, were transferred to the vessel that had been immersed in the bath. No sound accompanied the mysterious process, no violent action, no sign of motion,—the eye saw nothing but the dull metal beginning to assume a brilliant appearance, and in time, through what looked more like magic than common art, this base metal shone in a coating of the purest silver. Such a change, but far greater and more thorough, is wrought on the soul through the unseen and almighty influence of the Holy Spirit, as soon as faith has established a connection between the Saviour and the sinner. Righteousness is withdrawn from the former, and transferred to the latter. In the words of an inspired apostle, the believer puts on Christ, to stand before God covered with those merits, and justified by that righteousness which makes a sinner just. If this process of art suggested that resemblance, it presented under one aspect a mighty difference. Robbed of its precious metal, what was once a sheet of silver became in time a dull, attenuated, worthless thing. Its treasures were exhausted; Christ's never are. It could coat and cover a certain number,—no more. But in Him there is righteousness for all the world, enough of mercy in the Father, of merit in the Son, and of grace in the Spirit, for every child of guilt.—Guthrie.

2. a man, comp. Zech. vi. 12; "while, of course, the Messiah" was to Isaiah the ideal of human^c character, and therefore shared whatsoever features he might foresee in its perfect development, it is evident that in this verse Isaiah is not thinking of the Messiah alone or particularly. When he says with such simplicity a man, he means any man, he means the ideal for every man."—G. A. Smith. hiding . . . wind, shade of a rock

a. "It is as if Isaiah had said, the day is coming when power shall be exorcised and government administered, not as at present (in the reign of Ahaz), but with a view to the faithful execution of the laws." — J. A. Alexander.

Ps. xlv. 1, 6, 7; Ze. ix. 9.

"When we want nothing, we find nothing. When we want little, we find little. When we want much, we find much. But when we want everything, and get reduced to complete nakedness and beggary, we find in Christ God's complete treasure - house, out of which come gold and jewels to enrich us, and garments to clothe us in the richness and righteousness of the Lord."—Sears.

"It is not barely said that 'He,' but, as the original has it, 'He Himself shall save.' Joshua saved Israel, not by his own power, not of himself, but God by him; neither saved he his own people, but the people of God; whereas Jesus Himself, by His own power—the power of God—saves His own people, the people of God."—Bp. Pearson.

b "To interpret the sublime imagery of this verse in application to a mere human being, would be quite repugnant to the spirit of the sacred writers."—Henderson.

c "Christ's humanity is here asserted, bec. it was by suffering and perfect obedience in His human nature that He received the kingdom here described (Phil. ii. 8, 9)."

—Wordsworth.

d Is. iv. 6, xxv. 4; Ps. lxxiii. 1.

"The claims of Jesus Christ upon our gratitude and devotion are such that we gladly borrow language from any that may help us to utter his praise. Thus Dr. Marsh adopted Pope's lines, altering only the last words,—

'Not bubbling waters to the thirsty swain, Not rest to weary laborers,
faint with pain,
Not showers to larks, not sunshine to the bee,
Are half so precious as thy love to me—
My Saviour.'"

a "Possibly with reference to the drunken scorners who, in stammering style, imitated Isaiah's warnings to mock them (Is. xxviii. 7-11, 13, etc.)."
—Maurer.

"Enquirers should be answered. It is never well to be dumb to attentive ears. As some one has wisely said, 'we shall have to give an account of idle silence, as well as of idle speech.'"
—Spurgeon.

to a heated traveler. rivers, etc., or streams to desert traveler. weary, or wearying, by reason of its heat and its drought.^d

The Suffering World and the Relieving Man (vs. 2).—I. The suffering world. 1. A tempest: conflicting thoughts, sinful passions, guilty memories, terrible foreboding; 2. A droughth; 3. Exhaustion. II. The relieving Man. 1. He is a shelter from moral storms; 2. He is a river in moral droughths; 3. He is the recruiting, resting place in exhaustion.—D. Thomas.

Our Hiding Place.—Well do I remember being caught in the mistral at Hyeres, when it blew with unusual fury; it not only drove clouds of dust with terrible force, but boughs of trees, and all sorts of light material were propelled with tremendous force. One wondered that a tree remained upright, or a fence in its place. What a joy it was to hide behind a solid wall, and under its shelter to run along till we were safe within doors! Then we knew in some measure the value of a hiding-place from the wind. But what is that to a cyclone, which tears down houses, and lifts ships upon the dry land? Friends who have lived abroad have startled us with their descriptions of what wind can be, and they have made us cease to wonder that a hiding-place should be greatly prized by dwellers in eastern lands.—Spurgeon.—Shadow of a Rock.—The road to-day lay through St. Ann's, one of the most luxuriant parts of this luxuriant island. By eleven o'clock I had reached Roaring River, and stopped there to rest and refresh myself and horse. Here is a scene almost beyond description. Above the bridge a hundred streams are seen pouring through a thick wood, and at every yard tumbling over stumps and stones. Just as they reach the arch they all unite and rush over a high ledge, from side to side of which the bridge is thrown, sweeping away below in a foaming torrent, through a deep channel worn in the rocks, and hastening, as it were, impetuously over a succession of falls, to throw itself into the bosom of its parent ocean. Oh, how delightful such a cool spot is to rest in the midst of a long journey from the meridian sun of this burning clime! It is then we feel the truth and power of the Scripture expressions, "The shadow of a great rock in a weary land," and "streams in the desert." I remembered what a boy once answered when I asked him what kind of a place heaven is; he said, "It must be a very cool place;" and I compared it with what the Scriptures say of the same blessed regions, "The sun shall not light on them, nor any heat; for the Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."

3, 4. (3) eyes . . dim, comp. threatening, ch. vi. 9, 10. "Them that see" refers to the Prophets or teachers of the people. them that hear, the people who are under instruction. Teachers will be willing to see the truth and the people will be ready to hear it. (4) rash, marg. hasty: "who from want of faith were ever for precipitating matters, instead of abiding God's time." "Superficial and precipitate judgments will be replaced by discrimination."—Driver. stammerers, "hesitancy and vacillation will give way before the prompt and clear assertion of principle."

Spiritual Anatomy—the Eye (vs. 3).—I. There are the blinded and the open eyes; 2. There are the eyes rightly and wrongly directed; 3. There are the eyes of the proud and of the humble; 4. There are the eyes of the covetous and of the humble; 5. There are vain eyes and those that delight in truth; 6. There are the eyes of the impure and of the holy; 7. There are the eyes of the cruel and of pity and compassion; 8. There are eyes reddened with wine; 9. There are eyes dim with age, grief, and sickness; 10. There is the eye of holy joy and gladness. Apply:—(1) How important a renewed understanding; (2) A rich use of the eyes; (3) A watchful care; (4) Hopeful expectation.—F. Burns.

5, 6. (5) "No more will the fool be called noble, nor the knave any more be named gentle."—Pol. Bib. vile person, literally "the fool," that is "the ungodly man, sin being the highest folly."—Cheyne. churl, or niggard, but rather with the idea of crafty, "knave." Characteristics of the "fool." Render: For a fool speaks folly and his heart works mischief, to practice impiety (cf. ix. 17) and to speak error (xxix. 24) against Jehovah, etc. The fool here depicted is a free thinker, a practical atheist, as in Ps. xiv. 1; the baneful effect of his principles is seen in his conduct towards his fellow-men, in his pitiless and cruel selfishness.—Camb. Bib.

the soul, i. e. the life, the fool is impious toward God and keeps bread and drink from his fellows.

Profanity.—The profaneness of which we speak to-day, is not only or chiefly a profaneness of speech. There is a fashion in these things. Men of a past generation habitually used expressions which would now be scouted in society as shockingly blasphemous. But not on that account is profaneness (in the Scripture sense of the word) either obsolete or unfashionable. "Profane" is the opposite, not of "reverent," but of "sacred." When we speak of things sacred and profane we mean to express, however inaccurate or even erroneous the idea, that God is in the one and not in the other. Esau was profane, because the consecrating mark was not on him; Jacob, whatever his faults, lived to realize that appropriation of life and soul to God which makes the character sacred and the man a saint. When we seek to try and examine ourselves by the test here proposed—"lest there be among you a profane person as Esau"—we may use as our criterion the suggestion of the text. Esau was profane, because "for a morsel of meat he sold his birthright." "Behold, I am at the point to die, and what profit shall this birthright do to me?" Can the remote prospect of an inheritance, ages hence, for my posterity, of this land, in which my father, like his father, is the inmate of a tent, having no possession there but of a melancholy cave for burial—can the idea, beautiful but unsubstantial, of a possible place in the march of great events, long millenniums distant—events by which spiritual evils shall be remedied, and blessings, of the very nature of which I have the dimmest, darkest vision, introduced—can this feed me or give me drink? What, in all the world, can be at this moment so real as this hunger, or so important to me as its relief? We can talk afterwards of things spiritual. God has so made us, that one clamorous bodily want necessarily precludes every thought save that of its satisfaction. "He did eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way. Thus Esau despised his birthright." And for doing so he was "profane." Whenever we allow the present to overbear the future; whenever we suffer the body, with its appetites or its passions, to drown the voice of conscience, or obscure the vision of promise; whenever we prefer indulgence to duty, ease to exertion, self-interest to self-control, things temporal to things spiritual, the world to heaven, the present to the eternal—then we are profane. Whenever we argue—and who has never done so?—"What profit shall this birthright do me?" in the face of some immediate instant gratification; what substance is there, what certainty, in the recompense of the reward, that I should give up for its sake the opening for advancement, that offer of gain, that enjoyment of which I know the sweetness, that sin which arrays itself in every charm and bids me make sure of it, if I die for it?—then we are profane. We show that the consecrating mark is not upon us, or is faded, blurred, illegible; we are looking at things seen and temporal, and have no eye for the unseen and the eternal; like Esau, we are bartering birthright for pottage; like Esau, we are profane.—C. J. Vaughan.—Honesty.—The truth of the good old maxim that honesty is the best policy is upheld by the daily experience of life; uprightness and integrity being found as successful in business as in everything else. As Hugh Miller's worthy uncle advised, "In all your dealings give your neighbor good measure heaped up and running over, and you will not lose by it in the end." Integrity of word and deed ought to be the very corner stone of all business transactions. To the tradesman, merchant and manufacturer, it should be what honor is to the soldier, and charity to the Christian. In the humblest calling there will always be found scope for the exercise of this uprightness of character.—Smiles.

7, 8. (7) instruments, schemes and plans for making money. when . . . right, has right on his side. (8) "But the noble devises noble things and in noble things will he persist."—Pol. Bib.^a liberal, or noble-minded. Some think the reference is to Hezekiah, and cite in illus. 2 Chr. xxx. 22-24.

Whitefield.—While the Rev. G. Whitefield was preaching on one occasion at Plymouth, he lodged with Mr. Kinsman, a minister of the town. After breakfast on Monday, he said to his friend, "Come, let us visit some of your poor people. It is not enough that we labor in the pulpit; we must endeavor to be useful out of it." On entering the dwellings of the afflicted poor, he administered to their temporal as well as their spir-

"When men's eyes are opened, they will no longer confound the essential distinctions of moral character. Things will then be called by their right names."—J. A. Alexander.

"The rulers and teachers who urged men to exchange the guidance of religious faith for that of worldly wisdom, and to prefer the license of Syrian or Egyptian rites to the holiness of God's law, left men, amidst all their joviality with hungry and parched souls."—Spk. Com.

"He that is habituated to deceptions and artifices in trifles, will try in vain to be true in matters of importance, for truth is a thing of habit rather than of will. You cannot in any given case, by any sudden and single effort will to be true, if the habit of your life has been insincerity."—F. W. Robertson.

"As the owl is hooped and wondered at among other birds; even so the godly are often made a gazing-stock and wonderment to the ungodly, because the course of godliness is most strange and foolish in their eyes."—Cawdray.

"When thou hast thanked thy God For every blessing sent, What time will then remain For murmurs or lament?"—R. C. French.

^a 2 Co. ix. 6.

^a Men might be better if we better deemed

Of them. The worst way to improve the world
Is to condemn it."

—Bailey.

"Scorn to trample upon a worm, or sneak to an emperor."
—Saadi.

"Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault
I see;
That mercy I to other's show,
That mercy show
to me."
—Pope.

b "The Prophet having reproved
the sceptical and worldly spirit of the men of Jerusalem, passes on to censure the voluptuousness of the women."
—Wordsworth.

c "Or, in little more than a year."—Maurer.

Wonderful alchemy of God's grace it is which transmutes tribulation into triumph, turns waters of Marah
into a healthful
fountain, enables one to gather grapes of thorns
and figs of thistles, causes the rose to bloom through a whole winter of trials, and helps the soul to regard afflictions as promises and not threatenings.

"Ye shall knock upon your breasts."—Coverdale.

"To rejoice in the prosperity of another is to partake of it."
—William Austin.

itual wants. Mr. K., knowing the low state of his finances, was surprised at his liberality, and suggested that he thought he had been too bountiful. Mr. W., with some degree of smartness, replied, "It is not enough, young man, to pray, and put on a serious face; true religion and undefiled is this—to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and to supply their wants. My stock, it is true, is nearly exhausted, but God, whom I serve, and whose saints we have assisted, will, I doubt not, soon give me a supply." His hopes were not disappointed. A stranger called on him in the evening, who addressed him thus: "With great pleasure I have heard you preach; you are on a journey, as well as myself, and traveling is expensive. Do me the honor to accept this," at the same time presenting him with five guineas. Returning to the family, Mr. Whitefield, smiling, held out the money in his hand, saying, "There, young man, God has speedily repaid what I bestowed. Let this in future teach you not to withhold what it is in the power of your hand to give. The gentleman to whom I was called is a perfect stranger to me; his only business was to give me the sum you see." It is remarkable that this gentleman, though rich, was notorious for a penurious disposition: but Elijah was fed by ravens.—Cheever.

9—11. (9) "The women are addressed partly as representing best certain aspects of the public mind, luxury and complacent ease (ch. iii. 16 ff.; Am. iv. 1 ff.); partly because of their function as mourners in seasons of calamity (Jer. ix. 20)."—Camb. Bib. women . . . ease, whose luxurious habits contributed very seriously to the existing evils. Comp. ch. iii. 16—26.^b careless, as not apprehensive of the threatened and swift-coming dangers. (10) Many days, R. V., "For days beyond a year." the gathering, Pol. Bib., "the gathering of fruit." (11) strip, etc., the usual E. signs of grief, distress, and humiliation. The Prophet intimates that these troubles would come to them in the Assyrian invasion.

Woman's Besetting Sins.—The besetting sins of either sex are its virtues prostituted. A man's greatest temptations proceed from his strength; but the glory of the feminine nature is repose, and trust is the strength of the feminine character, in which very things, however, lies all the possibility of woman's degradation. Woman's faith amounts at times to real intuition; but what risks are attached to this prophetic power—of impatience, of contentment with the first glance at things, "the inclination," as a great moralist has put it, "to take too easily the knowledge of the problems of life, and to rest content with what lies nearest her, instead of penetrating to a deeper foundation." Women are full of indulgence and hope; but what possibilities lie there of deception, false optimism, and want of that anxiety which alone makes progress possible. Women are more inclined than men to believe all things; but how certain is such a temper to sacrifice the claims of truth and honor. Women are full of tact, the just favorites of success, with infinite power to plead and please; but if they are aware of this, how certain is such a self-consciousness to produce negligence and the fatal sleep of the foolish virgins.—Exp. Bib.

Retribution to the Careless.—Though retribution sleep, it must come and will not tarry. The Jews were spared forty years after the Saviour had wept over their doomed city. So with the sinner; there comes a time when he can be indifferent no longer; the realities of judgment and eternity produce a conviction which will go on deepening for ever. How it will embitter the soul then to dwell upon this carelessness of the past. Recollection itself a source of misery (Luke. xvi. 25). What words can express the anguish of a soul thus reminded of lost opportunities, etc.? Throw off this lethargy. From this moment seek the Lord with your whole heart, and call upon Him while He is near. Why run the desperate hazard of having to do all this on a dying bed?—Mark Tucker.

12, 13 (12) teats, R. V., "They shall smite upon the breasts." pleasant fields, yielding abundant harvests, but soon to be made barren by advancing enemies. (13) thorns and briers, the signs of a desolated and neglected land.

Thorns and Briers.—Thorns and briers are by no means a conspicuous feature in our English landscape. Were a prophet, therefore, to rise up, and by way of plague or judgment to foretell to England the general spread of such a vegetation, his words would not be particularly impressive. It was different in Palestine. There the ononis, with its long tough cables underground, and its keen lancets above, was a constant hindrance to the plough. And in a country where the most frequent of trees is the zizyphus, a scrubby, shockheaded ruffian, with trailing flexible twigs, carrying spines an inch or two long, each "as sharp as a needle, as hard as a bone," we can not only understand the frequent allusions to "thorns in the side," "thorns in the eyes," "a thorn in the flesh," "a thorn going up into the hand of a drunkard," but we can see what a terrible judgment it was, if the day could be foretold when these Philistines of the vegetable kingdom would win the battle, and repossess the goodly land.

14, 15. (14) "for the palace shall be forsaken; the populous city shall be deserted; Ophel and the Watch-tower shall be," etc.—G. A. Smith. palaces, "palace," i. e. of the king at Jerusalem. forts, R. V., "the hill and the watch-tower." The first word is 'Ophel, the name of the southern projection of the hill on which the temple stood (Neh. iii. 26 f., xi. 21; 2 Chr. xxvii. 3, xxxiii. 14), and is doubtless mentioned as the aristocratic quarter of the city, near the royal palace. The word translated "watch tower" occurs nowhere else, and is of uncertain significance; probably, like Ophel, it denotes a particular locality in the capital. dens, mere shelter places for the wild beasts. (15) at last the great transformation of all things will be ushered in, by an outpouring of spirit (the Heb. has no art.) from on high; i. e. from heaven, as in ch. xxxiii. 5. The spirit, conceived as a subtle essence descending upon and then permeating the human world, is said to be "poured out" as in ch. xxix. 10; Ezek. xxxix. 29; Joel ii. 28 f. Here the word "spirit" denotes the Divine principle of life, and especially the power by which the will of God is made to prevail in human society (vss. 16 f.).—Camb. B.

Doctrine of the Holy Spirit.—What is the doctrine of the Holy Spirit? It is the doctrine of the interworking of the Spirit of God upon the souls of men. I have no philosophy about it. All I say is this: that God knows what is the secret way in which mind reaches mind. I do not—you do not. I do not know why words on my tongue wake up thoughts corresponding to those words in you. I do not know why the soul of man, like a complex instrument of wondrous scope, is played upon by my words, so that there are waked up in it notes along the whole scale of being. I do not understand why these things are so, but unquestionably they are so. I do not know how the mother pours her affection on the child's heart; but she does. Two stars never shone into each other as two loving souls shine into each other. I know it is so, but I do not know why it is so. I do not know how soul touches soul, how thought touches thought, or how feeling touches feeling; but I know it does. Now that which we see in the lower departments of life—that which exists between you and your friends, and me and my friends—that I take, and by my imagination I lift it up into the Divine nature, and give it depth and scope and universality; and then I have some conception of the doctrine of God's Spirit poured upon the human soul.—H. W. Beecher.

16, 17. (16) judgment, or equity; justice. Justice and righteousness shall prevail, the foundations of social peace and order. dwell, or permanently abide. (17) work, or influence; same as effect, or result. peace, internal and external."

Peace.—Faith looked at in reference to God is a spirit of quietude and repose. Nothing so full of conscious helplessness and simple trust. No little bird beneath its parent's wing, no child upon its mother's lap, so gentle and confiding. A lion in conflict with the powers of hell, faith lies down like a lamb at the feet of the Lord of heaven. It returns and rests "in quietness and in confidence." Indeed, in this way it obtains salvation and strength. The calm resting upon God makes it victorious over all beside. In truth, it is He who fights for the believer, with the believer, in the believer. Faith does nothing alone, nothing of itself, but everything under God, by God, through God. It is only in a qualified sense that faith makes war and gets victory. "The excellency of power is of God, and not of us." Its humble dependence, its meek, child-like spirit, after all constitute its proper self. These are the essence and life of faith.—J. Stoughton.

"The general by a special DImeaning is, until vine influence a total revolution shall take place in the character, and as a necessary consequence in the condition, of the people." —J. A. Alexander.

Is. xlv. 3, 4; Zec. xii. 10.

"Peter, when asked how the work of Pentecost was done, said: 'With the Holy Ghost.' The greatest works for God have been wrought with such power of the Holy Ghost that there has been no consciousness of forthputting of human energy." —A. J. Gordon.

"Where is the hope of the world's conversion, or of the salvation of dear loved ones, out of Christ? If the Spirit of God come not to our aid, our eyes may fail with looking for these much-valued blessings." —Lewis.

b Is. lrv. 13, 14.

"It is rare when injustice, or slights patiently borne, do not leave the heart at the close of the day filled with marvelous joy and peace." —Gold Dust.

"Fancy the bright sun saying, 'Now I must appear bright to-day;' or the Atlantic saying, 'Well, to-day I must appear great.' Why, they are bright and great! Be, and you will appear." —Thomas Jones.

Ec. xl. 1.

"Let us not think the time wasted which is spent in introducing to Jesus those who, if they live, are to be the men and women of the coming generation, and who, if they die early, may be among the first to welcome us to our heavenly home."
—Biblical Treasury.

"The common deeds of the common day Are ringing bells in the far-away."
—Harry Burton.

Capacity for Christian Work.—To sow a field requires some knowledge of the kind of work. City men would make sorry work. So the spiritual sowing requires some capacity. Two mistakes may be made. There is the mistake of those who think any kind of work will do; and of those who estimate the requirements so highly and their own power so humbly that they never venture anything. The latter deterrent operates largely. It falls in with the love of ease. It is sometimes said that the extension of popular education demands a higher class of Sunday-school teachers, for instance, than sufficed some time ago. Many Christians think their own education inadequate. It is a mistake. If we cannot realize our ideal, let us do our best. Besides, experience does not show that boys and girls are ahead of teachers of average intelligence. And spiritual earnestness is a greater qualification than even intellectual endowment. Capacity for Christian work, like any other, perhaps more than any other, increases by exercise.—Hom. Com. Liberal Sowing.—Every period of existence is to be spent unto God. Swift and restless the waters of life glide on. But beside them all, the Christian sows his good seed. Equally in youth, middle age, and in advancing years, whatsoever his hand finds to do, he does it heartily, as unto the Lord; and in each he reaps a harvest according to his sowing in that which preceded it. Blessed through eternity will he be who sowed wisely and liberally beside all the waters of life.—J. R. Woodford.

18—20. (18) peaceable habitation, free from all fear of foes. "There is something tranquilizing in the very sound of this delightful promise." (19) hail, an image of Divine judgments. R. V., "But it shall hail in the downfall of the forest; and the city shall utterly be laid low." "In those years 705—702 Isaiah did not forget that something must come between him and this paradise. Across the very middle of his vision there dashes a cruel storm." He beholds the Assyrian invasion.—G. A. Smith. coming . . forest, so as to overthrow it. (20) sow . . waters, "the prophet apostrophizes the happy agricultural population of the renovated land of Israel. The sentiment may be in part due to his own delight in the avocations of the husbandman, but it has to be remembered that agricultural prosperity naturally holds a prominent place in Messianic prophecy, as the antithesis to the false refinements and military pomp of the civilization that is to be swept away. The features of the description are, the happiness of the people, the abundance of water for the irrigation of the fields, and immunity from danger, so that 'the ox and the ass' can be safely driven out to pasture, without fear of their not returning (cf. ch. i. 3). The 'thither' of the A. V. is a misleading assertion."—Camb. Bib.

After Many Days.—In 1835 Dr. Meadows, in making a journey along the coast of China, called for a few hours at a small island, where he distributed some tracts and small religious books. The island remained unvisited by any European for thirty-three years, when a missionary went thither and began to preach the Gospel. To his astonishment, one of his hearers said, "We know that doctrine;" and on being asked whence they had obtained their knowledge, the man replied: "Many years ago a foreigner came here and left some little books and other writings, which contained that doctrine which you preach. He gave them to my father, who charged me when dying to read them, and keep them carefully, and, perhaps, some day, God would send some one who would teach us the doctrine more fully." The result of the seed sown by Dr. Meadows, thirty-three years before, was the formation of a church which speedily numbered sixty members, and is now in a healthy and thriving state.—E. R. Barrett.

a "The proud and false Assyrian justly reckoned with for all his fraud and violence, and laid under a woe."—Matthew Henry.

Is. xxi. 2.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-THIRD.

There is no doubt that chapter xxxiii. refers to the sudden disappearance of the Assyrian from the walls of Jerusalem. It was written, part perhaps on the eve of that deliverance, part immediately after morning broke upon the vanished host.—G. A. Smith. 1. thee that spoilest, poss. Sennacherib, as representing the Assyrian power.^a dealest treacherously, or wastest.^b shalt cease, as if you had completed your work.

Victims of Treachery.—In the year 1784 the captain of a vessel trading on the coast of Africa went up the country, where he was introduced to a Moorish king. This prince being pleased with the polite manners of the English, entertained them with great civility, and at last reposed so much confidence in the captain as to entrust him with a son, about eighteen years of age, and another fine youth, to be brought to England for education. The captain promised to protect them; but basely sold them for slaves. Fortunately for the two princes their betrayer died on his passage home, and the officers related the circumstance when they arrived. On hearing this, Government sent to pay their ransom; and on their being brought to England, they were placed under the care of the Earl of Halifax, who caused them to be kindly treated, and well educated. They were afterwards introduced to his majesty, and proved themselves worthy of the kindness they experienced.—Percy Anec.

2—4. (2) waited for thee, as ch. xxvi. 8. arm, on wh. they may lean during the long waiting time. (3) the tumult, “hardly has Isaiah uttered his petition when he is conscious that it is answered: The ‘multitudes’ of whom Sennacherib has boasted are in flight.”—Driver. people, or peoples: the armies made up of confederate peoples. (4) your spoil, addressed to the Assyrians.^a running . . locusts, R. V., “as locusts leap they shall leap upon it,” wh. swiftly devour the vegetation on wh. they alight. The Jews spoiled Sennac.’s forsaken camp.

Gladness of Salvation.—Is hope sweet where despair had almost begun to reign? Is it a joy to be emancipated from a shameful slavery, or set free from a noxious dungeon? Is it gladness to be raised, as if by miracle, from a bed of feebleness and suffering to sudden health and instantaneous vigor? Then what a gladness salvation must be! For, as there is no earthly misery like sin, so is there no deliverance like that with which Jesus makes us free. Words will not tell it. Thought only can think it, and it must be thought out of an enlightened mind and a burning heart dwelt on for a long, long while.—F. W. Faber.

5, 6. (5) exalted, in His judgment of the oppressor. judgment and righteousness can mean nothing else than personal and civic virtues in the inhabitants of the city. Isaiah could not have written thus of the Jerusalem he knew (cf. i. 21); if he is the author the words must express a vivid anticipation of the great change in the national character which is now on the eve of accomplishment.—Camb. Bib. (6) wisdom, R. V., “And there shall be stability in thy times, abundance of salvation, wisdom and knowledge.” In this time to which he is looking the nation shall be rich in the fear of the Lord and strong with wisdom and knowledge.^b

The Use and Excellency of True Wisdom (vs. 6).—I. Consider wisdom as promoting the stability of an empire. II. As advancing the prosperity of the soul. It is a mine of wealth. 1. Intellectual; 2. Moral; 3. Spiritual; 4. Eternal.—C. Simeon.

Our Wisdom Under Differing Circumstances.—It is a wise thing to exhibit prudence and hopefulness in their proper degrees and seasons. Some are so exultant at success as to become rash, and thereby secure for themselves a disaster; others are so depressed by a defeat as to be incapable of future action. The old Latin distich is worth quoting:

“Si modo victus eras, ad crastina bella parato;

Si modo victor eras, ad crastina bella paveto.”

“If conquer’d, for to-morrow’s fight prepare:

If conqueror, of to-morrow’s fight beware.”

When we are most unsuccessful in our Lord’s work we should rally all our forces for new attempts, hoping that the tide will turn, and believing that to perseverance the crown is certain. On the other hand, when the Lord favors us with the largest degree of blessing we must watch with holy anxiety lest by any negligence or sin we should grieve the Holy Spirit, and so forfeit all hope of future triumph.—C. H. Spurgeon.

7—9. (7) From this vision of the future the prophet returns to present conditions. “The disconsolate envoys (the ‘ambassadors of peace’) have just returned from Lachish: the country districts are beset by the foe, and impassable.”—Driver. valiant ones, or messengers sent to sue

^b Violence and treachery are the crying sins of arbitrary powers.”—J. A. Alender.

“The wings of every hour shall bear Some thankful tribute to thine ear.”

a “The enemy having been destroyed, or made to flee, the inhabitants of Jerusalem would eagerly run up and down thro’ the deserted camp, to collect the spoils.” — Henderson.

“Minutes came fast, but merces were more fast and fleet than they.”

b “The security of those times is the effect of the treasure, the wealth in treasures of salvation.” — Nagelsbach.

“Man’s extremity is often God’s opportunity; because not until his case is desperate, will he cast himself unreservedly upon God. So man often retards the arrival of the right moment. Meanwhile the innocent (comparatively) suffer for the guilty, the good for the bad, the just for the unjust. But there is always a ‘thus far and no farther.’ ‘Now will I rise, saith the Lord.’” — Hom. Com.

a Comp. 2 Ki. xviii. 14—16, 19.

b Comp. Ju. v. 6.

c "A beautiful poetical amplification of the description. The most magnificent and fruitful scenes of nature are represented as converted into barrenness and desolation." — Henderson.

The omniscience of God is a great check to sin, and motive to virtue. A heathen philosopher advised his pupils to imagine that some distinguished character was always looking at them, as the best aid to excellence of life.

d "In Palestine the low matted thorns are cut up with mattocks and hooks to be burnt in the lime-kilns near the spot where they grow." — Thomson.

"There would seem to be a confirmation here of the view that the Assyrian army was consumed by a hot pestilential wind from the Lord, in the valley of Hinnom, on the S. of Jerusalem." — Wordsworth.

"Burnings of lime in a lime-kiln, of which the peculiarity is that all seem to be on fire together." — Matt. Henry.

"Who can dwell with His never-relaxing holiness?" — Spk. Com.

"Gentleness or lenity is a virtue by which God preserves moderation concerning anger in taking vengeance, lest it should be too vehement — lest for peace are rejected. weep bitterly, bec. of the failure of their overtures." (8) wayfaring, or traveler. The roads were not safe for such.^b he . . covenant, reference is to Sennac's breaking his treaty with Hezekiah. despised the cities, contemning the defences. (9) hewn down, R. V., "withereth away." Sharon,^c the fruitful plain between Carmel and Joppa. Bashan, range of hills on N.E. These are regions famous for their beauty. In sympathy with the inhabitants they wither and become desert.

Footprints of the Creator.—A French sceptic, a man of some learning, was crossing the great Sahara, in company with an Arab guide. He noticed, with a sneer, that at certain times the guide, whatever obstacles might arise, put them all aside, and, kneeling on the burning sands, called on his God. Day after day passed, and still the Arab never failed; till at last, one evening, when he rose from his knees, the philosopher asked him, with a contemptuous smile, "How do you know there is a God?" The guide fixed his eyes on the scoffer for a moment in wonder, and then said solemnly, "How do I know that a man, and not a camel, passed my hut last night in the darkness? Was it not by the print of his feet in the sand? Even so," and he pointed to the sun, whose last rays were flashing over the lonely desert, "that footprint is not of man."

10—12. (10) rise, as one about to act, aroused by His people's misery. (11) conceive chaff, your plans shall prove worthless as chaff. your breath, or rage, this would lead them to act in ways wh. would secure their own destruction. (12) people, or nations composing Sennac's army. lime, i. e. as if burned to lime. thorns cut up, burning swiftly and fiercely.^d

Thorns Cut Up.—Here, on the brow of this rocky hill, we have the lime-kilns, and men in the very act of breaking up sarcophagi to feed them. It is unpardonable sacrilege thus to destroy these venerable antiquities. It is outrageous vandalism. Instead of hurling anathemas at these barbarians, we had better drop a tear of compassion over such ignorance, and then see if we cannot draw some lesson of instruction from even these destructive kilns. You see an immense quantity of this low, matted thornbush collected around them. That is the fuel with which the lime is burned. And thus it was in the days of Isaiah. "The people," says he, "shall be as the burnings of lime: as thorns cut up they shall be burned in the fire." Those people among the rocks yonder are cutting up thorns with their mattocks and pruning-hooks, and gathering them into bundles to be burned in these burnings of lime. It is a curious fidelity to real life, that, when the thorns are merely to be destroyed, they are never cut up, but set on fire where they grow. They are only cut up for the lime-kiln.—Thomson.

13, 14. (13) far off . . near, "The far off hear what I have done and the near acknowledge my heroic might."—Pol. Bib. The prophet declares that the deed is so magnificent that all nations see its far-reaching significance. (14) sinners, those who doubted that God would deliver. hypocrites, or profane ones. The wicked and unbelieving portion of the Jews. devouring fire, common symbol of Divine judgment. among us, the exclamation of the sinners when they witness the supremacy of Jehovah. everlasting, i. e. "there is of course no allusion here to eternal punishment. The 'fire' is Jehovah's holiness, manifested in the destruction of His enemies; and this is called eternal because the Divine wrath against sin is inexhaustible."—Camb. Bib.

The Awfulness of God.—We see it reflected from the horror-struck faces of the ungodly and the profane. He is indeed seen to be a "consuming Fire," having his "furnace in Jerusalem" (ch. xxxi. 19). And all the immoral and the unprincipled, the heedless and the worldly, feel themselves as fuel for His wrath—they whom the continual returns of the Word preached do not alter, so that their old sins remain firm, entire, and unbattered, the baseness of their inclinations unchanged, the levity of their discourse and behavior; those whose former distresses and disasters have not laid low in the valleys of humility, nor circumscribed the lashings out of their luxury; they whose past miseries and restraints give only a relish instead of a check to present pride and intemperance;

those whom all the caresses of Providence have not been able to win upon, so as to endear them to a virtuous strictness, or deter them from a vicious extravagance;—all such—unless the great God be trivial and without concern in his grand transactions with our immortal souls—during this condition, so far as we can judge, are fashioning for wrath.—Pul. Com.

15, 16. "In two beautiful verses Isaiah gives the answer and sketches the portrait of the man who even in that appalling time may deem himself secure."—Driver. (15) walketh, The God-fearing man is not troubled by the presence of Divine judgments.^a shaking . . bribes, expressive gesture of indignant refusal.^b hearing of blood, schemes of violence and murder. seeing evil, or conniving at it. (16) on high, safe up out of the tumult and danger. munitions of rocks, strongholds or sure refuges. waters . . sure, even in times of national calamity. Waters from a perennial fountain.^c

Refusing a Bribe.—The borough of Hull, in the reign of Charles II., chose Andrew Marvell, a young gentleman of little or no fortune, and maintained him in London for the service of the public. His understanding, integrity, and spirit, were dreadful to the then infamous administration. Persuaded he would be theirs if properly asked, they sent his old school-fellow, the Lord Treasurer Danby, to renew acquaintance with him in his garret. At parting, the Lord Treasurer slipped into his hand £1,000, and then went to his chariot. Marvell, looking at the paper, called after the treasurer, "My Lord, I request another moment." They went up again to the garret, and the servant-boy was called, "I ask, child, what had I for dinner yesterday?" "Don't you remember, Sir, you had the little shoulder of mutton that you ordered me to bring from a woman in the market?" "Very right, child. What have I for dinner to-day?" "Don't you know, Sir, that you bid me lay the blade-bone to broil?" "It is so; very right, child, go away. My Lord, do you hear that? Andrew Marvell's dinner is provided: there is your piece of paper, I want it not; I know the sort of kindness you intended; I live here to serve my constituents, the ministry may seek men for their purpose; I am not one."—Whitcross. The Bankrupt's Entertainment.—Dr. Franklin relates the following anecdote of Mr. Denham, an American merchant, with whom he once went a passenger to England. "He had formerly," he says, "been in business at Bristol, had failed in debt to a number of people, compounded, and went to America; there, by close application to business as a merchant, he acquired a plentiful fortune in a few years. Returning to England in the ship with me, he invited his old creditors to an entertainment, at which he thanked them for the easy compensation they had favored him with; and when they expected nothing but the treat, every man, at the first remove, found under his plate an order on a banker for the full amount of the unpaid remainder, with interest."—Cheever.

17—19. (17) Again he returns to the picture of the golden age to come. king . . beauty,^a The Messiah, the glorious king.^b far off, R. V., "they shall behold a far stretching land," the world-wide dominion of the coming king. (18) meditate terror, R. V., "Thine heart shall muse on the terror: where is he that counted; where is he that weighed the tribute?" Looking back to past times of danger and oppression with wonder. (19) "The insolent people wilt thou see no more, the people of obscure, unintelligible speech, gibbering in a meaningless tongue."—Pol. Bib. stammering, barbarous.^c So languages seem which we do not understand.

The Seeing and the Sight (vs. 17).—I. The eyes. 1. Eyes that have been shut to evil; 2. That have delighted in every manifestation of evil; 3. That have been well employed; 4. That were often filled with tears; 5. Glorified eyes. II. The seeing. 1. See without interruption; 2. Without weariness or weakness; 3. Without curiosity; 4. Without disappointment; 5. Without insensibility. III. The sight. Christ shall be seen.—1. With beauty of countenance; 2. In His beautiful garments; 3. Surrounded by those beautified with salvation; 4. Crowned with many crowns.—Stems and Twigs.

the severity of the anger should certainly correspond with the magnitude of the wickedness perpetrated." —Arminius.

^a Comp. Ps. xv., xxiv.

^b "Won't receive any, but when they are put into his hands, shakes them out."—Gill.

^c Ps. xxxiv. 10.

"I creep under my Lord's wings in the great shower, and the waters cannot reach me. We may sing, even in our winter's storm, in the expectation of a summer's sun at the turn of the year. No created powers in hell, or out of hell, can mar our Lord's work, or spoil our song of joy." —Rutherford.

"God hath provided a sweet and quiet life for his children, could they improve and use it; a calm and firm conviction in all the storms and troubles that are about them, however things go, to find content, and be careful for nothing." —R. Leighton.

^a "Thine eyes shall see the Shechinah of the king of ages."—Targum.

^b Comp. Ps. xxvii. 4, lxxii. 2; Is. xxxviii. 11.

^c "The Assyrian was a foreign dialect, though of the same Semitic family with the Hebrew."—Wordsworth.

Jeremy Bentham mentions that the current of his thoughts and studies was directed for life, a single phrase that caught his eye at the end of a pamphlet—"The greatest good of the greatest number."

There was an ancient custom of putting an hour-glass into the coffin of the dead to signify that their time had run out, a useless notification to them. Better put the hour-glass into the hand of every living man, and show them the grains gliding steadily out. Soon all will be gone.

"Beauty lies in symmetry and completeness; he was perfectly holy, without spot or blemish. Beauty lies in subtle harmonies; and in Christ justice, love, and wisdom were all united in one. Beauty lies in conformity with moral law; and he was harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." — Pul. Com.

"Soul-eyes see the King. They are quick to discern God's presence. They detect him everywhere and in everything. Life is serious, life is glorious, to them, because God is always 'walking in the garden,' always close by." — Pul. Com.

a "The peculiar beauty of the imagery lies in ascribing permanence to a tent, which, from its very nature, must be movable. This may either imply a previous state of agitation and instability, or that the Church, though weak in herself, should be strengthened and established by the power of God." — J. A. Alexander.

Far Away.—

Upon the shore
Of Evermore
We sport like children at their play
And gather shells
Where sinks and swells
The mighty sea from far away.

Upon that beach,
Nor voice nor speech
Doth things intelligible say;
But through our souls
A whisper rolls
That comes to us from far away.

Into our ears
The voice of years
Comes deeper day by day:
We stoop to hear
As it draws near,
Its awfulness from far away.

At what it tells
We drop the shells
We were so full of yesterday,
And pick no more
Upon that shore,
But dream of brighter far away.

And o'er that tide,
Far out and wide,
The yearning of our souls doth stray:
We long to go
We do not know
Where it may be, but far away.

The mighty deep
Doth slowly creep
Upon the shore where we did play;
The very sand
Where we did stand
A moment since, swept far away.

Our playmates all,
Beyond our call,
Are passing hence, as we, too, may,
Unto that shore
Of Evermore,
Beyond the boundless far away.

We'll trust the wave
And Him to save,
Beneath whose feet as marble lay
The rolling deep,
For He can keep
Our souls in that dim far away.—Fraser's Mag.

20. Behold Zion as it will then be! Our city of festivals, safe, peaceful; secure as a tent which no storm can overthrow. stakes, by which the tent ropes were fastened." Terms borrowed from the nomadic life.

The City of Our Solemnities (vs. 20).—I. The object of contemplation—Zion symbolical of the residence of the living God; the place of holy convocations. II. The contemplation of the object. 1. To the worldling; 2. To the awakened penitent; 3. To the believer; 4. A prayer to God Himself, to look upon Zion, etc.—W. Jay.

A Citizen Saint.—According to the legend, Omobuono was a merchant of Cremona, who had received from his father but little school-learning; yet, from the moment he entered upon the management of his own affairs, a wisdom more than human seemed to inspire every action of his life. Diligent and thrifty, his stores increased daily, and, with his possessions, his almost boundless charity. Nor did his charity consist merely in giving his money in alms, nor in founding hospitals, but in the devotion of his whole heart towards relieving the sorrows as well as the necessities of the poor, and in exhorting and converting to repentance those who had been led into evil courses. Neither did this good saint think it necessary to lead a life of celibacy. He was married to a prudent and virtuous wife, who was sometimes uneasy lest her husband's excessive bounty to the poor should bring her children to beggary; but it was far otherwise. Omobuono increased daily in riches and prosperity, so that the people of the city believed that his stores were miraculously multiplied. It is related of him, that being on a journey with his family, and meeting some poor pilgrims who were ready to faint by the wayside with hunger and thirst, he gave them freely all the bread and wine he had provided for his own necessities; and, going afterwards to fill his empty wine-flasks from a running stream, the water, when poured out, proved to be most excellent wine; and his wallet was found full of wheaten bread, supplied by the angels in lieu of that which he had given away. As the life of Omobuono had been in all respects most blessed, so was his death; for one morning, being at his early devotions in the Church of St. Egidio, and kneeling before a crucifix, just as the choir were singing the Gloria in Excelsis, he stretched out his arms in the form of a cross, and in this attitude expired. He was canonized by Pope Innocent III. on the earnest petition of his fellow-citizens.—Mrs. Jameson.

21, 22. (21) glorious Lord, R. V., "But there the Lord will be with us in majesty, a place of broad rivers," etc.^a "Here Jerusalem is represented like the great cities of the Nile and Euphrates (cf. Nah. iii. 8), as surrounded by an expanse of waters, protecting it from the approach of an enemy. The idea, of course, is purely poetical."—Camb. Bib. galley, boat propelled by oars. gallant ship, vessel of burden; both used in hostile sense, as war vessels. (22) judge, etc.,^c in the New Jerusalem Jehovah is Judge, Lawgiver and King, and therefore also its Deliverer from every danger.

The Gospel Church (vs. 21).—I. The peace and tranquility of the Church of God, from—1. The character of its Governor; 2. The peaceful tempers of its inhabitants; 3. The security of its fortifications; 4. The destruction of its enemies. II. Its permanency and security. The tabernacle was—1. Of heavenly origin; 2. Its artificers Divinely inspired; 3. It exhibited tokens of the Divine glory. III. The nature of the supplies afforded to us. 1. They are Divine; 2. Abundant; 3. Inexhaustible; 4. Near, unmolested. Apply:—The doctrine of the text should—(1) Induce gratitude; (2) Inspire confidence; 3. Excite expectation.

Loyalty.—Three centuries ago the Spaniards were besieging the little town of St. Quentin, on the frontiers of France. Its ramparts were in ruins, fever and famine were decimating its defenders, treason was gliding among its terrified population. One day the Spaniards shot over the walls a shower of arrows, to which were attached little slips of parchment, promising the inhabitants that if they would surrender, their lives and property should be spared. Now, the governor of the town was the great leader of the Huguenots, Gaspard de Coligni. As his sole answer he took a piece of parchment, tied it to a javelin, wrote on it the two words Regem habemus—"We have a king"—and hurled it back into the camp of the enemy. There was his sole answer to all their threats and all their seductions. Now that was true loyalty—loyalty in imminent peril, loyalty ready to sacrifice all. But who was that king for whom, amidst sword and flame, amid fever and famine, Coligni was defending those breached and battered walls? It was the weak and miserable Henry II. of France, whose son, Charles IX., was afterwards guilty of the murder of Coligni and the infamies of St. Bartholomew. Have you a king? Is Christ your King? Ah, if He be, He is not a feeble, corrupt, false, treacherous man like Coligni's master, but a King who loves you, who died for you, who pleads with you even now on the

"As the earth's loftiest peaks rise not in their snows on some isolated hill that stands like a lonely pyramid on a level plain, but where the mountains are grouped and massed together, so the saint's most heavenly happiness is not attained in solitude, nor even amid domestic scenes, but where religious life exists in its social character."—Guthrie.

Is. xxvi. 1—3; Ps. cxvii. 1, 2.

^a "He is our fortification, our moat, and our river. Other cities, like Nineveh and Babylon, are protected by broad dykes and streams." — Wordsworth.

^c "This beautiful triplet expresses the confidence of the Church in the government and protection of Jehovah." — Henderson.

"Let your aim be to please our dear Lord perfectly in little things and to attain a spirit of child-like simplicity and dependence. In proportion as self-love and self-confidence are weakened, and our will bowed to that of God, so will hindrance disappear, the internal troubles and contests which harassed the soul vanish, and it will be filled with peace and tranquillity." — Jean Nicolas Gron.

"Some church-
have their roots on one side of the church wall and their boughs all hang over and drop the fruit on the world's side.
It is not only a question of where your roots are,
but where the
boughs hang and the apples fall."
—Theodore L.
Cuyler.

a "This is the evang. Prophet's anticipation of Him who said to the sick man,
'Son, be of good cheer; thy sins
are forgiven thee.'"
—Sir E.
Strachey.

"Comfort — 'tis for ease and quiet: it sleeps upon the down
of sweet content,
in the sound bed
of industry and health." — Hav-ard.

Trust not so much to the comforts of God,
as to the God of comforts. The greatest temptation Satan hath for the Christian is his comforts.

a Ps. xlix. 1.

b "This suggests the several ideas of contemptuous neglect, of a multitude too vast to be interred, and perhaps of survivors
too few to perform the duty."
—J. A. Alexander.

c Mat. xxiv. 29;
2 Pe. iii. 7-10;
Re. vi. 13, 14.

d "Prob. allusion to the phenomena of storms,
in wh. the sky
is first overcast,
and then covered with clouds, the motion of which gives it the appearance of being rolled together." — J. D.
Michaelis.

e "Edom was the ancient and inveterate enemy of the Jews." —
Henderson.

Nu. xx. 14-21;
Ps. cxxvii. 7;
Ob. 10-15.

right hand of the Majesty on High. Are you loyal to Him as Coligni was to the wretched Henry II.? Are you loyal at all—much more, would you be loyal to Christ, even unto death? If so, what will you do for Him? That is the test.—Old Test. Anec.

23, 24. (23) tacklings, contrast again of the present and the future. Now "thy tacklings hang loose, they do not hold fast the foot of the mast, nor keep the sail spread out," but then "spoil in abundance will be divided, even the lame will seize on a prey."^a In the first part of the vs. Zion is compared to an unseaworthy ship. mast, or cross-beam. The fittings are represented as broken by the Divine storm that discomfits them. lame, etc., a fine poetical touch, indicating how utterly the spoil was left at the disposal of anybody. (24) inhabitant, of Jerusalem.^a In the day of Divine deliverance and gracious rule.

Encouragement to the Weak (vs. 23).—Note the history in the context. I. How it was fulfilled on the occasion referred to. II. How it is fulfilling at this time. 1. Still are the weak triumphant through the power and grace of God. Are any weak in understanding, in grace, in faith? III. How it shall be fulfilled in the millennial age. Behold then—1. What encouragement is here given to serve the Lord; 2. What honor will be given to the Saviour at the last day.—C. Simeon.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FOURTH.

The judgment upon all nations, with special reference to Edom. Comp. Ezek. xxv. 12; xxxv.; Obad. 10-16. Mal. i. 2-5. 1-3. (1) nations, all peoples are to be instructed by God's dealings with and for His people.^a (2) all nations .. armies, "it is remarkable that no reason is assigned for Jehovah's anger." (3) cast out,^b as was the case with Sennac's army before Jerusalem. stink, Joel ii. 20. melted .. blood, as they are washed down by rains.

God's Dealing with One Nation for the Sake of Many.—Illustration of this point may run along three lines. I. A man's or a nation's genius is not for self. "The earth must hear," and know about it. All gifts are trusts. II. A man's or a nation's sufferings are not for self. The most striking illustration in a man is Job; in a nation, the people of Israel. All sufferers bear their part in the moral education, the redemption, of the race. III. A man's or a nation's judgments are not for self. We are not punished for our own sakes alone. Judgments follow us for the sake of the on-lookers.—Pulpit Com.

No Man Liveth to Himself.—

The healing of the world
Is in its nameless saints. Each separate star Seems nothing, but a myriad scattered stars Break up the night, and make it beautiful.—E. B. Browning.

4. host .. dissolved, the rebellious spirits that have co-operated with the rebellious nations are involved in the judgment.^c rolled .. scroll, fig. from the books of the period.^d fall down, R. V., "fade away, as the leaf fadeth," when the vine is stricken with frost or blight.

Things That are Eternal.—We look upon "all the host of heaven" as the very symbols of security. When we would signify some idea of eternity, we think of the sun that burns from age to age, without loss of light. But there is nothing eternal but right; nothing grand but truth; nothing worth preserving but pureness and love. In vain we seek to hide ourselves behind the sun; God's judgment will strike through that wall of fire and find us if we had stood before it face to face in open defiance; in vain we think to plunge ourselves into the forests of the constellations, and lose ourselves in the mysteries of the intricacies of the heavens; when God looks all things fall away from his gaze, and the sun is left to return to an angry yet loving God.—People's Bible.

5, 6. (5) For, etc., now begins the specific sentence against Edom.^e sword .. bathed, R. V., "hath drunk its fill," having first executed vengeance on the evil hosts of heaven it will now descend to the earth.

Idumæa, Edom.* (6) fat .. rams, the slaughter of the people of Edom is described under the fig. of a great sacrifice. Bozrah, the chief city of Edom. Now El Busaireh, in the mountainous region S.E. of the Dead Sea, half-way between it and Petra.*

Idumæa as it is, a Testimony to the Truth of Scripture.—The publication, in 1838, by Laborde and Linant, of their great work, Voyage de l'Arabie Pétrée, with its splendid engravings, has presented before the mind a bird's-eye view of the utter desolation of the country of Esau, such as would be beyond the power of mere verbal description. The topographical view of the land, taken from El Nakb, gives at a glance a most striking view of the land of Edom as it is, "most desolate," the "desolation of desolations," a once fertile region made bare, the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness stretched over it. When He whose prerogative it is to define the bounds of our habitation gave to Esau his inheritance, it was thus described through the lips of the patriarch Isaac:—"Behold, thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and the dews of heaven from above," and that it was such a land the allusions and descriptions of the Book of Job give abundant evidence (Job xix. 23, 24, xxxi. 35, 36,). It was a land exalted as high as wealth and art could raise it, the abode of a high state of civilization and commerce, and a country in which the arts had made considerable progress (Job. xxxiii. 1—11). But the sons of Edom transgressed, and woes were denounced against them and their territory, which have been as strikingly fulfilled as those beneath whose tremendous weight Nineveh, and Babylon, and Tyre, and Bethsaida, and Capernaum lie prostrate and forgotten. "Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will make thee most desolate. Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred, and hast shed the blood of the children of Israel by the force of the sword in the time of their calamity" (Ezek. xxxv. 3, 5). Now "wisdom is departed from Teman, and understanding has perished out of the mount of Esau," and the wanderers in that region are sunk in the grossest folly, regarding the ruins around them as the work of evil spirits (Obadiah 8). Travelers assert that the minds of the Bedouins are as bare and uncultivated as the deserts they traverse. "Our sheikh, Hassan," says Dr. Robinson, "had never known a Bedouin who could read; he had only heard that there were some in the far east."

7, 8. (7) unicorns, R. V., "wild oxen," an animal now extinct, but pictured on Assyrian bas-reliefs. fatness, i. e. enriched by the decaying bodies of the slain.^b (8) vengeance, ch. lxiii. 4. controversy of Zion, i. e. God arises to plead for Zion.^c

The Real Needs of Those to Whom Preaching is Addressed.—It cannot be denied that fear is a strong constraining motive. Human laws are enforced by penalties, the object of which is to "put men in fear." Punishment holds its place in every system of moral training, and punishment is an appeal to fear. Whatever may be the case with a chosen few, the bulk of mankind will always be more readily influenced by fear than by hope, by punishments than by rewards, by threats than by promises. The preacher cannot afford to lose the moral force which is thus put within his reach. It is hard enough to restrain men from evil courses, and induce them to lead a godly life, by freely using all the means of persuasion that are in our power. To refrain from using one of the most potent would be to fight Satan with one hand instead of two.—Pul. Com.

9, 10. (9) pitch, "This may plausibly be taken for a graphic description of an eruption of bitumen," such as was not uncommon. Sodom was in the neighborhood.^d Edom extended from the S.E. shore of the Dead Sea, the tomb of the cities of the plain. (10) not be quenched, comp. Jude 7. smoke, etc., Re. xviii. 18, xix. 3. "The eternity of the desolation is four times asserted."

Degeneracy.—It is a sad descent, a melancholy instance of degeneracy, when the thickly peopled city is abandoned by mankind, is untrodden by the human foot, and becomes the haunt of the wild beast, of the obscene bird, and of the "night-monster." The last and worst penalty which God's indignation inflicts on the children of men is utter spiritual degeneracy—the mind losing its intellectual faculties, and becoming imbecile through vice and folly; the will broken down and become helpless, bent and swayed with every breeze; the heart hardened so that ^z "Type of those who, belonging to the seed of promise, forfeited their privileges." — Spk. Com.

^s Ge. xxxvi. 33.

"Give me the comforts of God, and I can well bear the taunts of men. If my God will give me ever the light of His smile, and glance of His benediction, it is enough. Yea, death, slay me, but I have another life, a life in the light of God's countenance." — Spurgeon.

"It was an ethical maxim, extensively accepted among ancient nations, that men must suffer the same pains that they inflicted on others. The later Greeks called this the Neoplatonic tisis, from the circumstance that Neoptolemus was punished in the same way in which he had sinned. He had murdered at the altar, and at the altar he was murdered."

^a Job xxxix. 9.

^b Virgil says that Rom. blood had twice enriched the soil of Macedonia.

^c "To assert the rights of the true city of God against all that harass her." — Spk. Com.

^d Is. xlii. 19; De. xxix. 23, 24.

Comp. Is. lxvi. 24.

"There are to the S. E. of the Dead Sea, within three days' journey, upwards of eighty ruined towns absolutely desolated; several with large edifices." — Volney.

"The punishment of degeneration is simply degeneration—the loss of functions, the decay of organs, the atrophy of the spiritual nature."—Drummond.

^a Le. xi. 18; De. xiv. 17; Ps. cii. 6.

This bird frequents places remote from the habitations of man: so is a sign of desolate desert regions.

^b Mangles, while at Petra, describes the screaming of the eagles, hawks, and owls, seemingly annoyed at any one approaching their lonely habitation.

"It should be laid waste with as much care and exactness as men usually apply in building."—Spk. Com.

^c Is. xiii. 22.

"Animals that delight in solitude are certainly meant, but the particular species is, more or less, matter of conjecture."—Pul. Com.

^d "The wild cats shall meet the jackals."—Henderson.

^e "Lilith corresponding to the Lamia of Greek and Roman demonology, a she-demon haunting waste places, and supposed to be especially fatal to children."—Mat. Arnold.

^f "The general sense evidently is that a human population should be succeeded by wild and lonely animals, who should not only live, but breed there, implying total and continued desolation."—Alexander.

all feeling of pity and affection has departed; the soul foregoing and forgetting its higher aspirations and sunk into the condition in which it craves nothing better than worldly increase or animal indulgence. Sad as is the loss of position or estate when the powerful prince becomes a menial or the wealthy merchant becomes a beggar, immeasurably sadder in the sight of Heaven is that spiritual degeneracy in which, as the inevitable wages of sin, a human spirit loses all its nobility of character and becomes an outcast in creation, mere driftwood on the ocean, the sport of the devouring waves.—Pul. Com.

11—13. (11) cormorant, R. V., "pelican."^a bittern, R. V., "porcupine," ch. xiv. 23. owl, better, heron or crane.^b line of confusion. "Jehovah will stretch out thereon the measuring line of Chaos and the plummet of Desolation."—Pol. Bib.^c stones, R. V., plummet.^d (12) nobles, fr. whom the Edomite kings were elected. (13) dragons, R. V. "jackals."^e owls, R. V. "ostriches."

Idumæa.—Dr. Robinson finding himself on the "rolling desert of Arabah," says,—"A more frightful desert it had hardly been our lot to behold. Now and then a lone shrub of the Ghudah was almost the only trace of vegetation. The mountains beyond presented a most uninviting and hideous aspect; precipices and naked conical peaks of chalky and gravelly formation rising one above another without a sign of life or vegetation." True, after stumbling over many gulleys, they met with a fountain of which he says, "The water was sweet, but, like all desert fountains, had a sickly hue, as if it could bless nothing with fertility." All modern travelers unite in the declaration that it is one broad plain of barrenness and desolation, and that its present state could not be more graphically described than it is in the words of the prophetic writers. "These portray," says Dr. Olin, "a state of desolation and ruin the most absolute and irremediable, such as probably no portion of the globe once populous and fertile now exhibits." The fearful denunciations of the Prophets against this once rich and beautiful region and its highly civilized inhabitants, and their fulfilment, furnish an invulnerable argument in favor of the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. In the words of a modern writer, "Read here in the word of prophecy what desolations are foretold,—look here, over the land of Edom, how all is fulfilled, and can you but confess that this book is from God?"

Desolation.—

*"On rolls the stream with a perpetual sigh;
The rocks moan wildly as it passes by;
Hyssop and wormwood border all the strand,
And not a flower adorns the dreary land."*—Bryant.

14, 15. (14) wild beasts,^a Is. xiii. 21, 22. Meet with the wild beasts, R. V., "meet with the wolves," satyr, or shaggy he-goat; screech owl, R. V., "the night monster shall settle there." Heb. Lilith, from lil, night.^b "Charms against Lilith may be bought today in East London."—Pol. Bib. Render with Cheyne: the night-hag. Lilith appears to be a creation of the Babylonian demonology. "This Lilith plays a great part in the Talmudic demonology; the cabalistic Rabbis forged a whole legend in which this spirit is said to have taken a feminine form to deceive Adam, and to have united herself to him."—Lenormant. She is mentioned in the Bible only here.—Camb. Bib. (15) great owl, R. V., "arrow-snake." lay . . shadow, quite undisturbed by any passers by.^c mate, indicating settlement in the district for breeding purpose.

The Soul's Desolation and Need of Reconciliation:—Certainly a soul, sensible as to what the loss of communion with God is, counts it hath not fulfilled all its errand, when it hath bare peace given it. Should God say, "Soul I am friends with thee, I have ordered that thou shalt never go to hell, here is a discharge under My hand that thou shalt never be arrested for any debt more: but as for any fellowship with Me, thou canst expect none: I have done with thee for ever, never to be acquainted with thee more." Certainly the soul would find little joy with such peace. Were the fire out as to positive torments, yet a hell would be left in the dismal darkness which the soul would sit under for want of God's presence. A wicked heart seeks reconciliation without any longing after fellowship with God. Like the traitor, if the king will but pardon and save him from the gallows, he is ready to promise him never to trouble him at Court; 'tis his own life, not the king's favor, he desires.—W. Gurnall.

16, 17. (16) book the expression "book of Jehovah" appears to point to the existence of a prophetic canon; and the opening exhortation presupposes a habit of searching for evidences of the fulfilment of prophecy. All these circumstances would indicate a late date for the composition of this oracle."—Cam. Bib.^a of these, "take the book of Isaiah with you to Edom, and you will find that this reference to wild creatures is strictly accurate."—Pol. Bib. (17) cast the lot, i. e. arranged their lot; appointed Edom for these wild beasts. With evident allusion to God's dividing the land of Canaan among His people by lot.^b

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIFTH.

From the picture of judgment the prophet turns to that of the redemption of Israel. 1, 2. (1) wilderness,^a as contrasted with Edom—in Palestine there shall be no desert place. rose, probably the meadow saffron, an autumnal flower with bulbous roots.^b "The beautiful white narcissus so common in spring in the plain of Sharon."—Pol. Bib. (2) glory, etc., i. e. what had lain barren and waste was now to equal the most beautiful and magnificent scenes of nature. Lebanon, famous for its trees. Carmel, famous for its flowers. Sharon, famous for its fertility.^c "The fairest parts of the Holy Land shall share their beauty with less favored districts."—Cheyne. they shall see, i. e. the returning people of God.

Glorious Prospects of the Gospel Church (vss. 1, 2.)—I. The state of persons and places unenlightened by the Gospel. 1. Such a place must be a dreary wilderness; 2. The same is true of souls. II. The state to which they are brought by the Gospel. 1. Beautiful description of the change; beauty of the rose; stability of the cedar; 2. Fruitfulness of the richest pastures; 3. Unutterable joy as the result of all. III. Particular view of the Gospel by which these effects are wrought. Simple exhibition of Christ crucified, and perfections of God united in the work of redemption. 1. To this it is ascribed in the Word of God; 2. To this it is traced in experience of all.—Simeon.

Prevailing Joy.—The whole strain of the passage is jubilant, and it speaks of the desert "rejoicing with joy and singing." Sin and sadness are most intimately associated; even if they are not so inseparably allied as to be always seen together, they are so essentially connected that when one appears the other is sure to follow. It is a guilty world that knows so much of disappointment, of regret, of grief, of shame. But when the truth of God has wrought its full effect on the human soul, the prevailing note, even of the earthly life, will be that of joy. The near presence of the heavenly Father, the close friendship of the Divine Redeemer, the happy service of love, the blessed work of doing good, the exulting hope of heavenly bliss,—these are sources of joy which quicken and animate the soul, which make a holy human life radiant with a blessedness which anticipates the glory of the skies.—Clarkson. Civilization Unable to Renew Heathendom.—The civilization of Greece and Rome did not affect anything in the way of changing spiritual death into spiritual life. The utmost which it succeeded in effecting was to cover the frightful corruption of death with a more beautiful funeral pall—to hide the naked hideousness of sin behind a veil spangled with silver, and gold, and precious stones. But death was there none the less, and sin of such a kind that the foulest impurities of the most degraded heathen could not exceed the impurities of Athens and of Rome. The old lesson is being taught us, if we would but learn it, in our own day. It is not civilization that can change the moral desolation of France, of Spain, of Austria. It is not civilization, as understood by men of science and doctrinaire philosophers, that can change the moral wilderness existing in our large cities, and in much of our rural population. It will only do what it did in Greece; it will merely cover the ghastliness of death with a more decent covering.—Kay.

^a Comp. De. xxviii. 58, xlix. 20, 27; 2 Ki. xxii. 13; Is. xlix. 11, 12, 18, xxx. 8.

^b "He who originally allotted the land to the people (Nu. xxvi. 55; Jos. xix. 51) will now make it over by a formal act of transfer to these gloomy denizens."—Spk. Com.

"I would that every student of the Bible would take the motto which Bengel took for his guidance in study: 'Apply thyself wholly to the Scriptures, and the Scriptures wholly to thyself.' Learned critics are applying themselves wholly to the Scriptures with microscopic intensity of search and research, but they neglect the other half. We hear of some people who are famous at taking a sword and cutting up the Scripture, but we would like to see the Scripture, which is itself a sword, go through these men and cut some of them up, to their improvement as men."—A. J. Gordon.

^a "In contrast to the ruin of Edom the Prophet now describes Israel's triumphant march home through the blossoming wilderness."—Matthew Arnold.

Comp. Is. xli. 18, 19, xliii. 20, xlviii. 21, li. 3, li. 1v. 12, 13.

^b Song Sol. ii. 1. "Colchicum autumnale, or meadow saffron."—Gesenius.

^c Comp. Song Sol. iii. 9, iv. 8, 11, 15, vii. 4, ii. 1.

"There is not the least flower but seems to hold up its head, and look pleasantly, in the secret sense of the goodness of its heavenly Maker. This silent rhetoric, though we cannot hear, but only see it, is so full and expressive, that David thought he spoke neither impropriety nor nonsense, in a strong line, when he said, 'even the valleys break forth into singing.'"

"It would be thought a great thing for a king to bend down and release the slave. Yet God's own Son, God Himself 'manifest' is our Deliverer." — Pul. Com.

^a Heb. xlii. 12.

^b "The image presented is that of persons who can scarcely lift up their hands, or stand upon their legs." — Gill.

^c "Impatient of delay in the execution of God's promises." — Clericus.

"Sorrow, that like an ocean, dark, deep, rough, and shoreless, roll'd its billows o'er the soul perpetually, and without hope of end." — Pollok.

^d "So conspicuous and overpowering would be the interference of God on behalf of His people, that those of the most obtuse intellect could not fail to perceive it." — Henderson.

Our Lord appeals to this prophecy. See Mat. xi. 4—6; Lu. vii. 22.

^e See Ex. xvii. 6; Ps. lxxiv. 15, lxxviii. 15, 16.

The word sharab, "parched ground," A. V., more exactly

3, 4. (3) Strengthen ye,^a by encouraging assurances. The journey from Babylon to Jerusalem was a very long, difficult, and wearying one, especially trying to the weak and feeble ones of the company. weak hands, "that are relaxing their hold on God's promises."^b (4) fearful heart, lit. hasty, whose heart palpitates through fear.^c behold your God, etc., R. V., margin: "behold your God! vengeance cometh, the recompence of God." vengeance, upon His people's enemies. he will come, emphatically He Himself.

To the Fearful-hearted (vs. 4).—I. A counsel. Be strong.—1. In the power of religious principle; 2. In the power of prayer; 3. In the power of Divine grace; 4. In the power of Christ. II. A caution. Fear not.—1. On account of the greatness of your sins; 2. On account of your remaining corruptions; 3. On account of the dark dispensations of Providence.—G. Brooks.

The Believer's Weakness.—A believer finds himself weak in knowledge; a simple child in the knowledge of God and Divine things. He is weak in love; the sacred flame does not rise with a perpetual fervor. He is weak in faith; he cannot suspend his all upon God's promises with cheerful confidence, nor build a firm fabric of hope upon the rock, Jesus Christ. He is weak in hope; his hope is dashed with rising billows of fears and jealousies. He is weak in repentance; troubled with that plague of plagues, a hard heart. He is weak in resisting temptations; he is weak in prayer, a filial boldness, in approaching the mercy-seat. He is weak in courage to encounter the king of terrors. He is weak in everything in which he should be strong. These weaknesses the believer feels, and bitterly laments; and this sense of weakness keeps him dependent on Divine strength, enabling him to say: "When I am weak, then am I strong."—Pres. Davis. The Comprehensive Character of the Church of Christ.—In it are the weak as well as the strong. There is nothing whatever that is narrow about the Christian faith. It is not adapted to any particular class or character. In Jesus Christ there is neither male nor female, Greek nor Jew, cultivated nor uncultivated, bond nor free. And in him there is no favor reserved for any special disposition. It is not a gospel for those in particular who are most admired of men—for the strong, for the brave, for the wise, for the winning; it is a refuge for the weak, for the timid, for the unknown and the unbeloved. Those who are of no account at all amongst men, those whom human leaders would gladly leave out of their army as weakening rather than strengthening their forces,—these are all welcome to flock to the standard and to fight under the banner of the heavenly Prince.—Pul. Com.

5, 6. (5) eyes . . opened, comp. Is. vi. 9, 10.^d (6) lame . . leap, for literal fulfilment in Messianic times, see Ac. iii. 18, xiv. 10. waters break out, to the Eastern mind this bursting forth of a plentiful stream in an arid desert is one of the most beautiful and affecting images.^e Comp. Is. xli. 18, xliii. 19, 20, xlv. 3, 4. All of these figures declare a wonderful, blessed and miraculous change that is to occur, as if those who were blind were suddenly to receive their sight, etc.

The Way to the Better Land.—No jars and discords shall spoil the melody of our spheres; our holiness shall need no crutch, but reach the fulness of a perfect stature. This vale of tears quit for rivers of eternal pleasures, our rights can never be invaded there; nothing can stain the comforts of that world; no blots nor wounds are there contracted or endured; no troubles in that Israel. There are no pauses of astonishment through surprisals of affliction; death smites no corners there; providence makes no storms; the glory of that place knows no eclipse nor cloud; there charity knows no breach; there are no wrinkles on the brow of God, nor frowns upon the face of Majesty.—M. Sylvester.

7, 8. (7) parched ground, i. e. burning sand which produces the deceptive mirage. dragons, R. V., "jackals," or wolves, whose haunts are in dry places. reeds and rushes, the sure sign of moisture. (8) highway, see Is. xi. 16. A plain open path even through the desert regions. way of holiness, i. e. the way marked out by the Holy One, for the holy ones to walk over. for those, "better (with an emendation of the text): "but it shall be for his people." It is probable also that the next words should be joined to this clause,—"it shall be for His people when it walks in the way; fools shall not see therein."—Camb. B.^a fools, unable to guide themselves: these should have Divine guidance.

The King's Highway (vs. 8).—I. The path by which they go—"a highway." II. The pilgrim's passport—"a way of holiness." III. The protection they enjoy—"He shall be with them." IV. The immunity vouchsafed—"the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."—Preacher's Portfolio.—1. Highway of salvation is a raised, or made way. Illustration from custom of levelling roads and taking out stones for a royal progress. Show how Christ in His work levelled the road to God. 2. Highway of salvation is a holy way. No unclean pass over it. Yet it is for sinners, but only penitent sinners. Show who out of Bible story have trodden it. 3. Highway of salvation is a simple way. The difficulties we put in the way. A wicket-gate lies at head of the way, and by it we must enter.

A Safe Way.—This is important in our own country, where there are no ferocious animals lying in wait to destroy; but it was peculiarly important in Judæa and the countries adjoining it. Many parts of these are said to have been infested with beasts of prey, which frequently rushed from their places of concealment upon the passing traveler, and rendered even the public roads exceedingly dangerous. Hence the prophet says of the way to heaven through Christ, that "no lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast go up thereon; it shall not be found there." Not that we are to conclude that the redeemed have no foes to combat, and no difficulties to surmount in their course. Like the Israelites returning from Babylon, they have to pass through an enemy's country in their journey to Zion. But He who has redeemed them accompanies them in their pilgrimage; and though they are called to struggle and fight, He gives them the victory, and renders their path as safe as though there were no dangers near it, nor any to hurt and destroy.—Bradley. The Lord's Highway.—The difficulties we make; they are not really in the way. The way of salvation seems to wise people full of mystery, yet it is grasped by the wayfaring, the fool, the child. None need miss the way, for it is thoroughly well fitted with directions and guide-posts. We may blind ourselves, and refuse to see them. We may put obstacles in our own path. The one great obstacle takes many forms. What we really want is to keep our wilfulness; to make a way of our own; to get God to save us on our own terms. There is the highway open right before us, and we persist in looking this way and that, if so be we may find any way but Christ's way of penitence and faith.—R. Tuck.

9, 10. (9) lion, type of perils in the wilderness from savage animals. walk, or advance safely and securely along this way. A change has occurred in the animal world as wonderful as that in the nature of the desert. This the constant thought of prophecy. All nature is to be redeemed with man. (10) ransomed, Is. li. 11. return, to their own beloved city.^a obtain, Cheyne, "overtake."

The Joy of the Ransomed (vs. 10).—I. The people here mentioned, "The Ransomed of the Lord." II. What is said of them, "They shall return," etc. III. Their future portion. "They shall obtain joy," etc. IV. Remarks in application.—R. L. Armstrong.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SIXTH.

"Chaps. xxxvi., xxxvii. give the historical narrative of the events, the moral results of which we have seen so vivid in chap. xxxiii.—the perfidious return of the Assyrians to Jerusalem after Hezekiah had bought them off and their final disappearance from the Holy Land."—G. A. Smith. 1—3. (1) came to pass, comp. with the narratives in the historical books, 2 Ki. xviii. 13—20, xix; 2 Chr. xxxii. fourteenth year, B. C. 701. Sennacherib, this name on the Assyrian inscriptions can be recognized only with some uncertainty. Sennac. was viceroy for Sargon, his father, who was king at the time.^a defended cities, outlying forts, intended to check an invader. (2) Rabshakeh, an official title said to mean "chief of the officers." For the other officers see 2 Ki. xviii. 17. Lachish, a frontier

"looming sand-waste," refers to the mirage, of which it is the Arabic name. The vain shadows of the world, which deceive and never satisfy, are to be replaced by the enduring joys of the kingdom of God.—Birks.

^a "For the chosen people, who shall find the way so plain and easy, that the weakest can march in it without difficulty." — Matthew Arnold.

No one can imagine, without actual experience, the delight and eager expectation (when the vision first is seen), or the intense and bitter disappointment which the appearance of a mirage occasions to travelers, especially when their supply of water is spent.

"The Lord's highway is a well-kept way, broad, plentifully supplied with sunshine, margined with all fairest flowers and most fruitful trees; and the whole avenue, stretching heavenward, shall be filled with the ransomed of the Lord, bought, but not with money, redeemed, but not with price, and they shall come to Zion with songs. The song must always have a place in human history. The fool tries to sing his sorrow away, but there is no reason in the music, so the song is a failure. But this music is to be the last expression of a long process of discipline and chastening." — Parker.

^a Herodotus informs us that the expedition was made against Sethos, king of Egypt, and rebellious Judah, who had refused its tribute, was to be dealt with on the way.

1 Jos. x. 3; 2 Chr. xl. 9; Jer. xxxiv. 7.

"Blessed is any weight, however overwhelming, which God has been so good as to fasten with His own hand upon our shoulders." — F. W. Faber.

"God forgive them that raise an ill report upon the sweet cross of Christ; it is but our weak and dim eyes, that look but to the black side, that make us mistake." — S. Rutherford.

"We have nothing to fear from the boastful Rabshakehs of our day. The assaults to which our faith is now subjected are nothing new. Old weapons are refurbished, old stratagems resorted to; but it has survived attacks as clever as those now made upon it." — Wm. Guthrie.

"It was a good remark made by Professor Ball to a lady who put to him some questions about comets, to each of which he replied, 'I do not know.' 'Then,' she said, 'may I ask what is the use of your science?' 'To let me know, madam,' he replied, 'that I cannot know.' " so me things."

a. "Rabshakeh speaks here as if he had been instructed by some of the apostate Israelites, who pretended to worship 'the Lord' under the forms of heathen worship. To them Hezekiah town S.W. of Jerusalem.^b conduit, etc., see Is. vii. 2. (3) scribe, or secretary. recorder, or royal historian.

Sennacherib's Bismarck.—In all the Bible there is not a personage more clever than this Rabshakeh, nor more typical. He was an able deputy of the king who sent him, but he represented still more thoroughly the temper of the civilization to which he belonged. There is no word of this man which is not characteristic. A clever, fluent diplomatist, with a traveler's knowledge of men and the conqueror's contempt for them, the Rabshakeh is the product of a victorious empire like the Assyrian, or, say, like the British. Our services sometimes turn out the like of him—a creature able to speak to natives in their own language, full and ready of information, mastering the surface of affairs at a glance, but always baffled by the deeper tides which sway nations; a deft player upon party interests and the superficial human passions, but unfit to touch the deep strings of men's religion and patriotism. Let us speak, however, with respect of the Rabshakeh. From his rank (Sayce calls him the Vizier), as well as from the cleverness with which he explains what we know to have been the policy of Sennacherib towards the populations of Syria, he may well have been the inspiring mind at this time of the great Assyrian empire—Sennacherib's Bismarck.—Exp. Bib.

4, 5. (4) to Hezekiah, obs. that "Rabshakeh nowhere calls him king." What confidence, the officer assumed that, confident of Egyptian help, Hezekiah had thrown off the Assyrian yoke by refusing the tribute. (5) I say, R. V., "I say, thy counsel and strength for the war are but vain words;" others translate, "Thinkest thou a mere word of the lips is counsel and strength for war?" (Cheyne, Camb. Bib.)^a Rabshakeh would not understand Hezekiah's trust in God. rebellest, "Eight years after the destruction of the kingdom of Israel, Hezekiah refused to pay his tribute any longer."—Mat. Arnold.

The Believer's Trust (vs. 5).—I. An important question. II. The Christian's answer. 1. In the Father, believing that He has chosen me, that He will protect me, teach, guide; 2. In His Son, my Brother, my Saviour, my Intercessor, my Advocate; 3. In the Holy Spirit, that He will drive all sin out, curb my temper, subdue my will, enlighten my understanding, comfort my despondency, help my weakness, etc. III. Application:—If we trust the triune God, we trust a power that is never exhausted, a love that never wanes, a kindness that never changes, a wisdom that is never nonplussed, a faithfulness that never fails.—C. H. Spurgeon.

The Believer.—

All joy to the believer! He can speak—Trembling yet happy, confident yet meek—
"Since the dear hour that brought me to Thy foot,
And cut up all my follies by the root,
I never trusted in an arm but Thine,
Nor hoped but in Thy righteousness divine:
My prayers and alms, imperfect and defiled,
Were but the feeble efforts of a child;
Howe'er performed, it was their brightest part
That they proceeded from a grateful heart;
Cleansed in Thine own all-purifying blood,
Forgive their evil, and accept their good;
I cast them at Thy feet,—my only plea
Is what it was—dependence upon Thee,
While struggling in the vale of tears below,
That never failed, nor shall it fail me now."—Cowper.

6, 7. (6) staff . . reed, Eze. xxix. 6, 7. The reed, or cane, of the Nile was the symbol of the country. Sargon had already inflicted a heavy blow on Egypt. so is Pharaoh, comp. the experience of Samaria, Is. xxx. 3. (7) Lord our God, Rabshakeh had a very confused notion of the religion of the Jews, and fancied that Hezekiah had offended the national God, by the abolition of the local sanctuaries, and so even His protection had been removed from him.^a this altar, the parallel passage of 2 Kings (xviii. 22) has "this altar in Jerusalem." The brazen altar in the great court of the temple is, of course, meant. Hezekiah had cleansed it from the pollutions of the time of Ahaz (2 Chron. xxix. 18), and had insisted on sacrifice being offered nowhere else (2 Chron. xxix. 21—35; xxx. 15—24; xxxi. 1, etc.). Such a concentration of worship was unknown to any of the heathen nations, and may well have been unintelligible to them.—Pul. Com.

Modern Scepticism.—I put you on your guard against the scepticism of our time. And do you think that I am about to enlarge upon the scepticism of Rousseau, of Diderot, of Voltaire, of Bolingbroke, of Hobbes, and of Hume?—that was swept away with their ashes, and is buried. The great scepticisms of our time are market scepticism, political scepticism, and religious scepticism. Men who feel that it would be wicked to sacrifice great pecuniary interests for the sake of principle; men who think it would be a tempting of Providence to refuse profitable business speculations, to leave profitable situations, or to refuse dividends of evil; men whose consciences will not permit them, as the members of a corporation, to expose its wickedness; men who stand in the market, and feel that they have a right to do anything that wins,—these men are infidels. You need not tell me that they believe in the Bible: they believe in an empty Bible,—a Bible of the letter, and not a Bible of the spirit, which says to a man, "Sacrifice your right hand before you do your integrity."—H. W. Beecher.

8—10. (8) pledges, hostages, as security that payment of tribute shall be resumed. The hostages were to be two thousand soldiers fit for cavalry. Evidently Rabshakeh intended to taunt Hezekiah concerning his military inefficiency. The Jews were specially weak in cavalry, and in this branch the Assyrian army was strong.^b (9) Pol. Bib. "How then canst thou repel the onset of one the least servants of my Lord? And yet thou putteth thy trust in Egypt," etc. (10) the Lord said, "that the Assyrian should represent himself as commissioned by Jehovah to avenge the desecration of his sanctuaries is not by any means incredible. A precisely similar sentiment it put into the mouth of Cyrus in his account of the conquest of Babylon. It expresses no serious religious conviction (see vs. 20)"—Camb. Bib.

11, 12. (11) Syrian language, the Aramaic, the language of commerce, especially used in W. Asia. Jews' language, the Hebrew. It was the purpose of the Rabshakeh to destroy both the religious and military confidence of the common soldiers. This the Jewish officers also feared. (12) men . . wall, throughout Rabshakeh treats Hezekiah and his officers most contemptuously.^c that . . eat, etc. Pol. Bib., "who will be driven to eat and drink filthy food with you?" i. e. as a result of Hezekiah's policy. Comp. vs. 16.

Philosophical Doubt.—Although it has done harm, has also done good; good results have come with the spirit of investigation that has been developed. It was no great credit to Thomas that he did not believe the resurrection of Christ as others did, and yet what a wonderful chapter in the evidences of Christianity was opened by his scepticism! It was no great credit to men that they called in question the authenticity of the four gospels, but how their scepticism has stimulated scholarly inquiry and strengthened the defenses of the gospel narratives! When the elevated railroad was first started in New York the people were a little timid about riding on it; so the proprietors of the road took great pleasure in apprising the public of the fact that this road had been subjected to a most abnormal and enormous tonnage, and that consequently people of ordinary weight might deem themselves quite safe in traveling over that road. I feel the same way about the four gospels—that I can take my way to heaven above the din and dust of daily life because this elevated road has had all Germany upon it and that as yet it has given no sign of instability.—Francis L. Patton.

13—17. (13) cried, with evident intention of shaking the allegiance of the people, the customary policy of Sennacherib. (14) deceive you, by his assurances and promises. (15) trust in the Lord, he not only insults Hezekiah, but flings his insults directly at Jehovah, whose name and power were soon after vindicated in the awful destruction of Sennacherib's host. (16) Make . . present, R. V., "Make your peace with me, and come," etc. come out to me, the ordinary phrase for surrender of a was an irreverent iconoclast, a narrow-minded bigot." — Spk. Com.

"Neither scepticism nor agnosticism ever won a victory, ever slew a sin, ever healed a heartache, ever produced a ray of sunshine, ever saved an immortal soul. Unbelief is foredoomed to defeat; do not risk your eternity on that spider's web." — Theodore L. Cuyler.

^b "Hezekiah might have furnished 2,000 men for Rabshakeh's army, but not 2,000 trained for cavalry, as the training of cavalry was forbidden by Mosaic law." — Henderson.

^c "Isalah, as a faithful historian, records the filthy and blasphemous language of the Assyrian, to mark aright the true character of the attack on Jerusalem." — Fausset.

"If I once learn that there is the blessing of God in everything, what a life of blessing, and love and joy unspeakable I shall have. If I am a child of God every circumstance of my life, every comfort and every trial, comes from God in Christ. So if I give up my whole life to Jesus, nothing really harmful can touch a hair of my head." — Andrew Murray.

"Christ never failed to distinguish between doubt and unbelief. Doubt is 'can't believe'; unbelief is 'won't believe.' Doubt is honesty; unbelief is obstinacy. Doubt is looking for light; unbelief is content with darkness." — Drummond.

"Young gentlemen, believe your belief, and doubt your doubts; do not make the mistake of doubting your beliefs and believing your doubts." — C. F. Deems.

* Ki. xvii. 24.

b Ex. xiv. 14.

"Silence is the birthplace of the world's progress, and from the rays of truth that flash into it are born the grand visions of the prophets of God, and kingly purposes too; and from these are forged the weapons with which men shall sweep away the hindrances to all wisdom." — J. Macrae Simcock.

"Very many of the bravely uttered scepticisms of our time are only designed to draw attention to those who utter them. Leave them alone. They are nothing; we must take care not to swell them into something by directing attention to them. Those who have faith in God make grave mistakes when they too vigorously defend God against the arrows of mere children." — Pul. Com.

Van Lennep says that nowadays this tearing of garments is quite a sham. They only split a seam down a little way, so that it can easily be mended.

city. (17) Until I come, back from successful war with Egypt. take you away, it was regarded as politically necessary to the schemes of Assyria to remove the kingdom of Judah, which might seriously interfere with the conquest and holding of Egypt. Rabshakeh smoothes this over with fair promises.

Utility of Opposition.—A certain amount of opposition is a great help to a man. Kites rise against, and not with the wind. Even a head-wind is better than none. No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm. Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition. Opposition is what he wants, and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-reliance. He that cannot abide the storm without flinching or quailing, strips himself in the sunshine, and lies down by the wayside to be overlooked and forgotten. He who but braces himself to the struggle when the winds blow, gives up when they have done, and falls asleep in the stillness that follows.— F. Neal.

18—21. (18) any . . delivered, Rabshakeh has the name of the Jews' God, but he classes Him with the gods of other nations. (19) Hamath . . Arphad, Is. x. 9. Sepharvaim,^a now Sipphara, on the E. of Euphrates, above Babylon. (20) that the Lord should, this is a direct challenge to Jehovah to show Himself other than the gods of the nations. (21) peace,^b answer him not, "we are not to suppose that the Jewish king was at a loss for an answer. He did not choose to bandy words with an envoy who had behaved himself so outrageously."

The Rabshakeh.—So clever were the speeches of the Rabshakeh. We see why he was appointed to this mission. He was an expert both in the language and religion of this tribe, perched on its rock in the remote Judean highlands. For a foreigner he showed marvelous familiarity with the temper and internal jealousies of the Jewish religion. He turned these on each other almost as adroitly as Paul himself did in the disputes between Sadducees and Pharisees. How the fellow knew his cleverness, strutting there betwixt army and town! He would show his soldier friends the proper way of dealing with stubborn barbarians. He would astonish those faith-proud highlanders by exhibiting how much he was aware of the life behind their thick walls and silent faces.—G. A. Smith. God's Honor Vindicated by His Word.—Once upon a time a grand old Methodist preacher, called John Nelson—a man whose life ought to be read often on Saturday night by preachers who have got their skeletons ready, in order that they might be fired to do their work—was obliged to become a soldier, and as he was arrayed, and was being mocked by many, a woman came to him and said, "Nelson, where is now thy God? Thou didst say at Shent's door that thou hadst no more fear of all his promises failing than thou hadst of falling through the center of the earth. Where is now thy God?" You know how mocking a bad woman can be, what sharpness there is in her voice. Nelson, in whom the word of God dwelt richly, said, "You will find the answer in the seventh chapter of Micah, the eighth and tenth verses." "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me. Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets." Everything is in the Bible!—Peop. Bib.

22. clothes rent, as a sign of their distress at the blasphemies to wh. they had been compelled to listen. See Is. xxxiii. 7, xxxvii. 1; Matt. xxvi. 65.

Unavailing Fear.—He that trembles at the very sight of his burden, with what courage will he be able to stand under it? Can the trembling of the lamb keep off or mitigate the rage of the wolf? He that continually torments himself with the fear of an approaching evil, does anticipate his misery, not avoid it. Every strong apprehension of an object is a certain approximation of it to the soul. Fear makes the evil that is feared present to a man, in respect of its trouble, before it can be present in its existence: wherefore it is so far from keeping off a calamity that it brings it before its time. It was not Hezekiah's fear of Sennacherib, but his confidence in God that did protect him.—Smith.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SEVENTH.

1, 2. (1) sackcloth, rough hair garment: a further sign of humiliation and grief." (2) unto Isaiah, "the embassy consists of two chief ministers, and the elders of the priests." The appearance of Shebna on such an errand was a striking evidence of the completeness of Isaiah's moral victory (ch. xxii. 15 ff.).—Camb. Bib.

Believing is Trusting.—There is a boy whose father was buried yesterday. To-day he is wearing his father's gold watch. Some wicked lads are trying to take it from him. He is struggling to keep it; but they are too strong for him. He is just about to lose it, when I come up, and say, "Give it to me, my boy, and I'll keep it safe for you." For a moment he looks at me with doubtful eye; but as I say to him, "Trust me!" and he sees that I am earnest and sincere, he hands it over to me, and I prevent him from being robbed. That is just what the Apostle Paul says of himself. He had, as you have, something far more precious than a gold watch—an immortal soul; and he was afraid of losing it: he could not keep it himself. Jesus said, "Give it to Me," and he gave it to Him; and then you hear him say rejoicingly, "I know whom I have believed" (which is the same thing as whom I have trusted), "and am persuaded that He will keep that which I have committed to Him against that day." You, my dear friends, have souls too, and they are in danger of being lost; there is only one way of getting them saved—giving them into the keeping of Jesus, "trusting" Him with them. What warrant have you for trusting Him? Just what Paul had—His own word; and that is always enough.—J. H. Wilson.

3-5. (3) rebuke, or reproof, for an Assyrian policy of Ahaz, the bitterness of which the people were now made to feel. blasphemy, R. V., "contumely." children . . forth," a poetical figure for disappointed expectations. When Hezekiah threw off the Assyrian yoke, the people looked for perfect security from evil consequences. But now they were humiliated and in extreme peril. (4) lift up thy prayer, act, that is, as national intercessor. remnant, i. e. the two tribes composing the kingdom of Judah.

The Greatness of Prayer that Rises to be Intercession.—Man's power of prayer is a faculty full of high possibilities. It may rise even to this—it may go beyond all self-spheres, and become intercessory. While prayer keeps in the self-sphere there is a certain narrowness and even meanness about it. It is all concerned with what we want, and what we feel, and we are greatly comforted if we have any fervor of emotion in such prayer. But we feel that a course of daily prayer from which the interceding element is removed would be most injurious to the spiritual life. It lacks the generous, sympathetic, unselfish element, and it will very soon lack fervor and faith. No one can long keep up a prayerful life, and persist in praying altogether about himself. Power comes, love grows, when prayer includes intercession. Limitations of earnestness and importunity pass away; the soul is free to urge its pleas with persevering instance; we can ask for another what we dare not fashion into a prayer for ourselves. The prayers of Scripture are, for the most part, intercessory—Abraham's for Sodom; Moses', Joshua's, Samuel's, for the people of Israel in their distresses. Daniel prays with the window open towards desolate Jerusalem, that he may be reminded of the captive people. Our last sight of Job finds him in the attitude of the mediator, praying for God's mercy on his mistaken and cruel friends. And the Apostle Paul writes again and again of the constancy of his intercessions. We may learn the secret of the poverty and formality of much Christian praying. It has so little intercession in it. When some beloved friend is smitten down with imperiling sickness, our prayer suddenly gains strength, and becomes a thing full of fervor and pathos. All our souls then go out in strong crying and tears. But this power might be in our praying always. We might be not only prayerful men, but also prayer-leaders, carrying the burdens of others to the throne of grace, and ourselves sanctified through the carrying.—Ful. Com.

a 1 Ki. viii. 29.

Ps. lxxviii. 16, 17, lxxvii. 13.

"Of the king's prompt appeal to God in his extremity, Gill quaintly says, Hezekiah does not sit down to consider Rabshakeh's speech, to take it in pieces, and give an answer to it, but he applies unto God."—Alexander.

"In all ages the people of God have really had nothing to trust to but God Himself. . . . It has always been difficult to trust the purely spiritual."—Parker.

b Is. xxvi. 18.

"But be not long; for in the tedious minutes—exquisite interval—I'm on the rack; for sure the greatest evilman can know bears no proportion to this dread suspense."—Froude.

"Why should I start at the plough of my Lord, that maketh deep furrows in my soul? I know He is no idle husbandman, He purposeth a crop."—S. Rutherford.

"There is but one thing of which I am afraid, and that is fear."—Montaigne.

"The direst foe of courage is the fear itself, not the object of it; and the man who can overcome his own terror is a hero and more."—George MacDonald.

"Some are in the habit of shouting, 'No surrender;' but I say we should all surrender; we should surrender our passions, and our prejudices, and our uncharitableness towards others. We should seek to win as much as we can from the common humanity of our adversaries. The good and the wise will pursue this course, and they will succeed; whilst the treacherous, the arrogant, and the intolerant will dwindle far behind in the march, and will perish of self-contention, instead of coming up to win the laurels." —Bamford.

^a "Tirhakah was one of the most famous conquerors of ancient times. He was at this time either in close alliance with Egypt, or more prob. in actual possession of Thebais, or Upper Egypt." —Alexander.

^b Comp. Is. xxxvi. 18—21.

"It is the want of the discerning faculty, the clairvoyant power of seeing the eternal in the temporal, rather than the failure of the reason, that begets the sceptic." —Drummond.

^a Is. xiv. 16.

^b 2 Ki. xvii. 6, xviii. 11.

"The Ganzanitis of Ptolemy. To it a portion of the ten tribes were transferred by Shalmaneser. The modern Kaushan." —Alexander.

Tel means a hill in Arabic and Assyrian names.

^c Musculus understands the dual form of Sepharvaim as denoting that it

6, 7. (6) not afraid, there was no reason for fear if God took up the case, and vindicated His insulted majesty. blasphemed me, obs. that the Me is emphatic. (7) blast, R. V., "I will put a spirit in him," 1. e. "a spirit of craven fear, depriving him of his natural courage and resourcefulness. How the spirit will work is stated in what follows: a mere rumor will drive him back to his own land, there to meet his death (cf. 2 Ki. vii. 6). There is no allusion in this oracle to the disastrous blow recorded in vs. 36. The 'rumor' is no doubt that of the approach of Tirhakah (vs. 9)." —Camb. Bib.^a

"We cannot at times help the entrance of evil, but we can help the entertainment of it. We must treat all the evil surmises of wicked men with the disdain that they deserve. We can, as Solomon suggests, 'turn from it and pass away.' Besides, just as there is in love what Dr. Chalmers calls 'the expulsive power of a new affection,' so there is in love to God a power to banish all that old love of the world which makes men mingle with the irreverent and undevout. The syren voice of evil whisperings will have no charm for us when we hide God's Word in our heart. The best answer is to trust in God and do the right."

8—10. (8) Libnah, ten miles north of Lachish, and nearer to Jerusalem. Whether he had taken Lachish does not appear. (9) Ethiopia, see Is. xviii. for an account of Tirhakah.^a sent messengers, bec. he could not execute immediate vengeance on Hezekiah, as he required all his army to meet Tirhakah. So he gave Hezekiah a respite, but severely threatened him. (10) God... deceive,^b the action lacks the assurance of the Rabshakeh's threats. It is evident that Sennacherib now fears lest an alliance may be effected.

The God in Whom We Trust.—Do we find men leaning on God, and so leaning on Him that their hearts are full of peace, of spiritual rest, of hope, of heavenly joy? Is "the God in whom we trust" a phrase that has as large and full of meaning to our minds as it should have? Is not a living, sustaining, rejoicing trust in God a comparatively rare, rather than a constant and universal thing, even in Christian hearts? And why is it so, if so it be? Is it not because we allow ourselves to be so sadly imposed upon by the temporal and the superficial? We persist in representing to ourselves that the visible, the audible, the tangible, the material, is the real, the true, and the substantial. We, who walk by faith and not by sight, whose life is spiritual, who are citizens of heaven, ought to understand that it is this which is illusive, evanescent, unreal, and that the invisible, the intangible, the eternal, is the real and the reliable; we ought to know and to realize that he, whom not having seen we love, the invisible but ever present, the almighty and never-failing Saviour, is the One who is worthy of our confidence, and in the deepest and fullest sense it should be true that it is the Lord in whom we trust.—Pul. Com.

11—13. (11) all lands, the language of boastfulness.^a destroying them, lit. devoting them: treating them as Divinely accursed. (12) Gozan, a district of Mesopotamia, on the river Chabour.^b Haran, Ge. xi. 31. The Carrhae of the Romans. Rezeph, about a day's journey W. of Euphrates. Eden, a region in Mesopotamia, in wh. poss., the garden of Eden was situated. Telassar, now Tel-afer, W. of Mosul.—Layard. All of these names are additional to those given by Rabshakeh. (13) Hena, and Ivah,^c in Babylonia (see 2 Ki. xvii. 24).

Modern Infidelity.—I understand that as the most dangerous, because the most attractive, form of modern infidelity which, pretending to exalt the beneficence of the Deity, degrades it into a reckless infinitude of mercy, and blind obliteration of the work of sin; and which does this chiefly by dwelling on the manifold appearances of God's kindness on the face of creation. Such kindness is, indeed, everywhere and always visible, but not alone. Wrath and threatening are invariably mingled with the love; and, in the utmost solitudes of nature, the existence of hell seems to me as legibly declared by a thousand spiritual utterances as of heaven. It is well for us to dwell with thankfulness on the unfolding of the flower, and the falling of the dew, and the sleep of the green fields in the sunshine; but the blasted trunk, the barren rock, the moaning of the bleak winds, the roar of the black, perilous whirlpools of the mountain's streams, the solemn solitudes of moors and seas, the continual fading of all beauty into darkness, and all strength into dust, have these no language for us? We may seek to escape their teachings by reasonings touching the good which is wrought out of all evil; but it is vain sophistry. The good succeeds to the evil as day succeeds the night; but so also does the evil to the good. Gerizim and Ebal, birth and death, light and darkness, heaven and hell, divide the existence of man and his futurity.—Ruskin.

14. the letter, containing the insults and threatenings given in the preceding verses. It seems to have been a proper official document from Sennacherib, but prob. was composed and written by Rabshakeh, as it so nearly resembles his speech. went . . . Lord, comp. vs. 1. spread it, it was written on a scroll which Hezekiah unfolded, that Jehovah might take notice of the arrogance displayed by it. The act is symbolic. Similarly the Jews at the beginning of the Maccabee insurrection spread out in prayer a copy of the Law, defaced with idolatrous pictures, as a witness to the outrages perpetrated against their religion (1 Macc. iii. 48).^a —Camb. Bib.

Answers to Prayer.—The Bible is full of stories that show us what great blessings have been received through prayer. Abraham's servant prayed when he was seeking a wife for his master Isaac, and he found the right one. Jacob prayed when he was wrestling with the angel, and he got a blessing from him. Moses prayed, and his prayer opened a way of escape for the Israelites through the Red Sea. Hannah prayed, and Samuel was born. What a blessing that was. David prayed, and the blessing he received was victory over the giant. Elijah prayed, and his prayer shut up the windows of heaven, so that there was no rain for three years. He prayed again, and his prayer brought abundance of rain to refresh the parched earth. What a blessing that was! Isaiah and Hezekiah prayed, and an army of an hundred and eighty-five thousand men were killed in one night. Daniel prayed in the lion's den, and his prayer shut the mouths of the lions. Jonah prayed in the belly of the whale, and his prayer brought him up from the bottom of the sea, and set him down safely on the dry land again. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego prayed in the burning, fiery furnace, and their prayers kept them from being hurt by the fire. These are a few of the cases mentioned in the Bible which show us the blessings obtained by prayer.

15—17. (15) prayed,^a comp. 2 Chron. xxxii. 20, where Isaiah is represented as joining the prayer. (16) God of Israel, comp. 2 Chr. xxx. 1, 5. dwestest, R. V., "sittest upon the cherubim," lit. the inhabitant of the cherubs.^b thou alone, so that there is no comparison between Jehovah and the gods of the nations to whom Sennac. referred. made . . . earth, so absolutely all power must be in Thine hand. "This prayer reveals how pure and elevated a Monotheism God's spirit had at last developed from the national faith of Israel."—G. A. Smith. (17) thine ear, etc., see 2 Chr. vii. 15, 16. Note the singular ear and plural eyes.^c 18—20. (18) Of a truth, or, it is true, Lord, even as he boasts.^d laid waste, lit. dried up. countries, R. V., "land." (19) no gods, having no claim to the dignity, or share of the power, properly belonging to God: only idols.^e (20) know, the loftiest souls among the Jews felt that their nation was meant to be God's witness to the rest of the world. Comp. 1 Sam. xviii. 46, etc.—Lumby.

Work of Men's Hands.—In a letter written by a French Jesuit, about a hundred years ago, it is stated, that at a place several leagues westward of Madras, some masons, who had embraced Christianity, were employed by a Brahmin to repair the embankment of a reservoir of water. It is customary among the Hindoos to place in such situations a number of small idols made of stone. These the workmen designedly buried in the earth which they threw up to strengthen the embankment. The Brahmin coming to inspect their progress, said, "I see nothing of our gods; what have you done with them?" "What is it you mean, Sir?" replied the overseer; "I saw a heap of stones which I thought would be of use to strengthen the embankment; but as for gods, I saw nothing of the kind." "Those were the things you ought to have taken care of," said the Brahmin; "did you not know they were our gods?" "Those things," answered the overseer, "I understand as well as anybody; it is consisted of two towns, perhaps on different sides of the Euphrates, and that Hena and Ivah were the distinctive names of these towns." —Alexander.

^a "God knows our necessities before we ask Him, but He delights in our unfolding them to Him with filial confidence." —Fausset.

Is. xxxiii. 22.

^a "A most appropriate and beautiful prayer, expressive of a clear faith and confident trust in Jehovah, as the only God, in opposition to the claims advanced by idolaters in behalf of their deities; and recognizing the Divine glory as the result of the supplicated deliverance." —Henderson.

^b Ps. lxxx. 1, xcix. 1.

^c "When we would listen to any one we naturally incline one of our ears towards him, but when we would look at anything we open both our eyes." —Gesenius.

^d "Faith does not seek to evade a any seemingly adverse facts urged by infidelity. The Assyrian's induction as to the vanity of the 'religions of the world' was correct; but it did not prove Hezekiah's 'affiance to be vain.'" —Spk. Com.

^e "Whatever idolaters may theoretically hold as to the nature of their deities, they identify them practically with the stocks and stones to which they pay their adorations." —Alexander.

"Our life is a trust, not a gift; let us use it accordingly." — Robert E. Speer.

"He that saveth his time from prayer shall lose it. He that loseth his time for communion with God shall find it in blessing." — R. P. Wilder.

"This, indeed, is one of the best uses of prayer, namely, the enlargement of soul which follows it, the glow which makes the whole heart glad, and the sense of divine nearness which inspires timidity itself with invincible courage." — Parker.

^a Comp. Is. xxx. 19.

"Faith is the rock, while every good action is as a stone laid thereon. As the foundation without the walls is of slender value, so the building without a basis cannot stand; they are so inseparable that their conjunction makes them good." — J. Beaumont.

"Natural religion depends on the energy of the flesh. Supernatural religion depends on the energy of the Spirit of God, which comes down from above. It is quite possible to be perfectly right in the forms of our service, and yet destitute of divine power." — George F. Pentecost.

my business to do so; and, take my word for it, Sir, they were nothing but stones: if they were gods, as you say they are, they could easily get up again into their old places." — Whitecross.

A Prayer.—

Thou, who dost dwell alone;
Thou, who dost know Thine own;
Thou, to whom all are known,
From the cradle to the grave—
Save, O save!

From the world's temptations, from tribulations,
From that fierce anguish wherein we languish,
From that torpor deep wherein we lie asleep,
Heavy as death, cold as the grave—
Save, O save!

When the soul, growing clearer, sees God no nearer;
When the soul, mounting higher, to God comes no nigher,
But the arch fiend Pride mounts at her side,
Foiling her high emprise, sealing her eagle eyes;
And when she fain would soar, makes idols to adore,
Changing the pure emotion of her high devotion
To a skin-deep sense
Of her own eloquence;
Strong to deceive, strong to enslave—
Save, O save!

From the ingrained fashion
Of this earthly nature that mars Thy creature;
From grief, that is but passion;
From mirth, that is but feigning; from tears that bring no healing;
From wild and weak complaining; Thine own strength revealing—
Save, O save!

From doubt, where all is double, where wise men are not strong,
Where comfort turns to trouble, where just men suffer wrong,
Where sorrow treads on joy, where sweet things soonest cloy,
Where faiths are built on dust, where love is half mistrust, Hungry, and barren, and sharp as the sea—
O set us free!

O let the false dream fly, where our sick souls do lie
Tossing continually.

O where Thy voice doth come, let all our doubts be dumb;
Let all words be mild, all strife reconciled.

All pains beguiled.
Light brings no blindness, love no unkindness,
Knowledge no ruin, fear no undoing—
From the cradle to the grave,
Save, O save!

—Mat. Arnold.

21, 22. (21) sent, etc.,^a obs. that the answer of God in those days came through the prophet, not through the priest. (22) virgin, i. e. hitherto, since David's time, Jerusalem had never been conquered. daughter of Zion, Is. i. 8. at thee, or after thee, as if she watched Sennac's humiliating retreat. "To shake the head was, among the Hebrews, an expression of contempt." — Henderson.

The Boldness of the Citizen of Zion (vs. 22).—Strong faith enables the servants of God to look with calm contempt upon their most haughty foes. I. We know that our enemies are attempting impossibilities. II. We know their weakness. III. Above all, we know that the Most High is with us.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Answers to Prayers.—It would seem as if the Lord replied to Hezekiah's prayer through the instrumentality of Isaiah, for Isaiah begins his answer to Hezekiah, saying, "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to Me against Sennacherib king of Assyria: this is the word which the Lord hath spoken concerning him." This is remarkable as showing in how many ways we may receive answers to prayer. It could not have been thought that the Lord would answer a prayer addressed to Him by sending a message through some other man. But thus we are to look for answers to our petitions. We cannot tell how the reply will come—by man, or woman, or child, or unexpected event, or unknown correspondent, or impressions produced upon the mind apparently without any ability on our part to trace their origin or account for their suddenness or their emphasis. We should always be looking for answers to prayers, not always by lifting up our heads and directing our eyes to the far-away heavens; we should open our ears to listen to the words which are being spoken immediately around us, for in the common conversation of the day we may receive some hint as to the destiny and effect of our own prayers.—Peop. Bib.

23—25. (23) Whom, a solemn call to consider the glory and power of Jehovah. Holy . . . Israel, the name for God frequently used by Isaiah, and most characteristic of him. (24) servants, in allusion to Rabshakeh's boastings. Lebanon, one of the choicest parts of Palestine and its glorious trees the pride of the country. height . . . border, R. V., "and I will enter into his farthest height, the forest of his fruitful field." (25) digged, getting water in waste desert places, where there seemed to be none. dried . . . places, equally overcoming the difficulties of moats and rivers. "The king of Assyria is represented as boasting of the ease with which he triumphs over all natural obstacles in the pursuance of his plans; such language is blasphemy against Jehovah, the Lord of Nature; although the king himself may be hardly conscious of the sin he is committing."—Camb. Bib.

The Intoxication of Success.—This is the common consequence of success—even of success which is not unholy, which is not obtained regardless of the power and will of God; it is sometimes the unhappy result of success in sacred ministries; how much more so must it be, and is it found to be, the result in the case of those who "fear not God, nor regard man!" Unholy success intoxicates. It makes men imagine that they have done far greater things than they have achieved, and that they have become far greater people than they are. It often rears its head so high that, as with Sennacherib, arrogance passes into blasphemy (vs. 23) or into presumptuous impiety.—Pul. Com.

26, 27. (26) R. V., "Hast thou not heard how I have done it long ago, and formed it of ancient times?" I have done it, i. e. in all thou hast done thou hast been but an instrument working out My purposes. ancient times, see prophecy of De. xxviii. 49. to lay waste, as executor of Divine judgments. (27) small power, lit. short of hand, weak to resist. as the grass, soon cut down, and withered. on the housetops, with little rooting or moisture. corn blasted, R. V., "as a field of corn before," etc.

God All in All.—It is a poor philosophy and a narrow religion which does not recognize God as all in all. Every moment of our lives, we breathe, stand, or move in the temple of the Most High; for the whole universe is that temple. Wherever we go, the testimony to His power, the impress of His hand, are there. Ask of the bright worlds around us, as they roll in the everlasting harmony of their circles, and they shall tell of Him whose power launched them on their courses. Ask of the mountains, that lift their heads among and above the clouds; and the bleak summit of one shall seem to call aloud to the snow-clad top of another, in proclaiming their testimony to the Agency which has laid their deep foundations. Ask of ocean's waters; and the roar of their boundless waves shall chant from shore to shore a hymn of ascription to that Being who hath said, "Hitherto shall ye come, and no further." Ask of the rivers; and, as they roll onward to the sea, do they not bear along their ceaseless tribute to the ever-working Energy which struck open their fountains and poured them down through the valleys? Ask of every region of the earth, from the burning equator to the icy pole, from the rock-bound coast to the plain covered with its luxuriant vegetation; and will you not find on them all the record of the Creator's presence? Ask of the countless tribes of plants and animals; and shall they a "He boasts of having overcome all kinds of natural impediments. In arid regions he had digged and drunk water; in lands like Egypt, or Babylonia, he had dried up the streams of fortified places."—Spk. Com.

Is. xix. 6.

"That the kings of Assyria made havoc in the forests of Lebanon by hewing down the cedars and cypresses appears from their own records, in extant Assyrian inscriptions."—Wordsworth.

"The trouble with us is, our proud hearts refuse to accept the position in which God's Word places us."—A. C. Dixon.

a "Nothing could be more sublime in effect than the suddenness with which Jehovah here interrupts the boasting monarch."—Henderson.

Comp. Is. x. 5, 15.

b Ps. cxxxix. 6—8.

"Not thus our infidels th' Eternal draw, a God all o'er consummate, absolute, full orb'd, in His whole round of rays complete; they set at odds heaven's jarring attributes, and with one excellence another wound; maim heaven's perfection, break its equal beams, bid mercy triumph over God Himself, undefied by their opprobrious praise: a God all mercy is a God unjust."—Young.

* Ps. cxxxix. 2.

d De. xxviii. 6;
1 Kl. iii. 7; Ps.
cxi. 8.

e "There are representations of prisoners led by a hook through the nose and lip in the bas-reliefs of Holeyvan and Khorsabad, wh. may, however, be symbolical."—Spk. Com.

Job xli. 1, 2;
Eze. xix. 4, xxix.
4, xxxviii. 4.

a Is. vii. 14.

"There was to be an abundant supply of provisions during these two years of suffering, although the people were unable properly to till and sow their lands. God's thus sustaining them was the sign that He would presently deliver."—Henderson.

b 2 Ch. xxx. 6.

c Is. ix. 7.

"It is supposed that the time of the address was autumn, probably near the Equinox, which was the beginning of a new year. The best historians tell us that the Assyrian invasion had stopped all tillage in the previous spring, and the people had to rely upon the spontaneous products of the fields."—Peop. Bib.

"Sometimes we have a remote promise stretching far away beyond the ages, and which the living men can never hope to see fulfilled, but in order to assure their faith and brighten their hope, something is promised to them which they can immediately re-not testify to the action of the great Source of Life? Yes, from every portion, from every department of nature, comes the same voice: everywhere we hear Thy name, O God; everywhere we see Thy love. Creation in all its length and breadth, in all its depth and height, is the manifestation of Thy Spirit, and without Thee the world were dark and dead. The universe is to us as the burning bush which the Hebrew leader saw: God is ever present in it, for it burns with His glory, and the ground on which we stand is always holy. How, then, can we speak of that Presence as peculiarly in the sanctuary, which is abroad through all space and time?—Francis.

28, 29. (28) abode, R. V., "sitting down," Assyria might think itself independent; it was, in fact, altogether in the hands of the God it despised and insulted. going . . in, De. vi. 7.^d (29) tumult, R. V. margin, "careless ease" in contrast with "raging," hook, etc., as a wild beast is led by a ring through the nose.^e "The word used implies a hook or ring such as was used for securing large marine animals, and for curbing land animals, camels, buffaloes, etc.

God's Agents are Never Beyond His Restraints.—He used Assyria, but he holds Assyria in with bit and bridle. The horse may plunge, and rear, and trample, and seem to be beyond all restraint; but God never looses the rein, and draws it in when He pleases. The figures used are even more striking. He puts "a hook in the nose," which Michaelis explains in this way: "The Orientals make use of a contrivance for curbing their work-beasts, which is not adopted among us. They bore the nose through both sides, and put a ring through it, to which they fasten two cords. When a beast becomes unruly, they have only to draw the cord on one side, which, by stopping his breath, punishes him so effectually that, after a few repetitions, he fails not to become quite tractable, whenever he begins to feel it. To this contrivance the Arabian poets often allude."—Pul. Com.

30—32. (30) a sign,^a or assurance. The time of national distress, thro' the invasion of Sennacherib, would be limited to two years, part of which had already passed. groweth of itself, without the ordinary processes of agriculture. third . . sow, bec. by that time the land would be freed of the enemy, and special Divine provision no longer needed. "Probably the sign does not fix the term of the Assyrian occupation, but refers to wider effects of the invasion, the depopulation of the country, the destruction of homesteads, etc., which rendered an immediate resumption of agricultural activity impossible."—Camb. Bib. (31) remnant, vs. 4.^b take root, as the tree shaken and uprooted for a time. "Just as in the case of their crops so shall it be with the people. God shall preserve a remnant who shall once more grow up, in spite of their present low state."—Lumley. (32) go forth, to reoccupy, and till the ravaged lands. In times of siege country people take shelter within the fortified city. zeal,^c or jealousy of the Divine honor.

Root and Fruit.—Assuming that we are bound to employ our powers in the direction in which our own preferences lead us, and granting that it is well for human character to partake of much variety, it remains true that we should make an earnest effort to attain to some completeness of character by attention to those elements which we are tempted to neglect. In every department of human action we recognize the duty of bestowing special care on the weakest point—the candidate for literary honors on the subject with which he is least familiar; the builder on that part of the ground where the foundation is least substantial; the general on that outpost which is least defensible.—Pyl. Com.

33—35. (33) shall not, etc., by these figures Hezekiah is assured that the threatened siege of Jerusalem shall not even be attempted. Sennacherib never came nearer than he was when he sent the threatening messages. bank, for the battering-rams, and other engines. (34) return, humiliated and discomfited: back to Nineveh. (35) defend, or cover over as with a shield. own sake, Eze. xxxvi. 21, 22. As a witness of Himself to all the world. David's sake, Ps. lxxxix. 28.

True and False Conceptions of God.—If your God is made out of conceptions derived from the great and heartless round of the natural world; if you have a great crystalline God, such as philosophy deduces from the material globe, you can conceive of no such thing as His detracting from His dignity by coming down to burrow, as you call it, in this lower sphere. If you have a God whom mountains represent, or if you have a vast marble God, that sits as the central idol of the universe, it is to you contemptible to think of His bowing down and coming among men! But if you have a God fashioned from the elements revealed in the human soul, if you understand that greatness in the Divine Being does not mean muscular greatness, nor physical greatness, but purity, and depth, and scope of all the feelings of the heart, then the greater your God is, the more exquisite will be the things He will do in detail, the more possibility will there be of His descending and coming among men, and the more certainly will He be expected to be found among His family. As the mother is found where her child cries, and as the father is found where his son stumbles, so we should expect that, if God is a being whom we may know from the analogies of our own nature, He would be found living where men are tempted, and where they sin, and suffer, and die.—H. W. Beecher.

36. angel, etc., 2 Ki. xix. 35. Whether the agency used were simoon or plague, does not appear from the narrative. This did not happen before the walls of Jerusalem. Nor is the locality of the disaster certain, though there is sufficient evidence of it from other than Biblical sources. they arose, i. e. the few who were spared.

The Egyptian Account.—Sennacherib's objective point was Egypt. According to Herodotus, he reached Pelusium among the marshes near the Serbonian bog and the eastern mouth of the Nile, on the borders of Egypt. Here the Egyptian king met him, but was in great terror. "As the two armies lay here, opposite one another, there came in the night a multitude of field mice, which devoured all the quivers and bowstrings of the enemy, and ate the thongs by which they managed their shields, so that the following day, being deprived of their weapons, they were put to flight and many of them fell. And this king, imaged in stone, still stands in the temple of Hephæstus, holding in his hand a mouse."—Herodotus. Since the mouse was among the Egyptians a symbol of pestilence, we may infer that the basis of truth in the legend was a deadly epidemic in the Assyrian camp.—Camb. Bib.

37, 38. (37) departed, he prob. was not with this part of his army, but its destruction necessitated his giving up his expedition and returning home. dwelt at Nineveh, remained quiet, not again attempting to attack Jerusalem. History intimates that he lived for sixteen years after this event.^a "The Biblical and Assyrian accounts of this campaign, though both imperfect, are in substantial agreement."—Driver. (38) Nisroch, from Nisr, eagle, and och, great.^a The eagle was worshiped by the ancient Persians and Arabs. Armenia, R. V., "Ararat." Esarhaddon, see Ezra iv. 2, reigned from 681—668.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-EIGHTH.

1. those days, preceding the embassy of Merodach-Baladan (ch. xxxix) who ruled 721—709 in Babylon. Probably the event occurred about the 14th year of Hezekiah (714) and these two chapters are misplaced. sick unto death,^c many commentators think of the plague, others of a malignant pustule,^a or carbuncle. set.. order, or give charge to thy house. Perhaps "make arrangement for the succession to thy throne." At the time Hezekiah had no son.

God's Message to Hezekiah (vs. 1).—The folly of man in minding the trifles of the moment, and neglecting the claims of eternity. The admonition implies—I. Set thy temporal affairs in order. II. Attend to thy spiritual concerns. III. Thou, especially, art warned. IV. Man's great wisdom is to know how to set his house in order. Apply:—(1) When God strikes, our only method is to turn to Him; (2) Our true remedy in all cases; (3) Be encouraged by the success of Hezekiah's prayer.—R. Cecil.

2, 3. (2) face.. wall, so as not to be disturbed by what was passing alize. Thus from point to point, and from day to day, we are drawn forward, by the goodhand and the living Spirit of God." —Parker.

"How shocking must thy summons be, O Death! To him that is at ease in his possessions; Who, counting on long years of pleasure here, is quite unfurnished for that world to come!" —Blair.

a "The eagle-headed human figure in Assyrian sculptures is no doubt Nisroch, the same as Asshur, the chief Assyrian god. The corresponding goddess was Ashera, or Astarte." — Fausset.

b Ge. viii. 4.

"All things that are on earth shall wholly pass away Except the love of God, which shall live and last for aye." —Bryant.

"Rest in the Lord; wait patiently for Him." In Hebrew, "Be silent to God and let Him mould thee." Be still, and he will mould thee to the right shape. —Martin Luther.

"He who makes war his profession cannot be otherwise than vicious. War makes thieves, and peace brings them to the gallows." —Machiavelli.

c 2 Ki. xx. 1; 2 Ch. xxxii. 24.

d See vs. 21.

"The sick are not usually so much alarmed at the thought of death as is supposed. At any rate, it seems only fair to them that they should know the seriousness of their position."—Rawlinson.

a "The couches in the E. run along the walls of the houses. He turned away from the spectators to hide his emotion, and collect his thoughts for prayer."—Fausset.

Comp. 1 Ki. xxi. 4.

b 1 Ki. ix. 4, 5.

c Comp. 2 Ki. xx. 5, 6.

d Eze. xl. 26, 31.

"Prayer, says St. Jerome, is a groan. Ah, our groans are prayers as well. The very cry of distress is an involuntary appeal to that invisible power whose aid the soul invokes."—Mdm. Swetchine.

"Whatever crazy sorrow saith. No soul that breathes with human breath Hath ever truly longed for death.

'Tis life whereof our nerves are scant; For life, and not for death, we pant; More life and fuller that we want."

"Why will men always attack the wrong point as if it were a wonderful thing that a man should have fifteen years added to his life; and yet we omit the stupendous miracle that man ever began to live."—Parker.

e "It is not at all unlikely that Ahaz, who appears to have in the room." prayed, see Is. xxx. 19. (3) in truth, or sincerity. perfect heart, lit. "with a whole heart," one absolutely devoted to Jehovah.^b Cf. 1 Ki. viii. 61, xi. 4, xv. 3, 14, where the expression occurs with the addition of the words "with Jehovah." The motive of this prayer is clearly expressed in the Song of Thanksgiving which follows (see vss. 11, 18, 19)."

—Camb. Bib.

Duty Toward the Sick and Dying.—Most unreasonable is their conduct who, in the beginning of sickness, drive away all serious thoughts from the soul, through a fear of injuring the body. Even if this were necessarily the case, the risk is so far less in dying soon than in dying unprepared, that the former danger should be cheerfully encountered rather than incur the possibility of the latter. But the cases of sickness are very few in which, at the beginning of a disorder, such religious considerations can do our bodily health any harm. On the contrary, that awe and tranquility of soul which are induced by them may in many cases be of real advantage.—Heber.

4—6. (4) Then, "in 2 Ki. xx. 4 we read that 'afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle court,' this message came to him. So quickly was the king's prayer answered. A somewhat similar instance of the revocation of one prophetic communication by another is that of Nathan in the matter of the building of the Temple (2 Sam. vii. 3, 4 ff.)."—Camb. Bib. (5) add, to the length of life as at first appointed for thee.^c fifteen years, the Jewish tradition is that there were fifteen steps in the ascent to the Temple area.^d (6) deliver, this verse is generally believed to have been an interpolation.

Fifteen Years Added to a Life—In the autumn of 1799, the late Rev. T. Charles, of Bala, met with an afflictive dispensation. While traveling over Mount Migneint, in Carnarvonshire, on a freezing night, one of his thumbs became frost-bitten. It was so severely affected, that he was taken very ill, and his life was in danger. To prevent mortification, it was deemed necessary to have it amputated. When he was considered to be in a dangerous state, a special prayer-meeting was called by the members of the chapel at Bala. Fervent supplications were offered up in his behalf. Several prayed on the occasion; and one person, in particular, was much noticed at the time, for the very urgent and importunate manner with which he prayed. Alluding to the fifteen years added to Hezekiah's life, he, with unusual fervency, entreated the Almighty to spare Mr. C.'s life at least fifteen years. He several times repeated the following words, with such melting importunity as greatly affected all present:—"Fifteen years more, O Lord; we beseech Thee to add fifteen years more to the life of Thy servant. And wilt Thou not. O our God, give fifteen years more for the sake of Thy Church and Thy cause?" Mr. C. heard of this prayer, and it made a deep impression on his mind. He afterwards frequently mentioned it as a reason why he should make the best use of his time, saying, that his fifteen years would soon be completed. The last time that he visited South Wales, and was asked when he should come again, his answer was, at least to some, that his fifteen years was nearly up, and that he should probably never visit them again. He mentioned this to several of his friends the last year of his life, and especially to his wife. It is remarkable his death occurred just at the termination of the fifteen years. What is not less remarkable, it was during this time that he performed the most important acts of his life. It was during this time that he wrote the most valuable of his works; established Sabbath-schools; was one means of originating the Bible Society; and was instrumental in doing great good both to Scotland and Ireland.—Whitecross.

7, 8. (7) vss. 21—22 belong here. Comp. 2 Ki. xx. 7, 8. sign, Is. xxxvii 30. "The token that God was willing to change on this occasion the ordinary working of natural law."—Spk. Com. (8) R. V., "behold, I will cause the shadow on the steps, which is gone," etc.—Pol. Bib. "Behold I will cause the shadow to go back as many steps as the sun has gone down on the step-clock of Ahaz, so on the step-clock the sun went back the ten steps which it had gone down." Josephus thinks the degrees were steps ascending to the palace of Ahaz, the time of day being indicated by the number of steps reached by the shadow.^e

Believing Without Understanding.—“I will not believe anything but what I understand,” said a young man in an hotel one day. “Nor will I,” said another. “Neither will I,” chimed a third. “Gentlemen,” said one who was on a journey, and who sat close by, “do I understand you correctly, that you will not believe anything that you don’t understand?” “I will not,” said one; and so each one of the trio said. “Well,” said the stranger, “in my ride this morning I saw some geese in a field eating grass: do you believe that?” “Certainly,” said the three unbelievers. “I also saw pigs, cows, and sheep eating grass: do you believe that?” “Of course,” was again replied. “Well, but the grass which they had formerly eaten had, by digestion, turned to feathers on the backs of the geese, to bristles on the backs of the swine, to wool on the sheep, and on the cows it had turned to hair: do you believe that, gentlemen?” “Certainly,” they replied. “Yes, you believe it,” he rejoined; “but do you understand it?” They were confounded, silent, and evidently ashamed.

9, 10. (9) writing, this poem, not given in the parallel passage in 2 Kings, must have been inserted here from an independent source.—Camb. B. (10) I said, recalling the moanings of his despondent time, when Isaiah’s message came to him. cutting off, R. V., “the noon-tide.” Hezekiah was then just at what we call “middle life.” grave, Sheol, the abode of spirits. deprived, of the years I might reasonably have hoped to live. He regarded this shortening of his life as a Divine judgment.

Hezekiah’s Dread of Death.—Death appears to the natural man in the light of a bondage, an imprisonment. He is going down to the gates of Sheol (Ps. ix. 13; cviii. 18; Job xxxviii. 19). In the lore of ancient nations similar ideas appear: the place of the departed is a strong fortress, a Tartaros, an Acheron, surrounded by strong walls and a moat; or an inaccessible island. In the house and folk lore of the peoples abundance of such ideas are to be found. Everywhere the like pathos and the like ideas meet us; and death remains the “standing dire discouragement of human nature.”—Pul. Com.

11, 12 (11) the Lord, there was as yet in the Jewish conception no clear hope for the future. Death is the end of all communion both with God and men. In Sheol there would be no joy in the worship of God. land of the living, comp. Ps. xxxiv. 12. of the world, i. e. the under world, Hades. In the grave the king could take no share in the grand human events in which he was so greatly interested. (12) shepherd’s tent, lightly put up for the night, and taken down in the morning. cut off, R. V., “rolled up,” like a weaver, or as the web is cut off from the beam. with pining sickness, R. V., “from the loom.”

Human Life a Weaving (vs. 12).—I. It is worth while looking at the work itself, the formation of personal character. In this work there is—I. The weaver’s own; 2. Increasing progress; 3. A work of growing ease. II. It is worth while looking at the materials. 1. All supplied by the Master; 2. Only materials after all. III. It is worth while looking at the end. 1. The fabric lasts for ever; 2. The work is over at death; 3. The Master inspects it; 4. The Master disposes of it according to its worth. Apply:—(1) What a mercy if we are spared and furnished for this work; (2) What a motive to begin early; (3) How soon we shall have nothing but our work left.—W. Wheeler.

Old and New Testament Ideas of Death.—We may not expect Christianity in Hezekiah as we find it in the Apostle Paul. In the whole of the New Testament we find a sense of welcome in the presence of death. Paul had “a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better.” he did not want to be unclothed, he did not care in any sense of self-will to be quit of the body, but if the Lord were to say to him, Servant of mine, come up! he would fly to him. The tone of the New Testament contrasts very instructively with the tone of the Old Testament in relation to death and the grave and the future. The New Testament is all future. Understand the sense in which that declaration is intended to be received. The Old Testament is historical, it lives in the past, it mourns the days are gone, it sees the grave like a black line lying across the disc of to-morrow. The New Testament says in effect, Men, start on, proceed: you know nothing yet as it ought to be known: God lives in been fond of foreign objects of art (2 Kl. xvi. 10), obtained a sundial from Babylon.”—Henderson.

“The stairs, or dial, may have been a large structure; so that the motion of the shadow could be seen by the king through the window, as he lay on his couch.”—Spk. Com.

“The simple, constant, exclusive, absolute duty of the Christian is to believe God in Christ.”—John Bate.

“Count especially the young man blessed, who has looked into the grave before he has faced the great temptations of the world, and has not entered the race of life till he has learned his stride in the race with death.”—Exp. Bib.

a “I, being with the inhabitants of the grave (lit. the place of ceasing to act), shall behold man no more.”—Wordsworth.

b 2 Cor. v. 1, 4; 2 Pe. 1. 13, 14.

c “His web, carefully woven, and rolled up as it advanced, has been but half finished; and it is to be suddenly cut in two.”—Spk. Com.

“The shepherds of the East are often obliged to remove their flocks to distant places to find pasturage; hence their habitations are exceedingly light, in order to be the more easily removed. The ‘lodge in a garden of cucumbers,’ and the frail resting-place of the shepherd, greatly resemble each other." — Roberts.

a "There is peculiar force and beauty in the comparison here made between the dying believer and migratory birds, about to take their departure to a distant and more genial climate." — Henderson.

De. xxviii. 29, 33; Ps. lxxii. 4.

b Ge. xliii. 9, xlv. 32; Ps. cxix. 121—123.

"Learn to be as the angel, who could descend among the miseries of Bethesda without losing his heavenly purity or his perfect happiness. Gain healing from troubled waters." — J. H. Newman.

a "Obs. the sudden transition here from sorrow to joy; his heart is so full that he cannot find words to express his emotion." — Wordsworth.

"The passage may be rendered, 'I will behave myself humbly in remembrance of my past sorrow and sickness, fr. wh. I have been delivered by God's mercy.' — Fausset.

1 Ki. xxi. 27, 29.

b De. viii. 2.

"When all desire at last, and all regret, Go hand in hand to death, and all is vain, What shall assuage the unforgotten pain, And teach the forgetful to forget?"

the future, all destiny is ahead, as for earth and death and the grave, they are to be overpast and overcome: we are to set our feet upon them, and our motto is to be, Onward, ever onward!—Peop. Bib.

13, 14. (13) I reckoned, Camb. B. "I cried until morning: As a lion," etc. as a lion, whose power and purpose seem to be resistless. day . . to night, the pain was unremitting. (14) chatter, "both birds are noted for the circles and evolutions which they make in the air, and their noise when setting out on their journeys." a oppressed, or like one in the hands of an exacting creditor. undertake, R. V., "be thou my surety." (Job. xvii. 3) "The image is that of a debtor who is being committed to prison." (Mat. xviii. 30) "But what a deep thought is involved here in the application. For He who is asked to interpose is also the creditor." — Cheyne.

The Litany of Distress (vs. 14).—We are often oppressed—1. Because we have not cried, "undertake for me;" 2. Because we have cried, "undertake for me;" 3. That we may cry, "undertake for me;" 4. We are, though "oppressed," never forsaken, for we can always cry, "undertake for me."—Stems and Twigs.

God, the Only True Burden-Bearer.—Robert Alfred Vaughan had long been ill, but one morning his wife saw signs which struck her with hopelessness. In her grief she thought of going to unbosom her trouble to her friend Mrs. George Dawson. Ere she could leave her house, that friend came in, she had come to open a new sorrow to her friend—her only girl had been seized with fits of a kind which put in peril intellect and life. Those women lifted each others' burdens by opening them in the confidences of friendship. We lose our burdens by freely telling God all about them. There is another way of rolling burdens on God, which is less easy to put into words—which is a matter of soul-feeling. We can give up the self-management of our lives. It can become a conscious ruling thought with us that we live, not for self, but for God; we can inwardly realize that God takes our life-rule into his hands; we go where he sends, we do what he bids. Come to the simplicities of life. How does a wearied child roll his burden on his mother? How does the husband lighten his life-care by rolling it upon a loving wife? Verily, the little things of man will help us to understand the great things of God.—Pul. Com.

15, 16. Two difficult verses. Probably incomplete in text. (15) "What shall I speak and say to Him—since He has done it? I toss to and fro all my sleeping time because of the bitterness of my soul." — Duhm. a bitterness . . soul, Delitsch, "after the bitterness," etc. (16) by these, i. e. the Divine will, voice, and mercies. b The thought expressed by A.V. is somewhat as follows: "By such Divine words and deeds (vs. 15) men are preserved in life; and by such things my spirit is revived." recover me, R. V., "Wherefore recover thou me," etc. God is the only source of life.

The Speed of Life Impressing Probation (vs. 16).—In illustration of this thought, let us notice—I. The fact that life is fast speeding away. II. That it deeply impresses our probation. 1. It rarely allows us to complete our plans; 2. It keeps us always in effort; 3. It gathers more thickly about us the changes, trials, etc., of life; 4. It soon hurries us from earthly scenes, and often in the full vigor of our power, etc. Apply:—(1) Retribution is near; (2) We should prepare; (3) No wonder this world does not satisfy; (4) Probation will soon end.—T. Edwards.

Restoration of Belief.—Many are conscious, in later life, that their earthly faith has passed away. It was unquestioning, enthusiastic. It depended much on those we loved. Religious feelings which had been without us and not within, slowly and necessarily died away. Becoming more and more liberal, we also became more and more unbelieving, and at last realized that our soul was empty. Are we to settle down into that? It is suicide, not sacrifice, which abjures immortality and prefers annihilation. Our past belief was borrowed too much from others. Resolve to accept of no direction which will free you from the invigorating pain of effort. Free yourself from the cant of infidelity. It boasts of love, it boasts of liberality. Its church is narrower than our strictest sect. Bring yourself into the relation of a child to a father. We need to come to our second self, which is a child—to possess a childhood of feeling in the midst of manhood.—Stopford A. Brooke.

Life Crumbles Away.—

Sad is our youth, for it is ever going,
Crumbling away beneath our very feet;
Sad is our life, for onward it is flowing
In current unperceived, because so fleet;
Sad are our hopes, for they were sweet in sowing,
But tares, self-sown, have overtopp'd the wheat;
Sad are our joys, for they were sweet in blowing,
And still, oh, still, their dying breath is sweet;
And sweet is youth, although it hath bereft us
Of that which made our childhood sweeter still;
And sweet is middle life, for it hath left us
A nearer good to cure an older ill;
And sweet are all things, when we learn to prize them,
Not for their sake, but His who grants them or denies them!

—De Vere.

17, 18. (17) for peace, R. V., "Behold it was for my peace that I had great bitterness," that is, this trouble came to me for my good.^c Comp. Ro. viii. 28; 2 Cor. iv. 17. pit of corruption, fig. for the grave. cast . . back, Oriental figure for oblivion.^a (18) cannot praise, etc.,^e they can take no part in the concerns of this life.

The Bitter and the Sweet.—Dr. Watts, from his early infancy to his dying day, scarcely ever knew what health was; but however surprising it may appear, he looked on the affliction as the greatest blessing of his life. The reason he assigned for it was, that, being naturally of a warm temper, and an ambitious disposition, these visitations of Divine providence weaned his affections from the world, and brought every passion into subjection to Christ. This he often mentioned to his dear friend, Sir Thomas Abney, in whose house he lived many years.—John Whitecross.

19, 20. (19) living, those to whom life is prolonged, as mine has been. father to children, or one generation to another. known thy truth, so that Thy constant praise may be maintained. The truth of God is, especially, His faithfulness in keeping His promises. (20) Thought to be a liturgical addition adapting the Psalm for congregational use. ready, not in the Heb. The sentence should read, "Jehovah was for my salvation." we, i. e. Hezekiah and his people.

The Place of Devotion.—"In the house of the Lord." This will ever be sacred to the true Christian. What memories of sacred vision and of spiritual emotion are connected with the sanctuary! What fellowship we have had there with each other and with God! The best part of our nature has been developed there—the part which, like God himself, "no man hath seen at any time, or indeed can see." For, apart from the associations of place, there is the inspiration of mutual faith, mutual hope, mutual service, and mutual love. Thus we meet and mingle in the house of the Lord, till, clothed with white robes and with palms in our hands, we join the victors who utter their hallelujahs around the throne of the Lamb, in the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."—W. M. S.

21, 22. These verses are out of place and belong after verse 6. (21) boil, or swelling. Figs are used in a similar way to soften and bring to a head gatherings nowadays. Some think the boil indicates one feature of the disease of leprosy. Others think a painful and perilous carbuncle is indicated. Others, again, think it was an inflamed ulcer, produced by the plague.^a (22) What . . sign, comp. 2 Ki. xx. 8.

Life Reviewed.—Dr. Doddridge dreamed that he died, and, clad in a seraphic form, was borne by an angelic attendant to a glorious palace, in one of the rooms of which he left him, saying, "Rest here. The lord of the mansion will soon be with you; meanwhile, study the apartment." The next moment he was alone, and, upon casting his eyes round the room, he saw that the walls were adorned with a series of pictures. To his great astonishment, he found that it was his past life delineated there. From the moment when he had come into the world a helpless infant, and God had breathed into him the breath of life, unto the recent hour,

^c "Not for my hurt, but with a view to my obtaining true peace." — Knobel.

^a 1 Ki. xiv. 9; Neh. ix. 26; Ps. l. 17.

^e Ps. vi. 5, xxx. 9, lxxxviii. 10—12; Eccl. ix. 10.

"It is easier to win spoils from death than to keep them untarnished by life." —Exp. Bib.

"Life is not one of the homeless forces which promiscuously inhabit space, or which can be gathered like electricity from the clouds and dissipated back again into space. Life is definite and resident; and Spiritual Life is not a visit from a force, but a resident tenant in the soul." —Drummond.

^a "From the ulceration on the body of Hezekiah, it has been concluded that the disease with which he was afflicted was the plague." — Henderson.

"Life is a sacred thing, a religious gift, a holy trust, and it is handed to us that we may make it an instrument of divine praise. Marvellous life! no man has seen it; it will not be looked at. It may be seen in incarnation, in temporary form, in some transient phase, but itself will never be gazed upon. Men have attempted to surprise life, but they have always failed in their endeavor." —Parker.

when he had seemed to die, his whole existence was there marked down: every event which had happened to him shone out conspicuously on its walls. Some he remembered as perfectly as though they had occurred but yesterday; others had passed from his memory into oblivion, until thus recalled. Things obscure in life, which had caused him doubt, perplexity, even uneasiness, were rendered clear now. The perils of his life were there,—the accidents which had overtaken him in his mortal state, all of which he had escaped from untouched or but slightly hurt. One in particular caught his attention,—a fall from his horse,—for he recollected the circumstance well: it had been a perilous fall, and his escape was marvelous. But scattered in every picture, all along the whole career, he saw merciful, guiding, shielding angels, who had been with him unsuspected throughout his life, never quitting him, always watching over him to guard him from danger. He continued to gaze on these wonderful pictures; and the more he gazed the greater grew his awe, his reverence, his admiration of the unbounded goodness of God. Not a turn did his life take, but it rested on some merciful act of interposition for him. Love, gratitude, joy, filled his heart to overflowing.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-NINTH.

a Comp. 2 K1.
xx. 12-19; 2
Chr. xxxii. 31.

b Jer. 1. 2.

c "Was it not a ground for reasonable self-congratulation that he would have so powerful an ally in case of any future Assyrian attack! So he fell away from the simplicity of faith." —Spk. Com.

"Wealth is a weak anchor, and glory cannot support a man. This is the law of God, that virtue only is firm, and cannot be shaken by a tempest." —Pythagoras.

"I would not wrong virtue, so tried, by the least shade of doubt: undue suspicion is more abject baseness even than the guilt suspected." —Aaron Hill.

"The way to wealth is as plain as the way to market. It depends chiefly on two words, 'industry' and 'frugality,' that is, waste neither time nor money, but make the best use of both.

1, 2. (1) Merodach-baladan,^a Merodach was the name of a Babylonian god.^b This king reigned from B. C. 721 to 709. and a present, in accordance with established Oriental practice. The alliance of Hezekiah might be valuable to Baladan in his revolt against Assyria. (2) glad of them, he did not see the wrongfulness of trusting this new power offering its alliance, and was quite flattered, and thrown off his guard by the gracious embassy.^c precious things, i. e. his treasury. In this would be the spoils fr. the Assyrian camp, with, possibly, the stores of weapons, gold, etc. All of this would show how valuable he would be as an ally, he thought.

Hezekiah's Strength and Weakness.—If his purpose was to impress upon the Babylonians the greatness of his strength, the story of the destruction of Sennacherib would have answered his purpose much better. If Hezekiah had taken the ambassadors to the Temple, and told them how he had spread Sennacherib's letter before the invisible presence of his God in that holy house, and how he had prayed that the designs of his enemy might be brought to nought, and how that eventually the Assyrians had all either perished or fled, the men of Babylon would have been far more impressed with the power of Hezekiah, believing as they would that he was under the protection of an unseen Hand, than they possibly could be by the mere vulgar display of treasures and armor, which their own country could show in abundance, and which was the very thing calculated to excite their desire of plunder.—Goodwin.

3, 4. (3) from a far country "he answers that part of the question which involved least embarrassment. It is hardly likely that he means to hint that an alliance with so distant a country was out of the question; more probably he will excuse himself on the ground of hospitality to strangers who had come so far. It is noticeable that he does not mention the ostensible motive of the embassy."—Camb. Bib. from Babylon, wh. does not seem at the time to have been regarded as an aggressive, dangerous power. Nebuchadnezzar subsequently raised it to the height of its fame. (4) all . . seen, Hezekiah does not perceive that he has done anything more than show courtesy to strangers from a far country.

The Sin of Presuming.—Matthew Henry says of Hezekiah, "He was a wise and good man, but when one miracle after another was wrought in his favor, he found it hard to keep his heart from being lifted up, nay, a little thing then drew him into the snare of pride. Blessed Paul himself needed a thorn in the flesh to keep him from being lifted up with the abundance of revelations." The sin of presumption is a more common, and a more serious, sin than we are wont to consider it. It is one that finds frequent illustration in Holy Scripture. The sin that lost Eden was presumption. Jacob's grasping at the birthright was presumption. Moses' smiting the rock twice was presumption. Saul's forcing himself to sacrifice when Samuel tarried was presumption. David's numbering the people was presumption. Peter striking off the ear of Malchus was presumption. These are but specimen cases, readily recalled. A careful estimate of many sins will reveal presumption at the root of them. Still, if we read our lives aright, we shall find that we are constantly presuming on what God would have us to do, and acting without making due inquiries of him.—Pul. Com.

5—7. (5) the word, "Isaiah's tone is threatening, because he sees in this thing a sin against Jehovah. It was not necessary to specify wherein the offense consisted; king and prophet understood each other perfectly. The reception of an embassy from the sworn enemy of the king of Assyria was in itself an act of rebellion likely to precipitate a conflict which Isaiah strove to avert; and the childish vanity displayed by Hezekiah, his pride in earthly resources, and his readiness to enter into friendly relations with the powers of this world, were tendencies against which Isaiah's ministry had been a continuous protest. All these tendencies sprang from a single root, the lack of that absolute faith in Jehovah as the all-sufficient guide and protector of the nation which was the fundamental article of Isaiah's political programme."—Camb. Bib. (6) carried to Babylon, the proud display of wealth would have a very different influence to that wh. Hez. had intended. It would show the Babylonians that Judæa was worth conquering. Nothing shall be left, nothing worth taking was left when the city was captured. (2 Ki. xxv. 9—17.) (7) thy sons, comp. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. eunuchs, court officers and servants: especially occupied in attending to the seraglios of Eastern courts."

8. Good, the language of submission, with some recognition of his mistake. peace, or prosperity in general. truth, the prevalence of true religion. "Hezekiah recognized that this was more than he deserved."

The Treasure of the Christian.—In a dark and stormy night, a ship sees afar off the shining of the lighthouse, which, as it plunges beneath the wave, is lost; and as, struggling and rolling the water off from its deck, it comes trembling up again on the reflux wave, it gets a glimpse once more, only to lose it. So, in this world, men who propose bright aims to themselves in the midst of the turmoils of passion, the strivings of pride, and the biases of self-interest, in all the whirls of sympathy, and in the discordances of human example, find that they sometimes forget and sometimes violate their ideals; and the fight to maintain our ideals is almost as much as life itself is worth. You must frame your ideal; but after you have done that, you are like a man who makes a voyage. When you have marked the harbor, your work is not done. You have yet to bear hardness as good soldiers. Putting on your armor, you are to aim at things high and noble. And you must fight your way toward them through ten thousand hindrances. And only then shall you be crowned and laurelled when your victory is won, and you stand in Zion and before God. He who has in him absolute soul-qualities, and regards them as his chiefest treasures, and has them for his ideal—come weal or come woe, he has that for which he has been living. Bankrupt him you cannot. You may take his furniture, and strip his walls of pictures, and rob his library shelves of their books, and bear off his portfolios, and carry away his utensils, and leave him without any article of property whatsoever; and, passing by his hollow house, whose bare floors echo to every foot-step, men may say, "He is peeled and bankrupt;" but it is not so. No, no! he is not peeled nor bankrupt whose house is a house not made with hands—whose house is the soul, whose treasures are those that neither thieves break through to steal, nor sheriffs. There is no bankruptcy with a man whose purpose and aspirations, and yearnings and longings, are in the direction of his manhood. And the blessing of an ideal is, that it stimulates men to live for those things that time and chance cannot touch nor harm.—H. W. Beecher.

CHAPTER THE FORTIETH.

1, 2. "Proclamation of forgiveness and promise of deliverance to the exiled nation."—Camb. Bib. (1) Comfort ye, God's command to His Without industry and frugality, nothing will do, and with them, everything." — Franklin.

* Da. 1. 3.

"There is always a Babylon which itself becomes a ruin. Grecian art is taken to Rome, there to be demolished in the sacking of the city. Treasures are taken in after years to Paris, there to be lost in flames. How few relics of any time or nation remain! and in due course these are lost to the possessors. If this is true on the great scale of nations, how manifestly true it is of ourselves! Let us look around on all the present possessions of earth, and remember that, so far as we are concerned, 'nothing is left.' 'Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be?'—Pul. Com.

* 2 Chr. xxxii. 26.

"Are you not surprised to find how independent peace of conscience is, and how much happiness can be condensed in the humblest home? A cottage will not hold the bulky furniture and sumptuous accommodation of a mansion; but if God be there, a cottage will hold as much furniture as might stock a palace." —J. Hamilton.

"O preposterous and vain man, thou who couldst not make a finger-nail of thy body, thinkest thou to fashion this wonderful, mysterious, subtle soul of thine after the ineffable image? Wilt thou ever permit thyself to be conformed to the image of the Son? Wilt thou, who canst not add a cubit to thy stature, submit to be raised by the Type-Life within thee to the perfect stature of Christ?"—Drummond.

"There is ever a certain languor attending the fullness of prosperity. When the heart has no more to wish, it yawns over its possessions, and the energy of the soul goes out, like a flame that has no more to devour."—Young.

b "They had suffered as much chastisement as amply sufficed to clear the Divine character, and correct them of the great evil of idolatry."—Henderson.

Ro. v. 20.

"There can be no doubt that this chapter was meant for the people at the close of their captivity in Babylon. But do not let us miss the pathetic fact, that Israel is addressed not in her actual shape of a captive people in a foreign land, but under the name and aspect of her far-away, desolate country. If you, poor captives as you are, begin to act upon the grace whispered in your trembling hearts, the world will show the result. All things will come round to your side."—Exp. Bib.

a Mat. III. 3; Mk. I. 3; Lu. III. 4; Jno. I. 23.

"The edict of Cyrus is connected with the Prophets. my people, those who have gone into captivity. (2) comfortably, Heb. to the heart. Jerusalem, means the people, not the city—but Jews everywhere in their exile. warfare, properly, military service, and, by implication, hardship, privation, suffering. double," Je. xvi. 18, xvii. 18; the word is used poetically, to denote abundance, "the demands not merely of justice but of wrath have been satisfied."—Pol. Bib.

The God of Consolation (vs. 1).—I. What God says to me as a minister of the Gospel. 1. That I am to comfort His people; 2. That I am to persevere in this; 3. That I am to proclaim comfort with His authority. II. What God bids me say to you as belonging to His people. 1. That your conflicts are near their end; 2. That your sins are expiated and forgiven; 3. That you will receive an abundant compensation for all sorrow on account of sin. Apply:—(1) The message is to the people of God; (2) Are you of their number?—G. Brooks.

Chapters 40-66.—The division of the Book of Isaiah into two parts at the end of ch. xxxix., although indicated by no superscription, is at once suggested by the intervention of the narrative section, chs. xxxvi.—xxxix., and is fully justified by the character of the last 27 chapters. Whether these chapters form a single continuous prophecy, or whether, as some think, the work of different hands can be distinguished, they are pervaded by a unity of spirit and aim which separates them from the undisputed prophecies of Isaiah. It is this part of the book which has gained for that prophet the name of the Evangelist of the Old Testament, and whoever the author may have been, that designation aptly characterizes the tendency of the chapters. Critical writers, as is well known, generally assign them to an anonymous prophet, living in the latter part of the Babylonian Exile. The prophecy may be conveniently divided into three nearly equal sections: chs. xl.—xlviii., xlix.—lv., and lvi.—lxvi. (A) Chs. xl.—xlviii. The Restoration of Israel through the instrumentality of Cyrus. (B) Chs. xlix.—lv. The work of Jehovah's Servant and the glorification of Zion. (C) Chs. lvi.—lxvi. The future blessedness of the true Israel contrasted with the doom of the apostates.—Camb. B. The Prologue, verses 1-11.—This first proclamation of glad tidings to Zion (see ch. xli. 27) is a passage of singular beauty, breathing the spirit of new-born hope and enthusiasm with which the prophet enters on his work. The announcement of a miraculous restoration of the exiles to their own land is the central theme of his prophecy, and the point around which all the ideas of the book crystallize. As yet the historical fact is but dimly outlined, the writer's mind being occupied with its ideal significance as a revelation of the glory and the gracious character of Jehovah (vss. 5, 10 f.). His state of mind borders on ecstasy; his ears are filled with the music of heavenly voices telling him that the night is far spent and the day is at hand; and although his home is with the exiles in Babylon, his gaze is fixed throughout on Jerusalem and the great Divine event which is the consummation of Israel's redemption.—Camb. B.

3. In vss. 3-11 we have an imaginative description of the process by which the promise is to be fulfilled. the voice, as of a herald, prepare, R. V. "crieth, Prepare ye in the wilderness the way," etc. Pol. Bib., "Hark! there is a cry: Clear ye in the wilderness the way of Jehovah, make plain in the desert a highway for our God," i. e. Israel is addressed under the aspect of a desolate land. But even there the voice shall be heard and in that wilderness a way prepared for the King. the way, it was, and is, customary in the E. for heralds to require the public repair of the roads before the approach of a great king or general.

Note on vs. 3.—When a great prince in the East sets out on a journey, it is usual to send a party of men before him, to clear the way. The state of those countries in every age, where roads are almost unknown, and, from the want of cultivation, in many parts overgrown with brambles and other thorny plants, which renders traveling, especially with a large retinue, very incommodious, requires this precaution. The emperor of Hindostan, in his progress through his dominions, as described in the narrative of Sir Thomas Roe's embassy to the court of Delhi, was preceded by a very great company, sent before him to cut up the trees and bushes, to level and smooth the road, and prepare their place of encampment. Balin, who swayed the imperial sceptre of India, had five hundred chosen men, in rich livery, with their drawn sabres, who ran before him, proclaiming his approach, and clearing the way. Nor was this honor reserved exclusively for the reigning emperor; it was often shown to persons of royal birth. When an Indian princess made a visit to her father, the roads were directed to be repaired, and made clear for her journey; fruit trees were planted, water vessels placed in the roadside, and great illuminations prepared for the occasion.—Paxton.

4, 5. (4) valley, etc., beautifully figurative of the removal of all obstructions and impediments. crooked, or perhaps the declivities. Eastern roads are not properly made and levelled, they are mere tracks marked by the passers, so they have to be virtually made for the progress of a prince. (5) glory . . Lord, in His redeeming grace heading, as it were, the return of His people from captivity. see it, comp. Lu. ii. 30,^a shall behold the mighty acts—and moreover shall recognize that it is Jehovah; the seeing will be spiritual as well as physical. hath spoken, Nu. xiv. 21.^b

Paths of Preparation.—There are the ruins of the old military roads of the Cæsars, but the Cæsars are gone. There the Ptolemies of olden time made incursions, but their sway is past. But the highways of commerce, the freer intercourse of peoples, the more humanizing influences of equity in law, and reformation in punishment, the kindly workings of pity and charity to the neglected and forgotten—all these are preparation-paths for the great King who is to reign in righteousness. Not alone through the royal gates of olden prophecies, but through the triumphal arches of redeeming ideas and influences which he has set at work, the Messiah shall come.—Pul. Com.

6-8. "The second voice proclaims the double truth that all earthly might is transitory and the word of God is eternal." (6) the voice, better, "Hark! one saying, Cry."^a and he said, Camb. B. "and I said." flesh is grass, "all human things, however goodly, are transitory."^b (7) spirit,^c R. V. "breath," i. e. "the wind (Ps. ciii. 16), especially the scorching east-wind (Hos. xiii. 15) or Sirocco, which blows chiefly in the spring, blighting the fresh vegetation."—Camb. Bib. is grass, or frail as the grass. (8) stand for ever,^d through all the changes that may be going on around it. The expression is "a common Heb. phrase for perpetuity, security, and sure fulfilment."

Sudden Departure of Glory.—I was running over again recently the career of that hapless Queen of France, Marie Antoinette. Who that has once read it can forget the tragic history? For a brief space she was the idol of her realm. Then her enthusiastic subjects offered to take the horses from the royal carriage and draw it with their own hands down the streets of her gay capital. How terrible the transition when, a little later, along those same avenues they dragged the widowed sovereign to execution, rending the air with curses that ceased only when the bloody head was held up in sight.—Vassar.

9. O Zion, R. V. "O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion."^a high mountain, "local elevation extending the diffusion of the sound."^b O Jerusalem, R. V. "to Jerusalem" (as above). be not afraid, as to the fulfilment of what you promise.

God's Power.—No doubt it seemed to the Jews a very glorious illustration of Divine power to overcome all the obstacles that stood in the way of their return from exile—to guide them into and establish them in the land of their fathers. But it is an incalculably greater instance of Divine power to overcome all the hindrances in the way of a spiritual redemption of the race, and to secure that glorious issue. This is that which the ruling and overruling arm of the Almighty is now accomplishing. Well might such a work be published with farthest-reaching voice from the highest mountain! God is doing that with which no victories that human monarchs ever won will for one small moment compare. He is triumphing over the prejudices, the superstitions, the vices, the selfishness, the individual and the organized iniquities of the world; and on the ruins of sin and wrong he is rearing the mighty and majestic edifice of universal righteousness and peace.—Pul. Com.

10, 11. These verses contain the further proclamation of the herald.

preaching of John the Baptist." — Wordsworth.

"The situation of Babylon, on the river Euphrates, must have made causeways necessary to those that had occasion to go thither or come from thence, as marks set up must have been very requisite to those that had to pass through the deserts that lay between Chaldaea and Palestine." — Paxton.

^a Lu. iii. 6.

"Men are dazzled with false glory, with meretricious ideas of empire, and they see no beauty in Christ that they should desire him. But one day—as the æsthetic student realizes in time what is true art, as the musician understands the majesty of Beethoven — the moral nature of men being quickened and renewed by the Spirit, they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God." — Pul. Com.

^b 1 Pe. i. 24, 25; Is. li. 12; Ps. xc. 5.

^c Ps. ciii. 16.

^d There is a tacit antithesis between the word of God and man; what man says is uncertain and precarious, what God says cannot fail." — Alexander.

^a "Thou" is the collective personification of the messengers who announce God's gracious purpose to Zion." — Fausset.

^b "J. D. Michaelis compares the ancient practice of transmitting news by shouting from one hill-top to another, as described by Caesar." — J. A. Alexander.

c Vitranga proposes to render "against the strong one," i. e. Satan.

d Is. lix. 16.

e Ge. xlviii. 15.; Ps. xxiii.; Jno. x. 1—18.

A little Chinese boy who wished to join the church gave this touching answer to those who thought him too young: "Jesus has promised to carry the lambs in His arms. I am only a little boy, it will be easier for Jesus to carry me."

f "The ver. sets forth the wisdom and power of God in the disposition and sustentation of the different parts of the universe. Comp. Job xxxviii." — Henderson.

There is only one great character in the world that can really draw out all that is best in men. He is so far above all others in influencing men for good that he stands alone. That man was the founder of Christianity. — Drummond.

g "Who assigned Him the limits of His operations; marking out when He was to brood over the formless waste with life-giving energy (Ge. i. 2), and when to breathe in displeasure over corrupt creation, so that it should wither away?" — Spk. Com.

Ro. xi. 34; 1 Co. ii. 16.

(10) with strong hand,^c R. V. "as a mighty one," manifesting His strength. arm, the symbol of power.^d for him, i. e. His own power shall suffice. his reward, comp. Ph. ii. 9. his work, R. V. "recompence," i. e. the reward which He will bestow on his followers. (11) feed, etc., figures borrowed from the most tender aspects of pastoral life.^e with young, Ge. xxxiii. 13, R. V. "that give suck."

An Oriental Shepherd.—An Eastern traveler tells of seeing precisely what Isaiah so poetically describes. "One shepherd led his flock, by a zigzag path, up the almost perpendicular bank of the glen. Behind it two young lambs trotted gaily along at the feet of their mother. At first they frisked about, and jumped lightly from stone to stone; but soon they began to fall behind. The poor little things cried piteously when the path became steeper and the rocks higher, and the flock more and more distant. The mother cried too, running back and forth—now lingering behind, now hastening on before, as if to wile them upwards. It was in vain. The ascent was too much for their feeble limbs. They stopped trembling on the shelving cliff, and cried; the mother stopped and cried by their side. I thought they would certainly be lost; and I saw the great eagles that soared in circles round the cliffs far overhead, sweeping lower and lower, as if about to pounce upon their prey. But no! The plaintive cries of distress had already reached the ear of the good shepherd. A minute more, and he was standing by them. Then taking them up in his arms, he put them—one on each side—in his bosom, in the ample folds of his coat, which was bound round the waist by a girdle."

12. Here begins a new section extending to verse 31. Its theme is "Jehovah, the Incomparable," as viewed in His sovereignty and omnipotence. Who,^f etc., "who can vie with Jehovah in power? The point of these questions lies in the smallness of the measures figured as being used by Jehovah in creating the universe,—the hollow of the hand, the span, etc." "The conception of the universe as measured out by its Creator appears to include two things. There is first the idea of order, adjustment and proportion in Nature, suggesting intelligence at work in the making of the world. But the more important thought is that of the infinite power which has carried through these vast operations as easily as man handles his smallest instruments of precision. The passage is not a demonstration of the existence of God, but assuming that He exists and is the Creator of all things, the prophet seeks to convey to his readers some impression of His Omnipotence, which is so conspicuously displayed in the accurate determination of the great masses and expanses of the material word."—Camb. Bib.

The Incomparableness of the Great God (vs. 12).—I. The greatest things in the material world are nothing in comparison with Him. II. The greatest minds in the spiritual universe are nothing in comparison with Him. 1. His universe must be regarded as the expression of Himself; 2. His laws are the revelation of Himself; 3. His conduct is absolutely irresponsible. III. The greatest institutions of human society are nothing in comparison with Him. IV. The greatest productions of human labor are nothing in comparison with Him.—Thomas.

13, 14. (13) directed, i. e. regulated it. What man has guided the will of God? Spirit, or Divine creative agency.^g taught him, as a confidential adviser. (14) with whom, etc., further appeal solemnly affirming the absolute independence of God.

The Great Creator.—He who exhibited such matchless skill in the organization of material bodies, and such exquisite taste in their formation, has superadded that ethereal beauty which enhances their permanent qualities, and presents them to us in the ever-varying character of the spectrum. If the objects of the material world had been illuminated with white light, all the particles of which possess the same degree of frangibility, and were equally acted upon by the bodies on which they fall, all nature would shine with a leaden hue, and all the combinations of external objects, all the features of the human countenance would have exhibited no other variety than that which they possess in a pencil-sketch, or a China-ink drawing. The rainbow itself would have dwindled into a narrow arch of white light, the stars would have shone through a grey sky, and the mantle of a wintry twilight would have replaced the golden vesture of the rising sun.—Brewster.

15—17. (15) nations, the insignificance of collective humanity before Jehovah. drop, lit. drop hanging on a bucket,^b “trickling down its side, and about to fall; the idea is of smallness and feebleness.”—Pol. Bib. isles, this word, rendered elsewhere lands by the sea and far countries, occurs 12 times in this part of Isaiah always (except xlii. 15) with reference to the islands of the Mediterranean.—Pol. Bib. little thing, or, as a grain of fine dust. (16) Lebanon, famous for its forests, and multitudes of living creatures. burn, etc., “so infinitely great is Jehovah that the forests of Lebanon would not yield fuel enough, nor its wild animals victims enough, for a holocaust worthy of Him.” (17) nothing, Da. iv. 35.

Jehovah Incomparable.—God’s Being is simple, unique, absolutely original. In a like sense to that which we say the works of a great poet are his unassisted productions, does the prophet say the world is the work of God. “Contrast the Babylonian myth of a joint action of Bel and the gods in the creation of man; and the Iranian of co-creatorship of Ormuzd and the Amshaspands; or the crude cosmogonic notions of the Greeks. All parts of the world, all habitable lands and nations, are dependent on him, derived from his will, subject to his power. How, then, can earth’s noblest products add anything to his riches, or further illustrate the glory of One to whom they already belong?”

18. liken God, the folly of all idolatry, comp. Acts. xvii. 29, “because God has not His like, therefore there is no creature form that is like Him, and under whose image one may represent Him visibly.”—Hägelbach. what likeness, “What image will you set by His side as His resemblance?”^a God Incomparable.—One day, when Mr. Richards, missionary in India, was conversing with the natives, a Fakeer came up, and put into his hand a small stone about the size of a sixpence, with the impression of two human likenesses sculptured on the surface; he also proffered a few grains of rice, and said, “This is Mahadeo!” Mr. Richards said, “Do you know the meaning of Mahadeo?” The Fakeer replied, “No.” Mr. R. proceeded, “Mahadeo means the Great God—He who is God of gods, and besides whom there can be no other. Now, this Great God is a Spirit; no one can see a spirit, who is intangible. Whence, then, this visible impression on a senseless, hard, immovable stone? To whom will ye liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto Him? God is the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy. He hath said, ‘I am Jehovah; there is no God beside me.’” The poor Fakeer was serious, respectful, and attentive; continually exclaiming, “Your words are true.”—Whitecross.

19, 20. (19) melteth, casteth. graven image, so called because usually graven after it was cast. spreadeth . . gold, “the idol consists of a core of brass which is cast by the workman and then hauled over to the goldsmith to be covered with gold plate,” comp. xxx. 22. chains, for the ornamentation of the figure.” (20) impoverished, or sunk in circumstances. tree . . rot, a piece of sound oak or cedar. cunning, clever, skilful. not be moved, “that will not totter.” If an idol leant over or fell over it was the worst of omens. 1 Sam. v. 3, 4. “There is here, and for almost the first time in history, the same intellectual intolerance of images, the same burning sense of the unreasonableness of their worship, which has marked all monotheists, and turned even the meekest of their kind into fierce scorners and satirists—Elijah, Mohammed, Luther, and Knox. We hear this laughter from them all. Sometimes it may sound truculent or even brutal, but let us remember what is behind it.”—G. A. Smith.

Egyptian Idol-makers.—The particulars in this description of idol-making are more minute than we elsewhere find in the Bible. In many respects it seems so strikingly to agree with the process followed by the Egyptian idol-makers that we add the following particulars, for which we are indebted principally to Mr. Wilkinson’s Materia Hieroglyphica, printed at Malta, 1828—1830. When the Egyptians intended to sculpture, they began by smoothing the surface, and drawing a number of parallel lines at equal distances, at right angles to which were traced other lines forming a series of squares. The size of these squares depended upon ^b “Whole nations count for no more before the Almighty God than the small drop of a bucket which the bearer does not notice.” — Nagesbach.

“Isaiah, speaking of the sea as held in God’s hand, as one might hold a drop of water, is a better poet than Byron, who apostrophizes the sea as a living being.” — Pul. Com.

“In the light of these truths, how monstrous appeared the folly of those who made an image to represent or symbolize Deity.” — Spk. Com.

“How should the image-detties of idolatrous Babylon be compared to this Almighty and unsearchable God of Israel?” — Mat. Arnold.

^a De. iv. 15, 16; Ex. xx. 4.

^b These represent the kinds of idol-figures made for the rich.

“Egyptian relics show that idols were suspended in houses by chains.” — Fausset.

“Just so truly as God and the world are at war, so the moment our lives are laid down in uncompromising obedience to him, they are laid down in utter and uncompromising contrariety with the things he has told us we are not to love. We must choose between the evil love of the world and the overflowing love of God.” — Robert E. Speer.

"Are you men that have faith in God when the sun shines, and that have no faith in Him when it is cloudy? Are you men that have arms when there is no enemy at hand, but that throw them away when the enemy comes? God is a God for times of war as well as a God for times of peace." — H. W. Beecher.

a Ro. i. 20; see Ac. xiv. 17, xvii. 24.

"Do not look forward to what may happen to-morrow; the same everlasting Father who cares for you to-day will care for you to-morrow, and every day. Either He will shield you from suffering or He will give you unfailing strength to bear it." — Francis deSales.

"Earth is but the frozen echo of the silent voice of God." — Hageman.

"Such is the world. Understand it, despise it, love it; cheerfully hold on thy way through it, with thy eye on highest lode-stars!" — Carlyle.

a Je. iv. 23. Ps. ii. 2, 10.

b Ps. xxxvii. 35; Da. iv. 10.

c "Our thoughts are carried chiefly to Judah. Men might have supposed that David was to be the plant of renown; that Sol.'s line was to be the seed which the Lord had blessed; that Hezekiah was the rod from the stock of Jesse; but none of these proved to be so." — Spk. Com.

the size of the figures to be formed; but whatever was their size, nineteen parts or spaces were always allowed for the height of the human figure. If smaller figures were to be introduced, intermediate lines were then ruled which formed smaller squares, and consequently a figure of smaller proportion. May not this explain the marking out with a line and with a compass mentioned in Isaiah? After the first outlines of the figure had been traced, it was inspected by a master, who wrote in various parts of it such observations and instructions as he wished to be attended to by the artists in the progress of the work, and which of course were obliterated as the sculptures were formed. These were the work of other artists, distinct from the draughtsmen; and the remainder was completed by others, who added the color, gilding, or polish, and who introduced the minute parts of dress and ornament. To this it may not be amiss to add that the sculptors were not only guided by certain artistic rules, but in the representations of their gods were bound to observe certain forms prescribed by the priests, and which it was accounted sacrilege to transgress. The more effectually to accomplish this object, and preclude the intervention of anything forbidden by the laws in subjects accounted sacred, the profession of an artist was not allowed to be exercised by any common or illiterate person. Indeed, Mr. Wilkinson has shown the probability that they were, in some sort, attached to, and formed a branch of the priesthood.—Kitto.

21, 22. (21) known,* are your hearts deaf and blind? Is the tradition of God's doings, as old as creation, unknown to you? Do you learn nothing from nature or history? (22) It is he, Jehovah sits exalted upon "the vault of the heavens" (Pol. Bib.) so high that men appear but as locusts before Him. curtain, thin transparent veil. Think of his power! The heavens he spread out as it were a piece of fine cloth, he cast them over us as a tent!

God Revealed in Nature.—"The whole system of the world is but a standing copy and representation of the Divine goodness, writing little images of itself upon every the least portion of this great body." "The night itself cannot conceal the glories of the heaven; but the moon and stars, those lesser lights, then show forth their lesser beauties. While the laborer lies down for his rest, the astronomer sits up and watches for his pleasure." When men were talking atheism around Napoleon on the passage to Africa, the great man exclaimed, pointing to the starry sky, "It is all very well for you to talk, gentlemen; but who made all that?"

Voice of God.—

God hath a voice that ever is heard
In the peal of the thunder, the chirp of the bird;
It comes in the torrent, all rapid and strong,
In the streamlet's soft gush as it ripples along;
It breathes in the zephyr, just kissing the bloom;
It lives in the rush of the sweeping simoom;
Let the hurricane whistle, or warblers rejoice,
What do they tell thee but God hath a voice?
God hath a presence, and that ye may see
In the fold of the flower, the leaf of the tree;
In the sun of the noon-day, the star of the night;
In the storm-cloud of darkness, the rainbow of light;
In the waves of the ocean, the furrows of land;
In the mountains of granite, the atom of sand;
Turn where ye may, from the sky to the sod,
Where can ye gaze that ye see not a God?—Eliza Cook.

23, 24. (23) Princes and judges, i. e. the power and glory and wisdom of men he brings to nothingness.* (24) shall not be, R. V. "have not been" (Past tense throughout.) The princes and judges are often compared to tall trees.^b sown, so their race becomes extinct. blow, etc., no sooner have these princes and judges established themselves—taken root—than He blows upon them and they wither or vanish as dust before a whirlwind.^c

Whirlwinds (vs. 24).—Whirlwinds occasionally sweep along the country in an extremely frightful manner, carrying away in their vortex, sand, branches, and stubble, and raising them to an immense height in the air. Very striking is the allusion which the Prophet makes to this phenomenon: "He shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble." With equal force and beauty the Psalmist refers to the rotary action of the whirlwind, which frequently impels a bit of straw over the waste, like a wheel set in rapid motion: "O my God, make them like a wheel, as the stubble before the wind." Sometimes it comes from no particular point, but moves about in every direction. Mr. Bruce, in his journey through the desert of Senaar, had the singular felicity to contemplate this wonderful phenomenon in all its terrific majesty, without injury, although with considerable danger and alarm. In that vast expanse of desert, from west and to north-west of him, he saw a number of prodigious pillars of sand at different distances, moving at times with great celerity, at others stalking on with majestic slowness; at intervals he thought they were coming in a very few minutes to overwhelm him and his companions. Again they would retreat so as to be almost out of sight, their tops reaching to the very clouds. There the tops often separated from the bodies; and these, once disjointed, dispersed in the air, and appeared no more. Sometimes they were broken near the middle, as if struck with a large cannon-shot. About noon they began to advance with considerable swiftness upon them, the wind being very strong at north. Eleven of these awful visitors ranged alongside of them about the distance of three miles. The greatest diameter of the largest appeared to him, at that distance, as if it would measure ten feet.—Paxton.

25, 26 "form the peroration of a passage of striking elevation. The writer makes a final appeal to the imagination of his audience by pointing to the nightly pageant of the starry hosts mustered at the command of Him who is Jehovah of Hosts." (25) equal, so as to make even comparison possible. the Holy One, "this is the final distinction bet. God and the creature," he is holy. (26) host, the multitude, and orderly array of the stars. by names, as soldiers summoned by a muster-roll. in power, etc., R. V. "and for that he is strong in power, not one is lacking."^a

The Majesty and Infinitude of God.—A magnificent city, with the tombs of departed and the palaces of living kings, is an imposing monument of human passion and human intelligence. Nineveh and Babylon "seemed planted for eternity, firmly rooted in the soil; but to the prophets, regarding them from the point of view of the future, they seemed as though they had never been." Profound faith in the Eternal fills the mind with contempt for the gloria mundi, which seems to be withering in the very hour it most proudly flourishes. The prophet falls back upon the thought of the holy and incomparable One, who marshals the starry hosts, who is Lord of the physical universe and of the world of man's spirits. We need to rest our thought upon the infinite power of God. Weak ourselves, we need to lean upon that which is strong and enduring. And here we are liable to many illusions—the illusion of the permanence of physical systems, the illusion of the permanence of human customs and institutions. God can cause the heavens to be shrivelled like a scroll, can efface the cities of the nation as if they were so many rubbish-heaps from the face of the earth. He and the soul alone abide.—Pul. Com.

God is Love.—

How great soe'er things being or done of man,
To be, to do, is less than to believe:
For to believe God is to know Him love.
As on some hill at day-dawn we see born
Of early light the sun, head of all worlds,
Who hour by hour exalts his own place; truth
Instructing us the while it is earth beneath Which rolls away; he, lord of time, in his Eternal zenith throned, climbs not nor stoops;
So they, in spirit knowledge wisest, know,
As more and more the soul is purified,

"This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hope, tomorrow blossoms,

And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;

The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,

And — when he thinks, good easy man,

His greatness is a-ripening — nips his root, And then he falls."

—Shakespeare.

"The wind, a sightless laborer, whistles at his work." — Wordsworth.

"Dost thou love life, then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of." — Franklin.

a "By reason of abundance of (their inner essential) force and firmness of strength, not one of them is driven astray; referring to the sufficiency of the physical forces with which He has endowed the heavenly bodies, to prevent all disorder in their motions." — Horsley.

While many of the world's religions have some things that are good in them, only the Christian religion offers a Christ. Said a young Brahman to a missionary:—

"Many things which Christianity contains I find in Hindooism: but there is one thing which Christianity has and Hindooism has not."

"What is that?" the missionary asked.

His reply was, "A Saviour."

"The great lever by which to raise and save the world is the unbounded mercy and love of God."—Beecher.

"It is faith's work to claim and challenge loving kindness out of all the roughest strokes of God."—S. Rutherford.

b "Covered by so dense a mass of misery, that even His light could not penetrate."—Spk. Com.

c "They had been so long in the power of their enemies, that they concluded they were quite overlooked by the God of their fathers."—Henderson.

• 1 Jno. ii. 14.

"From God, the overflowing spring, Our souls shall drink a fresh supply; While those who trust their native strength Shall melt away and droop and die."

"People of ordinary goodness walk in God's way, but the devout run in it, and at length they almost fly therein. To be truly devout, we must not only do God's will, but we must do it cheerfully."—Francis de Sales.

It is their own fleshly ignorance from them rolled,
Which opens them to heaven and to God's light,
Unvarying and supreme, due ingress gives.
It is we who change towards Him, not He towards us;
As therefore to the sun, nor east nor west,
Nor day nor night is, but one timeless noon
So from the Lord of life unbounded beams
One everlasting effluence, which is love.
To gain this, to prepare for this, is all.—Bailey.

27, 28. (27) O Jacob, reminding the disconsolate Jews of Ge. xxxii. 26. My way,^b etc., the despairing language of the captives in Babylon. judgment . . God, or my cause is neglected by my God.^c (28) not known, comp. vs. 21. heard, by the tradition of the fathers. everlasting God, Ge. xxi. 33; Do. xxxiii. 27. no searching, Ps. cxlvii, 5, therefore your failure to understand His purposes is no proof of his failure in loving kindness.

Trust in the Lord Recommended (vss. 27—31).—I. The doctrine taught. 1. The existence of a Supreme Creator; 2. The doctrine of a superintending Providence; 3. The efficacy of religion. II. The reproof administered. III. The correction offered. IV. The instruction afforded. 1. To consider the Lord as the only proper object of worship and of confidence; 2. To expect confidently; 3. Even in times of trial we may mount above the world; 4. We may make rapid and delightful progress in religion; 5. That we may persevere in piety.

Strength Renewed.—When a man wants his bodily strength renewed, his purpose may be effected by eating a good meal. He has grown empty through hunger, and there is nothing in him; he must be filled up with substantial nourishment, and then the human engine will generate fresh force. Oh, ye who are weak in spirit, come and feed upon Christ! Sometimes a man may renew his strength by taking a little rest. He has grown weak through stern labor and long fatigue, and he must be quiet and repose till he recovers. Oh, ye weary, heavy-laden, where is there rest for you except in the Christ of God? We have known men's strength renewed by breathing their native air. They have risen out of a hot and fœtid atmosphere into the cool breeze of the mountain-side, and the bracing breeze has made them strong again. Oh, to have the breath of the Spirit blowing upon us once again!—Spurgeon.

29—31. (29) faint, Not only is He thus powerful but his power is for us, for the faint and weak. (30) youths, whose glory and boasting are in their strength. "Even though youth faint and young men lose their strength, yet," etc. (31) wait upon, or wait for. as eagles, which are noted for the untiring strength of their wing.

Waiting Upon God (vs. 31).—I. The characters described. The waiting includes earnest desire, confident expectation, patient reliance. II. The blessings promised. 1. Exemplary privileges in the exercises of the Divine life; 2. A perpetual renewal of the powers of Divine grace; 3. Persevering endurance; 4. Ultimate success.—C. Jones.

Sonnet.—

I think we are too ready with complaint
In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope Indeed beyond the zenith and the slope
Of yon gray blank of sky, we might be faint
To muse upon Eternity's constraint Round our aspirant souls. But since the scope Must widen early, is it well to droop,
For a few days consumed in loss and taint?
O pusillanimous heart, be comforted,—
And, like a cheerful traveler, take the road,
Singing, beside the hedge. What if the bread
Be bitter in thine inn, and thou unshod
To meet the flints? At least it may be said, Because the way is short, I thank Thee, God!

—Elizabeth Browning.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIRST.

The nations are called upon to explain the rise of Cyrus, vss. 1-3. The answer in vs. 4. 1. Keep silence, or "listen in silence to Me." islands, a term used to include all maritime countries: all regions beyond the sea. people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. all nations. So generally. A fact not evident in A.V. renew their strength, collect all their force to answer Me. come near, so as to take a close and careful review of the evidence (comp. Is. i. 18).

Renewals (vs. 1).—I. All things on earth need to be renewed. II. Man's life cannot be sustained without renewal from God. III. We must also repair the waste of the soul. 1. By feeding on the Word of God; 2. By listening to the Word; 3. By the table of the ordinances. IV. Without constant restoration we are not ready for the perpetual assaults of hell, for the stern afflictions of heaven, or even for strifes from within.—C. H. Spurgeon.

2, 3. (2) R. V. "Who hath raised up one from the East, whom he calleth in righteousness to his foot? he giveth nations before him," etc. the righteous, Cyrus is undoubtedly here referred to; and regarded as the minister of God's righteousness. called . . foot, fig. for engaging in his service, in order to follow him and perform the duties prescribed. gave . . nations, "first the kingdom of the Medes, then Lydia, the kingdom of the rich Cræsus, and the Greek cities of Asia Minor." gave . . bow, Pol. Bib. "His sword makes them like dust, his bow like driven stubble." (3) safely, or securely. way . . feet, better translate "the path with his feet he does not tread," a picture of the celerity of his movements.—Camb. Bib.

Cyrus.—Cyrus was to the Gentiles a type of the Messiah, even as David or Solomon to the Jews; and accordingly we find him spoken of as the Lord's anointed (ch. xlv. 1). Comparing the things which are related of him with the history of Eastern kings and conquerors of his age or that preceding, and especially with the monstrous oppressions, butcheries, massacres, and cruelties recorded on the slabs of Nineveh, he seems like a man of another world. It is a gleam of sunshine breaking through thunder-clouds. The soberest and most truthful of the Greek philosophers (himself a statesman, general, and historian) has selected him as the pattern of a perfect prince, and made his education the theme of a most interesting and instructive book. Whence had he that education? Who raised up that one from the east? called him to His foot? At whose feet was he brought up? and from whose precepts did he receive instruction in righteousness?—W. B. Galloway.

4-7. (4) calling . . beginning, guiding the course of all nations and peoples since the creation. I the Lord, this gives the answer. first . . last, Jehovah existed before all things, and He will outlast them all. (5) drew near, etc., consulting together how to defend themselves against the conquering Persians. (6) good courage, and set to work to make, and secure the favor of, new gods. (7) goldsmith, or founder; smith, soldering, R. V., "saying of the soldering, It is good." The irony is severe, but true to the facts as Herodotus relates them. The statesmen hoped to keep back Cyrus by sending sobbing messages to one another, Be of good courage; the priests "by making a particularly good and strong set of gods."—G. A. Smith.

God's Help in Emergency.—The God who raised up Cyrus, who constrained him to answer his own Divine ends, who empowered him to do such great things, and to triumph over such serious obstacles, is One who evidently gives heed to individual souls, and who both can and will select the very instruments which are needed to work out the redemption for which we are waiting and hoping. He who similarly raised up Luther, Zwingle, Calvin, Tyndale, Knox, etc., to take their place and do their work when such men as they were wanted, will not fail us in our emergency now.—Pul. Com.

8, 9. But Israel is bidden "Fear not" because of its peculiar relation to Jehovah. my servant, as worshipers of the true God. chosen, De. iv.

b "To make still clearer the contrast between the power and wisdom of the God of Israel and of the gods of the heathen, these latter are challenged to show and compare their performances beside His."—Mat. Arnold.

c Je. xxv. 22.

Ps. xvi. 10; Ha. ii. 20; Zec. ii. 13.

d "Jehovah here summons the idolators themselves to enter into controversy with Him. The challenge is a general one, directed to the whole heathen world."—J. A. Alexander.

e "The man called is Cyrus, from Persia, wh. is easterly both to Babylonia and to Palestine. Cyrus had the character of a mild and just prince. His religion, the religion of Persia, rejected and forbade idols like the religion of Israel."—Mat. Arnold.

a "To call to one's foot is a Heb. idiom for calling to one's service, or summoning to take a place among one's followers."—J. A. Alexander.

b Is. xlii. 10, xlv. 6, xlviii. 12; Re. i. 17, xxii. 13.

"From history we learn that the Cumœans consulted the Milesian oracle, 'alarmed at the power of the Persians.' And Croesus sent round to all the principal oracles for their advice."—Spk. Com.

a "Khalil-Al-lah," or, as he is more usually called, "El Khalil," simply, "The Friend," is a title which has, in Mussulman countries, superseded altogether his own proper name." — Stanley.

De. vii. 6, x. 15.

"Friendship is the nearest thing we know to what religion is. God is love. And to make religion akin to friendship is simply to give it the highest expression conceivable by man." — Drummond.

a "The right hand that does right." — Nagelesbach.

"Travelers tell us of some countries which are so full of aromatic plants and flowers that they perceive the fragrance at some distance, and are highly refreshed by the pleasing gales. Do you not think it is the same with the Christian traveler, as he bears up towards the heavenly country, of which 'the land flowing with milk and honey' was a figure, a shadow, a very inadequate resemblance?" — Lavington.

"The breath of Divine knowledge is the bellows of Divine love, and the flame of Divine love is the perfection of Divine knowledge." — Quarles.

"The words which give us the secret of the old Hebrew courage reveal the source of the courage we need as Christians. The notion, indeed, has 37, vii. 6, 7. my friend, 2 Chr. xx. 7;" Ja. ii. 23. (9) chief men, R. V., "corners," i. e. Haran in Mesopotamia, Abraham's fatherland, (Gen. xxiv. 4, 7.) To one in Palestine this would seem a far away land.

Servants (vs. 9).—1. It is by Divine grace that we are made servants of God; 2. Unfaithful, unprofitable, yet servants; 3. Once we were servants of sin; 4. Not only servants, but chosen ones; 5. We are, too, His servants for ever.—C. H. Spurgeon.

The Divine Choices Are Wise Selections.—Abraham and Jacob are God's chosen ones as founders, and first fathers, of the Israelite race. By this we are to understand that they were selected, in the Divine wisdom, as having just the qualities which, developed in a race, would make a people precisely fitted to carry out his purposes. We are not to understand that, in a way of accident, or in a way of mere sovereignty, these first fathers were picked out. God's choices are never arbitrary; they are always judicious selections. "The race is described as God's servant and his elect, or, combining the two characters, his chosen servant, chosen to be his servant." This special relation to Jehovah is the thing which distinguishes the people of Israel from the heathen nations around them. "What advantage then hath the Jew? . . . Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. iii. 1, . . . Divine choices are selections, on the ground of recognized fitness.—Pul. Com.

10. Fear thou not, however other nations may fear. Cyrus would prove no enemy to God's people, bec. God was using him to work out His purposes. dismayed, so as, like the nations, to look about anxiously for help. will strengthen, or perhaps have strengthened, etc. right . . . righteousness, or "with My just right hand."

Strength (vs. 10).—I. We all need to be strengthened. 1. For temptation assails us; 2. The world is around us; 3. There is sin within us; 4. There are duties before us. II. God has a great reserve of strength with which to discharge this engagement. He who is able to uphold the universe will never prove unable to fulfil His promises.

God's Help.—You know what a grand matter is God's help. A minister was one day bringing his book upstairs into another room, for he was going to have his study on the first floor instead of downstairs, and his little boy wanted to help father carry some of the books. "Now," said the father, "I knew he could not do it, but as he wanted to be doing something, to please him and to do him good by encouraging his industry, I told him he might take a book and carry it up." So away he went, and picked out one of the biggest volumes—Caryl on Job or Poli Synopsis, I should think—and when he had climbed a step or two up the stairs, down he sat and began to cry. He could not manage to carry his big book any further; he was disappointed and unhappy. How did the matter end? Why, the father had to go to the rescue, and carry both the great book and the little man. So, when the Lord gives us a work to do, we are glad to do it, but our strength is not equal to the work, and then we sit down and cry, and it comes to this, that our blessed Father carries the work and carries the little man too, and then it is all done, and done gloriously. It is a simple illustration, but may it comfort some desponding heart. "Yea, I will help thee."—Spurgeon.

Strength from Communion with God.—

"Lord, what a change within us, one short hour, Spent in Thy presence, will avail to make?
What heavy burdens from our spirits take,
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear.
We kneel, how weak!—we rise, how full of power!
Why therefore should we do ourselves this wrong
Or others, that we are not always strong;
That we are ever overborne with care;
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee."—Trench.

11, 12. (11) ashamed, with the shame of defeat. strive, or "the men of thy strife." (12) contended, they who made war with thee. nothing, etc., R. V., "They that strive with thee shall be as nothing, and shall perish."

The Effective Spread of Christianity a Growth (vs. 11).—I. It is a natural growth. There is—1. Gradualness; 2. Variety; 3. Beauty. II. It is a valuable growth. 1. It produces true morality, righteousness; 2. True religion, praise. III. It is a universal growth. IV. It is a Divine growth. For—1. He prepares the soil; 2. Deposits the seed; 3. Imparts the quickening influence. Apply:—(1) This subject corrects an error in Christian propagandism; (2) Indicates the true method of teaching the Gospel; (3) Affords a touchstone to the character.—Thomas.

13, 14. (13) will hold, better, do hold. will help, or do help thee. (14) worm Jacob, "creature of the dust, prostrate and helpless," comp. Ps. xxii. 6. ye men, or ye few men. redeemer. Read with R. V. and thy Redeemer is the Holy One. The word for "Redeemer" is Gô'el, the technical term for the person charged with the duty of buying back the alienated property of a kinsman, of avenging his death, and certain other obligations (see Lev. xxv. 48 f.; Num. xxxv. 19 ff.; Ruth iii. 12, etc.). It is a standing title of Jehovah in the latter part of Isaiah, occurring in 12 passages (the corresponding verb in 6 others). The verb means originally to assert a right by purchase; hence fig. to reclaim, rescue.—Camb. Bib.

Fear Not (vs. 14).—I. Before we can do anything for God there must be a sense of weakness. 1. This is learned by contemplation; 2. By suffering; 3. By labor. II. There must be trust in promised strength. III. There must be the removal of fear by this promise. 1. Fear is painful; 2. Is weakening; 3. Dishonors God.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Courage.—Omniscience watches over the chosen, and omnipotence supports them. Among other "gifts and graces" let us recognize courage and resolution. Timidity, faint-heartedness, is a universal weakness, and the higher or sacred courage one of the rarest possessions of the soul. Perhaps, next to wisdom, it is Heaven's greatest gift. It "gives and obtains kingdoms, turns swords into sceptres, crowns the valiant with victory, and the victorious often with a diadem." Presence of mind: what can impart it like the feeling that God is ever with us, that our feeble hand is enclosed in his? "It is a kind of ecstasy and inspiration, a beam of Divine light darting in upon reason, and exalting it to a pitch of operation beyond its natural and accustomed measures. Perhaps there was never any person in the world remarkably and heroically great, without some such kind of enthusiasm—a mighty principle which at certain times raised him up to strange, unaccountable heights of wisdom and courage. He who in the strength of such a spirit can look the most menacing dangers in the face, and, when the state of all things about him seems desperate, can yet bear his great heart above despair—such a one for the most part makes fortune itself bend and fall down to him, difficulties vanish, and dangers fly before him; so much is victory the claim of the valiant, and success the birthright of the bold."—Johnson.

15, 16 (15) threshing instrument, either a sledge armed with iron and sharp stones, or a system of rough rollers (tribulum). mountains, allegorical for empires and kingdoms. (16) fan them, alluding to another agricultural operation, that of winnowing. "This weakest of nations shall become a power against which nothing can stand. Fulfilled in a slight degree in the Maccabean wars." In the plains of Hamath grain is still threshed by revolving sledges.—Cheyne.

The Worm Jacob Threshing the Mountains (vss. 14-16).—Addressing his people, God declares—I. Their character. II. Their labors. III. Their successes. IV. Their triumphs. Learn hence—I. The folly of unbelief; 2. The need of constant exertions.—C. Simeon.

Threshing-floors.—They are arranged all round the town, and the scene is picturesque and novel. The most common mode of threshing is with the ordinary slab, called mowrej, which is drawn over the floor by a horse or yoke of oxen, until not only the grain is shelled out, but the straw itself is ground up into chaff. To facilitate this operation, bits of rough lava are fastened into the bottom of the mowrej, and the driver sits or stands upon it. It is rare sport for the children to sit on these slabs, and even our own delight, to get out to the baidar, as the floor is called, gone forth that the ancient fortitude has no place in the life of the Christian, but if this means that the Christian is to be only a loving, and not a righteous man, then the teaching of Christ Himself contradicts it." — Hom. Com.

b "However weak and despised and trodden under foot thou mayest be, in thy captivity and exile, yet fear not, I will help thee." — Wordsworth.

Is. xlii. 1, xlv. 1, 2.

"When the soul leaves God once, and looks downward, what is there to stay it from disquiet? Remove the needle from the polestar, and it is always stirring and trembling, never quiet till it be right again. So, displace the soul by taking it from God, and it will never be quiet. The devil cast out of heaven and out of the Church, keeps ado; so do unruly spirits led by him."—Sibbes.

a "The highest and strongest, and most stubborn of thine enemies."—Mat. Henry.

"The Church will not be filled with a perilous complacency; it will rejoice in the Lord its God—in the honor in which he is universally held; in the love with which all hearts are filled toward him; in the service which every human life is paying him. These ingredients will all to the brim its pure cup of joy."—Clarkson.

"We often need encouragement... The greatness of the consolation offered proves the greatness of the impending danger." —Hom. Com.

If God does not hold us up, we shall faint, and fall utterly.

a "On themarch of the suffering exiles through the desert in the promised and approaching return of the Jews to their country. In these regions water is almost the first object of a man's thoughts. God promises His people to provide water in the wilderness and on the bare highlands for them, and verdure in the desert, that their return may be made easier." —Mat. Arnold.

b Is. xxx. 25, xxxv. 7.

"There is spiritual thirst quenched and spiritual refreshment provided. The desert becomes a lake, the wilderness a garden. God opens streams, not only in the valleys, but on the hills; 'high places.'" —Birks.

a "The main idea of this vs. is that of trees growing where they never grew before." —J. A. Alexander.

"These trees are all fragrant and durable." —Spk. Com.

"With earth's poor, care-some drollings tired, oppress, What right have I to lean upon Thy breast;— Because Thou offerest to the weary, rest." —M. J. Preston.

and ride round on the mowrej. The Egyptian mowrej is a little different from this, having rollers which revolve on the grain, and the driver has a seat upon it, which is certainly more comfortable. In the plains of Hamath I saw this machine improved by having circular saws attached to these rollers. It is to this instrument, I suppose, that Isaiah refers: "Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff. Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them." —Thomson.

17, 18. "With great pathos the prophet recalls to mind the miserable condition of Israel in the present, and adapts his glorious promise to their sense of need. He is thus led to a glowing description of the marvels of the desert journey, in which, however, a spiritual meaning is not lost sight of." —Camb. Bib. (17) poor . . water, a promise that should be referred to the difficulties of the journey back from Babylon to Palestine.^a Perhaps with special reference to those who had been conscious of the religious privations of the captivity, who had thirsted for the water of life. faileth, or is rigid, parched. (18) rivers, recalling the provisions made during the wilderness journey from Egypt.^b high places, R. V., "on the bare heights."

Note on vs. 18.—A most important pastoral duty in the Eastern regions is to provide water for the flock. The living fountain and the flowing stream generally furnish a sure and abundant supply; but these are seldom found in the burning desert, where the Oriental shepherd is often compelled to feed his cattle. In such circumstances, happy is he who finds a pool where his flocks may quench their thirst. Often, as he pursues his journey, a broad expanse of water, clear as crystal, seems to open to his view, and, faint and weary under the fierce sunbeam, he gazes on the unexpected relief with ineffable delight, and fondly anticipates a speedy termination to his present distress. He sees the foremost camels enter the lake, and the water dashed about by their feet. He quickens his pace, and hastens to the spot; but to his utter disappointment the vision disappears, and nothing remains but the dry and thirsty wilderness. To such deceitful appearances the Prophet opposes, with admirable effect, the real pool, the overflowing fountain, and the running stream; the appropriate symbols of those substantial blessings of grace and mercy that were laid up in store for the Church of Christ in the last days: "And the parched ground (or the scorching heat) shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water." "I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys; I will make the wilderness a pool of water." —Paxton.

19, 20 (19) cedar,^a 2 Sa. ii. 2—7. shittah, R. V., "acacia," Ex. xxv. 5. myrtle, Ne. viii. 15. oil tree, or wild olive. fir tree, or cypress. pine, or plane (elm). box tree, or sherbin, a tall cedar. The prophet names here four trees at least which are "the glory of Lebanon"—he evidently means that the very desert shall become as glorious as Lebanon has been. (20) created it, i. e. the purpose of this miracle will be to demonstrate the creative power of Israel's God.

The Voice of Nature.—Standing at Chamounix a poet exclaims:—

Ye ice-falls! Ye that from the mountain's brow
Adown enormous ravines slope amain,— Torrents, methinks, that heard a mighty voice
And stopped at once, amidst their maddest plunge!
Motionless torrents! Silent cataracts!
Who made you glorious as the gates of Heaven
Beneath the keen full moon? Who bade the sun Clothe you with rainbows? Who with living flowers
Of loveliest blue, spread garlands at your feet?—
God! let the torrents, like a shout of nations,
Answer, and let the ice-plains echo, God!
God! sing, ye meadow streams, with gladsome voice!
Ye pine groves, with your soft and soul-like sounds!
And they too have a voice, yon piles of snow,
And in their perilous fall shall thunder, God!—Coleridge.

God in Nature.—The Hebrews had no notion of what we denominate "secondary laws," but believed that God acted directly upon matter, and was the immediate, efficient cause of the solemn order and the varied and wonderful phenomena of nature. Dispensing thus with the whole machinery of cause and effect, as we employ those terms in philosophical language, their minds were brought into immediate contact with God in His manifold works, and this gave, both to devotion and the spirit of poetry, the liveliest inspiration and the freest scope of action. Heaven and earth were governed by His commands; the thunder was His "voice;" the lightning His "arrows." It is He who "causeth the vapor to ascend from the ends of the earth." When the famished city should call upon the corn, the wine, and the oil, and those should call upon the earth for nourishment, and the parched earth should call upon the heavens for moisture, and the heavens should call upon the Lord for permission to refresh the earth, then Jehovah would hear and supply. He gave the rain, and He sent the drought and famine. The clouds were not looked upon merely as sustained by a law of specific gravity, but God spread them out in the sky; these clouds were God's chariot, the curtains of His pavilion, the dust of His feet. Snow and hail were fearful manifestations of God, often sent as the messengers of His wrath.—Hibbard.

21, 22. The argument of vss. 1—4 is resumed, but now the idols, not the worshipers are addressed. Foreknowledge is the test of divinity. Can the idols show any sign of it? (21) produce, etc., evidence of their claims to divinity. strong reasons, forcible arguments and proofs. (22) what shall happen, putting their heathen oracles over against Jehovah's predictions. consider them, so as to see if oracle and event have matched.

A True Test of Divinity.—The idols of the heathen were valueless; they could not tell "things to come hereafter;" they were utterly ignorant; they had no voice to answer the most urgent and pressing questions which men were asking. Those great and profound inquiries which we are now putting are beyond the reach of nature and of man. Nature, at the demand of science, can shed no light at all on the most sacred problems, the solution of which is everything to us. It makes no sign, it leaves us as we were. Its teaching is as consistent with one conclusion as with the opposite. Man, unaided by special illumination, can reach no certainty, can attain to nothing like assurance; he can guess, can argue, can hope, but he cannot know. God alone, the author of our being, the Lord of our life, the Arbiter of our destiny, can tell us whence we came and whome we are and whither we go. He can tell us "things to come hereafter," and much else which it is as urgent that we should know.—Pul. Com.

23—25. (23) do good, Pol. Bib. "Yea, do something, either good or bad, that we may at once marvel, and have somewhat to see." dismayed, at the signs of Divine power these heathen gods put forth. (24) of nothing. No answer comes and the prophet exclaims "Behold—you are naught—and he who worships you is an abomination." abomination, De. vii. 26. (25) Here follows a summary in evidence of Jehovah's claims. north,^b North is the region of mystery and East the region of light. The terms are poetic.—Camb. Bib. come upon, better "trample upon," Pol. Bib. princes, prefects or deputies.

Omnipresence of God.—To the Hebrews, the external universe is just a black screen concealing God. All things are full of, yet all distinct from, Him. The cloud on the mountain is His covering; the muttering from the chambers of thunder is His voice; that sound on the top of the mulberry trees is His "going;" in that wind, which bends the forest or curls the clouds, He is walking; that sun is His still commanding eye. Whither can they go from His spirit? Whither can they flee from His presence? At every step and in every circumstance they feel themselves God-enclosed, God-filled, God-breathing men with a spiritual presence lowering or smiling on them from the sky, sounding in wild tempest, or creeping in panic stillness across the surface of the earth; and if they turn within, lo! it is there also—an "eye" hung in the central darkness of their own hearts. Hence the muse of the Hebrew bard is not Dame Memory, nor any of her syren daughters, but the Almighty, all-pervading Spirit Himself, who is at once the subject, the auditor, and the inspirer of the song.—Gilfillan.

"With God time is not. Unto Him all is present eternity. Worlds, beings, years, with all their natures, powers, and events, — the range whereof, when making, He ordains,—unfold themselves like flowers. He foresees not, but sees all at once." —Bailey.

"The Master's work may make weary feet, but it leaves the spirit glad." —Mrs. Charles.

"The proof to which they are challenged is Divine foreknowledge. It is placed at its option either to adduce prophecies uttered by them in ancient times, that they might be compared with the events to which they referred; or distinctly to announce some future contingent events." —Henderson.

Is. xlii. 9.

^b Je 1, 3, 9.

"How did the atheist get his idea of that God whom he denies?" — Coleridge.

"Such is the conclusion of the trial. The idols are utterly destitute of strength to aid their friends or distress their foes. Jehovah alone is worthy of confidence and regard, as the true God, Protector, and Guide. In times of deepest dis-treas he can raise up a deliverer like Cyrus, and in his own way and time rescue his people from all their calamities." — John-son.

a "This is the summary conclusion of the whole preceding controversy as to the divinity of any gods except Jehovah." — J. A. Alexander.

b The Jewish writer Abarbanel says that they who do not interpret this of Messiah are smitten with blindness.

"The law of prophetic suggestion leads Isaiah fr. Cyrus to the far greater Deliverer, behind whom the former is lost sight of." — Fausset.

Mat. xii. 18-20.
c 2 Sa. xxi. 6;
Ps. cvi. 23.

"I believe that this world utterly and absolutely needs Christ and His life, and that without Christ and His life this world is, without any reference to the future, a lost and dying world." — Robert E. Speer.

a "God's servant shall bring to men's hearts the word of God's righteousness and salvation by a gentle, inward, and spiritual method." — Mat. Arnold.

b Is. lxi. 1-3;
Mat. xi. 28-30.

c "The wick of a candle newly lighted, which is ready to go out again." — Mat. Henry.

d "The main idea seems to be that the end in question is to be accomplished not by clamor, not by violence, but by the truth." — J. A. Alexander.

26-29. (26) Who, etc., the speakers are Jehovah and His worshipers. They place themselves, in imagination, at the time of the fulfilment of this prediction, when this question will naturally be asked?—Cheyne. (27) The first, "I first have said unto Zion." Jehovah first announced by His Prophet the approach of the conqueror; before any other god or prophet. (28) R. V., "And when I look there is no man, even among them there is no counsellor," etc., i. e. among the idols is no one to forewarn or give advice. (29) all, R. V., "All of them," i. e. idols and people together. nothing, pure fiction and imposture. wind, etc., unsubstantial and fruitless. confusion, chaos.^a

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SECOND.

1. my servant, this term has been applied both to Israel and to Cyrus; here it is applied to Messiah.^b "The first traces of distinction between the real Servant and the whole nation are to be found in the Program of His Mission, Ch. xlii. 1-7."—G. A. Smith. elect, R. V., "my chosen,"^c spirit upon him, Is. xi. 2, lxi. 1. bring forth, the ultimate purpose of the work of this Servant is the spread of the true religion over all the earth. judgment "means the religion of Jehovah regarded as a system of ordinances."—Camb. Bib.

The Character of the Messiah (vs. 1).—I. The person here designated—not Cyrus, or the Jewish people, or Isaiah, but Christ. II. For what office was He set apart? III. How He discharged this office. 1. Without violence; 2. He loved secrecy; 3. With great sympathy with men; 4. With truth and fidelity.—I. Wolfendale.

The Love of the Father.—If we have any saving acquaintance with the Gospel, we are at all times disposed to offer to the Son of God the homage of gratitude and praise for the work of redemption. But there are times when we are in danger of falling into the mistake of regarding the Saviour as offering Himself as a sacrifice to propitiate an angry God. We are prone to contemplate the Father as a stern, uncompromising, and unyielding Judge, actuated by vindictive feelings, taking pleasure in exacting punishment and inflicting pain; or a personification (so to speak) of the attributes of almighty power, unerring wisdom, and unswerving justice. But there our view of the great Creator stops, and there our apprehension of Him who is the Moral Governor of the world becomes defective. . . . Contemplating the bleeding Victim, voluntarily bleeding to atone for the guilty, and to bring back rebels to reconciliation and peace, the justice, power, and love of the Father are well-nigh forgotten in the sight of the tenderness and self-abandonment displayed by the Son. . . . But this Scripture combines with others to teach us that if we would love Him "who first loved us," we must pass on from Calvary to Him whose will is accomplished by the death and passion of His Son.—Kemble.

2, 3. (2) cry,^a "the Servant's unobtrusive manner of working."^b Not by clamorous self-assertion in the high places of the world, but by silent spiritual influences his great work shall be accomplished. Comp. the striking application in Matt. xii. 17 ff. This feature of the Servant's activity can hardly have been suggested by the demeanor of the prophets of Israel; and for that reason the prophecy is all the more wonderful as a perception of the true conditions of spiritual work. It reminds us of the 'still small voice' in which Elijah was made to recognize the power of Jehovah (1 Ki. xix. 12 f.).—Camb. Bib. (3) bruised reed, a reed that is bruised is so easily broken. smoking flax, or a dim wick.^c The patience of the Servant with the weak and hopeless, with those who have but little good left in them. unto truth, in accordance with truth.^d

The Song of the Reed to the Bruised (vs. 3).—The Shepherd does not break His reed, for—I. He remembers its former services. II. He remembers there is a paucity of such reeds. III. He knows the possibility of the reed being rectified. IV. He prizes it because He fashioned it. 1. He chose it; 2. It cost Him very much; 3. He bruised the reed. Apply:—(1) Let us recognize the fitness of the metaphor; (2) Believe the declaration; (3) Believe much more.—Stems and Twigs.

Note on vs. 3.—Perhaps this imagery may be derived from the practice of the ancient shepherds, who were wont to amuse themselves with the music of a pipe of reed or straw; and when it was bruised they broke it, or threw it away as useless. But the bruised reed shall not be broken by this Divine Shepherd of souls. The music of broken sighs and groans is indeed all that the broken reed can afford Him; the notes are but low, melancholy, and jarring; and yet He will not break the instrument, but He will repair and tune it; till it is fit to join in the concert of angels on high; and even now its humble strains are pleasing to His ears. Surely, every broken heart must revive while contemplating this tender and moving imagery.—Pres. Davies.

4. fail, etc., the servant is here regarded as if he were the lamp and reed. set judgment, or fully established the true religion.* Shall wait, perhaps "do wait," i. e. are looking, perhaps unconsciously, for something better than their own religion gives them.

Preaching of Christ.—Our Lord found many a topic of discourse in the scenes around Him. Even the humblest objects shine in His hands as I have seen a fragment of broken glass or earthenware, as it caught the sunbeam, light up, flashing like a diamond. With the stone of Jacob's well for a pulpit, and its water for a text, He preached salvation to the Samaritan woman. A little child, which He takes from its mother's side, and holds up blushing in His arms before the astonished audience, is the text for a sermon on humility. A husbandman on a neighboring height, between Him and the sky, who strides with long and measured steps over the field he sows, supplies a text from which He discourses on the Gospel and its effects on different classes of hearers. In a woman baking; in two women who sit by some cottage door grinding at the mill; in an old, strong fortalice, perched on a rock, whence it looks across the brawling torrent to the ruined and roofless gable of a house swept away by mountain floods—Jesus found texts. From the birds that sung above His head, and the lilies that blossomed at His feet, He discoursed on the care of God—these His text, and providence His theme.—Guthrie.

5—7. "A new revelation (followed by a solemn pledge) defining the mission of the Servant with greater precision."—Cheyne. (5) saith God, to His servant, Messiah. spread . . earth," Ps. cxxxvi. 6. people, i. e. the whole human race. (6) in righteousness, "the meaning is that there is some consistency between the processes in creation and the efforts He calls on us to make."—G. A. Smith. covenant, or a mediator." (7) open, etc., Is. lxi. 1; Lu. iv. 18; He. ii. 14, 15.

The Bondage of the Grammar; the Freedom of Literature.—Just as the child, after he has learned to read, through the bondage of alphabets and grammar and dictionaries, comes into the glorious liberty of literature, and roams through all its fields without thinking of the alphabet or grammar; as the musician, after his training in the laws of music, comes into the freedom where it is part of his nature to act according to those laws, and soars away beyond them in the delights and ecstasies of song or oratorio; so the Christian has entered a state far beyond the slavery of law, where it is natural and easy for him to do right; he acts from love, not law. He belongs to a higher sphere of action.—Peloubet.

8. the Lord, i. e. Jehovah; "God's distinguishing and incommunicable name." "The self-existent and immutable." glory . . another, i. e. I will keep my promises and not give to the false gods any glory from my failure. graven images, put for idols in general.

Idolatry.—A lady, who lived some years at Serampore, in India, thus writes in a letter: "One evening, as I was walking with my husband by the river-side, we saw two respectable natives carrying a woman in their arms. We asked them what they were going to do with her. They very coldly answered, 'we are going to put her into the river, that her soul may go to heaven, for she is our mother!' I asked them if she was ill. They said, 'She is not very ill, but she is old, and has no teeth, and what is the use of her living?' I felt a great deal on hearing this, and said, 'What! have you no compassion on your mother? Will you drown her because she is old?' The woman instantly fixed her eyes on me, and said, 'What sort of a woman are you!' I told her I was an English-woman, and wished to prevent her children from drowning her, and, if they did, I would acquaint the governor with it, and have them both

"I will answer for it, the longer you read the Bible, the more you will like it; it will grow sweeter and sweeter; and the more you get into the spirit of it, the more you will get into the spirit of Christ." — Romaine.

e Je. xxiii. 5.

"Mild and gentle as he would be towards the broken-hearted and desponding, no power should depress his spirit, impede his progress, obscure his glory, or thwart his purpose." —Henderson.

Conquerors take away kingdoms; the heralds of Christ offer a kingdom.—Van Doren.

"God writes the Gospel not in the Bible only, but on the trees and flowers and clouds and stars." —Luther.

a "This clause is not a scientific but a poetical description. To the eye the heavens have the appearance of a canopy or curtain, and the verdant surface of the earth that of a carpet."—J. A. Alexander.

b Is. xli. 8.

"It is the lack of liberty that causes so much deadness in the pulpit and deadness in the pew. Oh, for the liberty of the Spirit!"—A. J. Gordon.

c Ex. vi. 3; Ps. lxxiii. 18, xvi. 5; Ho. xii. 5.

"It was characteristic of idolatry that large promises were made to men by oracles and priests, for which there was no guarantee; and there is no more miserable chapter in the history of idols than the chapter of excuses for d is a p p o i n t e d promise-holders. No reproach of men can be more severe and searching than this, "They feared the Lord, and served other gods." — Pul. Com.

"The true measure of loving God is to love Him without measure." — St. Bernard.

^a Comp. Jos. xxi. 45.

^b "A botanical metaphor, aptly introduced to show that no appearances existed which gave the least indication of the things predicted. They were, as it were, hid under ground from the sight of mortals." — Hender-son.

^c "In the convulsions of war and change coming upon the earth God's arm was about to be shown in the overthrow of idolatrous Babylon, and in the restoration of His chosen people; hence this song of triumph." — Mat. Arnold.

^d Is. xxi. 16.

^e Is. xvi. 1.

"Make us to meet what is or is to be With fervid welcome, knowing it is sent To serve us in some way full excellent, Though we discern it all belatedly."

—J. W. Riley.
The blessedness of God's house is that there men praise him. This it was that made that house so precious to the Psalmist.

hanged. They said, 'Never mind,' and proceeded towards the river. My husband then ran down the bank, and, taking hold of the woman, insisted upon their taking her home. They did so; but, sad to tell, they brought her again the next evening, and Mr. Felix Carey saw them throw her into the water, without performing the usual ceremony of giving her water in the name of their gods."—Whitecross.

9, 10. (9) former things, things previously prophesied, which have been fulfilled:^a Spring forth^b "Events shoot forth from predictions. The new things are not merely the victories of Cyrus, but much more, the glorious future of Israel, of which those victories are the condition. No mere politician could guess that Israel would be treated by Cyrus differently from other peoples, and that Jerusalem would become the religious capital of the world."—Pol. Bib. (10) Sing, as the sign of universal joy in the delightful expectation.^c down. sea, comp. Ps. xcvi. 11.

The Praying Light-keeper.—We were fog-bound in Penobscot Bay, and made harbor at Eagle Island. Just as the sun was setting we went on shore, and walking toward the lighthouse, were attracted by the voice of someone in prayer. It was an impressive scene. Before us stretched out the broad Atlantic; the gathering shades of evening deepened the solitude. In the light above us was the keeper, where he had just lighted his lamp. His face was turned toward the sea; his long hair and beard were whitened with the snows of many winters. His arms were outstretched and his voice alone broke the silence, as he besought the Almighty, in the hollow of whose hands the seas are held, to protect the sailor, and to forgive his sins. "Them prayers will go higher than the light," said our skipper, and all of us felt that we had come into the near presence of God, on that lonely island far at sea. Who can measure the Divine Providence that shines out from the lighthouse on Eagle Island, because of that praying lighthouse-keeper?—Old Test. Anec.

11, 12. (11) wilderness, etc., the expanse of desert country bet. Babylonia, Palestine, and Arabia. cities, i. e. villages on the oases, where the Arabs live. Kedar, an Arabian people, Ge. xxv. 13. Prob. put here for the Arabs generally.^d the rock, R. V., "of Sela," the rock city of Edom.^e (12) islands, as previously, a general term for coasts and countries. The districts here referred to lay westward, as the Arab countries lay eastward.

Power of Sacred Song.—Duncan Matheson, a Bible-reader to the soldiers in the Crimea, was returning one night to his lodgings in an old stable. Sickened by the sights he had seen, and depressed with the thought that the siege of Sebastopol was likely to last for months, he trudged along in the mud, knee-deep. Happening to look up, he saw the stars shining calmly in the clear sky. Weariness gave place to the thought that in heaven is rest, and he began to sing aloud the old hymn:

How bright these glorious spirits shine!

Whence all their bright array?

The next day was wet and stormy. While going his rounds, Matheson came upon a soldier standing under the veranda of an old house. The man was in soiled and ragged clothes, and his shoes were so worn that they did not keep his feet from the mud. The Bible-reader drew him into conversation, cheered him by encouraging words, and gave him money to buy shoes. "I am not what I was yesterday," answered the man, his heart opening to Matheson's sympathy. "Last night I was tired of life and of this blundering siege. I took my musket and went down yonder, determined to blow out my brains. As I got round that hillock I heard some one singing, 'How bright these glorious spirits shine!' It recalled to me the Sabbath school where I used to sing it, and the religious truths I had heard there. I felt ashamed of being such a coward. I said to myself, 'Here is a comrade as badly off as I am, but he is not a coward—he's bearing it!' I felt that that man had something which I did not possess to make him accept with cheerfulness our hard lot. I went back to my tent, and to-day I am seeking that thing which made the singer so happy."—Youth's Companion.

13, 14. (13) "The reason for this universal exultation: Jehovah takes the field against His enemies. The gracious side of His intervention is reserved for vs. 16."—Camb. Bib. man of war, Ex. xv. 3; Ps. xxiv. 8. jealousy,[†] better "zeal," roar, the shout, or battle-cry, of a warrior. prevail, marg. behave himself mightily. (14) cry .. woman,[‡] intimating a sudden and strong Divine determination. destroy, etc., R. V., "I will gasp and pant together."

The Severe Aspect of God.—There is a power beyond man's; and nothing is held safely that is not held by consent of that power. God cannot be described in parts; He is to be studied in the unity of His character. Men are bound to be as common-sense in their theology as in the ordinary works of life; in building character they should be at least as sagacious as in building houses; they must build for tempestuous as well as for fine weather. We prepare for the severe side of Nature—why ignore the severe aspect of God? This is not preaching the mere terrors of the Lord; it is being simply faithful to facts. The so-called success of the bad man has yet to stand the strain of the Divine trial. God will examine our title-deeds. Remember, we are not stronger than our weakest point.—Hom. Com.

15, 16. "Judgment and redemption side by side." (15) mountains, etc., as prev., the symbols of governments, such as the Babylonian, which hindered His people from their return to their own land. rivers, the great rivers of Mesopotamia. (16) blind, etc., i. e. the spiritually blind, who cannot discern God's purposes; or "the perplexed and desponding" to whom life is pathless. darkness, etc., figures for overcoming all kinds of difficulty. These .. them, "These are the things I have determined to do and not leave undone."—Camb. Bib.

The Way of the Blind (vs. 16).—God's conduct towards His people gives a striking view—1. Of the state in which they set out in life, spiritually blind; 2. Of the manner in which this blindness is removed; 3. Of the necessary steps that are taken to make this deliverance a blessing indeed; 4. This view of the conduct of Divine grace is crowned with the promise of persevering grace, and support to the end of life.—T. N. Toller.

17, 18. (17) turned back, then, after such evidences of the providence of Jehovah, the idolaters shall be ashamed and turned back. (18) deaf .. blind, the subject here addressed is Israel as it is, "At present the deaf and blind appear to predominate among the exiles."—Pol. Bib.

19, 20. (19) Who is blind,[‡] Israel is the blind and deaf nation par excellence, because no other nation has been so tested by the opportunity of seeing and hearing.—Camb. Bib. perfect, R. V., "at peace with me," Heb. meshullam, he that is God's favored friend. (20) Seeing .. not, R. V., "Thou seest many things, but thou observest not; his ears are open, but he heareth not," i. e. Great events have occurred before Israel which they heeded not nor understood.^b Is. liii. 1. The Jews had, through long ages, been honored with special Divine revelations.

Live Souls.—To have faculties that have fallen into disuse, to have the symbols of manhood but no virility, to look a man, and yet be but a thing, to seem to have a heart and yet have no response to human want and pain,—that is the inconceivable but possible irony. Having eyes, they see not; having ears, they hear not; having hearts, they do not understand. Yet are they counted as of the population of the earth. A man may withdraw himself from the working force of society, and from the real manhood of the world, and may occupy room of which he is not worthy. Only they should be counted whose souls are alive.—Peop. Bib.

21, 22. (21) R. V., "It pleased the Lord for his righteousness sake to magnify the law," etc., i. e. by extending the knowledge of it to all mankind.^c the law, Pol. Bib. "his instruction," i. e. the true religion. Comp. xlii. 1.^d (22) robbed, etc., ch. xvii. 14, descriptive of the sufferings of Israel in exile. snared, Babylon, to a faithful Jew was a pit, or dungeon. Comp. Zech. ix. 11. spoil, Heb., a treading.^e Origin of the Commandments.—An infidel of acute mind sought an acquaintance with the truth of the Bible, and began to read at the Book of Genesis. When he had reached the ten commandments, he said to a friend, "I will tell you what I used to think. I supposed that Moses was the leader of a horde of banditti; that, having a strong mind, he acquired great influence over superstitious people; and that on Mount Sinai he played off some sort of fireworks to the amazement of his ignorant fol-

And what Christian man can climb higher than this,—to find in the praise of God the greatest joy of his life?—J. J. S. Perowne.

[†] Better rendered zeal, because our associations with the word jealousy make it unsuitable as applied to God. If used of God it should be distinctly understood to mean, "sensitive regard for His own honor, and for the welfare of His people."

[‡] Ga. iv. 19.

"No soul was ever lost because its fresh beginning broke down; but thousands of souls have been lost because they would not make fresh beginnings." — Faber.

^b Comp. Is. xliii.

8: Mat. xv. 14.

^a "Israel, as a whole, is faint-hearted, is slow to understand God's great purposes for it, and incredulous of them, in spite of all the experience it has had of God's goodness." — Mat. Arnold.

^b Lu. vii. 23.

^c "The people, being thus unfaithful to their trust, had no claim to be treated any longer as an object of Jehovah's favor; and yet He continues propitious, not on their account, but out of regard to His own engagements, and for the execution of His righteous purposes." — J. A. Alexander.

^d Mat. v. 17; Ro. x. 4.

^e "Notwithstanding all God's favor to Israel, Israel is spotted, and carried captive, and why? Not because of any failure in God's love, but because of their sins; because they are willfully blind and deaf." — Wordsworth.

* De. iv. 24—28.

"In the great majority of things habit is a greater plague than ever afflicted Egypt; in religious character it is a grand felicity." — John Foster.

"O Lord take my heart, for I cannot give it to Thee, and when Thou hast it, oh! Keep it, for I cannot keep it for Thee; and save me in spite of myself, for Jesus Christ's sake." — Fennelon.

* "To call by name includes the ideas of specific designation, public announcement, and solemn consecration to a certain work." — J. A. Alexander.

"God's grace never shines so brightly as when it shines through the cloud of His people's sins. Nor does it ever appear so glorious as when displayed in the depth of their unworthiness. When nature is at the lowest, grace is generally at the highest." — Jas. Smith.

"Images of the greatest troubles and dangers, and promises of perfect security." — Henderson.

lowers, who imagined, in their mingled fear and superstition, that the exhibition was supernatural. I have been looking into the nature of that law. I have been trying to see whether I can add anything to it, or take anything from it, so as to make it better. Sir, I cannot. It is perfect. I have been thinking, Where did Moses get that law? I have read history. The Egyptians and the adjacent nations were idolaters; so were the Greeks and Romans; and the wisest or best Greeks or Romans never gave a code of morals like this. Where did Moses get that law which surpasses the wisdom and philosophy of the most enlightened ages? He lived at a period comparatively barbarous; but he has given a law in which the learning and sagacity of all subsequent time can detect no flaw. Where did he get it? He could not have soared so far above his age as to have devised it himself. I am satisfied where he obtained it. It came down from heaven. I am convinced of the truth of the religion of the Bible." The infidel (infidel no longer) remained to his death a firm believer in the truth of Christianity.

23—25. (23) "The question expresses the prophet's wish that now at last some of the people should begin to realize the significance of their relation to Jehovah, and prepare themselves for the great deliverance. will give ear to this, i. e. to the substance of the present exhortation,—the contrast between the ideal calling of Israel and its present position, its failure to realize its mission, and (especially) the reason of that failure (vss. 24 f.)."—Camb. Bib. (24) the Lord, the blind people thought it was Babylon that had overthrown Jerusalem. We . . sinned, the prophet identifies himself with the people. (25) Knew not, i. e. did not understand it. burned him, in the Divine chastening fires."

God's Loving Care.—Christ laid hold of in faith to-day will sustain us in the overflowing of the waters to-morrow. Though now, in the full flush of youth and health and strength, every nerve instinct with intense vitality, we cannot look at death without pain and shuddering, let us not fear. Dying grace will come with dying. God, who hath so loved us, will not leave us then. A father does not care his child through the long summer day to abandon him at nightfall. Darkness may veil him from the little one's sight, or slumber lull him to temporary forgetfulness, but his loving-kindness wraps his child about, in the still hours, and a fatherly presence is in the house for good.—Gail Hamilton.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-THIRD.

I. Israel shall be saved. But now, marks a transition of thought. "There has been a conflict between divine love and divine wrath and the former has gained the victory. Now Jehovah will deliver and restore his people."—Cheyne. created thee, i. e. as a nation. redeemed thee, better "I redeem" and "I call," i. e. as one who is dear to me. mine, i. e. wholly separated to the carrying out of My purposes.

Fear Not.—Shall I tell you which commandment God gives most frequently? "Fear not." He says this more than eighty times—I believe eighty-four times; this is much oftener than any other commandment.

2. water . . fire, "when Jehovah was angry the fire burned Israel (ch. xlii. 25); but now with Jehovah on its side, it is invulnerable in the severest trials. 'Water' and 'fire' are common images of extreme peril; the former in Ps. xxxii. 6, xlii. 7, cxxiv. 4 f.; the latter in ch. xlii. 25 (cf. Dan. iii. 17, 27); both together Ps. lxxvi. 12."—Camb. Bib.

Support and Protection in the Day of Trial (vs. 2).—I. The people to whom these promises were addressed. II. The condition of that people as supposed in the text. III. The promises made to God's people in that condition.—E. Edwards.

Fear Not.—There is a printed leaf preserved in the Museum of Greenwich Hospital, England. Nothing is known of its history but this: It was found in the polar regions among the few relics of Sir John Franklin's expedition. It is a leaf torn from Todd's Student's Manual, and is the only relic of a book discovered. From the way the leaf is turned down it is plain the person meant to call attention to the dialogue there printed:—"Are you not afraid to die?" I asked. "No." "No! Why does the uncertainty of another state give you no concern?" "Because God has said, Fear not: when thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee."

3. 4. (3) gave Egypt, etc., The richest powers in the world should be given up as a ransom for Israel, to compensate Cyrus for the loss of it. Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, conquered Egypt, and invaded Ethiopia.^a Seba, or Saba, i. e. Meröe on the upper Nile.^a (4) Since, i. e. because thou art precious, honorable, and I love thee. men for thee, as the price of thy recovery fr. the Babylonish captivity. people, R. V., peoples, i. e. nations.

The Lord's Delight in His People (vs. 4).—The Lord will adorn the soul that He loves, hence we may discover who are the chosen people of God. When the Lord takes a sinner out of the world He will adorn that soul. He casts over him the robe of righteousness.—R. Cecil.

Trust in God.—

The child leans on its parent's breast,
Leaves there its cares, and is at rest;
The bird sits singing by his nest,
And tells aloud
His trust in God, and is blest
'Neath every cloud.

He has no store, he sows no seed;
Yet sings aloud, and doth not heed;
By flowing stream, or grassy mead
He sings to shame
Men who forget, in fear of need
A Father's name.

The heart that trusts for ever sings,
And feels as light as it had wings;
A well of peace within it springs;
Come good or ill,
Whate'er to-day, to-morrow brings,
It is His will!—I. Williams.

5-7. (5) east, etc.,^b at the destruction of Jerus., and during the captivity, God's people had become scattered into all lands, so they were to be restored not from Babylon only. (6) my daughters, notice "the kind and even respectful mention of the female sex in Messianic descriptions. xi. 12: lx. 4: Joel ii. 28; Gal. iii. 28."—Cheyne. ends . . earth, none being too far away to be beyond the Divine reach. (7) created, as a member of My special kingdom.

Never Fear (vs. 5).—I. The exhortation. 1. Fear not anxieties; 2. Fear not want; 3. Enemies; 4. Duties; 5. Perils; 6. Death. II. The promise. 1. I am with thee to aid thee; 2. To comfort thee; 3. To guide thee; 4. Protect thee.—W. W. Whythe.

The Calmness of Trust.—When the steamship Massachusetts^c was wrecked in Long Island Sound, there were two mothers, each with a child, who were noticeable for their respectful calmness during the hours of greatest peril and anxiety, when it seemed as if the vessel must shortly go to pieces. A passenger from Philadelphia says that his attention was first called to them by their voices in singing. Going towards them, he found a little boy standing there with his life-preserver on, and the little fellow was just joining with his mother in singing a hymn of trust and confidence. And when rescue came, and the passengers were safely on another vessel, those same sweet voices were again heard, this time in a ringing strain of praise for their deliverance.—Pul. Com.

8, 9. "Another imaginary judgment scene (vss. 8-13) in which Israel appears as Jehovah's witness to the truth of his prophecies."—Camb. Bib. (8) blind . . eyes, i. e. the Jews.^a (9) people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. the various nations. "The preceding verses (1-7) show us that it is the whole people, in their bulk and scattered fragments, who are referred to. Blind though they be, yet are there eyes among them; deaf though they be, yet they have ears. And so Jehovah addresses them all, in contradistinction to the heathen peoples (vs. 9). as His Servant."—G. A. Smith,

^a "The worship of Ammon and Osiris was here celebrated in the most sumptuous manner." —Henderson.

"Sight is not necessary to the conscious presence of even an earthly friend. The room may be dark, not a word may be spoken, not a sound heard; but we feel that he is there. God's conscious presence fills the soul with faith, hope, peace. It is the consciousness of love and sympathy. It is the invisible, secret, gentle power of His Spirit that gives calmness and strength while trouble is pressing most heavily, and while external circumstances are the most distressing." —J. Rawlinson.

^b "This promise, which had an initial fulfillment in the return fr. Babylon, and a larger one in the gathering in of Gentile converts, looks on yet further to the final recovery of Israel." —Spk. Com.

"Every regenerate individual is formed anew for God; in his new regenerate life he is to show forth God's praise." —Pul. Com.

^a "Set free My people Israel, who have been blind to My ways but shall see them, and deaf to My word but shall hearken to it." —Mat. Arnold.

"For truth it is ever the fitting time; who waits till circumstances completely favor his undertaking will never accomplish anything." —Luther.

"We take with solemn thankfulness
Our burden up,
nor ask it less,
And count it joy that even we May suffer, serve, or wait
for Thee, Whose will be done."
—Whittier.

b "The Jews are a monument of the wonderful fulfilment of the most extraordinary prophecies they themselves preserve, and bear witness to, though they shut their eyes to the fulfilment of them." —Whately.

c Is. xlv. 21.

The witnesses against God whose testimony is most dishonoring to him, and at the same time most injurious to mankind, are the unworthy professors of belief in him. To confess God with the lips while denying him in the life, is to do him the greatest dis-service that is possible. It is to cast a doubt upon the value of all the human testimony borne in his favor, since who shall say how much of it is insincere? The Christian religion would, it is probable, have long ere this, overspread the world, had it not been for the vicious lives of professing Christians. The testimony of their acts takes away all its force from the testimony of their words, and changes them from witnesses for God into most persuasive witnesses against Him. —Pul. Com.

a "I make the Chaldeans to see upon the barks that had before served for who . . things, Is. xli. 21. or let, etc., if they cannot plead, let them quietly listen to Me.

Sinning Against Light.—Carlyle quotes out of the Koran a story of the dwellers by the Dead Sea, to whom Moses was sent. They sniffed and jeered at Moses; saw no comeliness in Moses; and so he withdrew. But Nature and her rigorous veracities did not withdraw. When next we find the dwellers by the Dead Sea, they, according to the Koran, are all changed into apes. "By not using their souls, they lost them." "And now," continues Carlyle, "their only employment is to sit there and look out into the smokiest, dreariest, most undecipherable sort of universe. Only once in seven days they do remember that they once had souls. Hast thou never, O traveler! fallen in with parties of this tribe? Methinks they have grown somewhat numerous in our day." The old Greek proverb was that the avenging deities are shod with wool, but the wool grows on the eyelids that refuse the light. "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad," but the insanity arises from judicial blindness. Jeremy Taylor says that whoever sins against light kisses the lips of a blazing cannon.—Old Test. Anecdotes.

10, 11. (10) my witnesses, the gods are unable to meet the challenge and Jehovah turns to his servant Israel, who could abundantly testify to the Divine faithfulness and goodness. no God formed, i. e. He was, before these other gods were formed. (11) beside me, "I, I am Jehovah, and beside me there is no deliverer."

God's witnesses (vs. 10).—I. Some of the principal things which believers are called to witness for God. 1. To His being and glorious perfections; 2. To the equity of His holy law; 3. To the excellence of His Gospel; 4. To the power of His grace; 5. To the influence of His truth; 6. To the use of His ordinances; 7. To the attention of His providence; 8. To the fulfilment of His promises; 9. To the glorious nature of His rest. II. Describe the character and qualification of God's witnesses. They are called, chosen, impartial, experimental, practical, tried, sworn, many, continued, continual, living, dying. They are competent, credible, unanswerable, and at the last day they will be convincing or condemning witnesses.—Ryland.

12, 13. (12) I, emphatic; I Myself, and I alone. "The meaning of all this is plain. Jehovah is God alone, because He is directly effective in history for the salvation of His people, and because He has published beforehand what He will do. The great instance of this, which the prophecy adduces, is the present movement towards the liberation of the people, of which movement Cyrus is the most conspicuous factor."—G. A. Smith. (13) before the day, R. V. margin. "Yea, from this day forth I am the same." work, "Jehovah is not only the Immutable, but also the Omnipotent and Irresistible." let it, hinder it; turn it back.

14, 15. (14) I have sent, Cyrus, as My messenger. have brought, R. V., "and I will bring down all of them as fugitives, even the Chaldeans, in the ships of their rejoicing," i. e. the ships that formerly resounded with shouts of joy and exultation. Chaldeans, the proudest part of the nation. (15) your King, Ps. lxxiv. 12, lxxxix. 18.

Greatness of God.—When the French Government took steps to adorn the Academy of Design in Paris, they gave to Delaroche the painting of that picture which has now become world-renowned, called "The Hemicycle," in which, in some seventy or eighty figures, he grouped around an imaginary art-tribunal all the great architects, sculptors, engravers, and painters both of the ancient and modern world. Now imagine a larger court than this, and that in some vast area you had gathered together all the great souls that have adorned human life, and made the world rich, from the beginning—all great thinkers, all great legislators, commencing with the greatest, Moses; all great poets, who stand next to legislators as ordainers of the people's life; all great diplomatists; all great philosophers; all men who have had a deep insight into nature; all men of great bounty, and benevolence, and liberality; all men of princely wealth; all men eminent as artists; all noted scholars; all men of every age and class who have risen so high that their names have come down to us in history,—imagine that you had gathered together such an assembly of men, that each one was full of exquisite consciousness and susceptibility as regards the speciality in which he excelled, so that Michael Angelo had a full consciousness of all those wonderful combinations which populated his mind; so that Raphael had a full consciousness of all those sweet and exquisite conceptions which presented themselves to his interior vision; so that all that Murillo saw, and all that Claude fancied, and all that every other artist who had become eminent had ever conceived, should stand forth in them with exquisite, living sensibility, and then bring down from the highest point of heaven this Christ, and let Him stand in the midst, and let one after another speak to Him, each of the thing which is most to him; and, one by one, as they speak to Him, let them find that all of thought which they possess is His thought, that all of conception which they have is His conception, that all of sensibility and taste which they are conscious belong to their being are His sensibility and taste; let them find that He is familiar with everything in which they have stood pre-eminent; let the poet find that, as compared with Christ, he is but a prattling child; let the sculptor find that, as compared with Christ, he is but an unbegin artist; let the orator find that his words, in comparison with those of Christ, fall paralysed upon his lips, and they would, every one of them, bow before Him, and say, "Never Man spake like this Man." The architect, the sculptor, the poet, the orator, the philosopher, the scientist—every man in his own speciality; he that has ransacked the world in the line of beauty; he that has explored nature in the range of colors; they who have produced works of art that have challenged the admiration of the world; they who have moved masses with their eloquence; they who have soared anywhere in the fields of knowledge, or science, or art—these would each say, instantly, "I am but a spark, and here is the great and glowing soul out of which I flew as a mere spark." They would cry, "Were all of us gathered and tempered into one great nature, melted into one living being, we should still be less than nothing in the presence of this majesty of excellence, that includes everything in heaven, and all that can be on earth, and out of whom sprang everything that is, and everything that has been." The universal acknowledgment to Him would be, "In Thee we live, and move, and have our being."—H. W. Beecher.

16—19. "The sequel to the overthrow of Babylon is the deliverance of Israel, the method of which is compared with the greatest miracle in Israel's past history, the exodus from Egypt."—Camb. Bib. (16) way in the sea, Ex. xiv. 16, 22; Jos. iii. 13, 16. (17) chariot, etc., in allusion to the destruction of Pharaoh's army. (18) Remember not, i. e. that which is to happen will be so much greater than former things as to almost drive them out of the memory. former things, see Is. xlii. 9. (19) Know it? i. e. do you not recognize it? way . . . desert, for the return of Israel from Babylonia to Palestine."

20, 21 (20) dragons, R. V., "jackals." Ps. xci. 13. owls, R. V., "ostriches," even the wild creatures will praise God for their share in the abundance of water. (21) This people, R. V., "the people which I formed for myself, that they might set forth my praise," i. e. the water was for them.

God's Workmanship.—In ancient history we read of a prince, who, from the summit of his palace beholding the metropolis of his extensive empire, exulted thus, "This is Babylon the great—Babylon, which I have built for the house of my kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty." He beheld the rising domes, the solemn temples, the numberless palaces of his lords; his heart bounded at the prospect, and his soul inflated with pride. Small cause, however, to be proud, had he recollected that these buildings were inhabited by a nation of slaves, and these temples filled with superstition and idolatry. In the sentence just read you have a far more noble potentate, even the King of kings Himself, reflecting upon the work of His hands, and rejoicing in the review of it. Beholding the triumphs of His grace, the accomplishment of His sacred purposes, and the wonders of His power, He expresses His complete satisfaction. His labor is not found in vain. His exertions are crowned with the designed success, and the production exactly corresponds with the plan laid down. With pleasure He reviews His their pleasure.' The great feature of Babylon was its river, the Euphrates, with its quays, cuts, and artificial lakes; it served alike for use and for pleasure." — Mat. Arnold.

"The secret of the failure of the Divine judgments is the great secret of failure still; it is this — when men fall into trouble they persist in looking only at the second causes, and will not recognize the true and only cause, or recognize God's hand in them. It has been so in all ages. One of the most striking instances is that of the Roman siege of Jerusalem under Titus. Distinctly foretold as a Divine judgment on the nation for its rejection of Messiah, the Jews to this day will not so regard it. To them it is still only a national calamity, and so it has been hitherto ineffective in the production of a due sense of national sin."

"We cannot tell how far is the nearest fixed star, and we know that could we approach nearer, we would, for the first time, learn how far we were! Surely it is so with our religious estimates of approximation to the light and glory of God. It is only he who struggles nearer that begins at length to perceive the true amount of the distance." — Archer Butler.

a "The circumstances connected with the return should be altogether novel in their character. To indicate that every provision for comfort and security would be made, the boldest poetical images are employed." — Henderson.

Je. xxiii. 7.

a "An ingredient of the holy anointing oil (Ex. xxx. 23). It is mentioned with cinnamon.

"Dr. Boothroyd has 'sweet reed,' Tamal, 'sweet bark!' This probably means cinnamon, as we know that 'sweet bark' was used by Moses in the service of the sanctuary: and it is in connection with the sacrifices of the Most High that it is here mentioned by the Prophet." — Roberts.

b Is. xxvii. 35. xlviii. 11; Eze. xxvi. 22, etc.

"Take this as the test of your Christian hope. If it makes you work, it is right; if it does not, there is something wrong with it." — Alexander McLaren.

c "The Jews are called upon to specify a single instance in which they had done anything really meritorious." — Henderson.

"A love of the good things of the world vitiates a Christian's work; but self-denial is the unspeakable, unfathomable element in Christian character. Self-assertion the world understands, but it is nonplussed before self-denial." — E. S. Tead.

a Ho. xii. 2, 3.

b "I have left them to suffer the same treatment as the workmanship, and already anticipates that chorus of praise which will perpetuate the honor of His name through eternal ages.—Lambert.

22—24. (22) not called, "yet not upon me hast thou called, O Jacob, nor about me hast thou wearied thyself O, Israel," i. e. this salvation is all the more wonderful in that it is given to the people before they had penitently sought it.—Comp. Ro. v. 8. (23) small cattle, or lambs, Ps. i. 8. Offering of sacrifice publicly had ceased during the captivity, but it seems that private sacrifice had ceased also. caused . . serve, laid no servile task on thee. (24) sweet cane, Calamus aromaticus, Je. vi. 20.^a made me to serve, "this is the contrast which the prophet has had in view from the beginning of the section: while Jehovah has not burdened His people even with the offerings which it had been too ready to bring, it has burdened Him with its sins; and while Israel has taken its whole relation to Jehovah lightly, He has accepted the burden, and labored in its service for the removal of its guilt."—Camb. Bib.

Weariness of God (vs. 22).—I. The nature of this evil. II. Its manifestations. III. Its occasion. IV. Its causes. V. Its bitter fruits. VI. Its prevention. VII. Its cure.—S. Martin.

Physical Weariness.—Sometimes our weariness is physical. Who can add up the debts of the body? Who can send in a true bill of particulars to the flesh? How it drags us down, overshadows us, mocks us, aggravates its own weight, until we cannot lift it, and then it suffocates us with heavy oppressiveness. Others are physically weak; they suffer on the other side of fleshly limitation and burdensomeness; they are not full-blooded, they inherit a thousand difficulties, perplexities, blindnesses, which they cannot explain and cannot escape; the head aches, the poor strength gives way under the increasing burden, the eyes become so dim that they cannot see whether the hand is going to the right or to the left or seizing the right instrument. God knows it all, and he will not judge the weak one harshly. He has special promises for the weak, and as for his Son it is among his glories that he has the tongue of the learned, and is able to speak a word in season to him that is weary. Let us here pluck up courage like men who have heard a message from the King, and are told that weakness is not faithlessness when it can be traced to physical causes.—Peop. Bib.

25, 26. (25) blotteth, etc., Ps. li. 9. Figure for erasing from public records the charge of crime. mine own sake, "from motives derived purely from My own nature, uninfluenced by any cause in you." (26) us plead together,^c i. e. Israel and God. declare, R. V., "set thou forth thy cause." justified, shown to be in the right. The desire of God is to bring home to His people the sense of their guilt.

Forgiveness of Sin (vs. 25).—I. The nature of the blessing. 1. There is remission; 2. There is reconciliation. II. The author of the blessing. 1. The only being who has a right to bestow it; 2. Or the power; 3. Or who has devised and executed a plan for bestowing it. III. The ground on which the author of the blessing bestows it. 1. Not on the ground of anything in us; 2. But of something in Himself. Apply:—(1) Seek this blessing; (2) Accept; (3) Be grateful for it.—G. Brooks.

Apprehension of Forgiveness.—Sin is but the cloud, as it were, behind which the everlasting sun lies in all its power and warmth, unaffected by the cloud; and the light will yet strike, the light of his love will yet pierce through, with its merciful shafts, bringing healing in their beams, and dispersing all the pitchy darkness of man's transgressions. And as the mists gather themselves up and roll away, dissipated by the heat of that sun in the upper sky, and reveal the fair earth below, so the love of Christ shines in, melting the mist and dissipating the fog, thinning it off in its thickest places, and at last piercing its way right through it, down to the heart of the man that has been lying beneath the oppression of this thick darkness.—Maclaren.

27, 28. (27) first father, perhaps with reference to Jacob: see vs. 22.^a "Prob. a more general sense is meant to be given to the expression 'thy forefathers,' 'thy race from its first beginning.'"—Mat. Arnold. teachers, i. e. prophets and religious leaders. If these have sinned how much more the great body of the people. (28) profaned, i. e. deprived of their sacred dignity.^b princes, etc., or the chief priests. and have given, render: and had to deliver Jacob to the ban. R. V. changes the translation for the worse.—Camb. Bib. curse, a solemn anathema, or excommunication. reproaches. Ps. cxxiii. 3, 4.

Note on vs. 27.—It may be considered as implied, that all their fathers who had since lived, shared in the original depravity, and thus the same sense is obtained that would have been expressed by the collective explanation of "first father," while the latter is still taken in its strict and full sense as denoting the progenitor of all mankind.—Alexander.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FOURTH.

1, 2. (1) now, marking the contrast, exactly as in ch. xliii. 1. chosen, selected as special agents for preserving My truth in the world.^a (2) formed, etc., their birth, or origin, as from Egypt, is here referred to. Jesurun, i. e. "the upright one, a poetical title for Israel, designating the nation under its ideal character. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 15."—Pol. Bib.^b

Peace With Respect to the Future.—The crosses which we make for ourselves by a restless anxiety as to the future, are not crosses which come from God. We show want of faith in Him by our false wisdom, wishing to forestall His arrangements, and struggling to supplement His Providence by our own providence. The future is not yet ours: perhaps it never will be. If it comes, it may come wholly different from what we have foreseen. Let us shut our eyes, then, to that which God hides from us, and keeps in reserve in the treasures of His deep counsels. Let us worship without seeing; let us be silent; let us abide in peace.—Fenelon.

3, 4. (3) pour, etc., ch. xxxii. 15.^c Comp. xi. 2, 3; xlii. 1, 4. "To be full of the knowledge and fear of God, and to make the world-wide spread of the true religion the chief object of life."—Cheyne. thirsty .. dry ground, figures to represent the hopeless condition of the captive people. my spirit, "the 'spirit' is the agent both of physical and moral regeneration, as in ch. xxxii. 15 (cf. Ez. xxxvii. 11-14); the former idea being prominent; hence the parallelism 'spirit'—'blessing,' the former being the cause, the latter the effect."—Camb. B. (4) Spring.. courses, better read, "So that they spring up as grass amidst waters, as willows by water-courses."—Pol. Bib. The images denote luxuriance and abundance.

The Holy Spirit (vs. 3).—I. A special province has been assigned to the Holy Spirit in the economy of redemption. II. The promise of the Holy Spirit is the great promise of the Christian dispensation. III. The influences of the Holy Spirit are manifold,—enlightening, sanctifying, comforting. IV. The indwelling and inworking of the Holy Spirit may be confidently expected of all believers. V. The bestowment of the Holy Spirit is connected with an appointed order of means, especially prayer. VI. The want of the influences of the Holy Spirit is not only a calamity but a sin.—G. Brooks.

Times of Blessing.—During Mr. Sherman's ministry in Reading, his flock was visited by remarkable "times of refreshing," which can never be forgotten. He says himself: "One Whit-Sunday morning, I was preaching from Isa. xlv. 3-5, 'For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground,' and as if to illustrate it, the Spirit of the Lord came like a flood over the parched souls of the congregation, and all became sensible that there was something more than human argument convincing the judgment. The congregation was melted to tears, and one poor backslider, on whom my hopes had long rested, unable to restrain himself, when I cried out, 'Who will "subscribe with his hand to the Lord" to-day?' cried out, 'I will.' The congregation caught the infection, and hands seemed involuntarily stretched out, as if ready to sign their names. It pleased God to move eighty-one souls, most of them young, to devote themselves to His service that day."—Old Test. Anec.

5, 6. (5) One .. Lord's, the result of this revelation of God in Israel will be that foreigners will seek to enter the Jewish community. "Israel is to remain the mediatory nation at the head of the nations and Jerusalem the central point of the Kingdom."—Oehler. subscribe, "rather: inscribe his hand 'To Jehovah.' The allusion is to the practice of branding common people, stripped of their holy office, and in captivity."—Fausset.

^a Is. xli. 8.

^b The Greek has, "My beloved Israel;" Luther, Frommer, pious one.

De. xxxii. 15, xxxiii. 5, 26.

"Of all created comforts, God is the lender; you are the borrower, not the owner."—Rutherford.

"Blessed is any weight, however overwhelm i n g, which God has been so good as to fasten with His own hand upon our shoulders."—F. W. Faber.

^c Is. xlii. 7; Joel ii. 28; Jno. vii. 38; Ac. ii. 18.

"This describes the effect of the irrigation and effusion promised in the one before it.... The simple meaning is, that they shall grow as willows grow among the grass, i. e. in the moist and marshy spot."—J. A. Alexander.

"See the soft green willow springing, where the waters gently pass; every way her free arms flinging o'er the moist and reedy grass. Long ere winter blasts are fled, see her tipp'd with vernal red, and her kindly flower display'd ere her leaf can cast a shade."—Keble.

"Servants were inscribed with the names of their masters; soldiers inscribed themselves with the names of their general; and votaries of deities with the names of their god." — Wordsworth.

Re. xlii. 16.

b Comp. Mat. xxvii. 40, 42.

c Re. i. 8, 17, xlii. 13. Vs. 6. The thought here so sublimely expressed is one which occurs in a striking manner also in the sacred book of the Buddhists.

a—Comp. Is. xli. 21—24.

d De xxii. 4; Is. xvii. 10, xvi. 4.

a "The exposure of idolatry in this and the following vss. is inimitably forcible and beautiful. With the most exact disposition of the parts are combined an exactness and vividness of delineation, a pointedness of sarcasm, a force of argument, and a concision and elegance of expression, wh. entitle the passage to the highest place among the compositions of the seer." — Henderson.

"They themselves have the plain evidence of the nullity of their gods, but they are blind to it that they may come to shame and ruin." — Mat. Arnold.

a Je. x. 5; Hab. ii. 18.

"Find earth where it grows no weed, and you may find a heart wherein no error grows." — Knowles.

slaves with the name of their owner, or perhaps to the religious custom of tattooing sacred marks on the person (Lev. xix. 28). See Ezek. ix. 4; Gal. vi. 17; Rev. vii. 3, xiii. 16."—Camb. Bib. (6) Here begins a new section extending to vs. 23. The theme is "The sole divinity of the Lord proved by His prophecies. King, ch. xliii. 15^b first .. God, ch. xli. 4, xliii. 1, 10—12."

Note on vs. 5.—You have doubtless seen upon the hands or arms of seamen the name of the ship in which they have served, rendered indelible by puncture, or by staining; this, perhaps, is one of the oldest customs in the world. The slave, in former days, used thus to be marked with the name of his master; the soldier, of his commander; the idolater, with the name of his god; while one of the Christian fathers tells us that in his day, "many marked their wrists or their arms with the sign of the cross, or with the name of Christ." This, then, will give you a very distinct idea of what the Lord requires of you, and what He will enable you to perform; it is such a decided choice of the Lord for your portion, such an avowal by your daily actions, that you are not your own, but His who has bought you with the price of His precious blood, that all shall know it as certainly, and that your actions shall proclaim it as unequivocally, as if the name of Christ were inscribed on the back of your hand, and could be seen and read in all companies, and on all occasions.—Blunt.

7, 8. (7) "And who is like me? let him stand forth and cry; let him declare it and set it in order before me! Who has announced very long since the future? and things that are to come let the vain gods declare to us."—Pol. Bib. them shew, i. e. the fictitious gods who are in rivalry with Jehovah. (8) Fear, or quake not. that time, i. e. from the very time when I chose thee, and made thee acquainted with My will and purpose. no God, R. V., "no Rock." Comp. Deut. xxxii. 4.

God Absorbs in Himself all the Ideas Which Idolatry Seeks to Embody.—Poetically conceived, the figures of Baal or Jupiter are only representations of certain powers—of life, warmth, rule, wisdom, etc., which are living, unseen beings. Our God says there are no such beings. Every one of these powers is in himself. He is Zeus, and Baal, and Venus, and Diana, and Moloch, so far as any of these represent necessary powers belonging to Deity. We must not divide him into many beings; he is only One. So far as idols are mere creations of men, there is nothing existing that corresponds to them. So far as they represent real powers, these powers all meet in the One God—our God!—Pul. Com.

9. Delectable things, the things in which they delight.^a own witnesses, etc., R. V., "and their own witnesses see not, nor know," i. e. the devotees of these idols are blind. The consequence of their blindness is that they are put to shame.

The Folly of Idolatry.—The Malagasy Idol-maker.—The following illustration of this text is given by Messrs. Freeman and Johns, formerly missionaries in the island of Madagascar: "A married couple went some few years since to a person of this description, living about fifteen miles from the capital, and wished to purchase an idol. He had none to sell, but desired them to come next day. They went; he was still without any, but promised to have one by the evening. They remained till evening. The man went to a neighboring forest, selected his tree, cut down a large bough, brought it home, and prepared his idol, leaving the smaller branches littered about near his fireplace. In the evening he invited our married friends to take their meal of rice with him, and they saw him put some of these selfsame branches in the fire to boil the rice. They returned home, having paid about two dollars for their new god. Shortly afterwards a young man, a Christian, called at their house, and happened to read to the wife that graphic description of idolatry in the forty-fourth chapter of Isaiah, 'With part thereof he roasteth roast, maketh a fire, warmeth himself, and the residue thereof he maketh a god,' etc. She was astonished. It reminded her of what had just occurred, helped to convince her of the truth of the sacred volume, awakened deep attention, and led to the abandonment of the idol. She continued a learner, became a true disciple, and is now well known as Rafaravavy."

10, 11. (10) Who .. nothing? strongly ironical question. A man making a god is a contradiction in terms.^a (11) fellows, "the word denotes the members of a guild, and is understood by A.V. of the gang of craftsmen employed in the making of the idol. It should rather be interpreted as the 'adherents,' the clientèle of the false god himself, as in R. V. marg. "all that join themselves thereto." Cf. Hos. iv. 17 ('associated with idols'). and 1 Cor. x. 20.—Camb. Bib. of men, are mere mortal men, gathered together, "to see if their unanimity in error will be of any service."—Spk. Com.

Modern Idolatry.—After leaving Zurich, we traveled on to Einsiedeln, at which place is an abbey founded by Meinrad, about A. D. 861, on the occasion of his receiving from Hildegard, abbé of Zurich, a miraculous (?) image of the Virgin. We were shown an image, alleged to be "the very same,"—since "miraculously rescued from the hands of sacrilegious robbers,"—now "more than 1,000 years old,"—a great black doll, a horrid-looking thing, with a glory of brass around its head, studded with jewels, and dressed in tawdry finery. Oh! how our hearts ached as we saw the poor deluded crowd of worshipers bowing before it, uttering their prayers, and seeking the intercession of one who had no power to help. As we "beheld their devotions" we longed to tell them of Him through whose finished work alone could they find acceptance, and "who ever liveth to make intercession for us."—J. C. Harrison.

12, 13. (12) smith, worker in iron. with the tongs, R. V., "maketh an axe." hungry, etc., so he is but a weak, dependent creature. (13) his rule, R. V., "a line." with a line, R. V., "with a pencil." planes, or chisels. remain . . house, a guardian for the family. A household deity.^c

Heathenism.—We have a lamentable instance of heathenish superstition in the following incident, related by a missionary, resident for many years in the neighborhood of the place where the circumstance occurred. There is a practice amongst the inhabitants of the isles of the South Seas, who still retain their idolatrous worship, of revering those of their fellow-creatures who have done some wonderful or daring deed, as gods, and worshiping them as such. In Samoa there is a high, steep, and craggy mountain; a young man, a native of the isle, was very desirous of becoming a god; he thought there was something very grand in being worshiped and prayed to; so, on one occasion, being in company with a number of his friends and companions, he turned to them, and said, "I will go to the top of that great mountain, and, if you see me flying, I shall be a god." His credulous companions shouted to him, "Away, away, we will worship you; away away!" He toiled up the sides of the mountain, and arrived at the top. His friends eagerly watched him; presently he stretched out his arms, and the people cried out, "He is flying, he is flying; he is a god." Then the young man was seen to rise from the mountain, and he disappeared; his friends shouted again, "He is a god, he is a god; we will worship him." And so they did for many years; but after a long time his mangled body was found at the bottom of the other side of the mountain, from which he had thrown himself down, while the people thought he was flying.

14, 15. (14) strengtheneth, R. V., "and strengtheneth for himself one among the trees," etc., "must mean 'allows to grow strong' in its native forest. Nay, in some cases the future deity has been actually planted by his worshiper, and nourished by the rain from heaven!"—Camb. Bib. (15) to burn, various uses being found for the parts of the same tree. The incongruity of the uses is clearly set forth. The man puts his worship on a level with baking his bread.

An Idolater's Confession (vs. 14).—A convert, who, in his heathen days, had been priest of a temple, said, on being baptised at Goobee, "I have traveled, day by day, to gather flowers; I have talked, and put on temple garments; I have made offerings to the idols: yet no idol, either in dreams or when awake, has said to me, 'Thy sins are forgiven; thou receivest salvation; thy sins are washed away.' I have fasted and prayed; but it has never been said to me, 'Thou shalt escape hell, and enjoy heaven!' The idol is a lie. I forsake it, and embrace Jesus Christ as my Saviour and my God."

16, 17. (16) He burneth part, etc. Pol. Bib. "Half of it he has burned in the fire, and upon the coals thereof he roasts flesh; he eats the roast; he warms himself also," etc. seen the fire, "I feel the glow."—Pol. Bib.^a "Idols certainly require the care of human hands. There are still shops in the cities of India and China, with this inscription on their sign-boards, 'Here old gods are repaired and renovated.'" —Leonhard.

^b "Sharp stylus." — Gesenius.

^c Comp. Is. xl. 20, etc.

"The idol is made, then a temple is built, and the idol is put there and chained, that he might not be stolen. God too has a temple; but He is the architect of His own temple, erected it not for Himself but for us; worship is for the benefit of man. It is getting, not giving; receiving, not imparting." — Caleb Morris.

"Error is sometimes so nearly allied to truth that it blends with it as imperceptibly as the colours of the rainbow fade into each other." —W. B. Clulow.

"You can't jump away from your shadow, but if you turn to the sun, your shadow is behind you; and if you stand under the sun, your shadow is beneath you. What we should try to do, is to live under the meridian sun, with our shadow self under our feet." — F. B. Meyers.

^a "To see, is constantly used in the generic sense, to perceive, by the senses." — Gesenius.

Je. x. 3—5.

"Deep-rooted customs, though wrong, are not easily altered; but it is the duty of all to be firm in that which they certainly know is right for them."

—John Woolman.

"It is thy duty oftentimes to do what thou wouldst not; thy duty, too, to leave undone what thou wouldst do." — Thomas A'Kempis.

b Is. vi. 10.

c "Not merely abominable, but the essence of what is so, in the eyes of a jealous God (1 Ki xi. 5, 7)." — Fausset.

d Ashes often mentioned in Bible either as a symbol of human frailty (Ge xviii. 27), or of deep humiliation (Jon. iii. 6).

e Je. x. 14, xvi. 19; Ro. i. 25.

b "As speedily as the wind sweeps away the thick clouds, so do I drive away thy transgressions." — Wordsworth.

"More than once we had noticed in our early mornings dull masses of cloud in the sky. As the sun got up these all vanished. They did not drift away, or pass into a different region of the heavens, but they vanished on the spot, such was the absolute power of the desert sun." — Bonar.

c De xxx. 2, 8; Ho. xiv. 1.

"How little have we accepted and made use of the legacy of peace and joy which Christ left to us! Instead of faces telling the world what a full salvation we

(17) residue, i. e. the other half. thou . . god, the Heb. pronoun is emphatic, thou, and thou alone.

18—20. (18) They, etc., i. e. those thus foolishly thinking to make a god. shut, Heb. daubed,^b "For their eyes are bedaubed, past seeing, and their minds past comprehending."—Pol. Bib. (19) considereth, etc., R. V., "callet to mind." abomination, the Bible term for an idol.^c (20) ashes, most part of his god—the tree of which it was made—having been reduced to ashes.^d deceived heart, when it is wrong it easily leads the intellect astray. lie. hand, i. e. is not my handiwork a deception?^e

Feeding on Ashes.—Like the "apples of Sodom," like the "little book" of the prophet's vision (Rev. x.), a guilty action (or a sinful life) is very pleasant on the outside or at the beginning; but within, afterwards, it is bitter and disappointing in the last degree. Crime begins in successful violence or enriching fraud; it ends in the prison or the garret. Vice begins in unholy pleasure, in unprincipled companionship; it ends in distracting pain, in mortal sickness, in cruel loneliness. Ungodliness begins in the delights of eager but unhallowed ambition, of happy but unsanctified affection; it ends in weariness, in heart-ache, in the discovery that earthly distinctions and human love cannot fill the heart that God made for himself, cannot gladden and ennoble the life that he fashioned for his service. A life spent without God, devoted to selfish gratification, is a life of deep disappointment; the mistaken sinner finds out that the delectable food which he plucked with such keen anticipation is only ashes between his teeth.—Pul. Com.

21, 22. (21) remember, or think on these things, so as to take warning from them. be forgotten, or as Pol. Bib. "thou wilt not renounce Me." (22) blotted out, or swept away.^b thick cloud, fig. to denote what is transient and evanescent. return,^c "the Israel of God cannot perish; the only question which remains is one for man's free will to settle; viz., the numbers of those who shall constitute it."—Cheyne.

Not a Cloud to be Seen (vs. 22).—Your attention is invited—1. To the Divineness of forgiveness; 2. Look at the completeness of pardon; 3. At the assurance which God gives the pardoned that they are forgiven; 4. The knowledge of pardon is a power to awaken love; 5. A motive to the pursuit of holiness; 6. And encourages us to bring others to God; 7. The assured are those who confess to God their sins.—S. Martin.

Our Sins a Cloud.—Sin is but the cloud, as it were, behind which the everlasting sun lies in all its power and warmth, unaffected by the cloud; and the light will yet strike—the light of His love will yet pierce through, with its merciful shafts, bringing healing in their beams, and dispersing all the pitchy darkness of man's transgressions. And as the mists gather themselves up and roll away, dissipated by the heat of that sun in the upper sky, and reveal the fair earth below—so the love of Christ shines in, melting the mist and dissipating the fog, thinning it off in its thickest places, and at last piercing its way right through it, down to the heart of the man that has been lying beneath the oppression of this thick darkness, and who thought that the fog was the sky, and that there was no sun there above.—Maclaren.

23. Sing, etc., poetical call to inanimate creation to praise God for the promised deliverance. "The prediction of glorious and joyful changes, as in many other cases, is clothed in the form of an exhortation to all nature to rejoice." lower parts, or "depths of the earth," i. e. Sheol; let heaven, and earth to its lowest depths, even to the abode of the departed, rejoice. break forth, Is. xiv. 7. glorified himself, R. V. "and will glorify," etc., bring honor to His name by His gracious work of redemption.

Redemption a Ground of Joy (vs. 23).—I. The Lord hath redeemed His people. 1. By price; 2. By power. II. Herein He hath also glorified Himself. 1. His grace and mercy; 2. His truth and faithfulness. III. This is a ground of most exalted joy to the whole creation. 1. All, in earth and in heaven, are required to rejoice in it; 2. The joy should be in proportion to the occasion of it.—C. Simeon.

Joy at its very fullest is uncontainable, inexpressible. He wrote well who said, "I were little happy could I say how much." There are times when we feel that we want every one and everything to be vocal with the gladness of our own soul. If the children did not shout, the very stones would have to speak the joy of that glad hour (Luke xix. 40). When the great and gracious purposes of God are accomplished in the redemption of one human soul from sin and its restoration to the love and the likeness of God, there is occasion for more joy than human songs can celebrate; how much more so when a nation is redeemed! and how much more yet will there be when the whole race is transformed, and when the kingdoms of this world shall have become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ.—Clarkson.

24—26. Here begins a new section extending to xlv. 25. Theme:—Cyrus chosen to bring about, by his victories, the universal recognition of God. (24) maketh all, not merely, hath created all, but doeth all; executeth whatever He designs. the earth, etc., R. V., “the earth; who is with me?” i. e. who helped me? No one. “Jehovah asserts the exclusiveness of His creative and providential power.” (25) liars, Je. i. 36. “Signs of the praters,” i. e. the agencies of the heathen sooth-sayers, specially thou of Babylon. xlvii. 13.—Cheyne. diviners, or conjurers. backward, with shame, especially by their predictions being unfulfilled. Defeated and disappointed. (26) word, or prophecy: esp. that of Isaiah. Comp. xx. 3.

God’s Willingness to Bestow Good.—A root set in the finest soil, in the best climate, and blessed with all that sun and air and rain can do for it, is not in so sure a way of its growth to perfection, as every man may be, whose spirit aspires after all that which God is ready and infinitely desirous to give him. For the sun meets not the springing bud that stretches towards him with half that certainty, as God, the source of all good, communicates Himself to the soul that longs to partake of Him.—Wm. Law.

27, 28 (27) deep, is a figure for the obstacles to the deliverance of Israel. It has been thought by some commentators (including Vitranga and Lowth) that the verse contains an allusion to the well-known stratagem by which Cyrus is said to have got possession of Babylon (Herodotus i. 185—191). The Hebrew word for “deep” might no doubt be applied to a river, as a cognate word is in Zech. x. 11. But the recently discovered Cyrus-inscriptions seem to shew that the narrative of Herodotus is legendary.—Camb. Bib. (28) Cyrus, the servant of God formerly introduced, but sometimes not named. shepherd, to collect and send home God’s scattered flock. Thou . . . built, comp. 2 Chr. xxxvi. 22; Ezr. i. 1; Is. xlv. 13. This is the verse which Josephus says stimulated Cyrus to restore the Jewish Temple and nation.

Cyrus.—One of the most remarkable characters of ancient history, and one that is particularly interesting to the Biblical student, is Cyrus, who was the subject of a prophecy that the most stubborn unbeliever cannot deny to have been fulfilled. The advent, and name, and acts of this great monarch were with a wonderful exactness predicted by the Prophet Isaiah (xlv. 1—4, 13), and were most wonderfully accomplished (compare Ezra. i. 1—4). Josephus, indeed, narrates (Antiq. xi. i. 1. 2) a remarkable story. He says that the prophecies of Isaiah respecting Cyrus were shown to that king, and that, struck with the Divine record, he was induced to issue his decree.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIFTH.

1, 2. (1) his anointed, this is the only passage where the title is bestowed upon a foreign ruler. Comp. Ps. xviii. 50.^a Cyrus was God’s instrument. He was raised up and directed by Jehovah, to work out His purpose of grace concerning His own people. loose, ungird or disarm. two leaved gates, those, viz., of Babylon. “In Babylon there were a hundred gates, all of brass.” (2) crooked, R. V., “rugged.” Figure for difficulties that might be in the way of Cyrus.

Encouragement (vs. 2).—I. Every good work is sure to meet with interruption and opposition. II. In every journey there will necessarily be rough places. III. Christians are not required to go anywhere where their Captain has not gone before them. IV. We are not to wait till difficulties are removed before we advance; “go forward,” and as the feet have, how often a long face has suggested that men had better take their fill of happiness first before they leave it behind by becoming Christians! May God give us so to live winning lives that others will be allured to desire the same blessings we enjoy.”—J. Hudson Taylor.

“What I can fancy, but never can express.”—Juvenal.

a “Astrologers; men leading a retired, contemplative life, in order to study divination by the signs of the stars.”—Vitranga.

“There will be mistakes in divinity while men preach, and errors in governments while men govern.”—Sir D. Carleton.

“Heb. Koresch, which meant, in ancient Persian, the Sun. According to Strabo his original name was Agradates; so that the name Cyrus was one of honor.”—Spk. Com.

“It is the greatest honor of the greatest men to be employed for God as instruments of his favor to his people. It was more the praise of Cyrus to be God’s shepherd than to be Emperor of the East.”

a “He, first of the ancient conquerors, appears in other than a merely despotic and destructive aspect. Both in Greek and Heb. literature he is represented as the type of a just and gentle prince.”—Stanley.

"Every noble life leaves the fibre of it interwoven forever in the work of the world; by so much, evermore, the strength of the human race has gained."

"Men of faith are like the mountainstreams that make their way down amid the rocks; if they cannot get over the rocks they go round them, but they will not be stopped." — R. Tuck.

■ "This prophecy was prob. read by Cyrus, and exerted its influence on him. Such an influence Josephus tells us was exerted, and it is implied in the monarch's solemn recognition of Jehovah as the true God, and the author of his successes (Ezr. i. 2)." — J. A. Alexander.

"As the branch ascends, and the bud bursts, and the fruit reddens under the co-operation of influences from the outside air, so man rises to the higher stature under invisible pressures from without." — Drummond.

■ Ps. xviii. 32.

■ "Several important movements in the direction of monotheism (notably, the Pythagorean) had their commencement about the time of Cyrus." — Spk. Com.

Mal. i. 11.

"Our programme is a short one: it is this. 'We will go into such and such a city, and abide there a year, and buy and sell and get gain.'" touch the waters the stream will be divided. Faithful discharge of duty in everyday life is doing God's work; the promise therefore may be applied to the removal of crooked places in business, the family, etc.—Analyst.

Note on vs. 2.—These figures indicate the removal of all obstacles and hindrances out of the way of him who is called of God, entrusted with some particular work for God, and helped of God in the doing of that work. Historical illustration is found in the fact, stated on the authority of the monuments, that the city capitulated, as a consequence of the defeat of Nabonidus in the field. Professor Sayce says, "Another fact of an equally revolutionary kind, which the inscriptions teach us, is that Babylon was not besieged and taken by Cyrus. It opened its gates to his general long before he came near it, and needed neither fighting nor battle for its occupation." Grote, in his 'History of Greece,' says, "The way in which the city was treated would lead us to suppose that its acquisition cannot have cost the conqueror either much time or much loss . . . it is certain that the vast walls and gates were left untouched." The assurances of the text are even better fulfilled by moving obstacles out of the way, than by Cyrus actually mastering them. Herodotus tells us that Babylon had a hundred gates of brass, with posts and hooks of the same metal.—Pul. Com.

3, 4. (3) treasures, i. e. treasures hid in darkness. The treasures referred to are chiefly the loot of Sardis, which Xenophon describes as "the richest city of Asia next to Babylon" (Cyrop. vii. 2. 11), and of Babylon itself (Jer. l. 37, li. 13). If, as is probable, the capture of the former city was past before the date of the prophecy, rumors of the fabulous wealth of Cræsus, which then found its way into the coffers of Cyrus, may have reached the prophet.—Camb. Bib. mayest know, or gain a deep impression of the fact.^a (4) surnamed thee, calling thee "My shepherd," as in ch. xlv. 28. There may be reference to his new, or second name, Cyrus.

The Divine Surnaming.—We all have some special work to do for God in the world, and so we all have some special endowments for the doing of it. Every man is called of God, guided by God, surnamed by God, and the moment when he clearly sees what his life-work is, is the moment when he becomes conscious of his call. Bushnell says, "What do the Scriptures show us but that God has a particular care for every man, a personal interest in him, and a sympathy with him and his trials, watching for the uses of his one talent as attentively and kindly, and approving him as heartily in the right employment of it, as if he had given him ten? and what is the giving out of the talents itself but an exhibition of the fact that God has a definite purpose, charge, and work, be it this or that, for every man?" "Every human soul has a complete and perfect plan cherished for it in the heart of God—a Divine biography marked out, which it enters into life to live."—Pul. Com.

5, 6. (5) beside me, De. iv. 35, 39, xxxii. 39; Is. xlv. 8. girded thee,^a R. V., "will gird thee." fig. for personally strengthening him. (6) they may know, i. e. all the world.^b sun . . . west, "the two most distant geographical points known to the ancients are fixed on, including all the regions between."—Henderson.

The Unknown Influence of God.—A great Babylonian library, consisting of numerous clay tablets, with arrow-head inscriptions burnt into them, has recently been deciphered. The results are most astounding, confirming once questioned statements of Scripture history, throwing light upon obscure events, and correcting not a few false impressions. Among the principal corrections thus afforded is that of our views regarding the person and religion of Cyrus. Cyrus, it seems, was not a Persian, but an Elamite, and was not a Monotheist, but a worshiper of heathen divinities, adopting Merodach, the god of Babylon, when he conquered that city. The last fact adds great emphasis to our text. Cyrus, to whom the words are addressed, is now proved to be a pagan, a polytheist, an idolater. Yet even he was girded by the unknown God of heaven and earth.—Hom. Com.

Who is that boy sitting on the steps there? He has a hat on that was made for any head but his own; and his coat, who made it? His mother, very likely—rough spun, not too well fitting. What is he waiting for? To get the job of sweeping the steps he sits on? Perhaps. Years pass by and a portly man comes down those steps. Broad his face, a great round shining blessing, kindness in his eye, power in the uplifting of his hand. Who is he? That is the boy, grown now fully, physically, intellectually and socially. The boy and the man are both Horace Greeley, an editorial prince, a man whose writings no one among his countrymen can afford to decline to read. "I girded thee, I brought thee to those steps, I set thee down upon them, I appointed an angel to watch thee all the time: it was my way of nursing and caring for thee, and training thee." He bringeth the blind by a way that they know not.—Parker.

7, 8. (7) light . . darkness, the assertion of the Divine unity as opposed to the dualistic notions of the Persians, who believed in two beings—Ormuzd, light; Ahriman, darkness.^e peace, or national prosperity. evil, "i. e. not moral evil, but physical evil, calamity. Cf. Am. iii. 6, 'shall evil befall a city and Jehovah hath not done it?' The prophet's words are startlingly bold, but they do not go beyond the common O. T. doctrine on the subject, which is free from the speculative difficulties that readily suggest themselves to the mind of a modern reader. There is no thought in the O. T. of reducing all evil, moral and physical, to a single principle. Moral evil proceeds from the will of man, physical evil from the will of God, who sends it as the punishment of sin. The expression 'create evil' implies nothing more than that. It is true (as we see from the Book of Job, etc.) that the indiscriminateness of physical calamities had begun to cause perplexity in the age to which the prophecy belongs. But the discussion of that question never shook either of the two positions, that sin originates in man, and that God is the author of calamity."—Camb. Bib. (8) drop down,^a "the heavens are represented as showering down gracious influences, which fructify the earth and cause it to bring forth the fruits of salvation." let righteousness spring, R. V., "and let her cause righteousness to spring up together." God's fidelity to His promise is His righteousness, and salvation or deliverance for His people that promise assures.^e have created it, this righteousness which the earth is to cause to spring up.

The Efficacy of the Gospel (vs. 28).—I. The import of this prophecy. 1. Its primary reference is to the restoration of the Jews to their own land; 2. Its ulterior reference is to the establishment of the Messiah's kingdom. II. The peculiar beauty of the image under which it is conveyed. I. Their mutual dependence as here intimated; 2. Their united operation as here described; 3. The true source and origin of all their efficacy. Apply:—(1) What a blessing the Gospel is! (2) What is to be done on our part to render it effectual? (3) To whom are we indebted if ever we are influenced by it for good?—C. Simeon.

Moral Evil.—Moral evil is certainly not "created" by God, in the same direct way as physical evil. He has not necessitated it by the arrangements of his universe. He has but allowed it to come into existence. And this he seems to have done in consequence of a necessity in the nature of things. Either he must have limited his creation to objects that moved mechanically and were incapable of moral action, or, by creating moral agents, have allowed the possibility of moral evil coming into being. A free agent must be free to do right or to do wrong; if he is not free to do wrong, he is really not free when he does right. And when millions of free agents were created, each with a power of doing wrong, that some of them would choose to do wrong was to be expected, and was of course foreseen by the Creator. From the fact that, though thus foreseeing the introduction of sin into his universe, God nevertheless determined to create moral beings, we may gather that it is better in God's sight, and therefore better absolutely, that the two classes of good and bad moral beings should coexist, than that there should be no moral beings at all. Further, moral evil is certainly, like physical evil, a great means of developing higher forms of moral goodness. The virtue that resists contact with vice, the influence of bad example, the seductions of those who make all possible efforts to corrupt it, is of a higher form than that untried virtue which has passed through no such ordeal. The religion that leads men to plunge into the haunts of vice, and give themselves to the reclaiming of the lowest outcasts among

Very well. We put a full stop there: God puts a comma; our punctuation is unskilled and unwisely. God's punctuation alone measures out the languages, and metes in fair proportion the weird and solemn music of life." — Parker.

^e "The great Persian reformer, Zoroaster, or Zerduscht, taught that there are two principles working in the universe—one good, the other evil. The one was termed Ormuzd, and was the presiding agent of all good; the other, Ahriman, in the same manner presided over all evil. From the opposing action of these two powers Zoroaster explained the commingling of good and evil in the universe and in every creature." — Bib. Things Not Gen. Known.

^d De xxxii. 2.

^e "The final aim of all God's providential acts was that the kingdom of heaven and therein righteousness and salvation—should be planted upon earth." —Spk. Com.

"We must co-operate with God. If there is any sin in my heart that I am not willing to give up, then I need not pray. You may take a bottle and cork it up tight, and put it under Niagara, and there will not a drop of that mighty volume of water get into the bottle. If there is any sin in my heart that I am not willing to give up, I need not expect a blessing."—D. L. Moody.

^a Je. xlviii. 6;
Ro. ix. 20.

"A Christian is just one who does what the Lord Jesus tells him. Neither more nor less than that makes one a Christian."
—George MacDonald.

"Mankind at large always resembles frivolous children; they are impatient of thought, and wish to be amused."—Emerson.

"He lives long that lives well; and time mis-spent is not lived but lost."
—Fuller.

^b "Will ye take the disposition of things out of My hands, and direct Me how I am to deal with My own chosen people?"
Mat. Arnold.

"If men would but believe that they are in process of creation, and consent to be made, — let the Maker handle them as the potter his clay, yielding themselves in responsive motion and submissive hopeful action with the turning of His wheel. — they would, ere long, find themselves able to welcome every pressure of that hand upon them, even when it was felt in pain, — and sometimes not only to believe, but to recognize the divine end in view, the bringing of a son into glory."—George MacDonald.

the dregs of our populace, is the highest form of religion. If there were no moral evil, moral goodness would fall far short of being what it is—there would be no Howards, no Frys, no Havelocks, no Livingstones. By the moral furnace through which it passes, "the trial of men's faith, being much more precious than that of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire," is found and will "be found unto praise and honor and glory of the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. i. 7).—Pul. Com.

9, 10. The four following verses are addressed to those exiles who resented the idea of deliverance through a foreign king, or murmured at the delay of the deliverance. potsherd, Job. ii. 8.^a "a potsherd like other potsherds of earth!"—Pol. clay, etc., ch. xxix. 16, lxiv. 8. (10) Woe . . forth, "The writer's main design is to represent the doubt and discontent of men in reference to God's future dealings with them as no less monstrous than the supposition of a child's objection to its own birth."—Alexander.

Thwarting God.—"Woeto him that striveth with his Maker!" Pharoah did it, and was overthrown in the Red Sea; Saul did it, and was deposed; Jehoiakim did it, and he perished; Judas did it, and he hanged himself; the Pharisees did it, and their city was destroyed; Julian the Apostate did it, and, falling back upon the field of battle, said, "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean!" You can tell a man who has thwarted God if you know much about him. Many old fossils give the same experience twenty years after their conversion that they gave the month after. In a prayer-meeting many pray the same stereotyped prayer year after year. Some ministers are just where they were in their doctrine and the expression, and in their very sermons, as when they commenced their ministry—arrested, dwarfed.—F. B. Meyer.

11—13. (11) Ask, "Of things to come will ye question me! and concerning the work of my hands will ye lay commands upon me!"—Pol. Bib.^b (12) my hands, fig. for the putting forth of Divine power. (13) him, Cyrus; against whose agency in their deliverance some of the Jews found objection. will direct, R. V., "will make straight," i. e. will carry him through. my captives, R. V., "my exiles." not for price, etc., lit. "not for hire and not for a bribe." That is he will do it not for some outward benefit but in answer to an inward guidance.

Man Cannot Comprehend God.—In our pride of heart we are very unwilling to admit the limitation or imperfection of our faculties. We can know so much; why cannot we know God? We can see so much; why cannot we see God? Men are restless, and bitterly fret, because the dark mists still fringe and hide the "mountain-peak of a God." They say, "If it be so to our vision down in the plains of common life, then we will climb the hills of science, get up above, and look down on the peak, and shatter for ever the mysteries that surround him." Some expect to return to us with a scornful smile, prepared to say, "There is no God, only a high peak, which the unclouded sun gilds with a perpetual radiance; and this, shining through the clouds, made you think there was a God."

"Then all goes wrong: the old foundations rock;
One scorns at him of old who gazed unshod;
One, striking with a pickaxe, thinks the shock
Shall move the seat of God.

"A little way, a very little way (Life is so short), they dig into the rind,
And they are very sorry—so they say—Sorry for what they find.

"O marvelous credulity of man!
If God indeed kept secret, couldst thou know
Or follow up the mighty Artisan Unless he willed it so?"—Jean Ingelow.

14, 15. "The collapse of the heathen religions is here dramatically represented under the image of a procession of conquered nations of Africa, who pass before Israel, as tributaries and slaves, acknowledging that Israel's God is the only true divinity."—Camb. Bib. (14) The labour of, comp. ch. xliii. 3. Ethiopia, Cush. Sabeans, people of Sabea, or Merôe, on the Upper Nile, center of a great caravan trade bet. Ethiopia, Egypt, and North Africa, Arabia and India. men of stature, Agatharchides describes the Sabeans as singularly handsome; and Herodotus speaks of the Ethiopians as the tallest of men. over unto thee, i. e. to acknowledge Israel's God. fall down unto, i. e. in prayer. "Strictly speaking they pray through Israel (as a prophetic mediator) to Jehovah, who has hidden Himself to all the world except Israel. For Judah is God made known."—Pol. Bib. (15) hidest thyself, Seph. paraphrases, "For thou art God and we knew it not;" God had hidden Himself in some manner even from Israel.^a Mystery of Nature.—We stand in the midst of a mighty temple, the whole visible frame of nature rising around us, like the walls of a gorgeous sanctuary; and we gaze on the beautiful arch of heaven, on the sun walking in his brightness, on the moon, and the stars, and the dark cloud of thunder; but what know we of this magnificent array? What account can man give of the hidden springs of such vast machinery? Who will tell us what is that light which makes all things visible? Who will explain that secret wondrous energy which retains, century after century, so many worlds, each in its separate orbit? Whose penetration is not utterly baffled by the growth of a blade of grass, by the falling of a stone, by the floating of a feather? When asked, we state reasons, and assign causes, but this is only a shifting of the difficulty. It were easy to talk of the gravity of matter, and the laws of nature: philosophy is at fault: the learned man knows little more than the savage of the amazing processes which go on daily in the laboratory of nature: while he may be sitting on the lofty pinnacle of science, a child shall propose questions which shall perplex and confound him, and bring him down from his lofty eminence, and force him to the humiliating confession that what can be discovered by man bears no proportion to what is hidden by God. There is nothing teaches us our own ignorance as knowledge when pushed to its utmost limits. In enlarging the sphere of light, you equally enlarge the surrounding sphere of darkness.—Melvill.

16, 17. (16) Here the prayer of the conquered peoples ends and the prophet speaks. They, i. e. idol makers, and idol worshippers^b (17) everlasting salvation,^c "as is usual in the prophets, the perfect dispensation, or what is called the Messianic age, is conceived as issuing immediately from the historical crisis which is the subject of the prophecy, in this case the deliverance from Babylon."—Camb. B. world without end, an expression wh. justifies our applying the promise to God's Church in all ages.

The Conversion of the Gentiles Gradual, but Ultimately Complete.—Three stages in the conversion of the Gentiles seem to be marked—one in vs. 3; another in vs. 20; a third in vs. 23. I. The first stage. The nations within a certain moderate radius of Palestine are naturally the first to come in—Egypt and Ethiopia, in Africa; and by parity of reasoning, Syria, Mesopotamia, and Asia Minor, in Asia; Greece, Italy, and Southern Gaul, in Europe. This was very much the range of Hebrew influence during the five centuries preceding Christianity, and of Christian influence during two centuries afterwards. II. The second stage. The circle gradually widens, and a time comes when the gospel may be said, roughly, to have penetrated everywhere, and "the earth" to be "full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (ch. xi. 9). Missionaries have visited the remotest ends of the earth; and the nations generally may be challenged to "assemble themselves, and come," and make their choice between true religion and their own false and absurd systems. But conversion has not kept pace with preaching. On many nations very little, on some no, impression has been made. Prayer is still offered widely to deities "that cannot save." This is the state of things at the present day. Scarcely a nation in the world has not heard of the salvation of God; but a large number—as much as three-fourths of the population of the globe, we are told—have not yet accepted it. III. The third stage. God has "sworn by Himself, the word is gone out of His mouth in righteousness, and shall not return"—that ultimately "unto Him every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear" (vs. 23). In "a new heaven and a new earth" (ch. lxxv. 17) the Messiah, "the Ancient

^a "In this vs. the Church admires the mysterious character of the Divine counsels and modes of action, with special reference to the captivity and restoration."—Henderson.

"God always gives us strength and sense enough for what He wants us to do. If we either tire ourselves, or puzzle ourselves, it is our own fault."—Ruskin.

"A Science without mystery is unknown; a Religion without mystery is absurd. The elimination of mystery from the universe is the elimination of Religion. However far the scientific method may penetrate the Spiritual World, there will always remain a region to be explored by a scientific faith."—Drummond.

^b "The domination of Persia conduced greatly to the overthrow of idolatry at Babylon, and in other countries, and so prepared the way for the preaching and reception of the true religion."—Wordsworth.

^c Is. xxvi. 4.

"Time, like a dome of many-colored glass, stains the white radiance of eternity." What, is all life and time, nature and human fashion, but a veiling of God? How can we see him except through a glass 'darkly'? What is thinking but dreaming, and dreams what but pictured screens, concealing and revealing the truth? We are in bondage to sense, to belief, to fancy. But our deliverance draws near; and no confusion will await them that have believed to the end."—Johnson.

"There is in man a higher than love of happiness: he can do without happiness and instead thereof find blessedness!"—T. Carlyle.

"There seems to be here a special reference to the deserted state of the Holy Land during the captivity."—Henderson.

b Comp. Jno. xviii. 20; De. xlix. 29, xxx. 11.

"No man saw the building of the New Jerusalem, the workmen crowded together, the unfinished walls and unpaved streets; no man heard the clink of trowel and pickaxe; it descended out of heaven from God."—Seeley.

"To recount almighty works
What words of tongue or seraph can suffice,
Or heart of man suffice to comprehend?"
—Milton.

"In studying the Word of God digest it under these two heads: either as removing some obstructions that keep God and thee asunder, or as supplying some uniting power to bring God and thee together."
—Cecil.

a Je. x. 5; Am. v. 26.

"Nature is the thrifty thing in the world; she never wastes anything; she of days" (Dan. vii. 6), will rule over a kingdom which will contain "all people, nations, and languages" (Dan vii. 14). How this will be brought about, what exactly will be the scene of the kingdom, what the condition of its members, is not revealed, otherwise than in mystical words, and cannot be laid down with definiteness; but in that kingdom, beyond a doubt, "all people will fall down before Jehovah, all nations will do Him service"—the prophecies of Isaiah will have full effect: "all flesh will worship before the Lord" (ch. lxvi. 23).—Pul. Com.

18, 19. (18) For thus says Jehovah, the Creator of the heavens,—He is the true God; the Former and Maker of the earth,—He established it, etc.—Pol. Bib. not in vain, R. V., "not a waste,"^a but to be inhabited by men. He will not, therefore, destroy the race. (19) in secret, contrast the openness of Divine revelations, with the uncertainty and secrecy of heathen oracles.^b dark place, etc., R. V., "in a place of the land of darkness." Comp. Jer. ii. 31. Jehovah's revelation has not been hidden, but given in the light. Certainly not a thing of caves and pits and the under-world as with heathen oracles.

The Earth Prepared for Man.—"It is evident that there is a manifest progress in the succession of beings on the surface of the earth. This progress consists in an increasing similarity to the living fauna, and among the vertebrates, especially in their increasing resemblance to man. But this connection is not the consequence of a direct lineage between the faunas of different ages. There is nothing like parental descent connecting them. The fishes of the Palæozoic age are in no respect the ancestors of the reptiles of the Secondary age, nor does man descend from the mammals which preceded him in the Tertiary age. The link by which they are connected is of a higher and immaterial nature, and their connection is to be sought in the view of the Creator Himself, whose aim in forming the earth, in allowing it to undergo the successive changes which geology has pointed out, and in creating successively all the different types of animals which have passed away, was to introduce man upon the surface of our globe. Man is the end towards which all the animal creation has tended from the first appearance of the first Palæozoic fishes."—Agassiz. The Suppliant.—Archbishop Trench, in his poem, "The Suppliant," represents a man as praying all night. When the morning dawns without an answer, the Tempter stands by him and says:

"Oh, peace! What profit do you gain
From empty words and babblings vain!
'Come, Lord; oh, come!' you cry alway;
You pour your heart out night and day;
Yet still no murmur of reply;
No voice that answers, 'Here am I.'"

He yielded and ceased praying. Then an angel came, and, learning the reason, exclaimed:

"Oh, dull of heart! enclosed doth lie
In each 'Come, Lord,' a 'Here am I.'
Thy love, thy longing are not thine,
Reflections of a love divine:
Thy very prayer to thee was given Itself a messenger from heaven."

—Peloubet's Suggcs. Illus.

20, 21. He now addresses the heathen who have escaped destruction after Cyrus's victories. (20) up^a "bear about their wooden idols," the gods of Babylonia were carried about in sacred boats at the great festivals, especially at that of New Year."—Pol. Bib. (21) Tell, etc., R. V., "Declare ye and bring it forth." declared this, again reverting to the fulfillment of Jehovah's prophecies as proof of Jehovah's sole Divine claim. just, etc., Ro. iii. 26.

Jehovah a Just God and Saviour (vs. 21).—Consider—I. The character of God here stated. 1. As contrasted with that of all the heathen deities; 2. As shining forth in His own proper and harmonious perfections. II. The regard due to Him in that character. 1. Fear; 2. Trust; 3. Obedience.—Simeon.

22, 23. (22) ends of the earth,^a remnants gathered from the most distant places. (23) sworn, Ge. xxii. 16; He. vi. 13. the word, etc., "a true word has gone out of my mouth, a word that shall not be recalled."—Pol. Bib. knee . . bow, Phi. ii. 10^b "This universal turning to God belongs to the final Messianic kingdom."

Looking to Christ (vs. 22).—I. The duty: looking to Jesus with the eye of faith. 1. Exclusively; 2. Earnestly; 3. Humbly; 4. Hopefully; 5. Continually. II. The blessing. Salvation.—1. From sin; 2. From hell. III. The persons. 1. Men of all nations; 2. Of all circumstances; 3. Of all characters. Apply:—Look—(1) Because the blessings are great; (2) Because the terms are simple; (3) Because the Saviour is God; (4) Because if you look not to Jesus, you must look in vain elsewhere.—G. Brooks.

The Life Look.—There is an affecting story of a celebrated literary man Heinrich Heine, who was prematurely disabled by disease, and utterly heart-sick and weary. In one of the art palaces of Paris there is the famous statue called the Venus of Milo, the bewitching goddess of pleasure, which, by the rude accident of time, has lost both her arms, but still preserves much of her supreme, enchanting beauty. At the feet of this statue Heine cast himself down in remorse and despair, and, to use his own words, "There I lay a long time, and wept so passionately that a stone must have had compassion on me. The goddess looked down compassionately upon me, but she was helpless to console me. She looked as if she would say—"See you not that I have no arms, and that therefore I can give you no help?" So, vain and useless is it to look to any for spiritual help and comfort, except to Him of whom it is declared, "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save."—Spurgeon.

24, 25. (24) Surely, R. V., "Only in the Lord, shall one say unto me, is righteousness and strength." righteousness, or fidelity to promise. strength, ability to execute what is promised. (25) the seed of Israel, refers to the Israel of God out of all the human race.—Delitzsch. justified, or shown in deliverance to be the God-fearing nation.^c glory, or boast themselves.

Glorying in the Lord (vss. 24, 25).—I. The believer's source of salvation. 1. The source of his righteousness; 2. Of his strength; 3. Of his justification. II. The believer's humble acknowledgment. It is the language of—1. Humble confession; 2. Of humble gratitude; 3. Of humble confidence; 4. Of humble but exulting triumph; 5. This language is rendered more striking by contrast. Apply:—(1) To Him men shall come; (2) To Him they ought to come.—Zeta in 400 Sks.

Our Surety.—O how marvelous a contrivance is there where the blessed Majesty of God finds an argument in Himself, when man had none wherewithal to plead! The Son was found in the form of a servant, and became our nearest kinsman, to redeem the inheritance, where His people's standing is ensured by another surety and strength than their own; not on their apprehending, but their being apprehended; where the Lord does oblige Himself by bond to make that good which is only of grace, and is most freely given; where he both frames the desire within the soul and satisfies it. (Isa. xlv. 24; Jer. iii. 19; Ezek. xvi. 4, 9).—Fleming.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SIXTH.

Chap. xlv. is a definite prophecy complete in itself. Here comes to a head the contrast between idols and the living God, which previous chapters have elaborated.—G. A. Smith. 1, 2. (1) Bel . . Nebo, Bel was prob. the same as the Phœnician sun-god Baal; and Nebo, the planet Mercury, or Hermes.^a Bel appears in such names as Belshazzar, and Nebo in such as Nebuchadnezzar. upon . . cattle, helpless things that needed to be carried.^b carriages, R. V., "The things that ye carried about are made a load, a burden to," etc. "At the New Year's festival the images of Merodach and his son Nebo were carried through Babylon in solemn procession on sacred barques of great magnificence, and along undergoes change, but there is no annihilation; the essence remains; matter is eternal."—Binney.

^a Comp. Nu. xxi. 8; Jno. iii. 14, 15.

^b Ro. xiv. 9—11.

"Be not like the man in the Interpreter's house, whose eyes were fixed on the ground where he was raking together straws and dust, and who would not look up to him who was offering him a celestial crown. Look up! Look up!"

^c "The people of the Jews shall in the Lord be justified before men, and openly glory in their God. The oppressors reproached them, loaded them with calumny, and boasted even of a right to oppress them, as abandoned by their God; but when God shall work out their deliverance, that shall be their justification from these hard censures, and therefore they shall glory in it."—Mat. Henry.

1 Co. i. 30, 31.

^a "In the star-worship of Babylon, Bel was the planet Jupiter; and it has been conjectured that Nebo was the planet Mercury. The temple of Bel was one of the wonders of Babylon."—Mat. Arnold.

^b "The Prophet describes the fall and removal of the Bab. idols in language of the keenest satire. They had formerly been carried about by the priests in solemn procession, but should now be broken in pieces, and borne away by the enemy on the backs of beasts of burden, which, sinking down under their weight, they should not be able to relieve."—Henderson.

"Your golden images, wh. were once carried by you with joy in festal processions, are now lifted up as loads to be carried away on the back of beasts of burden, panting under their weight."—Wordsworth.

Is. xxi. 9; Je. l. 2.

Some may wonder what gull is because they are selfishly or dishonestly tracing the bitterness and unrest of their lives to some other source than their own wicked wills; but the thing is man's realest burden, and man's realest burden is what God stoops lowest to bear.—Exp. Bib.

"God compares Himself to a nurse, tenderly carrying a child; contrast Moses' language, Nu. xl. 12."—Fausset.

Ex. xix. 4; De. xxxii. 11, 12, xxxiii. 27, Is. lxiii. 9.

a "The picture given of the stupid conduct of the idol-worshippers is exceedingly striking, and quite drawn to the life.—Henderson.

"Ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven."—Shakespeare.

"Ignorance seldom vaults into knowledge, but passes into it thro' an inter-a promenade prepared for this purpose since Nabopolassar."—Delitzsch. (2) They stoop, etc., i. e. the gods. not deliver, the captive and dishonored images in wh. they were supposed to reside. themselves, Heb. their soul; prob. used sarcastically.

3, 4. (3) borne, etc., "the Babylonians had to carry their gods: the Israelites have been and still are carried by their God. The Israelitish people is considered as a living organism, which passes through successive stages of existence, like a human being."—Pol. Bib. (4) I am He, unchangeably the same.

God's Promise to the Aged (vs. 4).—I. God's promise to His aged servants in the text. 1. He promiseth to support them under their burdens, and carry them through their difficulties; 2. He will comfort them under their afflictions and sorrows; 3. He will deliver them out of all their fears and tribulations. II. To consider the reasons suggested in the text, why they should confide in this promise. 1. He is your Maker; 2. He hath been careful of you and kind to you hitherto; 3. He is an unchangeable God. Apply:—(1) Unreasonable and unbecoming for aged saints to sink under their burdens and afflictions; (2) Aged saints are under great obligations to God, and should be faithful unto death; (3) Young persons should choose God as the guide of their youth, if they desire that He should be the support and comfort of their age.—Job Orton.

The Heavenly Father's Care.—"Does my heavenly Father really care for me?" The words came from a lady sitting by an open window; her brow bore the trace of care and sadness; her eyes were suffused with tears. Within two years death had thrice entered the home circle. The husband and two children, whose smiles made home happy, were sleeping in the graveyard near by. As her bereavement, her loneliness, her blighted prospects recurred to her mind, she exclaimed, almost with a spirit that questioned her Maker's goodness, "Does my heavenly Father really care for me?" A servant girl, who perhaps scarcely knew she was doing anything for the Master, passed by the window singing:—

"Though waves and storms go o'er my head;
Though strength and health and friends be gone;
Though joys be withered all and dead;
Though every comfort be withdrawn—
On this my steadfast soul relies,
Father, Thy mercy never dies."

The cadences of those beautiful words, borne on the still summer air, found an echo in that stricken soul. She rose from her reverie of sadness, wiped away the falling tears, and looking not toward the silent tomb where bodies were crumbling to dust, but to the spirit-land whither her loved ones had gone, she said, with a faith she had never before known, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him."—Hom. Com.

5-7. (5) liken me, Is. xl. 18, 25. (6) They, i. e. the idol-worshippers, especially the wealthier class of them. lavish, "better as an exclamation of contempt: They that pour gold, etc. The gold and silver are the material out of which the images (or at least their plating) are to be made by the goldsmith (xl. 19)."—Camb. Bib. (7) bear . . shoulder, as a heavy dead weight to his appointed place. He cannot go himself nor remove thence. not remove, seeing he has no life or power. not answer, having no hearing and no voice.

Inspiration of Christ's Personality.—If in the thick of the battle a leader is able to infuse himself into his followers, so is Christ. If one man's word has lifted thousands of defeated soldiers to an assault and to a victory, even so have Christ's lifted millions: lifted them above the habit and depression of sin, above the weakness of the flesh, above the fear of man, above danger and death and temptation more dangerous and fatal still. And yet it is not the sight of a visible leader, though the Gospels have made that sight imperishable; it is not the sound of another's Voice, though that Voice shall peal to the end of time, that Christians only feel. It is something within themselves; another self—purer, happier, victorious. Not as a voice or example, futile enough to the dying, but as a new soul, is Christ in men; and whether their exhaustion needs creative forces, or their vices require conquering forces, He gives both, for He is the fountain of life.—Exp. Bib.

8—11. "An appeal to history and prophecy in proof of Jehovah's divinity." (8) shew . . . men, "Remember ye this, and own yourselves guilty: lay it to heart ye apostates."—Pol. Bib. Both R. V. and A. V. translations are incorrect. (9) former things, the miracles wrought by Jehovah for the fathers." (10) Declaring, or prophecying. My counsel, or My purpose shall be executed. (11) ravenous bird, or bird of prey,^b referring to Cyrus as coming from Persia.

The Goodness of God's "Pleasure."—What is pleasant to God must be kind. That is, it must have taken all due consideration of the well-being and the wishes of others; and it must involve a going out of God, as it were, beyond himself, to live in the feelings of others. The essence of pleasure is unselfish concern for others. And God may do all his "pleasure," because He proposes only that which secures our highest welfare. What may be spoken of as the highest pleasure God can know? We are assured that He has "no pleasure at all in the death of the wicked, but that he turn from his evil way and live." God's supreme pleasure is found in redeeming; in all that this most suggestive and comprehensive word involves. "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear Him, in those that hope in His mercy."—R. Tuck. You Cannot Print Me (vs. 8).—Mr. Spurgeon, in a recent sermon, said to his hearers: "Read the sermons of Wesley and Whitefield, and what is there in them? It is no severe criticism to say that they are scarcely worthy to have survived, and yet those sermons wrought marvels, and well they might. In order to understand such preaching, you need to see and hear the man; you want his tearful eye, his glowing countenance, his pleading tone, his bursting heart. I have heard of a great preacher who objected to have his sermons printed, 'Because,' said he, 'you cannot print me!'"

12, 13. (12) stouthearted, "ye obdurate in heart," that is, strong, sound, but too sound to adapt their preconceived notions to God's new revelation. far from righteousness, "in spite of their sound opinions as to how it ought to come."—G. A. Smith. But Pol. Bib. reads, "ye discouraged ones, who are far from the thought of Israel's victory." (13) my righteousness, in distinction from the righteousness of the Jews. "It is evident that from the idolaters Jehovah has turned again, in these last verses, to the pedants in Israel, who were opposed to Cyrus because he was a Gentile, and who cherished their own obdurate notions of how salvation and righteousness should come. Ah, their kind of righteousness would never come, they would always be far from it! Let them rather trust to Jehovah's, which He was rapidly bringing near in His own way."—G. A. Smith.

Insincerity in Religion.—A great deal is being said just now in our country of upholding the great articles of the faith. Certainly let us uphold them. But do not let us have in our churches that saddest of all sights, a mere ecclesiastical procession,—men flourishing doctrines, but themselves with their manhood remaining unseen. We know the pity of a show, sometimes seen in countries on the Continent, where they have not given over carrying images about. Idols and banners and texts will fill a street with their tawdry, tottering progress, and you will see nothing human below, but now and then jostling shoulders and a sweaty face. Even so are many of the loud parades of doctrines in our day by men, who, in the words of this chapter, show themselves stout of heart by holding up their religion, but give us no signs in their character or conduct that their religion is holding up them. Let us prize our faith, not by holding it high, but by showing how high it can hold us. Which is the more inspiring sight,—a banner carried by hands, that must sooner or later weary; or the soldier's face, mantling with the inexhaustible strength of the God who lives at his heart and bears him up?—Exp. Bib.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SEVENTH.

Ode on the Fall of Babylon. 1—3. (1) virgin daughter, used of Tyre, ch. xxiii. 12; and referring to Babylon's boast that she had never mediate state of obscurity, even as night into day through twilight." — Coleridge.

"Falsehood always endeavored to copy the mien and attitudes of truth." — Johnson.

^a Comp. Is. xlii. 14, xliii. 13, xlv. 21.

^b Esp. the eagle. It appears that Cyrus was the first to use the eagle as a military ensign. He was also singularly rapid in his movements, and so resembled the eagle.

"Falsehood avails itself of haste and uncertainty." — Tacitus.

"Our thoughts and speeches in most things run to waste; yea, as water spilt on the ground is both lost, cannot be gathered up again, and is polluted, mingled with dust. But no word spoken to God is lost. He receives it, and returns it unto our bosom with advantage. A soul that delights to speak to him will find that he also delights to speak to it." — Abp. Leighton.

"Great minds erect their never-falling trophies on the firm base of mercy." — Massinger.

"O ceremony, show me but thy worth! What is thy soul of adoration? Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form, Creating awe and fear in other men?" — Shakespeare.

a "Not so much descriptive of voluptuous and vicious habits, as of a delicate and easy mode of life, such as that of a princess compared with that of a female slave."—J. A. Alexander.

b "Grinding grain with a hand-mill was chiefly the labor of female slaves, and it was even regarded as the hardest labor."—Nagelsbach.

c "The evil was far too deep-seated; had been of far too long continuance. It was full time for vengeance to step in; for in no other way could the work of redemption be accomplished."—Spk. Com.

d "These words give the impression of a joyful welcome greeting, which meets one approaching, who is recognized as a friend."—Nagelsbach.

"There are errors which no wise man will treat with rudeness while there is a probability that they may be the refraction of some great truth still below the horizon."—Coleridge.

a Comp. 2. Ki. xiv. 5, 6, 26; Je. 1. 17, ii. 34.

b "Through thy vain expectation of being a queen for ever, thou didst advance to such a pitch of insolence as not to believe these things, concerning thy overthrow, possible."—Fausset.

"He who begins by halving his heart between God and mammon will end by being wholehearted for the world, and faint-been captured. no throne, R. V., "sit on the ground without a throne, O daughter," etc. daughter . . Chaldaeans, Chaldaea being the country, and Babylon the capital. tender and delicate,^a De. xxviii. 54. (2) grind meal, menial work.^b uncover, R. V., "remove thy veil, strip off thy train," etc., descriptive of the miserable and shameful plight in wh. they would be who had once lived as princesses. Squalid and half clad. over the rivers, into exile. (3) meet . . man, R. V., "and will accept no man."^c No translation is satisfactory. Best is Pol. Bib. "Irreversible vengeance will I take, says our Redeemer," etc.

Note on vs. 2.—To grind flour in the East is the work of servants or slaves, and to make it by pounding with a pestle and mortar is the office of female servants or slaves. There being but few bridges, those who are in a low condition are obliged to ford the rivers; hence may be seen large companies going to the opposite banks, who have been obliged to "make bare the leg" and to "uncover the thigh." Thus were the "tender and delicate" daughters of Babylon, who had been nurtured on a throne, to be reduced to the condition of menials, and to cross the rivers as people of the lowest degree.—Roberts. A medal was struck by Vespasian on the subjugation of the Jews: on the reverse is seen a palm-tree, and a woman sitting on the ground at the foot of it, with her head leaning on her arm, weeping; and at her feet different pieces of armor with this legend, "Judea capta" (taken). Thus was exactly fulfilled the saying of the same prophet, "And she, being desolate, shall sit upon the ground."—Whitecross.

4, 5. our redeemer,^d connected with verse 3 according to Pol. Bib. (5) silent . . darkness, fig. for state of humiliation and captivity. lady of kingdoms, so called bec. of the number of tributary states over which she ruled; all of this power she is to lose forever, because of her cruelty to Israel.

Longing for a Redeemer.—As the earth in its long polar night seeks to supply the absence of the day by the generation of the northern lights, so does each people in the long night of its heathen darkness bring forth in its yearning after the life of Christ, a faint and glimmering substitute for the same. From these dreamy longings after the break of day have proceeded oracles, priests, sacrifices, lawgivers, and the like. Men have nowhere given up hoping; nor acquiesced in the world's evil as the world's law. Everywhere they have had a tradition of a time when they were nearer to God than now, a confident hope of a time when they should be brought nearer again.—Abp. French.

6, 7. (6) polluted, better, profaned, suffered my chosen people to be treated as a common people, and to be defeated, and led captive. thou, Babylon. the ancient,^a who would suffer much in captivity. The Jews were reverent to old age. "Perhaps the prophet refers to cruelties of the first days of the Babylonian triumph. Comp. Lam. iv. 16; v. 12."—Cheyne. (7) lady for ever,^b Pol. Bib., "And thou saidst: I shall last forever, yea, be mistress perpetually," so Camb. Bib. latter end, the certain ultimate consequences of such pride and cruelty.

The Boast of Babylon (vs. 7).—"I shall be a lady for ever," suggests that lengthened prosperity in the case of the ungodly leads to—1. False security; 2. Presumption, "in my own right;" 3. Boasting, "a lady superior to others;" 4. Self-satisfaction, "I am a lady now," etc.; 5. Abandonment to luxury, "I mean to be at ease;" 6. Spiritual blindness.—Stems and Twigs.

Doing God's Work Unworthily.—God had entrusted Babylon with the work of executing his Divine judgments on his people. The work was done, but God could not approve of the way in which it was done. Compare, for illustrative purposes, the cases of King Saul and of Jehu. Saul was made executioner of the Divine judgment on Amalek, but God could not approve of his work: he erred on the side of laxity. Jehu was made executioner of the Divine judgment on the house of Ahab, but God could not approve of his work: he erred on the side of severity. The complaint God makes against Babylon is that it had "shown no mercy," and one specific instance is given—there had been no considerateness shown toward the aged among the captives; even "upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke." Even the old people were made to do the tasks of bond-slaves.—Pul. Com.

Assumptions of Pride.—

Ask for whose end the heavenly bodies shine;
Earth for whose use? Pride answers, 'tis for mine.
For me kind nature wakes her genial power,
Suckles each herb and spreads out every flower.
Annual for me, the grape, the rose, renew
The juice nectareous and the balmy dew;
For me the mine a thousand treasures brings;
For me health gushes from a thousand springs;
Seas roll to wait me, suns to light me rise;
My footstool earth, my canopy the skies.—Pope.

8, 9. (8) carelessly, in uttermost security; with no suspicion of danger. widow, a figure for supreme desolation and affliction. they shall come, etc., R. V., "in their full measure shall they come upon thee, despite of the multitude of thy sorceries and the great," etc. "In one thing the law of Jehovah stood by itself (in contrast with other faiths) and that was in its intolerance of all augury and divination."—G. A. Smith. sorceries, see Da. ii. 2.

Historical Note on Sorceries, etc.—1. At entrance of Christianity the world was overrun with magicians and conjurers of various grades (Gal. v. 20). "Impostors fr. the E., pretending to magical powers, had great influence over the Rom. mind. All the Gk. and Lat. literature of the period, fr. Horace to Lucian, abounds in proof of the prevalent credulity of this sceptical period. Unbelief, when it has become conscious of its weakness, is often glad to give its hand to superstition. The faith of the educated Roms. was entirely gone, . . . they greedily welcomed the most absurd and degrading superstitions. . . . Syrian fortune-tellers "flocked into the haunts of public amusement. . . . The more remote districts of Asia Minor sent them itinerant soothsayers. . . . Marius had in his camp a Syrian prophethess, by whose divinations he regulated the progress of his campaigns." (Conybeare and Howson's Paul, i. 177—182.) Brutus, Pompey, Crassus, Cæsar resorted to oracles at Delphi, etc. Juvenal (x. 93) desc. the Emperor Tiberius with his Chaldeans around him. 2. Christianity attacked and defeated the popular superstition at all points of contact (Acts xiii. 8, xvi. 16, xix. 3, see esp. xix. 17—20). "This scene must have been long remembered at Ephesus. It was a strong proof of honest conviction on the part of the sorceress, and a striking attestation of the triumph of Jesus Christ over the powers of darkness" (Ibid. ii. 20).—Topics.

Comparative Value of Things.—You will notice that in the placid waters of a lake everything which is highest in reality is lowest in the reflection. The higher the trees, the lower their image. That is the picture of this world; what is highest in this world is lowest in the other, and what is highest in that world is lowest in this. Gold is on top here; they pave the streets with it there. To serve is looked upon as ignoble here; there those that serve reign, and the last are first. Any girl is willing to fling away paste diamonds for the real stones; when a man understands what God can be to the soul, he loses his taste for things he used to care for most.—F. B. Meyer.

10, 11. (10) perverted thee, "augury and divination exerted two evil influences. They paralyzed the industry and politics of a nation and confounded the moral sense of a people. They wearied a people's intellect, stunted their enterprise, distorted their conscience."—G. A. Smith. (11) know . . . riseth, R. V. margin, "how to charm it away." So most modern commentators. An evil shall come and your charms shall fail. put it off, "expiate it" with all thy sacrificial oblations to thy gods.

Worldliness.—We are living under a materializing influence that is disastrous to a more serious and devotional view of life. In the minds of a great many good people the ideal of human existence is a great deal of material comfort and a large surplus of pleasure that can be purchased in the form of desirable surroundings. These ideals rise in the scale of magnitude and grandeur every year, and men say, "When I can realize this ideal of earthly paradise, I am going to devote a great deal of time hearted for Christ. We are so constituted that it is impossible for us to exercise a divided allegiance; we must be out-and-out for God, or we shall be in-and-in for the world and all its interests." — A. J. Gordon.

c "According to Xenophon the Babylonians looked on Cyrus with contempt." —Spk. Com.

"It is the nature of man to be proud, when man by nature has nothing to be proud of. I am ashamed of their glory whose glory is their shame. If nature will have me to be proud of something, I will be proud only of this, that I am proud of nothing."—Warwick.

"This generation ought to exult in its transcendent opportunities for service. But it is possible to see these opportunities and yet feel no thrill of new life unless there is added the quickening touch of the divine Spirit."—Josiah Strong.

"The athletes of Greece and Rome were inspired to run or wrestle by the knowledge of the fact that they were surrounded by a vast assembly of spectators (Heb. xii. 1). Oh! if we but realized God's presence, our life would become brave and beautiful and holy. God is not only present everywhere, but everywhere present to inspire, and aid, and bless."

"Earthly pride is like the passing flower, that springs to fall, and blossoms but to die."—H. K. White.

"I do believe that the Divine love and compassion follow us in all words, and that the Heavenly Father will do the best that is possible for every creature He has made. What that will be must be left to His infinite wisdom and goodness." — Whittier.

a "The Babylonians are reported by Diodorus Siculus, and other writers, to have carried back their own antiquity, as proved by recorded scientific observations, to an extravagant and foolish length." — J. A. Alexander.

b "It would appear that the astronomers of Babylon published a monthly table of the leading events that might be expected to happen." — Henderson.

"The superstition in which we were brought up never loses its power over us even after we understand it." — Lessing.

"Nothing is more depressing than to fall again and again. Yet precisely this is the ever-repeated consequence of self-trust and self-help. Blessed is it when weariness does not pass into despair, but leads to the abandonment of self-reliances, that full trust may be placed in God." — R. Tuck.

to devotional preparation for the next world." The trouble is that they no sooner get their house on the sea-shore than they want a house in the mountains, and when they have that they want a house somewhere else. They say, "Wait till my cat-boat grows into a sloop, and my sloop into a schooner, and my schooner into a steam yacht; then I will devise liberal things." But the "then" never comes. Meanwhile they have become so immersed in this world, and so filled with the spirit of this world, and so absorbed in the pursuit of this world's pleasure and comfort, that they have no time to read the Bible as they ought.—Francis L. Patton. Man's Helplessness in Presence of Divine Calamities.—The point impressed is that disaster takes unexpected and overwhelming forms, against which the wisest man fails to take precautions. Man can only affect the smallest of circumstances that are put into his control, and the few persons who are under his immediate influence. But each one of us belongs to a great whole, and is affected by great forces, which God alone controls. We are carried whither we would not. We are borne down by evils which we seem to have done nothing to create. We are helpless before the hurricanes and earthquakes and pestilences with which God can smite. But we may so stand that no event arranged by the Divine wisdom can take shape for us as calamity.—Pul. Com.

12, 13. (12) Stand now, "pray, persist in thy spells," (Pol. Bib.), stake everything on them (Lev. xiii. 5; Jer. xlviii. 11; Ezek. xiii. 5). A scornful challenge to the multitude of Babylon's magicians, from thy youth, with allusion to their claim to an extraordinarily early origin.^a if so be, or perchance. (13) wearied, bec. their efforts are fruitless of results, astrologers, or "dividers of heaven," alluding to the signs of the Zodiac, which are of Babylonian origin.—Pol. Bib. stargazers, those who prophesy upon observation of the stars. monthly,^b etc., "refers to the preparation of monthly almanacs in which coming disasters were foretold, lucky and unlucky days pointed out," etc.—Camb. Bib.

Astrology, etc.—The earliest objects of idolatrous homage were prob. the sun, moon, stars (2 Ki. xxiii. 5; Acts vii. 42), and afterwards earthly creatures (Ro. i. 23, 25). The following are among the chief, as ref. to in the Bible, of the creatures worshiped. [Sun] as Osiris by Egyptians, fr. them prob. learned by Israelites. On (Bethshemesh or Heliopolis—city of the S.), so called fr. his temple (Jer. xliii. 13). Wife of Joseph was dau. of his priest (Ge. xli. 45). Sun worshiped by Phœnicians under name of Baal-shâmâyim (Lord of heaven), and Adon (Gk. Adonis), and Thammuz (Ez. viii. 14); by Ammonites as Molech or Milcom; by Moabites as Chemosh; by Syrians as Hadad (hence names Benhadad, Hada-dezer, etc.). The Bel or Belus of Assyrians=Baal. As by Persians (Bochart), late kings of Judah dedicated horses to S. (2 Ki. xxiii. 11), [Moon] under name of Astarte worshiped by Phœnicians, known as Ashtaroth or Asthoreth to Hebs. (Jud. ii. 13, x. 6; 1 S. vii. 3, xii. 10); goddess of Zidonians (1 Ki. xi. 33). [Stars] Early adored by Israelites (Am. v. 26; Ac. vii. 42, 43; hence a strict law (Deu. xvii. 3), and constant calling of God as the true Jehovah Zebaoth (Lord of Hosts) (Dan. iv. 35, 37; Deu. x. 14). S. worship was encouraged by Manasseh (2 Ch. xxxiii. 3).—Topics.

14, 15. (14) fire, of God's wrath, manifested in national calamities. not a coal, "no glowing coal to warm oneself withal; no fire to sit before!" i. e. not a hearth fire but a conflagration.—Camb. Bib. (15) Thus, R. V., "Thus shall the things be unto thee wherein thou hast laboured; they that have trafficked with thee," etc. There never was a truer picture of the quick ruin of a merely commercial community, or of the ultimate loneliness of a mercenary and selfish life, than the headlong rush of traders, each as he could find passage, from the city that never had other attractions even for her own citizens than those of gain or of pleasure." —G. A. Smith.

Burning the Stubble.—This is a strong description of a fire made with dried grass and stubble. While the hand of the cottager supplies fresh fuel, though but for a few moments, the flame may illumine his dwelling, and cheer himself with the blaze; but there is no fire to sit before, no coals to warm at. The embers wear but a momentary smile, and are then extinct. Thus has it fared with Babylon, against which these judgments were denounced, more than two thousand years since.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-EIGHTH.

"This chapter is largely a recapitulation of certain outstanding themes of the prophecy, several of which are here touched upon for the last time."—Camb. Bib. 1, 2. (1) waters of Judah, better, "loins of Judah" (comp. vs. 19). who swear by, i. e. avow allegiance to (Deut. vi. 13, x. 20). not in truth, not sincerely.^b (2) the holy city;^c first time this title is used of Jerusalem in the O. T. Used afterward lli. 1, and in Nehemiah and Daniel (comp. Matt. iv. 5).

Insincerity is Sometimes a Drift.—We get into it, and it becomes a confirmed condition we scarcely know how; we are not conscious of having exercised any will in the matter. With some there is a great idea of "keeping up appearances," and the effort to do this tends to nourish insincere habits and ways. And sometimes we are carried into expressions of religious feeling and experience that are quite beyond us, by surroundings of religious excitement; and the pleasure of the insincere fascinates us. We drift into this evil by the use of sensational hymns, and by listening to ecstatic religious experiences; and there is no graver danger besetting the Church of our day than this tendency to nourish the insincere in the expressions of religious life. God's reproaches fall on many who think themselves very holy, but whose professions are not really matched by heart and life.—Pul. Com.

3-5. (3) former things, such as the fall of Assyria.^a (4) obstinate, hard, stubborn, stiff-necked. This "tough, defiant, natural force which lived in Israel is a genuine Semitic trait."—Oehler. brow brass, like the hard brow of butting animals. Shamelessly persistent in opposition to the truth. (5) commanded them, "many of the wonderful things of old, Jehovah predicted long before they happened, and so left His stubborn people no excuse for an idolatry to which otherwise they would have given themselves (vs. 5). Now that they see that wonderful past complete, and all the predictions fulfilled, they may well publish Jehovah's renown to the world."^b—G. A. Smith.

A Leipzig Jew.—A poor student of the university of Leipsic, having occasion to undertake a journey to his distant friends, being destitute of the money needful for the purpose, was compelled to go to a Jew, and pawn his Hebrew Bible and Greek Testament. The latter contained the Greek and German text in opposite columns. The Jew, little as he valued this book, was prevailed on to give the student half a rix dollar for it. During the absence of the student, he determined to read it through, with a view of confirming his enmity against Jesus, and to be the better prepared to testify his zeal for the Jewish faith. He concealed it from his family, and commenced its perusal, which, as the young man was absent seven weeks, he had time to do. As he read, he was surprised and impressed, and at times was ready to exclaim, "Oh that Jesus was my Saviour!" He was compelled a third time to read the book; and now the history, the doctrines, and the promises of Jesus destroyed his opposition, and melted his soul. He was overcome to tears, and resolved on embracing the doctrines of the cross. He announced his change to a Christian minister, purchased the New Testament of the student, to whom he became a warmly attached friend, and continued to give evidence of being a consistent Christian. The Beginning of Moral Obstinatecy a Loss of Spiritual Sensibility.—The proper attitude before God is one of openness, humility, and self-distrust. The renewed soul is delicately sensitive to every expression of the Divine will, and to everything that is in harmony with the Divine mind. And the maintaining of that sensitiveness is absolutely essential to the keeping of right relations with God. Piety is closely akin to meekness and gentleness. It loves to obey, to follow, to be led. We have no will but God's will for us. To lose this "sensibility" is grave danger. It is to step on a slippery slide. Therefore should we "keep our heart with all diligence," and be most jealous over those various spiritual influences that help to make our hearts more tender.—Pul. Com.

"In this ch. Israel is warned against his old hardness of heart, and bidden to receive the declaration of that wh. is God's present will,—the deliverance of Israel through Cyrus. But, for the wicked, let Israel know there is no deliverance." — Mat. Arnold.

b Je. v. 2; Jno. iv. 24.

c Is. lli. 1; Da. ix. 24; No. xl. 1; Mat. iv. 5. This designation, at first a mere epithet, eventually became a proper name, and Je - ha - Kodesh seems, in some cases, to have superseded the more general name of Jerusalem.

The Mohammedans call Jerusalem El Khoods or The Holy.

a Is. xli. 24.

b De. xxxi. 26-29.

"I have always found in my scientific studies that, when I could get the Bible to say anything upon the subject, it afforded me a firm platform to stand upon, and a round in the ladder by which I could safely ascend."—Lieut. Maury.

"I must confess to you that the majesty of the Scriptures astonishes me; the holiness of the Evangelists speaks to my heart, and has such strong and striking characters of truth, and is, moreover, so perfectly inimitable, that, if it had been the invention of man, the inventors would be greater than the greatest heroes," — Rousseau.

^a "The things wh. the Prophet prophesied concerning Babylon and Cyrus could not, by any possibility, have been anticipated by human sagacity." — Henderson.

^b De. xxix. 4, xxxi. 27.

"Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow and wax strong, we grow and wax weak, and at last some crisis shows us what we have become." — Canon Westcott.

^c A beautiful exhibition of the forbearance of Jehovah.

^d Ps. lxxviii. 38.

^e "The refiner of silver may lose some grains of the good ore in the smelting, but I will not lose a single grain of thee in the spiritual process of refining thee by the furnace of affliction at Babylon." — Wordsworth.

"Till the root has firm hold of the soil, there can be neither flower nor fruit. The soul cannot safely bear much sunshine till it is rooted in God. Let me then lift up my thought constantly to the Divine realm, the summer land of the soul, for help and guidance. Let me make God my own, and then all that He possesses will be mine also." — Old Test. Anec.

6—8. (6) heard, see, heard the predictions, now see the fulfilments. declare it, so that others may learn of the true and only God. have showed, Camb. B. "I show." new things, those named in vs. 14. hidden things, things kept in reserve. (7) created now, by immediate Divine decree. God not only arranging from the beginning, but actually presiding and working now.^a even before, etc., R. V., "and before this day thou heardest them not," "therefore cannot lay claim to the knowledge as something drawn from itself." — Delitzsch. (8) heardest not, by reason of hardness of heart and obstinacy.^b

Defects of Believers (vs. 8).—I. They are too often in a measure spiritually insensible, "Yea, thou heardest not." II. They are often carelessly ignorant, "Yea, thou knewest not." III. Yet all this was fore-known of God, and yet He has been pleased to deal with us in a way of mercy. IV. Pray for the Holy Spirit, that we may henceforth have the hearing ear and the understanding heart.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Hidden Things.—The earth is full of latent forces. Take heat, for instance; how it hides in the secret places more stealthily than the panther! Take electricity: here it is quite close to us—within us; and what a masterful power it is!—how it can rend the rock and lay low the lofty palaces! These are beneficent forces, though, and do their work well, for the security, health, and comfort of man. There are hidden forces that are baneful. The latent seeds of disease lie hidden behind that pearly skin—that pure and radiant complexion. And when we have to speak of sin, what a latent force there is hidden in the breast of a child!—concealing itself under the cloak of outward respectability in manhood, and by its manifestations here and there like the volcano, telling us what depths of evil there are in the human heart, which only Christ and his cross can overcome. Men understand much, but they do not understand themselves.

9—II. (9) defer mine anger, Ex. xxxiv. 6.^c refrain, from adequately punishing them for their stubbornness and rebellion.^d (10) refined thee, by the chastising fires of captivity. with silver, better, as silver,^e or as Pol. Bib. "without gain of silver," i. e. without obtaining any pure metal as a result. The sense is uncertain. (11) name . . polluted, or defamed, as it would be if God proved unfaithful to His chosen people. glory . . another, ch. xlii. 8.

The Refining Power of Affliction.—It is rough work that polishes. Look at the pebbles on the shore! Far inland, where some arm of the sea thrusts itself deep into the bosom of the land, and, expanding into a salt loch, lies girdled by the mountains, sheltered from the storms that agitate the deep, the pebbles on the beach are rough, not beautiful, angular, not rounded. It is where long white lines of breakers roar, and the rattling shingle is rolled about the strand, that its pebbles are rounded and polished. As in nature, as in the arts, so in grace; it is rough treatment that gives souls as well as stones their lustre; the more the diamond is cut, the brighter it sparkles; and in what seems hard dealing their God has no end in view but to perfect his people's graces. Our Father, and the kindest of fathers, he afflicts not willingly; he sends tribulations, but hear St. Paul tell their purpose. "Tribulation worketh patience, patience experience, experience hope." — Guthrie. The Furnace of Affliction.—The late Professor George Wilson thus quaintly expresses the various effects of affliction in a letter to his friend, Daniel Macmillan: "The furnace of affliction puffs away some men in black smoke, and hardens others into useless slags, and melts a few into clear glass. May it refine us into gold seven times purified, ready to be fashioned into vessels for the Master's use." And like the effect of affliction is that of the habitual prospect of death. In a letter to the same friend, in 1848, he says, "I have been reading lately, with great sadness, the Memorials of Charles Lamb, and the Life of Keats. There is something in the noble brotherly love of Charles to brighten, and hallow, and relieve the former; but Keats's death-bed is the blackness of midnight, unmitigated by one ray of light. God keep you and me from such a death-bed! We may have physical agonies as great to endure. It is the common lot. I feel that our heavenly Father can better choose for us than we can for ourselves, of what we should die; but I pray our blessed Lord and Master to be with us in our last fight with the last enemy, and to give us the victory. If He does, what shall pain be but like other bitter medicines, the preparative for the unbroken health of an endless life?"—Old Test. Anec.

12, 13. (12) first, etc., Listen to Me! It is the Eternal who speaks, the Creator. My words you must heed, ch. xli. 4, xlv. 6; Re. i. 17, xxii. 13. (13) spanned, R. V. "spread out." I call, etc., the universe heeds my call and stands ready to obey.

God Over All.—Nations are not cards with which politicians play at gambling: they may think they do, they may seem to do so, but the Lord reigneth, the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, and he says to the nation as he says to the individual, "The very hairs of thy head are all numbered." Ralph Waldo Emerson has a beautiful little parable about this. He pictures a republican convention: he has in it several very stormy spirits who have undertaken to carry the republic at all costs—mighty little straws hardly strong enough to hold a fly. They have a meeting and storm at one another a long while, and when the meeting is broken up, kind mother Nature, all her stars alight, all her winds quieted down to a touching and pathetic minor, says to the hottest of these conventionalists, "Why art thou so hot, little sir?" The little sir thinks he has been manipulating a nation, settling the affairs of a republic—that without him the republic would be nowhere, and great quiet solemn Alma Mater, every lamp aflame, bends over him, "Why so hot, little sir?" It is the same with this great England of ours. There is a House, in which men point to one another, charge honorable gentlemen opposite—these honorable gentlemen are always opposite—shake their fists almost at the right honorable gentlemen opposite—and kind great Nature waits for them, and when they come out, she says to the fiercest and fussiest of them, "Why so hot, little sir?" The Lord reigneth, the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof: everything is mapped out in his providence and brought within the circle of his decree: he has a purpose to realize, and no man can thwart it. Oh that we were less hot and less fierce, that we had the repose of strength, the quietness of omnipotence!—Peop. Bib.

14, 15. (14) All ye, He now summons His people, and contrasts them with the heathen nations. loved him, i. e. Cyrus. Love so far as shown in selecting him as His agent. Delitzsch translates "He whom Jehovah loveth will accomplish his will upon Babel, and his arm upon the Chaldeans." (15) I, notice the emphatic repetition of this pronoun.

A Special Providence—Major-General Burn.—General Burn records, in his Life, the following interesting facts:—Last week, just as my heart was poring over the disappointment I met with in my expected promotion, and anticipating all the miseries of accumulating debt, a dear friend of mine, in the military profession, called upon me; and, taking me aside into a private room, made me promise I would ask him no questions, which when I had done, with some hesitation, he put a bank-note into my hand, saying, he was desired to give it to me, but with the strongest injunctions never to divulge from whence it came. I put it into my pocket without looking at it, repeatedly thanking him and my generous benefactor for the very acceptable present. Dinner being upon the table, we went in, sat down, and dined; my mind all the while occupied about which of my creditors I should pay off first, imagining I had perhaps a ten or twenty pound note, which I longed to look at, but was ashamed to do so before my friend. Soon after dinner, I took an opportunity to step out of the room to satisfy my anxious curiosity. But, oh! how was my heart filled with grateful emotions when I found two notes, one of five, and the other of a hundred pounds—a present of a hundred guineas! To attempt a description of my feelings at that time would be in vain: those who have experienced the overflowings of a grateful heart can only guess at them. I was so overcome with a view of the Lord's goodness, that I knew not how to express myself, and was afraid my friend would think me insensible of the favor bestowed. When he was gone, and I had communicated the purport of his visit to Mrs. B., we both wept, and in broken accents, with eyes and hearts directed to heaven, expressed our obligation to the God of all our mercies for His seasonable and ample supply, in answer to our united and repeated prayers. I have now en-

"Even legal punishments lose all appearance of justice when too strictly inflicted on men compelled by the last extremity of distress to incur them." — Junius.

"The manner in which the Creator has contrived a supply for the thirst of man, in sultry places, is worthy of admiration. He has placed amidst the burning sands of Africa a plant, whose leaf, twisted round like a cruet, is always filled with a large glassful of fresh water. He has planted, in some other districts of the same country, a great tree, the trunk of which, of a prodigious bulk, is naturally hollowed, like a cistern. In the rainy season it receives its fill of water, which continues fresh and cool in the greatest heats, by means of the tufted foliage which crowns its summit. In some of the parched rocky islands of the West Indies there is found a tree, called the Water Lianao, so full of sap that if you cut a single branch of it, as much water is immediately discharged as a man can drink at a draught, and it is perfectly pure and limpid." — St. Pierre.

"God never meant that man should scale the heavens By strides of human wisdom. In His works, Though wondrous, he commands us in his word To seek him rather where his mercy shines." — Cowper.

"Not a flower
But shows some touch, in freck-le, streak, or stain.
Of his unrivalled pencil." — Cowper.

"Thou great mysterious Power, who hast involved Thy wise
decrees in darkness, to perplex the pride of human wisdom, to confound the daring scrutiny, and prove the faith of Thy presuming creatures!" — Hannah More.

"O Eternal Providence, whose course, amidst the various maze of life, is fixed by boundless wisdom and by boundless love, I follow Thee, with resignation, hope, with confidence and joy; for Thou art good, and of Thy rising goodness is no end." — Thomson.

"In this vs. the Prophet, charged with these messages from God, speaks in his own name, and testifies to his countrymen that he has from the beginning pointed out to them God's hand and beck in these great events now happening." — Mat. Arnold.

"God enters by a private door into every individual." — Emerson.

"To him, no high, no low, no great, no small;
He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals all." — Pope.

b Comp. De xxxii. 29; Mat. xxiii. 37.

"The reason why we hate the law," said some idolaters to a missionary, "is because it is holy. If it joyed the pleasure of paying all my debts, of contributing to the relief of others, and of purchasing many articles absolutely necessary to my family. Oh, how good the Lord has been to us, unworthy as we are of the least of all His mercies!

16, 17. (16) now the Lord, render, "now the Lord Jehovah hath sent me and His Spirit," i. e. hath sent both me and His Spirit.—Camb. Bib. his Spirit, the spirit of prophecy in Isaiah.^a This very difficult verse has been attributed either to Jehovah in the first three clauses and to the Servant in the fourth (Delitzsch); or in the same proportion to Jehovah and the prophet (Cheyne and Bredenkamp); or to the Servant all through (Orelli); or to the prophet all through (Hitzig, Knobel, Giesebrecht). (17) teacheth . . profit, though it may be in the furnace of affliction.

Profitable Teaching and Right Leading (vs. 17).—The whole scope of the passage points to God—I. As a Redeemer—I. From the captivity of evil, the Babylon of sin; 2. The mercy of the Redeemer at work in the city of bondage. II. As a teacher. 1. Look at the Gospel as a teacher; 2. Learning is never easy, yet all the teaching is profitable. III. As a leader. 1. The way God would have us go is not always according to our inclination; 2. The knowledge that it is His way should be enough.—J. Parrish.

The Ways of God.—In this world we are children standing on the bank of a mighty river. Casting our eyes upward and downward along the channel, we discern various windings of its current; and perceive that it is now visible, now obscure, and now entirely hidden from our view. But being far removed from the fountain whence it springs, and from the ocean into which it is emptied, we are unable to form any conceptions of the beauty, usefulness, or grandeur of its progress. Lost in perplexity and ignorance, we gaze, wonder, and despond. In this situation, a messenger from heaven comes to our relief, with authentic information of its nature, its course, and its end; conducts us backward to the fountain, and leads us forward to the ocean. This river is the earthly system of providence: the Bible is the celestial messenger; and Heaven is the ocean in which all preceding dispensations find their end.—Dwight.

18, 19. (18) peace, or national prosperity. river, i. e. "a perennial stream, such as the Euphrates (cf. Am. v. 24). It is easy to understand the impression made on the mind of a native of Palestine, accustomed to 'deceitful brooks' that run dry in the summer, by the sight of a great river, flowing on for ever in undiminished volume. The actual history of Israel had been like the wadis of Judæa, transient gleams of prosperity being interrupted by long intervals of misfortune; the river suggests to the writer an image of the boundless and unfailing blessedness which would have followed the keeping of the Divine commandments."—Camb. Bib. righteousness, moral prosperity. waves, which roll up and flow on continually.^b (19) seed . . sand, abundant offspring being regarded in the E. as a special sign of Divine favor. the gravel, R. V., "the grains." name, that of the "seed," as Jehovah's nation.

The Commandments of God (vs. 18).—I. God hath given to us commandments—I. Authoritative in their import; 2. Perspicuous in their style; 3. Universal in their application; 4. Reasonable in their claims. II. God's commandments deserve attention. 1. They should be read; 2. Remembered; 3. Practised. III. Such attention produces the happiest results. 1. The nature of that tranquillity which the people of God enjoy; 2. Its perpetuity; 3. Its increase; 4. Thy righteousness as the waves of the sea. IV. The people of Israel were inattentive to God's commandments. This conduct was—I. Ungrateful; 2. Rebellious; 3. Unnatural; 4. Ruinous. Learn—(1) That attention to God's commandments is a highly important duty; (2) Where they are disregarded, peace is forfeited; (3) God most compassionately commiserates the circumstances of His creatures; (4) Man's final ruin is wholly of himself.—Beta in 400 Sks.

Human Freedom.—Jehovah laments that Israel had forfeited its heritage, had used its freedom to disobey, had cut itself off from his generous design (vs. 18). What God would gladly have bestowed, the foolish nation had resolved to refuse. Such power of choice has the Creator given to his creature, man. And what fearful use has man made of this his freedom! It is not Israel alone that has elected to forego splendid op-opportunities. What might not Rome have been, and Egypt, and those European lands to which the knowledge of the gospel has been carried! It is not too late to ask—What may not England be? The record of her history is not yet complete; her sands are not yet run; her gate of opportunity is not yet closed. She may yet rise to the height of her privilege, as she may yet sink grievously and fatally beneath it. With the same solemn and awful freedom every individual soul is invested by its Creator. Every one of us is at liberty to thwart his gracious purpose if we choose; at liberty also to realize it, in all its glorious fullness, if we will.—Pul. Com.

The Perceiving Heart.—“Two sit together and hear the same sermon. One finds a hidden spiritual virtue in the Word, by which he lives and grows and thrives. Another finds no such virtue in it; perhaps it pleases his reason, and there is an end. This proceeds from the want of the spiritual, perceiving heart. Why is it that a man is so affected with music that all his passions are moved by it, while brutes are not at all pleased? Because there is in man a principle of reason concurring with his sense, which discovers the sweetness and harmony of the sounds that bare sense is not able to discern.” And so of the things of God. Open thou mine eyes and mine ears; let my noblest faculties be ever in communion with the noblest, my spiritual nature be awakened by the Spirit, and again respond to His influence!—this should be our prayer. We will hearken unto and obey Him who hath the words of eternal life: this should be our resolve.—J.

The Lost Ideal.—

“Have we not all, amid life’s petty strife,
Some ideal of a noble life,
That once seemed possible? Did we not hear
The flutter of its wings, and feel it near?
And just within our reach it was; and yet
We lost it in this daily jar and fret;
And now live idly, in a vain regret.
But still our place is kept, and it will wait
Ready for us to fill it, soon or late.
No star is ever lost we once have seen;
We always may be what we might have been.”

20—22. (20) flee ye, as at the Exodus. singing, as when you reached the further shores of the Red Sea.” (21) thirsted not, “the exile has been only a temporary failure. The promises will yet be fulfilled. The exile is to be followed by restoration, and the exiles are summoned to go forth from Babylon. As in the Exodus from Egypt so will it be in this greater Exodus. Waters will burst from the rock to quench the thirst of those whose path leads through the desert to the promised land.”—Briggs.” (22) no peace, as before, in the sense of national prosperity through the Divine blessing. A refrain occurring lvii. 20, 21, and the idea lxvi. 24.

Peace (vs. 22).—I. What kind of peace? “The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.” II. How shall we get it? “Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.” III. What will be the effect of it? “And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever.” IV. Where will it lead us? “Unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, to God, the Judge of all, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new Covenant.” “Seeing that you look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of Him in peace.”

CHAPTER THE FORTY-NINTH.

1. O isles, comp. xl. 15, word used 12 times in this part of Isaiah, probably means “far countries,” referring to coastlands as well as islands. called me, the personal servant of God. The greater than Cyrus, whom he, in measure, typified.

would allow us to rob freely, if it taught us to be revenged on our enemies, and give way to our passions without being exposed to their consequences, we would embrace it; but because it is holy we reject it, and command you and the catechist to depart immediately.” Equanimity, in every condition of life, is a noble attribute.”—Cicero.

“Peace is the happy, natural state of man; war his corruption, his disgrace.”—Thomson.

“There is an hour in each man’s life appointed To make his happiness, if then he seize it.”—Beaumont and Fletcher.

“Who seeks, and will not take when once ‘tis offer’d, Shall never find it more.”—Shakespeare.

a Ex. xv.

b “God always connects the mercies of the Exodus from Babylon with those of the Exodus from Egypt.”—Wordsworth.

“Away among the Alleghanies there is a spring so small, that a single ox in a summer day could drain it dry. It steals its unobtrusive way among the hills, till it spreads out in the beautiful Ohio. Thence it stretches away a thousand miles, leaving on its banks, cities, villages, and cultivated farms, and bearing on its bosom more than half a thousand steamboats. Beautiful representation of a Christian's peace! Peace 'as a river,'—H. W. Beecher.

"If there be not a religious element in the relations of men, such relations are miserable and doomed to ruin."—Carlyle.

"The measure of choosing well is whether a man likes what he has chosen."—Lamb.

"The metaphors of a sword and an arrow, in the best state of preparation, aptly set forth the penetrating and subduing efficacy of the Gospel."—Henderson.

^b Jno. xiii. 31, xiv. 13, xvii. 1, 4.

"What to thee is shadow to Him is day, And the end He knoweth."—J. Whittier.

"Far away th in the sunshine are my brightest aspirations. I cannot reach them, but I can look up and see their beauty, believe in them, and try to follow where they lead."—Louise May Alcott.

^c Comp. Jno. i. 11, xii. 37.

"Here it seems to point to the obstinacy of the Jews, among whom Christ went in person preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, labored and spent His strength. So very few were brought in, when one would think none should have stood out."—Mrs. Henry.

^a So marg., Sept., Syr., Arab., Delitzsch, etc.

Note on ch. xlix.—The beginning of ch. xlix. seems to mark a distinct advance in the development of the prophet's conceptions. "The controversial tone, the repeated comparisons between Jehovah and the idols, with the arguments based upon them, disappear; the prophet feels that, as regards these points, he has made his position sufficiently secure. For the same reason, allusions to Cyrus and his conquest of Babylon cease also; that, likewise, is now taken for granted" (Driver). In the remaining discourses (ch. xlix.—lv.) the author concentrates his attention almost exclusively on his central message of consolation, and the glorious future in store for Israel.—Camb. Bib.

2, 3. (2) my mouth, Messiah's work would be teaching. sharp sword, He. iv. 12. shaft, or arrow.^a This section is an advance upon the conception of the previous section. There, he was endowed with the divine Spirit; here he is called from the womb and assigned His ministry prior to birth. There he was a sharp threshing instrument; here his mouth is like a sharp sword hidden in the hand of Jehovah, and an arrow concealed in His quiver.—Briggs. hid, R. V. "kept me close," protected by God as the arrow by the quiver. (3) O Israel, Pol. Bib. regards these words "O Israel" as a later addition to the text. If they were genuine it would be almost impossible to hold that the Servant is an individual. glorified, Jno. xii. 28.^b

The Sword and Arrow were the chief weapons of the ancients, and were emblems of powerful and persuasive speech. The Tartars proclaim a powerful prince thus:—"His word shall be as a sword." Of Pericles it is said, "His powerful speech pierced the hearer's soul, and left deep behind in his bosom its keener point infixed." Such is the power of the Gospel.—Thodey. Glorifying God.—Light is never revealed of itself, but always when shining from, or burning in, something else. To be seen, light requires a surface that will reflect, or a substance that will consume. And so, to break into glory, God requires something outside Himself. A responsive portion of humanity is indispensable to Him,—a people who will reflect Him and spend itself for Him. Man is the mirror and the wick of the Divine. God is glorified in man's character and witness,—these are His mirror; and in man's sacrifice,—that is His wick. Carlyle said, and it was almost his last testimony, "The older I grow, and I am now on the brink of eternity, the more comes back to me the first sentence of the catechism, which I learned when a child, and the fuller does its meaning grow—"What is the chief end of man? Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever."—Exp. Bib.

4. laboured . . nought, descriptive of the apparent results of Messiah's mission.^c Christ made comparatively few disciples, and seemed to make but little impression on the Jewish nation. judgment, or reward, the true fruitage of My work. work, R. V. "recompence."

An Encouragement to Labor.—Other men do not see the full result of their labor—they know not how many lamps are kindled by their torch. Did you ever hear of Thomas Barber? Probably not. His name is written but in pale ink on the world's scroll, yet that man was the means of converting Dr. Adam Clarke, one of the world's deepest scholars and most luminous expositors of the Divine Word. Did you ever hear of Robert Burnard? Probably not; yet that good man laid hold of a drunken mason's son in Plymouth workhouse, and watched over him with ever-helpful generosity, until that deaf pauper was known throughout the world as Dr. John Kitto. These are but two names out of a long roll. They show how even obscure names may be associated with stupendous results.—Hom. Com.

5. though . . gathered, R. V. "and that Israel be gathered to him."^a yet, etc., R. V. "(for I am honourable . . my strength)," a parenthetical clause. The quotation referred to in this verse begins vs. 6. my strength, or my salvation.

"Ah if we but knew the power that worketh in us and the power that worketh for us, there would be less talking and more working, and things that seem to be, from the joint of unbelief and panic-strickenness, almost too big to attempt, would be seen to be natural and obvious."—John McNeill.

Work for God.—When a young man is converted, he is almost always inclined at first to say, "I know I could do far more good if I was a preacher, so I'll leave my business and become a preacher of the gospel." But very often mistakes are made just in this way. God may have given you some work to do for Him in the position in which He has placed you which no one else could do if you were to leave it undone. We should be very careful how we wish to change from whatever position in life into which God has seen fit to put us.—Andrew A. Bonar.

6. R. V. "Yea, he saith, It is too light a thing," etc., i. e. compared with the sublime trust committed to Messiah of saving the whole world.^b "The restoration of Israel is the least part of thy vocation as my servant."—Camb. Bib. preserved, the spared of so many national calamities. light, etc., comp. Lu. ii. 32; Ac. xiii. 47; Ro. xv. 10.^c "So I set thee as a light of the nations, that my deliverance may be to the end of the earth," Pol. Bib. This is the greater mission of the Servant.

The Messiah's Commission (vs. 6).—I. God's gift to mankind. 1. The Person given; 2. The Saviour's appointment, office, or undertaking. II. God's intention respecting mankind. 1. To raise up the tribes of Jacob; 2. The enlightening of the Gentiles. We infer—(1) We ought very highly to value our own souls; (2) We should accept the salvation of God; (3) Love Him who has manifested such love to us; (4) Give proof of our love; (5) Confidently expect all things that are necessary to life and godliness; (6) Employ both our example and influence to open the eyes of our fellow-men.—Zeta in 400 Sk.

Lights in the World.—If you go into a dark room filled with vermin, you cannot see anything; but if you light a match you see some crawling creatures; if you light a lamp, you see more; and if you turn on an electric light, it reveals the good and the evil in sharp contrast. "That which doth make manifest, is light," and Christians are to be lights in the world. When the Christian holds up his light, men are able to see good and evil. The church establishes the moral standard for men who never go near it and for communities who reject it.—Charles A. Blanchard.

7. man despiseth,^a the first condition of this servant will be that he will be looked upon with contempt, he will arouse the abhorrence of the people and will be the servant, i. e. under the power of tyrants. nation abhorreth,^b the Jewish nation, as such, rejected Messiah. and arise, i. e. to do homage to the great King-Saviour.^c

Christ's Future Reign (vs. 7).—I. The representation which is here given of the Messiah; note the description given of Him; this is the character of Christ, it is His character to this day. II. The determination of God respecting Him; He has decreed that all shall bow to His sceptre, for this He pledges the veracity of His word. Learn.—1. What a glorious period is approaching; 2. What encouragement have all ministers; 3. How happy are all believers.—Simeon.

The Messiah's Humiliation and Exaltation.—This verse has been called "a prelude of chap. liii." It anticipates that minute and graphic exhibition of the Messiah's sufferings and glories, which we have so often pondered, and prize so highly. In brief compass it states the leading points presented in that chapter. This is the twig which is there expanded into a magnificent tree. Here, as there, the prophet transports himself into the time when our Lord lived and suffered on earth, and stands at the point of transition between the humiliation and the exaltation. The shame, the indignities, the rejection, the cruel sufferings are stated as present facts; the glory, the honor, the worship, the world-wide influence are viewed as future. When Jesus died upon the cross, and His body was consigned to Joseph's tomb, His degradation seemed complete, His cause hopeless. His persecutors never dreamt that He would ever be heard of again, and even the faith of His disciples was shaken (Luke xxiv. 21). Never were surmises more signally falsified; never were fears and doubts more effectually relieved than when the Redeemer rose on the third day, and, after showing Himself to His disciples, ascended to the seat of honor and power. From this time onward His career is an entire reversal of the circumstances connected with His previous earthly course. The Prophecy as a Description of our Own Spiritual History.—Once, it may be, we were indifferent to Christ and despised Him in our hearts, evading the very thought of Him. But now "We have a supernatural work to do, and we must have supernatural power with which to do it." — A. J. Gordon.

^b "Israel had come to look on itself as possessed of exclusive privileges; a view altogether derogatory to God's glory. Even to re-establish Israel in its entirety would have been a small thing; but—how few were the preserved of Israel who survived the successive national judgments." —Spk. Com.

^c Is. xlii. 6, 7, ix. 3.

"When the church is afire with missionary zeal, she will light the world to Christ."—The Wellspring.

^a "Despised by the mere animal passion of man, which judges according to the outward appearance; and is therefore carnal, and not spiritual." — Wordsworth.

^b "The Jews contemptuously always call Jesus Toldi, tho crucified." —Fausset.

^c "Kings being usually seated in the presence of others, are described as rising from their thrones; while princes and notables, who usually stand in the presence of their sovereigns, are described as falling prostrate."—Hitzig.

"There is majesty in the name of God; there is independent being in the name Jehovah; there is authority in the name Lord; there is unction in the name Christ; there is friendship in the name Immanuel; there is help in the name Advocate; but, in the name Jesus alone is there salvation." — G. C. Needham.

"If you do not wish for God's kingdom, don't pray for it. But if you do, you must do more than pray for it; you must work for it." — Ruskin.

"Educate men without religion, and you make them but clever devils." — Duke of Wellington.

^a 2 Cor. vi. 2.

^b "The object of address 'a still Messiah and His people, whose great mission is again described.'" — J. A. Alexander.

^c "Colonize the waste wilderness of heathenism with inhabitants, who will inherit it in successive generations." — Wordsworth.

"All our happiness results from the Son's interest in the Father. And this makes the gospel-time an acceptable time, welcome to us, because we are accepted of God, and reconciled and recommended to him." — Matthew Henry.

^e "Messiah will abundantly satisfy all the wants, both of literal Israel on their way to Palestine, and of the spiritual on their way to Heaven, as their Shepherd." — Fausset.

^a "Built up so as to form a high and clear causeway to travel on." — Mat. Arnold.

we have tasted and seen that the Lord is gracious. God has shown us the madness of despising His Son (Gal. i. 15, 16). Our experience resembles that of the Jewish converts as expressed in chap. liii. 2—6. They who hid their faces in shame at the sight of the Messiah now own Him as their Saviour. There is nothing in Him to draw the carnal eye. The sensual mind has no appreciation of His excellence; the self-deluded and impenitent can dispense with His sacrifice; the sin-loving soul is repelled by His holiness; the ignorant and indifferent disregard Him. If the unbeliever studies Christ at all, he is forced to maintain that He is not the Son of God, and that His death was the merited punishment of His claim to be the Son of God. But he whose eyes have been opened is entranced by the vision of His divine glory and self-sacrificing love (Eph. v. 8; John ix. 25; 2 Cor. v. 17). Would that all of us could see the glory of the cross, the true character and dignity of the Redeemer! As preachers we do all in our power to draw aside the veil of ignorance and prejudice, that the glories of Christ might break upon the benighted soul. What think ye of Christ, then? Do you despise Him, or do you worship Him?—W. Guthrie.

8, 9. (8) acceptable time,^a a suitable time for showing grace or favor.^b covenant . . people, ch. xlii. 6. establish, etc., R. V. "to raise up the land," metaphors borrowed from nomadic life. "To raise up the earth from its present state of ruin, and to cause to inherit the moral wastes of heathenism."^c (9) prisoners, first, exiled and captive Israelites, then those in spiritual bondage. ways, or roads along which they are led. pastures . . places, comp. ch. xli. 17, 18. The fig. is taken from the shepherd leading home his flock.

The Greatness of Christ's Salvation (vss. 8—10).—I. The promised diffusion of the Gospel. 1. This was begun in the Apostolic age; 2. It is still existing; 3. It will be fully achieved in the millennium. II. The felicity of those who shall embrace it. Here is assured—1. Provision; 2. Protection; 3. Guidance; 4. Refreshment.—Simeon.

The Gospel Light.—Many thousands have looked upon "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," that great picture of that great commentator in color, Gustave Doré, and have marked as its most wonderful conception the distant Calvary with its empty cross bathed in mysterious light, and the innumerable throngs that toil upward to it with their shining faces, and the deep night-sky that seems to over-brim with angels. So the cross will shine at last above the dark continent where Moffat lived, and Livingstone died praying; over India where Carey planted his forlorn hope, and grand old Samuel Wesley would have gladly laid his dust; and the shining hosts shall be the souls of all the saved, and the wondrous light the morning of the new heaven filling the new earth; for Christ will have drawn all men unto Himself.—W. J. Dawson.

10—12. (10) hunger, etc., Re. vii. 16. Still keeping up the fig. of the flock as led by the shepherd, with the most tender and patient care. heat, "the hot wind," i. e. the sirocco. lead . . guide, comp. Ps. xxiii.^e "He whose compassion has been excited by their long pining misery (xli. 17—20) is leading them, and bringing them along in comfort by babbling springs of refreshing water."—Delitzsch. (11) mountains, fig. for obstructions in a road. high-ways . . exalted, depressed parts raised to proper level.^a The word used means an artificial road made by throwing up the earth. (12) Sinim, Pol. Bib. "from the land of the Syenites," a little to the N. of the first cataract of the Nile. Thus the text mentions the three chief centres of Jewish dispersion. So Camb. Bib. and Pol. Bib. But others regard the promise as referring to the ingathering of the Gentiles, and suppose the land of Sinim to be China.

Christ a Physician.—As a physician, Christ differs from all others. 1. In that He never studied for the profession; 2. In that He never walked the hospital to acquire practice; 3. In that He never experimented upon individuals; 4. In that He never failed to effect a cure upon a patient; 5. In that He cured body and soul; 6. In that He never delivered any bill of charges; 7. In that He accomplished such cures as none before or since Him accomplished.—J. Bate.

Christ the Preacher's Great Theme.—The best sermon is that which is the fullest of Christ. A young man had been preaching in the presence of a venerable divine, and after he had done, he foolishly went to the old minister and inquired, "What do you think of my sermon, sir?" "A very poor sermon indeed," said he. "A poor sermon!" said the young man; "it took me a long time to study it." "Don't you know, young man, that from every town, and every village, and every little hamlet in England, wherever it may be, there is a road to London?" "Yes," said the young man. "Ah!" said the old divine, "and so from every text in Scripture there is a road to the metropolis of the Scriptures, that is Christ."—C. H. Spurgeon.

The Ideal State.—When men are all holy, then their surroundings may be all beautiful. There is no smiting heat, no chilling cold, no lack of food, no biting hunger, no raging thirst, no wearing pain, no blinding tears, no separating sea, no remorseless death, in heaven, because all who dwell there are established in goodness, and so there is no mission for disabilities to accomplish; their "occupation's gone." And just so far as we win goodness on earth we rise above all our disabilities, heaven is begun below; as with everything, so with love; "perfect love casteth out fear."—R. T.

13, 14. (13) sing, etc., "a joyful anticipation of the happy state of things under the Messiah, as set forth in the preceding verses."—Henderson. (14) Here begins a new section extending to ch. l. 3, which may be entitled, "Consolation of Zion and her Children." said, in the time of her doubting and fear. "The great body of the Jews were made despondent by their long adversity."^b

The Divine Unreasonableness of Doubt.—Knowing what he is, and what he is purposing and doing, man's doubt must always seem unreasonable to God; and his one response to every doubter is, "Cannot you trust me?" It is the love of God, the unchangeable love of God, which puts our best-grounded doubts and fears to shame. Exactly this is pressed on the attention of despondent Israel by God's comparing himself to a mother whose child is daily feeding on her own life. Such mothers have a most sacrificing, passionate love for their children, and no intenser simile could have been found. "Thou art more than mother dear;" then how can we doubt? Why not rest in the love, and be at peace?—R. Tuck.

15. woman, etc., comp. Ps. ciii. 13; Mat. vii. 11. "A woman cannot but have compassion on a child, as both harmless and helpless. A mother, esp. cannot but be concerned for her own child. A nursing mother, most of all, cannot but be tender to her sucking child; her own breast will soon put her in mind of it if she forget it."—Mat. Henry. yea, they may, or "should even these forget," etc.—Pol. Bib.

God's Love Greater Than a Mother's (vs. 15).—I. A mother's love for her child is but a fraction derived from God's love for man. II. The strongest affection of a mother is subject to mutations. 1. The conduct of the mother may cool, or even quench this spark within her; 2. The conduct of the child may even cool or quench this spark within her. III. The object of the mother's love is not so near to her as the object of the Divine affection. 1. The mother is not the owner of the child; 2. The mother is not the life of the child. IV. The failure of the mother's affection towards her offspring would not be so terrible as the failure of God's affection towards the good.—Thomas.

Maternal Courage.—As we passed through the streets of Nazareth, loud screams, as of a person frantic with rage and grief, drew our attention towards a miserable hovel, whence we perceived a woman issuing hastily with a cradle containing an infant. Having placed the child upon the area before her dwelling, she as quickly ran back again; we then perceived her beating something violently, all the while filling the air with the most piercing shrieks. Running to see what was the cause of her cries, we observed an enormous serpent, which she had found near her infant, and had completely despatched before our arrival. Never were maternal feelings more strikingly portrayed than in the countenance of this woman. Not satisfied with having killed the animal, she continued her blows until she had reduced it to atoms, unheeding anything that was said to her, and only abstracting her attention from its mangled body, to cast, occasionally, a wild and momentary glance towards her child.—E. D. Clark.

"The creature is dead, but he don't know it," said an Irishman, as he looked at the moving legs of a turtle whose head he had cut off a few hours before. "The flesh is dead in me," says the modern opponent of Paul; but the lively motions of the flesh that are often seen by the onlooker makes him doubt if the flesh knows it. The remedy in all things for a believer is, to know Christ. — D. W. Whittle.

b Is. xl. 27.

"No language could more pathetically and tenderly describe the feelings of the Jewish Church, or the love of God towards her, than that here employed." — Henderson.

"Memory like a purse, if it be over-full that it cannot shut, all will drop out of it; take heed of a gluttonous curiosity to feed on many things, lest the greediness of the appetite of thy memory spoil the digestion thereof." — Fuller.

"There is in all this cold and hollow world, no fount of deep, strong deathless love save that within a mother's heart." — Mrs. Hemans.

There is free love in God for me. This free love flows out and down to me in consequence of another's work and worth. To believe this is salvation!

a Is. ix. 10, 18.

"Trust in yourself, and you are doomed to disappointment; trust in your friends and they will die and leave you; trust in money and you have it taken from you; trust in reputation and some slanderous tongue may blast it; but trust in God and you are never to be confounded in time or eternity."—D. L. Moody.

"Moment by moment I'm kept in his love; Moment by moment I've life from above; Looking to Jesus till glory doth shine, Moment by moment, O Lord, I am thine."—D. W. Whittle.

b "They should be to her as an ornament, a gold or silver head-dress; for she is now again a joyous bride. Ever since her betrothal, when she violated her vows of betrothal, the Israelite Church had put off her joyous 'ornament.'"—Spk. Com.

c "This prophecy was literally fulfilled in the immense population of Judea, between the return from captivity and the time of our Lord."—Henderson.

"The Holy Spirit must have the right atmosphere to work in. You must have air to convey sound, and you must have the Spirit in order to carry home the truth to men's hearts."—D. L. Moody.

16, 17 (16) graven thee, i. e. a picture, or plan, of thee (De. vi. 8). upon the palms, i. e. "as close to Him as He is to Himself, and facing Him unforgotten, a part of Himself amid all the emotions of His divine life."—Delitzsch. before me, in My sight and memory. (17) Thy children, many versions read, "thy builders." make haste, hurrying homewards, at tidings of thy restoration. destroyers, internal enemies. These, as anxiously, hurry away.^a Graven Upon the Palms.—This is an allusion to the Eastern custom of tracing out on their hands, not the names, but the sketches of certain eminent cities or places, and then rubbing them with the powder of the hennah or cypress, and thereby making the marks perpetual. This custom Maundrell thus describes: "The next morning nothing extraordinary passed, which gave many of the pilgrims leisure to have their arms marked with the usual ensigns of Jerusalem. The artists who undertake the operation do it in this manner: they have stamps in wood of any figure that you desire, which they first print off upon your arm, with powder or charcoal; then taking two very fine needles tied close together, and dipping them often, like a pen, in certain ink, compounded, as I was informed, of gunpowder and ox gall, they make with them small punctures all along the lines of the figure which they have printed, and then washing the part in wine, conclude the work. These punctures they make with great quickness and dexterity, and with scarce any smart, seldom piercing so deep as to draw blood.—Burder.—Graven on the Hands.—Faithful Jews who were about to take a distant journey employed an artist to grave or paint a picture of Jerusalem upon the palms of their hands; so that when they were far away from the beloved city of the sanctuary they had but to open their hand and behold its memorial before them. In like manner, our Lord has gone into a "land of far distances." But he too has carried inside the veil the memorial of his beloved church. Those pierced hands remind him of his cross and passion and of the victory he has achieved over sin. And they are busy hands; every day and hour they are recording as with the graving of a diamond in the register of God the names of some new souls born into the kingdom of heaven.—George C. Needham.

18, 19. (18) Lift, etc., the eyes that have been cast down, that she may see her children gathering in from all lands. Comp. ch. lx. 4. come to thee, lit. for thee; to be thy own.^b clothe, etc., Lowth says, "describing the bride as binding children round her," but the point of comparison between type and antitype is not children, but decoration. bind, "as an embroidered sash wh. fastens the bridal attire." (19) R. V., "For as for thy waste and thy desolate places and thy land that hath been destroyed surely now shalt thou be too strait for the inhabitants."^c swallowed, etc., Zion's foreign conquerors shall leave her to her own children.

Christ Hidden Away in the Church.—Not long ago, a researcher of art in Italy, who reading in some book that there was a portrait of Dante painted by Giotto, was led to suspect that he had found where it had been placed. There was an apartment used as an outhouse for the storage of wood, hay, and the like. He besought and obtained permission to examine it. Clearing out the rubbish, and experimenting upon the white-washed wall, he soon detected the signs of the long-hidden portrait. Little by little, with loving skill, he opened up the sad, thoughtful, stern face of the old Tuscan poet. Sometimes it seems to me that thus the very sanctuary of God has been filled with wood, hay, and stubble, and the Divine lineaments of Christ have been swept over and covered by the painting hands of men; and I am seized with an invincible ardor to draw forth from its hiding place, and reveal to men, the glory of God as it shines in the face of Christ Jesus! It matters little to me what school of theology rises or what falls, so only that Christ may rise and appear in all His Father's glory, full-orbed, upon the darkness of this world! It matters little to me what Church comes forth strong, or what becomes weak, so only that the poor, the sinful, the neglected, the lost among men, may have presented to them, in the Church, a Saviour accessible, reached easily by the human understanding, and available in every hour of temptation, or of remorse, or of want.—H. W. Beecher.

20, 21. (20) children .. other, R. V., "The children of thy bereavement shall yet say in thine ears," etc., i. e. the children born while in exile. give place, so that I may extend my borders. Reference may be to the extension of the Church among the Gentiles. (21) Who, etc., she had supposed herself childless, and now utters her surprise to find her people so numerous. a captive, R. V., "an exile."

22, 23. The first of the three short oracles describes the restoration of the exiles as a spontaneous act of homage on the part of the Gentiles. The conception is intermediate between that of ch. xlv. 14 ff., where the nations acknowledge the divinity of Jehovah and the religious supremacy of Israel, and that of ch. lx. 4, 8, lxvi. 20; cf. ch. xi. 11, 12. For Gentiles read "nations."—Camb. Bib. (22) people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. all nations and races. This world-wide outlook of Isaiah is generally obscured by A. V. arms, lit. bosom, the part of the garment which opens at the bosom, in which young children are carried. daughters .. shoulders, so children are borne when able to sit up. (23) kings, etc., figures of the zeal, liberality, and kind helpfulness afforded to the Jews on the return to their own land. lick .. dust, falling prostrate and kissing the ground on which the Church stood or walked.

A Missionary King.—When Messrs. Tyerman and Bennett, in their visit to the southern islands, held a large missionary meeting previously to their departure for the Marquesas Islands, at which several persons offered to accompany them as missionaries, to introduce the Gospel where it was at present unknown; after some offers of this kind had been accepted, Hautia, the regent of the island, who was virtually king, and held valuable hereditary possessions upon it, and received large contributions to support his royal state, both from chiefs and people, rose: his noble countenance betrayed much agitation of spirit, and he hesitated for awhile to unburden his mind in words. At length with an air of meekness and humility, which gave inexpressible grace to the dignity of the highborn highland chief, he said, "I have a little speech, because a thought has grown up in my heart, and it has grown up also in the heart of Hautia Vahine (his wife). But perhaps it is not a good thought; yet I must speak it; and this is our thought: if the missionaries, and the deputation, and the church of Huahine, think that I and my wife would be fit companions for Auna and his wife, to teach the good word of God to those idolatrous people, who are as we were, and cause them to become as we are here, and in Tahiti, and Eimeo, and Raiatea, and Borabora, we should be rejoiced to go; but perhaps we are not worthy, and others may be better suited for the blessed work; yet we should love to go." This declaration produced a most extraordinary sensation throughout the whole assembly, as the speaker had given good evidence of his true Christianity. When, however, it was represented to him that his usefulness where he was in the church, as the superintendent of the schools, and in the exertion of his influence among his subjects, was far more extensive than that of any other person could be; and that, though it was well that this thought was in his heart, yet he could not on these accounts be sent, he was deeply affected, and replied, "Since you say so, perhaps it is the Lord's will that we should not go to the Marquesas, but stay in Huahine; perhaps we may serve Him better here. Be it so; and yet I wish that it had fallen to me and my wife to go." Patient Waiting for God's Work in Ourselves.—I believe that if we could only see beforehand what it is that our heavenly Father means us to be,—the soul beauty and perfection and glory, the glorious and lovely spiritual body that this soul is to dwell in through all eternity,—if we could have a glimpse of this, we should not grudge all the trouble and pains He is taking with us now, to bring us up to that ideal, which is His thought of us. We know that it is God's way to work slowly, so we must not be surprised if he takes a great many years of discipline to turn a mortal being into an immortal, glorious angel.—Annie Keary.

24—26. (24) prey .. mighty, Zion, who still dreads the Babylonian power (xlix. 12, 13) asks an incredulous question. The answer is in the affirmative, verse 25, Babylon shall be made to disgorge its prey."—Pol. Bib. (25) I will contend, in turn bringing Divine judgments on them. (26) feed .. flesh, phrase for internal strifes. sweet wine, must. The pure juice which flows from a heap of grapes before they are pressed.

* "The general conception, so clearly and affectingly presented, is of a childless mother finding herself suddenly surrounded by the clamor of a multitude of children, and asking in amazement whence they came, and who they are."—J. A. Alexander.

Dr. Judson, the devoted missionary to Burmah, during his visit to Boston, was asked, "Do you think the prospect bright of the speedy conversion of the heathen?" "As bright," he replied, "as the promises of God."

* "Among the South Sea Islanders, it is a mark of honor for females to be borne astride on men's shoulders."—Henderson.

"When your garments are white," says Jesus, "the world will count you mine."—John Bunyan.

Ps. lxxii. 11; Is. lx. 16.

"God hath provided a sweet and quiet life for his children, could they improve and use it; a calm and firm conviction in all the storms and troubles that are about them, however things go, to find content, and be careful for nothing."—R. Leighton.

"Trials must and will befall; But with humble faith to see Love inscribed upon them all. This is happiness to me."

—W. Cowper.

* "As the antagonistic factions in Jerusalem, during the Roman siege."—Spk. Com.

"Before the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, Evil-Merodach had been murdered by Neriglissor; Laborsarchod-us, the son and successor of the latter, was likewise put to death." — Henderson.

Diocletian, the last and the worst of the Roman persecuting emperors, observed, that the more he sought to blot out the name of Christ, the more legible it became; and that whatever of Christ he thought to eradicate, it took the deeper root, and rose the higher in the hearts and lives of men.

^a Comp. Je. iii. 8; Matt. v. 31.

"Zion complains that her children are lost, and she is divorced. God answers: Can a writing of divorcement be shown against Me as in a man's case, to prove a formal divorce? Or, have I creditors, to whom, as a human debtor, I sell My children? Zion is abandoned, and her children lost to her, but for a time, because of her sins, and while her sins last." — Mat. Arnold.

^b Some refer this to the Prophets, others to Messiah. But the first reference is plainly to the Divine intervention for the deliverance of captive Israel.

^c "Shortness of hand or arm is a common Oriental figure for defect of power, esp. in reference to some particular effect, which is thus represented as beyond the reach." — J. A. Alexander.

The Resources of the Adversary and the Means of Their Destruction (vss. 24, 25).—I. The defences and resources of the enemy: 1. Idolatry; 2. Imposture; 3. Papal superstition; 4. Despotic government; 5. Crime; 6. An easy-going religion; 7. Corrupting the purity of revivals of religion. II. The means of their destruction. 1. The judgments of heaven; 2. The universal propagation of the Gospel; 3. General revivals of religion. Apply:—(1) There must be more faith in God; (2) A more intense love for Christ and His Church; (3) More courage; (4) More zeal; (5) Religious education; (6) More of charitable effort; (7) To guard against the dangers of religious prosperity.—Lyman Beecher.

One Saviour for Prince and Peasant.—His Royal Highness, the Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria, during his illness, asked his physician if he was accustomed to pray. "Please your Royal Highness, I hope I say my prayers; but shall I bring a prayer book?" "No," was the reply, "what I mean is, if you are accustomed to pray for yourself, you could pray for me in my present situation." The doctor then asked if he should call the duchess. "Do," said the prince. The duchess came and offered up a most affectionate prayer on behalf of her beloved husband. On another occasion, when the duke expressed some concern about the state of his soul in the prospect of death, his physician endeavored to soothe his mind by referring to his high respectability and his honorable conduct in the distinguished situation in which Providence had placed him, when he stopped him short, saying, "No; remember, if I am to be saved, it is not as a prince, but as a sinner." When his Royal Highness felt that he was approaching the termination of his earthly career, he desired the infant princess to be placed before him while he sat up in bed. In this position he offered a most affecting prayer over her, the last part of which was to this effect, if not in this very language, that "if ever this child should be Queen of England, she might rule in the fear of God." Having uttered these words, he said, "Take the child away," and this was the last time he ever beheld her.

CHAPTER THE FIFTIETH.

This oracle, vss. 1—3, answers the fear that the covenant relation has been severed forever. 1. bill . . . divorcement, De. xxiv. 1, 2. "Zion is the mother, the Jews are the children, and God is the Husband and Father." whom, R. V., "wherewith I have put her away," i. e. there is none. I have not put her away. creditors, this question is asked on the assumption that God had sold His people into captivity for His own advantage. sold yourselves, comp. Le. xxv. 39, 47. R. V., "were ye sold." Comp. Judges ii. 14, etc.

The Falling Away of Christian Professors—The Brittle Branch.—In the summer of 1870 a young man, who lay under the shadow of one of the elm trees in the forest of Windsor, was killed by the falling down upon him of one of the largest branches. There was no storm of wind at the time; on the contrary, the air was calm and motionless, and not a leaf in the forest stirred; the branch was not old and rotten; on the contrary, it was fresh, full of sap, and covered with rich green foliage. This strange thing not unfrequently happens to the elm during the long continuance of dry and sultry weather, which has the effect of making its wood brittle, so that the branches part easily from the tree, and fall down by their own weight. How many professing Christians are made fickle and unsteadfast during a period of trial, so that they lose their hold of the Church, and fall away from it at once, while apparently green and flourishing!—Macmillan.

2, 3. (2) I came, God by His word and providence, prepared to deliver and redeem.^b no man, ready to believe My message and promise. A strong way of indicating the general unbelief. hand shortened, common Arabic phrase for powerlessness.^c Then follow passages to emphasize the power of God. dry . . . wilderness, recalling scenes of Ex. xiv. 21; Jos. iii. 16. (3) blackness, recalling the plague of darkness in Egypt, and indicating God's power over the elements.

Note on vs. 2.—The Krooman (or Koorooman) river, in Africa, which is a considerable stream, used to run in an oblique direction across the great southern Zahara desert, till it emptied itself into the Great Orange River. Now it sinks out of sight into the sand almost immediately on entering the desert, only a few miles after the junction of the Mack-lareen river with its waters. As a proof that it had once run in the desert, I traveled ten or fifteen miles on its hard dry channel along which it had run after entering the desert, having a steep bank on both sides, beyond which there was nothing but deep sand. The aged natives told me that in their young days there was a considerable river in that channel, and sometimes rose so high that it could not be crossed for a long time. They first blamed the Matslaroo people for drying it up by means of witchcraft, but afterwards acknowledged it must have been done by the hand of God.—Campbell.

4. In vss. 4, 5, "the servant unfolds the most beautiful and true understanding of the secret of prophecy that ever was unfolded in literature."—G. A. Smith. given me, in the singular way peculiar to Isaiah; references to the Prophet himself, to the servant of Jehovah, and to the Messiah, are closely blended. In this vs. the reference is evidently to Messiah. learned, or fully instructed. word in season,^a R. V., "to sustain with words him," etc. weary,^b or dispersed ones. morning by morning, i. e. it was a daily experience. Every day he received this instruction, indicating touch with each day's life, duties and messages. wakeneth mine ear,^c "the prophet learns his speech, as the little child does, by listening. Grace is poured upon the lips through the open ear."—G. A. Smith. learned, or learners.

A Word in Season to the Weary.—I. The state and character of them that are weary. 1. Those who have spent their time in fruitless searches after human knowledge; 2. Those who are oppressed with the load of sin and guilt; 3. Those who are under the weight of affliction; 4. Those who have labored in fruitless endeavors to overcome their corruptions; 5. Those who have vainly sought to work out salvation by their own righteousness; 6. Those deeply involved in the cares of this world; 7. Those who are tired of living in this world. II. The character and person of the Lord Jesus Christ constitute Him a seasonable and all-sufficient Saviour to all those who are weary. Apply the former heads in succession.—J. Matheson.

5, 6. (5) opened mine ear,^a comp. 1 Sam. ix. 15. ch. xlviii. 8. not rebellious, contrasted with Israel's rebelliousness. (6) spitting, "an expression of contemptuous abhorrence."^b "These are not national sufferings. They are no reflection of the hard usage which the captive Israel suffered from Babylon. They are the reflection of the reproach and pains, which, for the sake of God's word, individual Israelites more than once experienced from their own nation."—G. A. Smith.

Messiah's Sufferings and Supports (vss. 5-9).—I. His sufferings. 1. They were great and various; 2. He willingly undertook to sustain them all. II. His supports. 1. Effectual succor; 2. A triumphant issue. Contemplate this holy Sufferer—(1) As the predicted Saviour of the world; (2) As the great Pattern of all holy obedience.—C. Simeon.

Scourging.—The severity and barbarity of a Roman scourging has been brought out by Dr. C. Geikie, who says, "Jesus was now seized by some of the soldiers standing near, and, after being stripped to the waist, was bound in a stooping posture, his hands behind his back to a post, or low pillar, near the tribunal. He was then beaten till the soldiers chose to stop, with knots of rope or plaited leather thongs, armed at the ends with acorn-shaped drops of lead, or small sharp-pointed bones. In many cases, not only was the back of the person scourged cut open in all directions; even the eyes, the face, and the breast were torn and cut, and the teeth not seldom knocked out. The judge stood by, to stimulate the sinewy executioners by cries of 'Give it him!' but we may trust that Pilate, though his office required his presence, spared himself this crime. Under the fury of the countless stripes, the victims sometimes sank, amidst screams, convulsive leaps, and distortions, into a senseless heap; sometimes died on the spot; sometimes were taken away, an unrecognizable mass of bleeding flesh, to find deliverance in death, from the inflammation and fever, sickness and shame." Few New Testament readers duly appreciate the sufferings which Messiah endured in the judgment-hall.

"Humble love, and not proud science, keeps the door of heaven." — Young.

^a Pr. xv. 23, xxv. 11.

^b Mat. xi. 28.

^c "The Father did not speak in dreams or visions to the well-beloved Son; but continually every morning He spake in His opened ear, and declared what He was to say; and thus the Messiah was the wisdom of God speaking unto men face to face." — Wordsworth.

"God oftentimes delays that His people may come to Him with greater strength and importunity. He puts them off, that they may put on with more life and vigor. God seems to be cold, that He may make us the more hot; He seems to be slack, that He may make us the more earnest; He seems to be backward, that He may make us the more forward upon Him." — Thomas Brooks, 1650.

^a Ps. xl. 6.

^b Job xxx. 10.

Spitting in the Face.—"This instance of contempt and reproach offered to Christ was at the same time an expression of malice and a compliance with custom. The practice has descended to later generations; for in the year 1744, when a rebel prisoner was brought before Nadir Shah's general, the soldiers were ordered to spit in his face, an indignity of great antiquity in the East." — Hanway's Travels.

c "Set Myself resolutely, not to be daunted from My work of love by shame or suffering." —Fausset. Eze. iii. 8, 9.

d "The charge was, that, in claiming to be the Son of God, He had committed blasphemy. The resurrection justified Him (Ro. i. 4)." —Spk. Com.

1 Pe. ii. 21—23.

"Watch for His way. When He ties your hands be still; when He puts tools into your hands, use them for His honor."

John Ashworth, in his "Strange Tales," dwells on the satisfying fullness of the short and simple prayer, "Lord, help me!" It will fit in everywhere. It sums up all our need. It appropriately meets us whatever our circumstances.

a Ps. xli. 1, lxii. 8, cxviii. 8, 9; Mt. vii. 8; Ha. iii. 17, 18.

b Heb. Zikoth, fiery darts.

c "This is said to the Jews, who receive with incredulity, anger, and, persecution God's message and messenger. God warns these Jews that their anger and violence shall be turned against themselves, and they shall 'He down in sorrow.'" —Mat. Arnold.

"Every consecration made in the darkness is reaching out toward the light, and in the end must come out into the light, strong in the strength which

The cross so fills their vision that they fail to see how much he endured before the cross and its final strain and agony were reached.

7—9. (7) will help me, "God will bring him through and vindicate him in the eyes of the world." like a flint, a fig. for holy endurance and set purpose. (8) justifieth me,^a i. e. declares that I am right. adversary, Heb. master of my cause, who has sufficient ground of accusation against me. (9) wax . . . garment, his adversaries shall vainly attempt to condemn him, and shall become, as it were, old and moth-eaten ere they succeed. Two striking parallels to the latter part of this discourse occur in the Book of Jeremiah. See ch. xvii. 17 f.; "Thou art my refuge in the day of evil. Let them be ashamed that persecute me, but let not me be ashamed . . . bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction"; and xx. 7, 11 ff.: "I am become a laughingstock all the day, every one mocketh me . . ." "But the Lord is with me as a mighty one and a terrible; therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail; they shall be greatly ashamed," etc. Cf. also Ps. xxii. 6—21.—Camb. Bib.

He is Near (vs. 8).—I. This is the assurance of Christ. II. The experience of the saints in the time of adversity. III. The conclusion of faith. 1. From His relationship; 2. From His promises. IV. And should be the song of His people.—Stems and Twigs.

Man's Arraignment Idle.—Man's arraignment of his fellow-men can have no effect at all excepting in this world. He may bring them before tribunals, obtain their condemnation, their execution, their temporal disgrace. He may gibbet them in history, misrepresent, malign, blacken their names and their reputations. But over their real selves he is powerless. God justifies them, pardons them, receives them into his kingdom, looks on them with favor, reckons them among his saints, gives them the blessing of eternal communion with him in heaven. What matters it to them that somewhere, in a paltry planet, ignorant and ephemeral mortals speak evil of them and brand their memories? "It is God that justifieth." One justifying word from him may well outweigh any amount of human dispraise, of human contumely. Their end in this world may have been "without honor;" but their entrance into the next is with words at once of promise and of high honor, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Pul Com.

10, 11. "A double message of encouragement and warning based on the preceding soliloquy of the Servant. It seems evident that the Servant here is regarded as the nucleus of the godly party who are addressed in vs. 10; in other words, as a personification of the true Israel which is in process of being separated from the unbelieving part of the nation. These last are addressed in vs. 11 as opponents and persecutors of the faithful Israelites."—Camb. Bib. (10) Who, God here speaks. Whosoever. that walketh, R. V., "he that walketh in darkness, and hath no light, let him trust," etc., even under such circumstances. trust . . . God,^a gaining confidence by the multiplied experiences of His faithfulness. (11) kindle a fire, fig. for methods of trying to relieve and help themselves, so as not to depend on God. Compass, etc., R. V., "that gird yourselves about with fire brands," i. e. with schemes against the true servants of Jehovah. sparks,^b or torches. in sorrow,^c ch. xliii. 17, lxvi. 24.

Encouragement Only to the Devoted and Obedient (vs. 10).—I. It might be applied to a case like that of Joseph while lying under the reproach of a crime which he never committed, and which he abhorred. II. The situation of David during the lifetime of Saul was such as would have justified the application of the text. III. The case of the Church at the present day when looking at the moral condition of the world in connection with the prophecies.—W. C. Walton.

Verse 11.—How strongly contrasted this with the Divine principle of recompense, according to which every forward step which a man makes in conformity to God's Image, and obedience to God's commands, is attended by an increase of joy and peace—an increase sometimes very sensibly felt at the close of a Christian's career, when, as his tempest-tossed bark nears that haven of rest where he would be, a mighty spiritual refreshing breathes in upon his heart, like perfumed gales from the shore of a land of spices. His bliss is not merely an abiding, but also an increasing bliss. It not only endures, but also enlarges itself with the dawn of eternity.—Goulburn.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-FIRST.

1-3. A second series of exhortations in face of "Doubters in the Way of Return." Now they doubt their own ability. (1) follow . . righteousness, the address is now directed to the faithful few of Israel: those really desiring to be conformed to the will of God.^a seek the Lord, Ps. xxiv. 6. rock . . pit, fig. for their origin in Abraham and Sarah.^b (2) him alone, R. V., "for when he was but one I called him," etc.^c Their present state is unpromising, but let them look back upon the more unpromising nature of their origin. (3) comfort Zion, etc., i. e. rest assured that He who abundantly blessed Abraham will abundantly bless Abraham's seed.^d Retrospection (vs. 1).—I. The persons addressed. 1. They that follow after righteousness in state and in character; 2. They that seek the Lord by prayer. II. The duty enjoined. 1. The thing to be done—mental survey, etc.; 2. The ends to be served by it—deepen humility, inflame love, stimulate obedience, etc.—G. Brooks.

The Rock and the Pit.—Dean Stanley, preaching in aid of the Palestine Exploration Fund, chose his text from Isaiah li. 1. He mentioned three results of the work done in Jerusalem which he thought might reasonably be hoped for the present undertaking:—I. A monument of the Old Testament of peculiar and special interest, the catacomb containing the tombs of David and the kings of Judah, the prototype of all the royal tombs of the modern world. It alone, of all tombs, was permitted to be within the walls of the city. In it, around the central cell of the founder, were grouped nearly all the kings of his line,—his wise son Solomon, his great successors Asa and Jehosaphat, with the high priest Jehoiada, the one personage of humbler rank who had been allowed a place there. Apart from anything that might be found in the tombs, its discovery would be of immense value as fixing the position of the "city of David." The last time it was seen was when Herod the Great broke into it in search of treasure; but there could be no reasonable doubt that it was still buried beneath the rubbish, and still recoverable. 2. Another monument was the "holy sepulchre." The church in which this was shown had been the centre of pilgrimage and crusade for many a century, but latterly the feeling had very much cooled towards it. Many considerations tended to throw doubt on the present position, and the question ought to be cleared up, which it could only be by excavation of the course of the walls. 3. There were the natural features of the old Jerusalem; and here the Dean spoke of the discovery which had been already made by the Palestine Exploration Fund, by which the enormous depth of those sacred walls had been for the first time revealed, and the accuracy of Josephus substantiated, and a new force given to the narrative of the temptation of Christ.

4, 5. "The universal extension of the true religion is the second ground of comfort which the prophet is commissioned to offer to his fellow believers. The language of vs. 4, 5 is obviously molded on that of ch. xlii. 1-4; the functions there assigned to the Servant of the Lord are here assumed by Jehovah Himself. At the same time the thought is implied that the restored Israel is to be the bearer of salvation to the world at large, and thus the further idea is suggested that the ideal represented by the Servant will be realized by the people of Israel when it emerges purified from the discipline of the Captivity."—Camb. Bib. (4) my people, i. e. the Jews.^a law . . judgment, the Gospel dispensation and institutions.—Fausset. Law, as Divine revelation unfolding man's duty. rest, settle, establish. light, moral guidance. people, R. V., "peoples"—i. e. again a reference to all nations. (so in next verse.) (5) righteousness, or faithful fulfilment of promises. near, and therefore ready to be revealed. arms, common fig. of the actual arm or hand of God swaying human affairs. the isles,^b "the far countries as xlii. 4.

The Absolute in Human History (vs. 4).—Rectitude and salvation are it won in its life and struggle in the dark."

^a "How are the people of God to be described? They are such as 'follow after righteousness,' such as are very desirous and solicitous both to be justified and to be sanctified; are pressing hard after this, to have the favor of God restored to them, and the image of God renewed on them."—Mat. Henry.

^b "Whence were these living stones quarried, of wh. the house of Israel is built?" — Spk. Com.

^c Zion is the cor-relative of Sarah, the mother of us all.

We associate with the garden the thought of tranquillity and peace. The Church should be the home of peace and joy. To it we should be glad to retire from the bustle and strife of life; in its fold we should find the purest and the sweetest satisfaction which earth can yield. There have been Churches which might justly be called the arena of conflict or the wilderness of neglect. The ideal Church—that at which we should aim, and for which we should strive and sacrifice—is one that might be appropriately designated, 'The garden of the Lord.'"

—Clarkson.

^a "O peoples, . . nations, i. e. the Gentiles." — Genesius.

Is. xlii. 1-4, 6.

^b Is. xlii. 4, 10, xlix. 1, lx. 9.

"If any one would tell you the shortest, surest way to all happiness and all perfection, he must tell you to make it a rule to yourself to thank and praise God for everything that happens to you. For it is certain that whatever seeming calamity happens to you, if you thank and praise God for it, you turn it into a blessing." —Wm. Law.

c Ps. cii. 26;
Mat. xxiv 35; 2
Pe. iii. 10, 12.

"Those whose happiness is bound up in Christ's righteousness will have the comfort of it when time and days shall be no more." — Mat. Henry.

"As those birds that fly highest in the firmament are not so quickly snared by the fowlers' gins; so those men that have always an eye through faith unto Jesus Christ, are not so soon snared by the flesh, the world, and the devil, as others."

Is. 1. 9, li. 6.

"Where life is more terrible than death, it is then the truest valor to dare to live." — Sir Thomas Browne.

"He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion." —Shakespeare.

"The name of Jesus is not only light, but also food; it is likewise oil, without which all the food of the soul is dry; it is salt, unseasoned by which whatever the elements of God's revelation, and they are the absolute in human history. I. They are for all lands. II. They are for all times. Words suggest—1. That man is related to two distinct systems of things—material and spiritual; 2. That one of the systems to which man is related is transient, the other is permanent; 3. That the permanent should command man's chief concern. The great lesson is to beware of practical materialism.—Thomas.

Trust.—If we can put our trust in God when we are in total darkness, when may we not trust Him? Sometimes we are called upon to trust in God when he seems to go right back against all His promises. That is trusting Him in the darkness. Weak faith will judge God's promises by one's feelings, by one's evidences, when we ought to judge the feelings and the evidences by the promises. As long as I have the promises, God give me grace to trust Him, whatever befall, and bid my soul keep still, knowing that he will never fail.—Marcus Painsford.

6. heavens. . . smoke," the ancient conception of the heavens was of a solid arch. For it to perish would be the end of all things, so contrasting the perishable nature of all earthly things with the durability of the Gospel blessings. in like manner, lit. like a gnat. my salvation, the true religion is not only universal, it is eternal.

God's Everlasting Salvation (vs. 6).—I. God's salvation is independent of, and will outlive, everything human. II. It will outlive the material earth. III. Over the whole earth broods the mighty law of change.—D. Johnson.

The Short-lived Glory of Earthly Things.—Mark the glory of collective man. United he puts on the appearance of strength. He founds empires, builds cities; he guards by his armies, he cements all by his policy. But trace the track of civilized man through the world, and you find it covered with the wreck of his hopes; and the monuments of his power have been converted into the mockery of his weakness. His eternal cities moulder in their ruins. The serpent hisses in the cabinet where he planned his empire. Echo itself is startled by the foot which breaks the silence which has reigned for ages in his hall of feast and song. Columns stand in the untrodden desert; and the hut of the shepherd or the den of the robber shelters the only residents of his palaces. And the glory which now exists is crumbling everywhere, where it has not the cement of Christianity, and where it takes not something of perpetuity from the everlasting Word. All heathen glory and Mahomedan pride creak in the blast and nod to their fall. The withering wind or the raging tempest shall pass over them in turn; and men shall sit upon the ruins of their proudest grandeur, and be reminded that all flesh is grass.—Watson.—Mutability.—In vain the laborious master painted for eternity; in vain the skilful statuary inscribed his name, or inwrought his own image, with that of some divinity which he carved into stone; the colors of the picture are long since faded, the stone is moldered or dashed into pieces. In vain the Egyptian tyrants raised a monument to their power and greatness, which might last as long as earth; the pile indeed stands, but the name of the builder is forgotten; and as for all the rest of all the boasted wonders of the world, the very ruins of them are lost and forgotten. Nay, the sure and firm-set earth itself partakes of this character of mutability. The sun shines but for a season; the earth crumbles with the foot that treads upon it.

7, 8. "He exhorts them to do that in which the servant has been set forth as an example." Hearken, comp. vs. 1, 4. law, here and elsewhere means instruction. men, Heb. enosh, or frail men. revilings, taunts on the assumed failure of God's plans. (8) moth . . eat, "they shall be destroyed by as insignificant instrumentality as the moth that eats a garment." "The smallest exertion of strength is quite sufficient to annihilate their sham greatness."—Delitzsch.

Christian Courage.—There is a religion called the Christian, whose founder was Jesus, named the Christ. This religion, which has lasted eighteen centuries, and which calls itself the natural development of that Judaism which ascends near to the cradle of the world, had the Apostles for its first propagators. When these men wished to establish it they had for adversaries—the national pride of the Jews; the implacable hatred of the Sanhedrim; the brutal despotism of the Roman emperors;

the raileries and attacks of the philosophers; the libertinism and caste spirit of the Pagan priests; the savage and cruel ignorance of the masses; the fagot and bloody games of a circus. They had an enemy in—every miser; every debauched man; every drunkard; every thief; every murderer; every proud man; every slanderer; every liar. Not one of the vices, in fact, which abuse our poor humanity which did not constitute itself their adversary. To combat so many enemies, and surmount so many obstacles, they had only—their poverty; their obscurity; their weakness; their fewness; the cross. If you had been their contemporary at the moment when they began their work, and Peter had said to you, "Join with us, for we are going to the conquest of the world; before our word Pagan temples shall crumble, and their idols shall fall upon their faces; the philosophers shall be convinced of their folly; from the throne of Cæsar we shall hurl the Roman eagle, and in its place we shall plant the cross; we shall be the teachers of the world; the ignorant and the learned will declare themselves our disciples;" as you are tolerant from nature and principle, you would have defended him before the Sanhedrim, and counselled it to shut up the fisherman of Bethsaida and his companions in a madhouse. And yet, sir, what you would have thought a notable madness, is to-day a startling reality with which I leave you face to face.

9, 10. These verses are addressed to Jehovah by the community of the Israelites. (9) O Arm of the Lord, "the furthest point which Hebrew personification has reached. There are various expressions for the self-revealing aspect of Deity. (xl. 10; lxiii. 12) but only here is that personified aspect addressed."—Pol. Bib.^a ancient days, Ps. xlv. 1. Rahab is one of the names of the chief antagonists of Jehovah; (Job. ix. 13; xxvi. 12). The dragon was another. (Job. ii. 8, etc.).—Pol. Bib.^b (10) dried the sea, ch. i. 2.

The Intercession of Christ—Amintas and Æchylus.—"A rare illustration of the efficacious intercession of Christ in heaven we have in that famous story of Amintas, who appeared as an advocate for his brother Æchylus, who was strongly accused, and very likely to be condemned to die. Now Amintas having performed great services, and merited highly of the commonwealth, in whose service one of his hands was cut off in the field, he comes into the court, in his brother's behalf, and said nothing, but only lifted up his arm and showed them an arm without a hand, which so moved them that without speaking a word they freed his brother immediately. And thus if you look in Rev. v. 6, you shall see in what posture Christ is represented visionally there as standing between God and us: 'And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain;' that is, bearing in His glorified body the marks of death and sacrifice. Those wounds He received for our sins on earth are, as it were, still fresh bleeding in heaven; a moving and prevailing argument it is with the Father to give us the mercies He pleads for."—Flavel.

11. redeemed, etc., see ch. xxxv. 10.

"The Book of Consolation."—i. e. "The Bible is the great Book of Consolation for Humanity," wrote Ernest Renan, the French sceptic. It brings peace, because it leads to the source of peace—a Person, who, as a Hebrew prophet affirmed, will keep in perfect peace the man whose mind is stayed on Him. It is in the hour of need that the pious sufferer realizes the force of the words of "the Book of Consolation." Sir John Kaye, in his book, "The Sepoy War," narrates how a transforming power came into the hearts of English men and women from a few words of the Bible, while they were fleeing from the cruel mutineers. He writes: "A young English baronet, Sir Mounstuart Jackson, with Lieutenant Burnes, Mrs. Orr, Miss Jackson and some little children, were trying to escape from Seetapore, and went through sufferings almost unspeakable, as they struggled forward, mostly by night, ragged, tattered, ill and with matted hair. Their only comfort came from the word of God. They had no Bible among them, but one day some native medicines were brought to Mrs. Orr wrapped in a piece of printed paper, which proved to be part of a leaf of the book of Isaiah [Is. li. 11—14]; and the message which came to them through Mohammedan hands was this:—'They shall obtain is presented to us is insipid; it is honey in the mouth, melody in the ear, joy in the heart, medicine to the soul; and there are no charms in any discourse in which His name is not heard."—Bernard.

a "In the animated language of poetry, Jehovah is represented as addressing His own omnipotence, and calling for its renewed exercise, for the liberation of His people."—Henderson.

"The only prob. hypothesis is that which puts the words into the mouth of the people, or of the Prophet as their representative."—J. A. Alexander.

b "As God smote Egypt of old, and delivered His people, so He will deliver them now."—Mat. Arnold.

"There is no beautifier of complexion, or form, or behavior, like the wish to scatter joy and not pain around us."—R. W. Emerson.

"Lord, with what courage and delight I do each thing, When thy least breath sustains my wing. I shine and move Like those above, And, with much gladness Quitting sadness, Make me fair days of every night."—H. Vaughan.

Lightning and light may suitably illustrate the difference between the joy of the sinner and the saint. The one is like lightning.—short, hurried, transient, scorching; the other is like light,—lasting, healthful,

beautiful, and healing.

a "Prob. alluding to the custom of putting a prisoner into the five-holed wooden machine which held the body in a bent posture, the head as well as the hands being fixed in it. A more distressing posture cannot well be imagined." — Henderson.

"Love has power to give in a moment what toil can scarcely reach in an age." — Goethe.

"A religion of effortless adoration may be a religion for an angel, but never for a man. Not in the contemplative, but in the active, lies true hope; not in rapture, but in reality, lies true life; not in the realm of ideals, but among tangible things, is man's sanctification wrought." — Drummond.

a Is. lxx. 17.

"Will you follow Christ, and will you desire to be worthy of His leadership, by slinking away from suffering? Do not seek it; but if it comes, remember that no sorrow comes but with His knowledge. If He does not draw the golden bow that sends the silver arrow to your heart, He knows it is sent, and sees it fall." — H. W. Beecher.

b Ps. lx. 3.

"That giant of Jesus Christ who drew the Gospel chariot from Jerusalem to Rome, and had the care of all the Churches on his heart, gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away. I, even I, am he that comforteth you; who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass; and forgettest the Lord thy maker, . . . and hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy? and where is the fury of the oppressor? The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor that"—and here the bit of paper was torn off. But the words of love thus strangely and mysteriously brought to them, comforted them in the midst of their sorrow. The torn fragment of a text which came to them through heathen hands seemed like a promise of deliverance."

12—14. "Jehovah again speaks as the comforter of His people. That the passage is a direct answer to the importunate appeal of vss. 9. f., seems probable, although it cannot be confidently affirmed; it is at all events virtually an answer." (12) thou, fem., addressing Zion, be afraid, considering who thy protector is. a man, such as the king of Babylon. as grass, ch. xl. 6; 1 Pe. i. 24. (13) as if, etc., R. V., "when he maketh ready to destroy." (14) captive exile, or bending prisoner, hasteneth, is just on the point of being. pit, or cistern without water, converted into a dungeon. bread . . . fail, he shall not starve while he waits deliverance.

The Comparative Fear of God and Man (vs. 12).—I. As to the two parties, Scripture sets forth the nothingness of man and the glory of God. To celebrate this theme the Scriptures employ the grandest machinery, etc. II. In the common intercourse of the world man rather than God is the object of reverence, respect, and fear. III. Consider the question with which these words commence, "Who art thou?"—H. Woodward.

God's Care of His People.—I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me. What now? Let me look about me! They have left me the sun and moon, fire and water, a loving wife, and many friends to pity me, and some to relieve me; and I can still discourse; and unless I list, they have not taken away my merry countenance, and my cheerful spirits, and a good conscience; they have still left me the providence of God, and all the promises of the Gospel, and my religion, and my hopes of heaven, and my charity to them too. And still I sleep and digest, and eat and drink; I read and meditate; I can walk in my neighbor's pleasant fields, and see the varieties of natural beauties, and delight in that in which God delights—that is, in virtue, and wisdom, and in the whole creation, and in God Himself. The best is left.—Jer. Taylor.

15, 16. (15) divided the sea, Je. xxxi. 35. R. V., "which stirreth up the sea, that the waves thereof roar," referring to the power of Jehovah. (16) thy mouth, addressed to the restored Israel. plant, fig. from fixing up a tent. heavens, "the last verse of this reply is notable for the enormous extension which it gives to the purpose of Jehovah in endowing Israel as His prophet,—an extension to no less than the renewal of the universe."—G. A. Smith. "The verse throws an important light on the idea of the Servant of the Lord. Language which is elsewhere used of the Servant is here applied to Israel, to whom the verse is undoubtedly addressed. This would be a strong confirmation of the theory that the Servant is in some sense a personification of Israel."—Camb. Bib.

The Mediation of Christ (vs. 16).—I. The mission of Christ was reserved until the appointed time. II. It is through a Mediator that the Father has made known His mind and will to the children of men. III. Through the mediation of Christ the foundations of the earth were established. IV. And the heavens were planted. V. The mediation of Christ brings men into a new relation to God.—H. J. Bevis.

17, 18. Here begins a new section: "words of cheer to prostrate Zion," extending to lii. 12. (17) awake, vs. 9. O Jerusalem, seen by the Prophet in its terrible desolation. cup . . . fury, for thy sin. trembling, R. V., "Thou hast drunken the bowl of the cup of staggering and drained it." The prophet seeks to rouse the prostrate city by a picture of her condition. (18) none to guide, because all were overcome with the greatness of the calamity. None had hope.

God's anger must, of course, be understood in a manner in accordance with the Divine nature; and we are not to suppose that precisely the same passions or the same feelings are referred to when this language is used of God which is implied when it is used of men. It means that His nature, His laws, His government, His feelings, are all arrayed against the wicked; that He cannot regard the conduct of the wicked with favor; that He will punish them. He is angry with the wicked continually, constantly, always. It is not excitement, it is not a temporary passion, such as we see in men. It is not sudden emotion, soon to be succeeded by a different feeling when the passion passes off. It is the steady and uniform attribute of His unchanging nature to be always opposed to the wicked,—to all forms of sin; and in Him, in this respect, there will be no change. The wicked will find Him no more favorable to their character and course of life to-morrow than He is to-day; no more beyond the grave than this side of the tomb.—Barnes. The wrath of God is like great waters that are damned for the present; they increase more and more, and rise higher and higher, till an outlet is given; and the higher the stream is stopped, the more rapid and mighty is its course when once it is let loose. If God should only withdraw His hand from the floodgate, it would immediately fly open, and the fiery floods of the fierceness and wrath of God would rush forth with inconceivable fury, and would come upon you with omnipotent power; and if your strength were ten thousand times greater than it is, yea, ten thousand times greater than the strength of the stoutest, sturdiest devil in hell, it would be nothing to withstand or endure it.—Jonathan Edwards.

19, 20. (19) two things, "a double woe befell thee: who can fitly console with thee? Storming and destruction; famine and sword. Who can comfort thee."—Pol. Bib. (20) wild bull, R. V., "antelope,"^a Deut. xiv. 5.

Heart-sickness.—A brave crusader on the field of battle was always conspicuous in armor richly gilt. Amidst the sombre hues in which others were arrayed, amidst the cold blue light of gleaming steel, his harness shone golden like the sun. There was a gaiety in his very armor that seemed to speak of a light heart within. But when one day he fell, pierced with a Saracen dart, they undid the fastenings of his breast-plate, and to the amazement of his comrades found that the inner surface of his armor was studded with iron points that pierced the quivering flesh. The panoply which gaily flashed back the sunbeams, was all the while an instrument of self-inflicted torture to its wearer. There are more men who wear such armor than we wot of. There are many who wear a gay countenance, but feel within the bitterness of death. For the appetite for sin has palled. The heart has grown weary and sick of sin, thinking of lost purity, and broken promises, and departed self-respect; the very life becomes a burden, and yet they dare not die. "They weary themselves to commit sin."—Cheney.

21—23. (21) afflicted, etc., ch. xxix. 9, dizzy and staggering. (22) taken . . . trembling, fig. for removing the Divine punishment. (23) But . . . thee, ch. xlix. 26.^a laid . . . ground, conquerors often actually trod on the necks of conquered kings.

Note on vs. 23.—The Doseh.—This passage refers to the ancient practice of setting the foot upon the necks of captives and trampling them under feet, an act by which conquerors signalized triumph over their enemies. A custom which would appear to be a relic of this practice exists amongst the Durweeshes of Cairo, and is celebrated at certain periods as a religious ceremony, called the Doseh, or treading.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-SECOND.

"In a second strophe (vss. 1—6) he addresses her in conscious contrast to his taunt-song against Babel. Babel was to sit throneless and stripped of her splendor in the dust; but Zion is to shake off the dust, rise, sit on her throne and assume her majesty. For God hath redeemed His people. He could not tolerate longer 'the exulting of their tyrants, the blasphemy of His name.'"—G. A. Smith. 1. awake, ch. li. 9, 17, thy strength, ch. xlv. 24. Arouse thee from thy depression, and put on thy confidence in God. Take courage. beautiful garments, holiday attire, as for a day of victory and joy. holy city, ch. xlvi. 2. uncircumcised, etc.,^b "not foreigners generally, but the destroyers and wasters who at present desecrate Zion."—Camb. Bib.

never complained of being tired. The secret was that he never chafed his powers with a moment's worry. He was doing God's work, and he left God to be responsible for the results. He knew whom he believed, and felt perfectly sure that all things worked together for good to them that loved the Lord Jesus."—Cuyler.

"The first presence of sorrow crushes out from our hearts the best wine; afterwards the constant weight of it brings forth bitterness,—the taste and stain from the lees of the vat." — Longfellow.

a "Swift, and strong, and handsome, but hunted down into the net; and now exhausted with fruitless attempts to escape." — Spk. Com.

"It is not by change of circumstance, but by fitting our spirits to the circumstances in which God has placed us, that we can be reconciled to life and duty."—Robertson.

a Je. xxv. 15—29; Ze. xii. 2.

"There is a degree in Christianity, to the which whosoever cometh they see and feel more than others can do. 'Come and see' will speak better things of Him than I can do. 'Come nearer' will say much."—Rutherford.

b Na. i. 15.

"No man ever puts on spiritual strength except on his knees. It was there that the apostles found it. Upon their knees; in those days of prayer, in the upper chamber in Jerusalem. It is upon our knees that the Church must put on its strength! Then shall our work be "mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strongholds."—W. M. Paxton.

c Comp. Job ii. 12, 13.

d "In a more dignified place; on a divan, or a throne."—Lowth.

"As a queen on a throne."—Targum.

e "Better rend. 'the bands of thy neck are unloosed;' they have fallen off at the sound of God's voice."—Spk. Com.

Charles Lamb had fame, and what did he say? "I walk up and down thinking I am happy, but knowing I am not." The great Dr. Johnson had fame, and what did he say? "I am afraid that some day I shall get crazy." Such testimonies multiply daily. Verily, "all is vanity."

"The holy city had figuratively been in the dust, but she was now to arise, to take the shackles from her neck, and to sit down in the place prepared for her."—Roberts.

"If we practice goodness, not for the sake of its own intrinsic excellence, but for the sake of gaining some advantage by it, we may be cunning, but we are not good."—Cicero.

The Strength and Beauty of the Church (vs. 1).—I. The alarm sounded. 1. The impenitent sinner is as one asleep; 2. The lethargic Christian requires to be awakened; 3. The discouraged and despondent disciple needs reviving. II. The directions given. 1. Distinct apprehension of the atonement; 2. Reliance on the Saviour's righteousness; 3. Communion with the Holy Spirit; 4. Manifestation of the Christian graces; 5. Exercise of believing fervent prayer. III. The dwelling-place described. 1. The Church is a city; 2. Heaven is a city.

Note on vs. 1.—Jerusalem had long been afflicted by her foes, but the time of her deliverance was at hand, and in token of that she was to deck herself in her glorious attire. At the time of famine, sickness, or sorrow, the people clothe themselves in their meanest apparel, and their ornaments are laid aside: but on the return of prosperity, they array themselves in their most "beautiful garments."—Roberts.

2, 3. (2) dust, figuring Zion as a captive lying prostrate in the dust.^c sit down,^d as opposed to crouching, as a captive. bands . . neck, yoke of captivity. Animals are usually fastened by the neck." (3) for nought, ch. 1. 1. Babylon had seized Israel, but was not its purchaser, so it had no legal rights over Israel. without money, ch. lv. 1.

Bondage and Redemption (vs. 2).—I. Here notice man's fallen and sinful state. 1. What ye have sold; 2. To whom have ye sold yourselves? 3. For what have ye sold yourselves? 4. Who sold you? II. Man's redemption by Christ Jesus. 1. The redemption of the soul by price; 2. This redemption is also by prayer. Apply:—(1) Man's sinfulness and misery entirely of himself, his salvation entirely of Jesus; (2) All mankind the bondslaves of Satan, or the freemen of the Lord; (3) The price of our redemption should lead us to value our souls; (4) We have no evidence of our interest in redemption unless we have felt its power in our deliverance from sin.—Studies for Pulpit.

Note on vs. 2.—The other point illustrated occurs in the second verse of this chapter, where the sense of the last expression is, to an Oriental, extremely natural: "Shake thyself from the dust, arise, sit down, O Jerusalem." It is no uncommon thing to see an individual, or a group of persons, even when very well dressed, sitting with their feet drawn under them, upon the bare earth, passing whole hours in idle conversation. Europeans would require a chair; but the natives here prefer the ground. In the heat of summer and autumn, it is pleasant to them to while away their time in this manner, under the shade of a tree. Richly adorned females, as well as men, may often be seen thus amusing themselves. As may naturally be expected, with whatever care they may, at first sitting down, choose their place, yet the flowing dress by degrees gathers up the dust; as this occurs, they, from time to time, arise, adjust themselves, shake off the dust, and then sit down again. The captive daughter of Zion, therefore, brought down to the dust of suffering and oppression, is commanded to arise and shake herself from that dust; and then, with grace, and dignity, and composure, and security, to sit down; to take, as it were, again, her seat and her rank amid the company of the nations of the earth, which had before afflicted her and trampled her to the earth. It may be proper to notice that Bishop Lowth gives another rendering, "Arise, ascend thy lofty seat," and quotes Eastern customs to justify the version; but I see no necessity for the alteration, although to English ears it may sound more appropriate. A person of rank in the East often sits down upon the ground, with his attendants about him.—Jowett.

4—6. (4) down . . Egypt, Ge. xlv. 6. sojourn, tarry during famine-time; but Egypt put her guests under bitter bondage. the Assyrian, the word used is Ashur, wh. includes the Assyrian bondage of Israel, and the Babylonian bondage of Judah.—Delitzsch. (5) now therefore, rather, but now, accentuating the gravity of the present situation. Exile and oppression were indeed no new experiences for Israel (vs. 4), but no such overwhelming disaster as this had ever befallen it hitherto.—Camb. Bib. what . . here, as if God were taking special notice of the misery of His people. for nought, the writer wishes to express the illegitimateness of the several oppressions of Israel. What advantage has accrued to Jehovah from the carrying away of Israel into exile?—Pol. Bib. make . . howl, R. V., "do howl," i. e. the rulers howl with blasphemous exultation." (6) know my name,^b "know by experience what my name imports."—Camb. Bib.

Bondage of Sin.—The bitterest experience with most believers is the presence and power of sin. They long to walk through this grimy world with pure hearts and stainless garments. But when they would do good, evil is present with them. They consent to God's law, that it is good; they endeavor to keep it; but they seem as unable to perform it as a man whose brain has been smitten with paralysis is unable to walk straight. What rivers of tears have been shed over the penitent's psalm by those who could repeat it every word from the heart! And what regiments of weary feet have trodden the Bridge of Sighs, if we may so call the Seventh of Romans, which sets forth in vivid force the experience of a man who has not learned God's secret! Surely our God must have provided for all this. It would not have been like Him to fill us with hatred of sin and longings for holiness if there were no escape from the tyranny of the one and impossibility of attaining the other. It would be a small matter to save us from sinning on the other side of the pearly gate; we want to be saved from sinning now and in this dark world. We want it for the sake of the world, that it may be attracted and convinced. We want it for our own peace which cannot be perfected while we groan under a worse than Egyptian bondage. We want it for the glory of God, which would be then reflected from us with undimmed brightness, as sunshine from burnished metal. Thank God, we may have deliverance through Jesus Christ.—F. B. Meyer.

7. mountains, ch. xl. 9.^a "but from the ruin of his city, which has so stirred and made turbulent his passion, the prophet lifts his hot eyes to the dear hills that encircle her; and peace takes the music from vengeance. Often has Jerusalem seen rising across that high margin the spears and banners of her destroyers. But now the lofty skyline is the lighting place of hope. Fit threshold for so Divine an arrival, it lifts against heaven, dilated and beautiful, the herald of the Lord's peace, the publisher of salvation."—G. A. Smith. him,^b "the prophet sees the messenger come bounding over the mountains to bring the news to Jerusalem that her deliverance is come."—Spk. Com. Thy God reigneth, "so long as Israel was in captivity, and Jerusalem in ruins, God's earthly sovereignty (1 Sam. xii. 12) was in abeyance. The moment that the Jews were set free and allowed to return and to rebuild their city, his sovereignty was re-established."—Spk. Com.

Publishing the Gospel (vs. 7).—I. We may consider this passage as an epitome, outline, or index to the Gospel. 1. It is good tidings; 2. It is a message of peace; 3. It is a message of salvation. II. The publishing of the Gospel. 1. This is by preaching it; 2. For this certain rules are laid down. III. The publishers of the Gospel. 1. They are men; 2. The manner in which they should be estimated. Appeal to men to hear, believe, and live the Gospel.—A. Fletcher.

8. "Hark, thy watchmen! They lift up the voice, together do they sing."—Camb. Bib. Thy watchmen, "Persons set on towers to give the earliest notice of the approach of any messenger with tidings."—Fausset. bring again Zion, R. V., "returneth to Zion."^a—Fausset.

Note on vs. 8.—In the poetical style of the East, the watchmen are represented as standing on their watch-tower, or post of observation, and stretching their vision to the utmost point of the horizon, as if in eager expectation of the appearance of a news-bearing messenger. On a sudden the wished-for object appears in sight, on the summit of the distant mountain, speeding his rapid way to the city, while the watchmen, anticipating the tenor of his tidings, burst forth in a shout of gratulation and triumph. "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice: with the voice together shall they sing." The imagery strikingly represents the expectant attitude and heedful vigilance of the believing part of the teachers and pastors of the nation of Israel on the eve of the Messiah's manifestation. The reason of the outbreak of their holy joy is immediately given: "For they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion," i. e. they shall have a clear and unclouded discernment of the actual execution of the Divine purposes. As faithful watchmen, intent upon their duty, and earnestly looking out for the signs of promise, they

^a "Now, says God, this is not to be suffered. I will go down to deliver them; for what honor, what rent, what tribute of praise have I from the world, when My people, who should be to Me for a name and a praise, are to Me for a reproach? For their oppressors will neither praise God themselves, nor let them do it."—Mat. Henry.

^b Ex. iii. 14, 15, xxxiv. 5, 7.

"Sin is the only thing in the world which never had an infancy, that knew no minority."—South.

"The grand difficulty is to feel the reality of both worlds, so as to give each its due place in our thoughts and feelings, to keep our mind's eye and our heart's eye ever fixed on the land of promise, without looking a way from the road we are to travel toward it."—Augustus Hare.

^a "The Prophet beholds a messenger coming over the mountains (wh. stand around Jerusalem, Ps. cxxv. 2) with glad tidings; the watchmen of Zion discern him at a distance, and they exult at the sight, and call on her to rejoice."—Wordsworth.

^b Ro. x. 15; Na. i. 15.

Nu. xlv. 14.

"Nothing is more natural than for one person whose feelings are elated with joy, to look to the glistening eyes of another who is equally interested in the cause by which it is produced."—Henderson.

"A believer's watchfulness is like that of a soldier. A sentinel posted on the walls, when he discerns a hostile party advancing, does not attempt to make head against them himself, but informs his commanding officer of the enemy's approach, and leaves him to take the proper measures against the foe. So the Christian does not attempt to fight temptation in his own strength; his watchfulness lies in observing its approach, and in telling God of it by prayer." — W. Mason.

a Eze. iv. 7.

"A holy arm because His omnipotence is used in vindicating His holiness and righteousness, and in punishing those who are unholily and unrighteous." — Wordsworth.

Ps. xcvi. 3;
Lu. iii. 6.

"They that love beyond the world cannot be separated by it." — William Penn.

b Ex. xli. 39;
De. xvi. 3.

"When they came out of Egypt, they brought with them the idolatrous customs of Egypt (Eze. xlii. 3), which were their ruin: let them take heed of doing so now that they were come out of Babylon." — Mat. Henry.

"The ancient Jews always connected these three vs. with what follows in the liii. ch., and applied them to the same person, the Messiah." — Wordsworth.

shall be favored with a clear, distinct, luminous perception of the objects of their gaze, in which they shall be honorably distinguished from a class of watchmen spoken of by the same Prophet, ch. lvi. 10, of whom it is said, "His watchmen are blind;" instead of seeing clearly, they see nothing. That this is the genuine force of the expression, "they shall see eye to eye," is to be inferred from the parallel usage, Num. xiv. 14, "For they have heard that thou, Lord, art among this people; that thou, Lord, art seen face to face" (Heb. eye to eye); i. e. in the most open, evident manner. Of equivalent import are the expressions, Ex. xxx. 11, "And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend." Num. xii. 8, "With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches;" where the latter part of the verse is exegetical of the former.—Bush.

9, 10. (9) waste places, or ruins. comforted, with signs of His restoring grace. redeemed, to be taken both in a national and spiritual sense. (10) "The prophet withdraws his gaze from the future and describes Jehovah as preparing Himself for the conflict." holy arm, metaphor from warriors who bare their arm for battle."

Newton and Jay.—Mr. Jay was once invited to preach before the Baptist Miss. Soc. in London. He beautifully sketched the origin of the missionary spirit, and the difficulties it had to encounter. He stated that he himself, then a comparative youth, had some doubts as to whether the time was come for the evangelization of the earth, and at length he determined to call and converse on the subject with the venerable John Newton. The aged apostolic clergyman received his younger brother with ardent affection, and requested him to detail the peculiar difficulties which oppressed his mind. Mr. Jay did this at considerable length, especially insisting on the manifold obstacles which idolatry and human depravity, in all their various forms, presented to the extension of the gospel. When he had ceased, the venerable clergyman slowly laid down his pipe, gathered up his form to an erect posture, and looking his junior brother full in the face, said, in a most emphatic tone, "My brother, I have never doubted the power of God to convert the heathen world since he converted me!"

11, 12. (11) from thence, i. e. from Babylon, on the march back to the Holy Land. no unclean thing, this new exodus is to partake of the nature of a religious ceremonial. bear .. vessels, in xlv. 13 it is said that Cyrus shall rebuild Jerusalem. In xlv. 26, that the foundations of the Temple shall be laid. What more natural than that the returning exiles shall carry back with them the sacred vessels. That the writer lays so little stress on the recovery of the vessels need not surprise us. He would have desired an exceedingly simple sacrificial system." (Comp. xliii. 22—24).—Pol. Bib. (12) with haste, as they did from Egypt," so they could have no excuse for carelessness. Lord .. rereward, indicating a solemn and public procession. Comp. Ex. xiv. 19.

Jehovah will go Before You.—Has He not gone before His Church in act and deed? Perilous has been the journey of the Church from the day when first it left Paradise even until now. I see the Church going out from Ur of the Chaldees; afterwards going down to the land of the cruel Pharaohs. But now the Church has to come up out of Egypt, and God goes before her still. But why need I go through all the pages of the history of the Church of God in the days of the old dispensation? Hath it not been true from the days of John the Baptist until now? If you read the history of the Church, you will be compelled to confess that whenever she went forward she could discern the footsteps of Jehovah leading the way.—Spurgeon.

The Servant's Martyrdom and Reward, lii. 13—liii. 12. "The conception here given of the servant of the Lord makes the prophecy the most remarkable anticipation in the O. T. of the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow."—Camb. Bib. 13—15. (13) prudently, R. V., margin, "prosperously," i. e. his career shall be crowned with complete success. extolled, or praised, Ph. ii. 6—9. (14) Delitzsch, Camb. Bib., etc. trans. "Just as many were astonished at thee,—so disfigured from that of man was his aspect and his form unlike the children of men,—so will he startle many nations. Before him kings will be awe-struck in silence," etc., i. e. the amazement at the humiliation will be equalled by that of the exaltation. (15) sprinkle,^c R. V., margin "startle." shut .. mouths, dumb with awe. not .. told, Ro. xv. 21. consider, R. V., "understand."

Surprise at the Appearance of God's Servant.—It is certainly singular that no trustworthy traces of the appearance of our Lord have come down to us. Everybody may imagine for himself what were the features and expression of his Divine Master; and it is better that our free imaginations should have no limitations to the representation of any artistic genius. All that Scripture asserts is that, so far as face and form were concerned, there was nothing arresting about Christ; you might have passed him by as a common man. Dean Plumptre remarks, "These words (of vs. 14) conflict strangely with the type of pure and holy beauty with which Christian art has made us familiar as its ideal of the Son of man. It has to be noted, however, that the earlier forms of that art, prior to the time of Constantine, and, in some cases, later, represented the Christ as worn, emaciated, with hardly any touch of earthly comeliness; and that it is at least possible that the beauty may have been of expression rather than of feature or complexion."—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-THIRD.

1, 2. (1) our report, "who believed that which was revealed to us," etc.—Camb. Bib., ch. lii. 7.^a to whom, among the unbelieving Jews. arm, ch. lii. 10. (2) tender plant, suckling.^b root, for that which springs from the root. dry ground, implying a feeble sickly growth.^c no form, no striking features to draw men's attention. "In vss. 2 and 3 the penitent speakers give us the reasons of their disregard of the Servant in the days of his suffering. In these reasons there is nothing peculiar to Israel, and no special experience of Jewish history is reflected by the terms in which they are conveyed. They are the confession, in general language, of an universal human habit."—G. A. Smith.

Christ's Sufferings and Glory (vs. 1).—The ancient prophecies are justly included among the evidences of the Christian religion; those which relate to Christ generally refer to His sufferings and glory. I. The report here spoken of. 1. Its general contents; 2. Its great importance. II. How we are required to believe it. 1. Practically, with our hearts unto righteousness; 2. Seasonably, without delay; 3. Perseveringly, without declension. III. The effect with which this belief is attended. 1. It delivers from the burden of guilt; 2. It blesses; 3. It keeps; 4. It rewards.—Alpha in 400 Sks.

Note on vs. 1.—In the East the greater part of their clothes are long and flowing, loosely cast about the body, consisting only of a large piece of cloth, in the cutting and sewing of which very little art or industry is employed. From the simplicity of their form, and their loose adaptation to the body, the same clothes might be worn with equal ease and convenience by many different persons. The clothes of those Philistines whom Samson slew at Ashkelon required no altering to fit his companions; nor the robe of Jonathan to answer his friend. These loose dresses, when the arm is lifted up, expose its whole length. To this circumstance the Prophet Isaiah refers. "To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?"—uncovered—who observes that He is about to exert the arm of His power?—Paxton. Pain is one of the bonds that hold the race of men together. Browning makes his Ferishtah ask:

"What were the bond 'twixt man and man, dost judge,
Were pain abolished?
Put pain from out the world, what room were left
For thanks to God, for love to man?
From man take these away,
And what is man worth?"

The prophet saw this when he wove the pathos of undeserved pain into his picture of the suffering servant. (Isa. liii). All the sublimest among the imagery or real representatives of our humanity—Prometheus, Socrates, Jeanne d'Arc, Savonarola—have been visibly sufferers. From

"In this prophecy Isaiah speaks so plainly of Christ, that he seems to perform the part of an evangelist, rather than a prophet." — S. Jerome.

The saints endeavor to imitate the strong resolve of their Lord to yield themselves up. For instance, a Scottish peasant, dying as a martyr on the scaffold, said, "I came here to die for Christ, and if I had as many lives as I have hairs on my head, I would lay them all down for Christ."

^a Comp. Is. xlix. 1—8, l. 7—11; Jno. xii. 38; Ro. x. 16.

^b "Here a sucker, or shoot sprouting up from the root of a tree that has been cut down to the ground."—Henderson.

^c "Not a tender plant, which implies beauty, delicacy, and fostering care, but a slender plant, thin and insignificant." Mat. Arnold.

^d "In arid lands nearly all the plants have tuberous roots, buried far beneath the ground, beyond the scorching effects of the sun, and composed of succulent tissue, fitted with a deliciously cool and refreshing fluid. It may have been one of these that suggested to the Prophet this beautiful and expressive emblem."—Hugh Macmillan. "Historical faith is only (as it were) a looking on the Saviour; but saving faith cleaves to Him and rests on Him. Historical faith looks on Christ, but acts not on Him, closes not with Him; and therefore such as have this only, and no more, sink and perish without getting good of Him." —Durham.

"The star of Bethlehem is still rising, and it will continue to rise until all the false lights of the world have been obscured." —W. T. Ellis.

a "Of so mean appearance that he was no longer reckoned with men." —Aben Ezra.

b "Bodily and mental, proceeding from a perfect sense of the heinousness of sin in God's sight, the depths of which no mind of man has ever fathomed." —Wordsworth.

"One continued chain of labor, sorrow, and consuming pain." —Sir R. Blackmore.

c "So worn and macerated was He with continual grief that when He was but a little above 30 years of age, He was taken to be nearly 50. Jno. viii. 57." —Mat. Henry.

"What a difference between the first and second comings of our Lord. When he shall come a second time it will be to be glorified and admired, but when He came the first time He was despised and rejected of men." —Spurgeon.

Every Macedonian felt that he could endure any fatigue if Alexander could. This day, assuredly, we can the same root of pain have sprung the finest utterances of our human speech, in the words of poets who "learnt in sorrow what they taught in song." We see that the best that is in a man can be got out of him only by affliction. But for the wreck and ruin of his friends, Shakespeare never would have written "Hamlet," "Macbeth," or "Lear," nor would Milton have given us "Paradise Lost." —S. S. Times. Three Links.—William Carter in a sermon to the outcasts of London, said: "Hear what Jesus declares: 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life.' Here, my friends, there are three links in the blessed chain of truth—hearing, believing, and having. The devil always tries to cut these links off, and give three links of his own forging, viz., doing, praying, feeling." This item was copied into a religious weekly newspaper in this country, and was there read by a gentleman, when after three weeks of waiting for the feeling of a change in his heart, he had given up all hope, and concluded that there was no salvation for him. God's way of salvation at once seemed plain, and the gentleman was soon a happy Christian.—Old Test. Anec.

3. despised, ch. xlix. 7.^a rejected of men, better, "man-forsaken," i. e. one with whom men refuse to associate, or, perhaps, one who renounces the hope of human fellowship. The corresponding verb is used by Job when he complains of the estrangement of his friends: "my kinsfolk have failed" (ch. xix. 14).—Camb. Bib. man of sorrows, i. e. of manifold and special sorrows.^b grief, or sickness.^c hid . . faces, R. V. "and as one from whom men hide their face he was despised, and we," etc.

The Man of Sorrows (vs. 3).—I. His sorrows arose from the felt relation of a loving being to a ruined race. II. From the crushing pressure of His mediatorial work. III. From His certain knowledge that the result of His mission would not be equal to the benevolence of His will.—Evan Lewis. The Suffering Saviour.—I. His life began with persecution and peril. II. His deep condition of earthly abasement. III. The vile suspicions and bitter misrepresentations He had to bear. IV. He was constantly exposed to personal violence. V. The fierce temptations of the devil. VI. His sufferings were associated with a perfect prescience of all the evils and agonies He had to endure. VII. He saw how they were to culminate from every quarter. 1. Man; 2. Hell; 3. Heaven. Apply:—(1) Their cause: sin; 2. Their result: redemption; 3. His claims: love, gratitude, service.—J. Burns.

Christ a Man of Sorrows.—All that Christ came for was, or was mingled with, sufferings: for all those little joys which God sent, either to recreate His person, or to illustrate His office, were abated or attended with afflictions; God being more careful to establish in Him the covenant of sufferings, than to refresh His sorrows. Presently after the angels had finished their hallelujahs, He was forced to fly to save His life, and the air became full of the shrieks of the desolate mothers of Bethlehem for their dying babes. God had no sooner made Him illustrious with a voice from heaven, and the descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him in the waters of baptism, but He was delivered over to be tempted and assaulted by the devil in the wilderness. His transfiguration was a bright ray of glory; but then also He entered into a cloud, and was told a sad story, what He was to suffer at Jerusalem. And upon Palm Sunday, when He rode triumphantly into Jerusalem, and was adorned with the acclamations of a King and a God, He wet the palms with His tears, sweeter than the drops of manna, or the little pearls of heaven that descended upon Mount Hermon, weeping, in the midst of this triumph, over obstinate, perishing, and malicious Jerusalem. For this Jesus was like the rainbow, which God set in the clouds as a sacrament to confirm a promise and establish a grace; He was half made of the glories of the light, and half of the moisture of a cloud; in His best days He was but half triumph and half sorrow: He was sent to tell of His Father's mercies, and that God intended to spare us; but appeared not but in the company or in the retinue of a shower, and of foul weather. But I need not tell that Jesus, beloved of God, was a suffering person: that which concerns this question most is, that He made for us a covenant of suffering: His doctrines were such as expressly and by consequence enjoin and suppose sufferings, and a state of affliction; His very promises were sufferings; His beatitudes were sufferings; His rewards, and His arguments to invite men to follow Him, were only taken from suffering in this life, and the reward of sufferings hereafter.—Jer. Taylor.

4. borne . . . sorrows, Mat. viii. 17. A strong assertion of the substitutionary character of His work. Camb. B. "surely it was our sickness that he bore and our pains that he carried." stricken, under Divine judgment on sin. "The earliest and most common moral judgment, which men pass upon pain, is that which is implied in its name—that it is penal. A man suffers because God is angry with him and has stricken him. So Job's friends judged him, and so these speakers tell us they had at first judged the Servant."—G. A. Smith.

Redemption (vs. 4).—I. The need—sheep, but astray. The way lost, i. e. he who is on the way is lost. II. The means,—the reality of the redemption seen in the fact that Christ died. III. The effect,—sin atoned for; iniquity borne away; necessity of a personal relation to Christ by faith; depth of His love the measure of our obligation, and as that cannot be fathomed, our obligation can never be fully realized.—R. V. Price.

A Suffering God the Preacher's Theme.—The Jews and the Greeks were both ready to receive a God that could shape all the powers of nature, and that could make an illustrious appearance, and address Himself to all that was highest and most admirable in human nature; but to hear preached to them a God who could humble Himself and become a man; who could be subject to those infirmities that inhere in the human condition; who could take death and disgrace upon Him; who could feel weakness, and be willing to feel it; who could feel death, and be willing to feel it—that they could not bear. And we can hardly bear it any better than they could; for we, who believe that Christ is God, dodge the declaration that He died, and change it so that it shall mean something else. We do not like to see it in a hymn, or in a sermon, that God died. And so we attempt to say that it was the human that died in Christ. In other words, there is in us just that same feeling which the ancients had, that there is something which lowers the conception of God to preach that Christ was from God; that His weakness and sufferings and death were part and parcel of a real Divine experience, and typical of the everlasting experience of God; that the Lamb was slain from the foundation of the world; and that, though we saw it clearly set forth, this had been going on before, and was to go on for ever and for ever. The conception that it is the nature of God not to sit star-crowned, not to sit gazed upon and sung to, not to sit wrapped in chanting and luxurious praise—the conception that God is a living power, projecting and supervising—yea, thinking and loving and sacrificing as much on the throne as on the cross, as much in heaven as on earth—the conception of Divinity as being perfect wisdom, perfect purity, perfect love, and as addressed to the recuperation of the weak and the wicked, working and working, suffering and suffering, laboring and laboring, for ever and for ever,—this conception is yet unwelcome. Our prejudices do not like it. And as it is now, so it was in the time of the Apostle. Therefore he declared all the way, "I preach," not Christ, but "Christ crucified." I will not preach Christ in such a way as that the cross shall be left out. It is this suffering in Christ that is the secret of the Divine power.—H. W. Beecher.

Christ's Sympathy.—

We have no tears Thou wilt not dry;

We have no wounds Thou wilt not heal;

No sorrows pierce our human hearts

That Thou, dear Saviour! dost not feel.

—Harriet McEwen Kimball.

5. wounded, "pierced," with special reference to the piercing of our Redeemer's hands, feet, and side. bruised, "crushed,"^a for, because of; in fulfillment of His purpose to deliver us from our iniquities. chastisement, etc., i. e. by which our peace has to be won. stripes, or bruises, with reference to His scourgings, as part of His great sacrifice. "That the people themselves had suffered for their sins is not excluded, but is bear poverty, slander, contempt, or bodily pain, or death itself, because Jesus Christ our Lord has borne it." —Spurgeon.

a. "The Jews were taught to regard disease (and calamity) as the temporal punishment of sin." —Henderson.

"Christ's entire life was devoted to the service of man; and His death was but the giving up in one final act of surrender what had all along been consecrated to the same high and holy ministry." —Gibson.

"It is well known that the Earl of Rochester was for many years an avowed infidel, and that a large portion of his time was spent in ridiculing the Bible. One of his biographers has described him as 'a great wit, a great sinner, and a great penitent.' Even this man was converted by the Holy Spirit in the use of His Word. Reading Isa. liii. he was convinced of the truth and inspiration of the Scriptures, and the Debt and Atonement of Christ. On that atonement he rested, and died in humble expectation of heavenly happiness."

a. "There are no stronger terms in the language than are here used to signify the extremity of the sufferer's affliction." —De-litzsch.

Mat. xxvii. 26; 1 Pe. ii. 24.

"He cures the mind of its blindness, the heart of its hardness, the nature of its perverseness, the will of its backwardness, the memory of its slipperiness, the conscience of its benumbness, and the affections of their disorder, all according to His gracious promises: Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 27."—John Willison.

Dora Greenwell beautifully says, "Belief in that one great doctrine of the Atonement is to me like the blue flower of the German legends: long sought and hidden, but when found admitting into every guarded treasure, which without the possession of it, would have been closed up."

^a Ze. xii. 10.

^b "The antithesis is, in ourselves we were scattered; in Christ we are collected together; by nature we wander, driven headlong to destruction; in Christ we find the way to the gate of life."—Calvin.

2 Cor. v. 21; Ga. iii. 13; He. ix. 28.

^c Jno. i. 29.

"The Vulgate, wh. throughout this ch. translates so as to heighten the identification with Christ, has here, 'He was offered because He Himself chose to be.'"—Mat. Arnold.

"He was oppressed and He Himself submitted to affliction."—J. A. Alexander.

"No man can know or conceive what that anguish must have been. To Christ alone was this agony possible, and it apparently implied in the last words ("we are healed"), and is expressly said in other parts of the book (ch. xl. 2, xlii. 24 f. etc.). What the verse teaches is that the people could not be healed by their own suffering; it was only through the Servant's voluntary submission to the divine chastisement (vs. 7), and his bearing it in an extraordinary degree, that an atonement was effected between Jehovah and Israel (see on ch. xl. 2)."—Camb. Bib.

Christopathy.—The Balsam-tree sheds its balm to heal the wounds of those that cut it; and did not our blessed Saviour do the like? They mock him, and he prays for them; they shed his blood, and he makes it a medicine for their healing; they pierce his heart, and he opens therein a fountain for their sin and uncleanness. Was it ever heard, before or since, that a physician should bleed, and thus heal his patient; or that an offended prince should die to expiate the treasons of his rebellious subjects? Our heavenly Balsam is a cure for all diseases. If you complain that no sins are like yours, remember that there is no salvation like Christ's. If you have run the complete round of sin, remember that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all. No man ever perished for being a great sinner, unless he was also an unbelieving sinner. Never did a patient fail of a cure who accepted from the great Physician the balm of his atoning blood. See how Christ, whose death was so bitter to himself, becomes sweetness itself to us. Rejection was his, but acceptance is ours; the wounding was his, but the healing is ours; the blood was his, but the balm is ours; the thorns were his, but the crown is ours; the death was his, but the life is ours; the price was his, but the purchase is ours. There is more power in Christ's blood to save than in your sin to destroy. Do but believe in the Lord Jesus, and thy cure is wrought.—Spurstow's "Spiritual Chymist."

6. All we, the Prophet speaks in the name of Israel. Penitent confession of believers and of Israel in the last days.^a sheep . . astray, Ps. cxix. 176; 1 Pe. ii. 25.^b laid on him, made to light on Him. This verse gives us the obverse and complement of the preceding verse. The pain was his in consequence of the sin that was ours. iniquity, inclusive of its guilt and consequences. Nothing could be plainer than these words. The speakers confess, that they know that the Servant's suffering was both vicarious and redemptive.—G. A. Smith.

Straying (vs. 6).—We wander—I. Like sheep, without reason—the pasture was rich, the shepherd kind, the fold secure. II. Like sheep, aimlessly. The lion prowls for food, the hart in search of water, the sheep without aim. III. Like sheep, persistently despise the coming shades of evening, the distant bleatings of the abandoned flock, loss of fleece and smarting wounds. IV. Like sheep in peril—defenceless, surrounded by dangers and foes. V. Like sheep—sought; the Good Shepherd calls to us, saying "Return."—Straws and Twigs.

7. R. V. "He was oppressed, yet he humbled himself and opened not," etc., refers now to "the outrages inflicted on the Servant by his contemporaries, in consequence of their false judgment of him."—Camb. Bib. opened . . mouth, Mat. xxvi. 63, xxvii. 12; Mk. xiv. 61, xv. 5. as a lamb,^c comp. Ac. viii. 32.

The Sheep Before the Shearers.—He had never been slow of speech when He could bless the sons of men, but He would not say a single word for Himself. "Never man spake like this Man," and never man was silent like Him. Was this singular silence the index of His perfect self-sacrifice? Did it show that He would not utter a word to stay the slaughter of His sacred person, which he had dedicated as an offering for us? Had He so entirely surrendered Himself that He would not interfere in His own behalf, even in the minutest degree, but he bound and slay an struggling, uncomplaining victim. Was this silence a type of the defencelessness of sin? Nothing can be said in palliation or excuse of human guilt; and, therefore, he who bore its whole weight stood speechless before His judge. Is not patient silence the best reply to a gain-saying world? Calm endurance answers some questions infinitely more conclusively than the loftiest eloquence. The best apologists for Christianity in the early days were martyrs. The anvil breaks a host of hammers by quietly bearing their blows. Did not the silent Lamb of God furnish us with a grand example of wisdom? Where every word was occasion for new blasphemy, it was the line of duty to afford no fuel for the flame of sin. The ambiguous and the false, the unworthy and the mean, will ere long overthrow and confute themselves, and therefore the true can afford to be quiet, and finds silence to be its wisdom. Evidently our Lord, by His silence, furnished a remarkable fulfillment of prophecy. A long defence of Himself would have been contrary to Isaiah's prediction. By His quiet He conclusively proved Himself to be the true Lamb of God.—Spurgeon.

8, 9. (8) taken . . judgment, R. V. "By oppression and judgment he was taken away; and as for his generation, who among them considered that he was cut off," etc. "By violence wh. cloaked itself under the formalities of a legal process." cut off, i. e. who cared, or noted his death? (9) grave . . wicked, this animosity even followed him to his grave. He was buried as a felon.^a rich, Mat. xxvii. 57. death, word only used in Eze. xxviii. 10, and there for a violent death. because, R. V. "although."

Christ Stooping to Save.—The mother, wan and pale with incessant vigils by the bedside of a sick child;—the fireman, maimed for life in bravely rescuing the inmates of a blazing house;—the 300 Spartans at Thermopylæ;—Howard, dying of fever caught in dungeons where he was fulfilling his noble purpose of succoring the oppressed and remembering the forgotten;—the Moravian missionaries, who voluntarily incarcerated themselves in an African leper-house in order that they might preach the glad tidings to the lepers,—all these, and many other glorious instances of self-devotion, do but faintly shadow forth the love of Him who laid aside Divine glory, and humbled Himself to the death of the cross.—Huntingdon.

10, 11. "The main thought of the following verses is that the Servant is to be the instrument in establishing the true religion, by removing the burden of guilt and bringing many to righteousness. As the reward of his sufferings he will enjoy a brilliant future and have a numerous spiritual offspring. He will become a great power in the world, attaining a position like that of a mighty conqueror. The idea of a resurrection from the dead appears to be necessarily implied."—Camb. Bib. (10) pleased, i. e. the Lord, the men who persecuted and slew Him only carried out a gracious Divine purpose.^b thou shalt make, better, "when His soul shall make."—Delitzsch. see . . seed, Ps. xxii. 30, xxiv. 6, xxv. 13. The long line of His descendants, though He was a childless man, is the Church of the Christian ages. prolong, etc., therefore He must rise again. pleasure, i. e. the purpose of the Lord, to establish his universal religion. (11) travail, fruits of His travail.^c his knowledge, i. e. the knowledge which he possesses and imparts to others.

The Sufferings of Christ (vss. 10, 11).—I. His character. 1. God's servant; 2. A righteous servant; 3. As such, a perfect example, and an acceptable Mediator. II. His sufferings. 1. Their extent; 2. Their singularity; 3. Their general nature. III. The happy effects of His sufferings. 1. He shall prolong His days; 2. He shall justify many; 3. He shall see His seed; 4. The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in His hand; 5. He shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied. Apply:—God's claims on you as the subjects of redeeming grace.—Alpha in 400 Sks.

The Humiliation of Christ.—He that came to save men, is sent for His first lodging to the beasts. The stable is become His inn; the cratch His bed. O strange cradle of that great King, which heaven itself may envy. How easy had it been for Thee to have made place for Thyself in the throngs of the stateliest courts! Why wouldest Thou be thus homely, but that, by contemning worldly glories, Thou mightest teach us to condemn them? that Thou mightest sanctify poverty to them whom Thou callest unto want? That, since Thou, which hadst the choice of all earthly conditions, wouldest be born poor and despised, those which must want out of necessity might not think their poverty grievous.—Bp. Hall.

12. "As the reward of his unmerited sufferings and his mediatorial work, the Servant shall attain an influence equal to that of the great potentates of the world." divide the spoil, the rights of a great conqueror.^a his soul, or life. numbered with, and so treated as if He were a transgressor. "He was put on the same footing with the transgressors."

Victory Achieved by Christ's Death (vs. 12).—I. Let us consider the wrung from Him 'sweat wh. was as great drops of blood.'—Martin Luther, 1530.

^a "Our Saviour was destined by the Jews to have the ignoble burial of those who underwent capital punishment."—Henderson.

Christianity alone is still young as the morning, full of an unwasted power, exuberant yet with strong expectation. — Storrs.

^b Ac. II. 23, III. 18.

^c "He shall see the fruits of His sufferings in the many whom His life and death have turned to God and saved."—Mat. Arnold.

"O Cross, Uplifted high before men's curious gaze, My soul beholds, In wonder and amaze, A glorious throne.

O Man, Dying betrayed, heart - broken and alone! Haste Thou the day when all the world shall own Thee Lord and God."

—A. J. Javrin. "Christ is the righteousness of sinners to God, and the righteousness of God to sinners."—Venning.

^a "Metaphors borrowed from the ancient military life, in wh. a victorious general had conferred on him, by his monarch, the spoils which he had won, and again distributed them among his soldiers."—Henderson.

"Christ is the world's Cyrus."
—Wordsworth.
Ro. viii. 34; He. vii. 25. ix. 24; 1 Jno. ii. 1.

"Do not think that if you are despised, or ill-treated, you are out of your place. It does not follow that Livingstone or Bishop Hannington were out of their places, because one died and the other was murdered in Central Africa, any more than it follows that Jesus Christ was out of His place because He was crucified. The kingdom of God was founded and is built up in sacrifice." — G. R. Ferguson.

death of Christ as appointed of God. 2. Look at it with regard to the identity of this appointment, in God's proposal of salvation, pervading all the Divine dispensations. 3. Consider the absolute necessity of this appointment for fallen man. 4. We have the express declaration of God to this truth, made by His own mouth, by His word, and by His ministers. 5. Consider the absolute necessity of receiving this doctrine. 6. The actual seal that God hath set to His own truth concerning the way of salvation, with the certainty of the effect; because He hath poured out His soul, unto death, He shall divide the spoil with the strong.—R. Cecil.

No Satisfaction Without Travail of Soul.—We all would like that the law of Christian, and, indeed, of other life and success, were very different from this, and just as in the world people would like to get wealth without paying the price of it in labor, and would like to gain influence without rendering service by which it alone is won, and would like to get the love of their fellow-men without the life of friendliness that attracts it, so in spiritual things we would like cheaply, easily to gain the precious things on which we set our eyes—forgiveness without repentance, perfect sanctity without the gradual and laborious self-denial by which alone it can be reached; usefulness we would like to get in some cheap and easy way without any sweat of agony, and without any strain of sympathy. We would all like in this way to get various things that are good—forgiveness, usefulness, raptures, light, conviction, assurance, without any travail. Now I do not know any lesson that it is more requisite for the young to learn, and more requisite for older men to keep themselves from forgetting than this—that without travail there is no abiding satisfaction.—Glover.

♫ Ga. iv. 27; comp. Ge. xi. 30.

"God's people, thus purged and healed, shall be eternally established; Israel shall extend his borders and multiply his sons; his enemies shall come over to him; this is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their promised justification through God's righteous servant."—Mat. Arnold.

"A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work and done his best; but what he has said or done otherwise shall give him no peace."—R. W. Emerson.

"In the moral world there is nothing impossible, if we bring a thorough will to it. Man can do everything with himself; but he must not attempt to do too much with others." — Wm. von Humboldt.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-FOURTH.

"Zion, the restored Bride of Jehovah." The chapter is divided in two sections: vss. 1—10. The bride comforted and promised a numerous offspring and lasting happiness; vss. 11—17. Zion, the city, restored and filled with a happy and invincible people. 1. O barren, ch. xlix. 18—21.^b travail, comp. Mic. iv. 10; Is. lxvi. 7, 8. desolate . . married, "More are the children of Jerusalem, when she seemed to be a widow, i. e. when her Temple and her city were in ruins, than when she was married, i. e. when the Temple was still standing, and God's presence was visibly revealed in it."—Wordsworth.

God's Relation to His People.—In ch. liv. the people of God are represented under the double figure, with which the Book of Revelation has made us familiar, of Bride and City. To imagine a Nation or a Land as the spouse of her God is a habit natural to the religious instinct at all times; the land deriving her fruitfulness, the nation her standing and prestige, from her connection with the Deity. But in ancient times this figure of wedlock was more natural than it is among us, in so far as the human man and wife did not then occupy that relation of equality, to which it has been the progress of civilization to approximate; but the husband was the lord of his wife,—as much her Baal as the god was the Baal of the people,—her law-giver, in part her owner, and with full authority over the origin and subsistence of the bond between them. Marriage thus conceived was a figure for religion almost universal among the Semites. . . . But the prophets of Jehovah dared the heavier task of retaining the idea of religious marriage, and won the diviner triumph of purifying and elevating it. It was, indeed, a new creation. Every physical suggestion was banished, and the relation was conceived as purely moral. Yet it was never refined to a mere form or abstraction. The prophets fearlessly expressed it in the warmest and most familiar terms of the love of man and woman. With a stern and absolute interpretation before them in the Divine law, of the relations of a husband to his wife, they borrowed from that only so far as to do justice to the Almighty's initiative and authority in His relation with mortals; and they laid far more emphasis on the instinctive and spontaneous affections, by which Jehovah and Israel had been drawn together. Thus, among a people naturally averse to think or to speak of God as loving men, this close relation to Him of marriage was expressed with a warmth, a tenderness and a delicacy, that exceeded even the two other fond forms in which the Divine grace was conveyed,—of a father's and of a mother's love.—Exp. Bib.

2, 3. (2) Enlarge, etc., bec. increase of people demands enlargement of accommodation. cords . . stakes, the cords to keep the tent steady are tied to wooden pegs, or stakes. "As the family increases the tent is proportionally enlarged, and requires the cords to be longer, and the stakes to be stronger in proportion."—Henderson. (3) break forth, R. V. "spread abroad." right . . left, prob. indefinite expressions, meaning, in all directions. Gentiles, R. V., "possess the nations," a promise that the spiritual children of Israel will spread over all the earth, migrating and colonizing and christianizing all lands.

Carey's Sermon.—This verse has an interesting history as the text of Carey's memorable sermon, the preaching of which, at Nottingham, in June, 1792, may be affirmed, without extravagance, to have marked an epoch in the history of modern missions. After observing that the Church was, in these words, compared to some poor, desolate widow who lived alone in a small tent, that she who thus lived in a manner forlorn and childless, was told to expect such an increase in her family as would require a much larger dwelling, and this because her Maker was her husband whose name was not only the Lord of Hosts and the Holy One of Israel, but the God of the whole earth, he proceeded to bring out the spirit of the passage in two memorable exhortations—1. Expect great things from God. 2. Attempt great things for God. In private conference with his brethren immediately afterwards, Carey formally laid himself on the missionary altar, saying to Pearce and Fuller in those immortal words, "I will go down into the pit, if you will hold the ropes;" and so was formed the Baptist Missionary Society, and a mightier impulse given to missionary zeal all over the world.—W. Guthrie.

Joy at Finding Salvation.—We are told of some Turks, who have, upon the sight of Mohammed's tomb, put out their eyes, that they might not defile them, forsooth, with any common object, after they had been blessed with seeing one so sacred. I am sure many gracious souls there have been, who, by a prospect of heaven's glory set before the eye of their faith, have been so ravished by the sight, that they desired God even to seal up their eyes by death, with Simeon, who would not by his good-will have lived a day after that blessed hour in which his eyes had beheld the salvation of God.—W. Gurnall.

4, 5. (4) forget the shame, the national apostasy which had brought on them the Divine judgments. widowhood, clearly refers to the period of the Exile when Zion regarded herself as cast off by Jehovah.^a The sense of the shame of thy youth is less obvious. Since the conception has some affinities with the striking allegory in Ezek. xvi. it is probable that the reference goes back to the origin of the nation (cf. Ezek. xvi. 4-8); the reference being to the Egyptian oppression.—Camb. Bib. (5) is thine husband, and now has come into restored relations with His Church. be called, that is, the Husband of Zion is the recognized ruler of the whole earth.^b

Meaning of a Husband.—It means literally "the band of the house," the support of it, the person who keeps it together, as a band keeps together a sheaf of corn. There are many married men who are not husbands, because they are not the band of the house. Truly, in many cases, the wife is the husband; for oftentimes it is she who, by her prudence and thrift and economy, keeps the house together. The married man who by his dissolute habits strips his house of all comfort is not a husband. In a legal sense he is, but in no other: for he is not a house-band; instead of keeping them together, he scatters them among the pawnbrokers.—French.

6-8. (6) called thee, "Zion has been punished but not divorced by her husband and is now recalled to favor. Comp. Esth. ii. 14."—Pol. Bib. a woman, R. V. "a wife," who had been neglected but not put away. wife of youth, fig. for one specially beloved. wast refused, R. V. "when she is cast off." Better perhaps, Pol. Bib., "and one who has been wedded in ^a "So large a family requires that she should rebuild her tent on a far larger scale (Is. xlix. 18, 20)."—Spk. Com.

Ezek. xvi. 46. "In Africa, when we expected an increase of hearers, the Hottentots moved the pins all round, a yard or a yard and half farther from the tent, towards which they stretched the canvas, and fastened it, which considerably increased the room inside." — Campbell.

^a Je. 11. 5; Ez. v. 3.

"The youth of the Jewish Church was the period of her servitude in Egypt; her widowhood that of the captivity in Babylon."—Henderson.

^b Zec. xlv. 9; Ro. iii. 29, 30, xi. 12.

"The darkness of sorrow has often been shown to be the shadow of God's wing as he drew near to bless."

c "The period of alienation is not here described as short, but the anger which occasioned it."—Hitzig.

c "Breaking forth like a flood, to wh. there is a reference in what follows, and which was of short duration."—Wordsworth.

"The wrath is little, but the mercies are great. See how one is set over against the other, that we may neither despond under our afflictions, nor despair of relief."—Mat. Henry.

d "I deal with My people respecting this their captivity in Babylon as I dealt with them respecting Noah's flood."—Mat. Arnold.

a Mat. xxiv. 35.

b Eze. xxxiv. 25. xxxvii. 26.

"There can no more be another such effusion of My wrath than there can be another deluge, here called the waters of Noah."—J. A. Alexander.

e "These seem to be general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of Eastern nations, and to have never been intended to be strictly scrutinised, or minutely explained, as if they had each of them some precise moral and spiritual meaning."—Lowth.

youth, can she be rejected? says thy God." (7) small moment,^c the 70 years of Bab captivity. great mercies, the greatest tenderness.—Henderson. (8) little wrath, R. V. "in overflowing wrath I hid," etc.^c everlasting, the strong fig. for abiding, unchanging.

Strong Consolation (vs. 7).—Three particulars in these words. I. The displeasure they intimate. II. The mercy they breathe. III. The confidence which these words encourage. 1. It is God who speaks; 2. There is the oath of God; 3. There is His covenant.

Excellencies of a husband.—

Faithful—as dog, the lonely shepherd's pride;
True—as the helm, the barque's protecting guide
Firm—as the shaft that props the towering dome
Sweet—as to shipwreck'd seaman land and home
Lovely—as child, a parent's sole delight;
Radiant—as morn, that breaks a stormy night;
Grateful—as streams, that, in some deep recess
With rills unhoped the panting traveler bless,
Is he that links with mine his chain of life,
Names himself lord, and deigns to call me wife.—Æschylus.

9, 10. "The permanence of the new covenant relation is illustrated first by the promise made to Noah, of which the rainbow is the perpetual token, and then by the steadfastness of the unchanging hills."—Camb. Bib. (9) for this, viz., this visitation of Divine judgment.^a sworn, Ge. viii. 21, ix. 11. The promise then made God had faithfully kept, and as certainly He would keep the new promises made to His people. (10) "Though mountains should move, and hills should totter, yet from thee my kindness will not move, nor will my command of peace totter."—Pol. Bib. mountains, etc., indicating even greater changes than those caused by flood.^a my kindness, Ps. lxxxix. 2, 28, 33. covenant . . peace,^b the covenant whereby I have made thee at peace with Me.

The Eternal Constancy.—We all sometimes think of Divine mercy as though its meridian had passed, and as though God's grace was setting over the plains of life. We have an ever-living Saviour, an indwelling Spirit, the blessing of spiritual sonship, the foretaste of the sweet vineyards of Canaan, and a fountain ever open for sin and uncleanness. Let us seek to make God's kindness in its constancy the image of our own. Love is the law of heaven; the angels are all ministering spirits. And we are to be ministering spirits too. A part of our nature, constituted as it is to live in others, would be shorn of its blessedness if we could not also be ministers of kindness. Onward, then, my brethren, with these words on your banner. The light which falls on the letters of gold will attract the eyes of others, as you show them what a religious faith can do in renewing the life of the world.—Pul. Com.

11—13. (11) thou afflicted, representing God's people by their city, wh. had been so long in ruins. There seem to be blended in the poet's mind references to the perils of the Ark in the waste of waters. fair colours, lit. stibium, the substance with wh. Eastern ladies anoint their eyelids. The cement of the walls is compared to it. sapphires, transparent blue stones. Comp. Rev. xxi. 18—21. (12) windows, R. V., "pinnacles of rubies." carbuncles, lit. sparkling gems.^c (13) all . . Lord, Jno. vi. 45. "When the work of the Servant is completed (liii. 11) all the children of Zion will be, like himself (l. 4), disciples of the divine Teacher. Comp. Jer. xxxi. 34; Joel ii. 28, 29."—Pol. Bib.

Instruction and Peace (vs. 13).—I. The instruction spoken of in the text, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord." 1. Nothing of which men are prouder than knowledge; 2. This is the highest knowledge; 3. It has the best teacher; 4. It is extensive. II. The second blessing is peace. 1. Its kind; 2. Its degree. View it in five stages. (1) The relief it brings the conscience under a sense of pollution; (2) Under the afflictions of the righteous; (3) In the hour of death; (4) At the last day; (5) See it in heaven.—W. Jay.

Bitterness Turned to Blessing.—It is delightful to sit down beside a child of God who has in his hand a bitter cup of trial. Jesus has turned the bitterness into such a blessing that he "tastes the love" of Jesus in every drop. I love to hear old Richard Baxter exclaim, after a life of constant suffering, "O my God! I thank Thee for a bodily discipline of eight-and-fifty years." I love to sit down by Harlan Page and hear him say, "A bed of pain is a precious place, when we have the presence of Christ. God does not send one unnecessary affliction. Lord! I thank Thee for suffering. I deserve it. I deserve death eternal. Let me not complain nor dictate. I commit myself to Thee, O Saviour, and to Thy infinite love. I stop my mouth, and lie low beside Thee!" So God built up that blood-built soul faster than disease was pulling down the frail tenement in which it dwelt. And through the rents heaven's glory shone in with rapturous radiance!—Old Test. Anec. Divine Favor Reaching to the Children.—The conditions of modern civilized life put the religious education of thousands of children altogether into the hands of Christ's Church. Multitudes of parents cannot, or will not, train their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. But in all such cases the Church can do a noble supplemental work. We may see the special Divine favor resting on our age, and the best security for the permanence and nobility of our nation, in the wide spreading and vigorous improvement of our Sunday schools. The "peace" assured to the children is a term designed to include all sorts of good. We cannot be wrong in thinking that the better tone of society and family life in our day is the direct result of our increased concern for the moral and religious culture of the nation's children.—Pul. Com.

14, 15. (14) righteousness, "both the thought and action of Jerusalem will be righteousness then and it will thereby acquire strength. Through righteousness wilt thou be fortified."—Delitzsch.^a far . . oppression, i. e. from suffering oppression. not fear, or have nothing to fear. (15) Pol. Bib. "If any should stir up strife, it will be against my will; whoso stirs up strife against thee will be brought by thee to ruin."

An Example of Trust.—William Napier once in his walks met with a little girl of five years old, sobbing over a pitcher she had broken. She, in her innocence, asked him to mend it. He told her that he could not mend it, but that he would meet her trouble by giving her sixpence to buy a new one, if she would meet him there at the same hour the next evening, as he had no money in his purse that day. When he returned home he found that there was an invitation waiting for him, which he particularly wished to accept. But he could not then have met the little girl at the time stated, and he gave up the invitation, saying, "I could not disappoint her; she trusted in me so implicitly." That was the true Christian gentleman and soldier.—Dean Stanley.

16, 17. (16) created the waster, all desolating conquerors are as much in God's hands as the smith.^a (17) weapon . . tongue, the two ways in which enmity may be shown, by act and by word. servants of the Lord, the first time this title has been used in its wide application. The ideal of the servant is to be reproduced in each citizen of this newly established kingdom. From this point on the phrase is often used. righteousness, or justification.^b of me, I will see to it: I will undertake to secure it. If God secures and defends it, we may be sure it is safe from all attacks.

The Divine Control of Evil Forces.—The "waster" here is a comprehensive term for the great conquering kings of Assyria and Babylonia, at whose hands Israel had so grievously suffered. Isaiah declares that God raised them up; God sent them forth; God gave them their work. He assures the new Jerusalem that it is quite safe, for God does not intend to send against them any such "wasters;" and they may dismiss for ever from their thoughts that any other being exists who can send "wasters" forth.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-FIFTH.

Invitation to the Blessings of the New Covenant. Two divisions: 1—5, 6—13. 1. Ho, a sort of loud trumpet call.^c every one, comp. Mat. xi. 28; Jno. iii. 16; Re. xxii. 17. thirsteth, with a spiritual thirst, represented by the suffering of the desert-traveler; thirsteth for the "righteousness" spoken of in ch. liv. 17. waters, suggested, perhaps, by xli. 18, the

"This figurative way of speaking is in exact keeping with the Eastern notions of magnificence: thus the abodes of the gods, or distant kings, are described as having pillars of red coral; rooms made of crystal; ruby doors; thrones of the nine precious stones; walls of gold, surrounded by emerald rivers. Such passages, therefore, are not to be received literally, but as being indicative of great splendor and unrivalled prosperity." — Roberts.

^a Isa. ix. 7, xvi. 5, xxxii. 16.

Joel, iii. 11, 12; Eze. xxxviii. 18; Re. ix. 9.

"Whate'er God does is well. Whether He gives or takes! And what we from His hand receive Suffices us to live. He takes and gives, while yet He loves us still. Then love His will." — B. Schmolck.

^a "Destroyers and destruction are God's work; they reach those only whom He means them to reach, and He does not mean them to reach Israel." — Mat. Arnold.

^b Is. lxi. 10.

^c Comp. Jno. vii. 37.

"Under these figures are included all things essential to the spiritual life." — Calvin.

d "They must come and procure it, though it be given away without price." — Spk. Com.

"The love of Christ is the conducting medium to the love of all mankind." — Jowett.
 "Religion should be the element in which a Christian lives, rather than the sanctuary to which he retires."

e "The custom of weighing uncoined gold and silver in mercantile transactions anciently obtained among the Hebrews and other nations; and it still obtains in Turkey and other parts of the East." — Henderson.

f "The same sure unfailling mercies which I showed to David." — Mat. Arnold.

If I were in a boat on the river in the rapids, it would not be necessary, to insure my destruction, that I should enter into violent controversy with those who would urge me from the shore, to take heed and come to land: all I should have to do would be to shut my ears to their entreaty, and leave myself alone; the current would do the rest. Neglect of the gospel is thus just as perilous as the open rejection of it. Indeed, half the evils of our daily life in temporal things are caused by neglect; and countless are the souls who are lost for this same cause. — W. M. Taylor.

fountain opened by Jehovah for the relief of His people. Water, wine and milk are figurative representations of spiritual revival, recreation and nourishment. Comp. 1 Pet. ii. 2.—Delitzsch. buy . . price, a strong way of saying that all our spiritual need is met by free and sovereign gifts.^a

The Offer of Salvation (vs. 1).—I. The blessings offered under the figures of "water," "wine," "milk." 1. They are New Testament blessings; 2. They are spiritual things; 3. Important not to spiritualize too far. Water, the grace of the Holy Spirit—cleanses, refreshes, satisfies; one of the first principles of life. Wine strengthens; milk nourishes. II. The persons to whom these blessings are promised—the thirsty and the hungry. 1. Our natural condition is one of great destitution; 2. It is necessary to feel this. All spiritual blessings are originally both undesired and undesired; repentance, faith and prayer bear no proportion to gifts of grace. III. Enforce the exhortation. 1. Come; 2. Some things to be done—we have to part with some, and acquire other things; 3. Experimental possession only sufficient.—Superville (pere).

2, 3. (2) spend, lit. weigh.^o satisfieth not, this the true spiritual food of righteousness would do. good, pleasant, satisfying. fatness, or rich dainties. (3) Incline, etc., intimating your personal responsibilities. soul . . live, for it the food of righteousness is provided. everlasting covenant, ch. liv. 10. sure . . David, alluding to 2 Sam. vii. 8—16. The comparison of the everlasting covenant to these Davidic "mercies" cannot mean simply that the one is as sure as the other. It is identity rather than comparison that is implied, the idea being that the contents of the covenant are the same as the mercies promised to David, and that it will be the fulfilment of the hopes that clustered round the Davidic dynasty.^f —Camb. Bib. Lu. i. 32, 33.

The Way in Which the Call is to be Made Sure.—I. It must be heard. "How can they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?" "O earth! earth! hear the Word of the Lord." "If any man hath ears, let him hear." "Hear, and your soul shall live." 2. It must be understood. The truth as it is in Jesus must be comprehended. 3. It must be believed. Truth only realizes the call. Matthew believed; Saul believed; the Samaritans believed. 4. It must be retained. The profession of faith must be held fast. "Abide in Me," says Christ. So we must continue Christ's disciples to the end.—Burns.

Unsatisfying Food—The nardoo plant.—A strange plant, called the nardoo, closely allied to the fern tribe, grows in the deserts of Central Australia. A peculiarly melancholy interest is connected with it, owing to the fact that its seeds formed for months together almost the sole food of the party of explorers who a few years ago crossed the Continent. The nardoo satisfied their hunger; it produced a pleasant feeling of comfort and repletion. The natives were accustomed to eat it in the absence of their usual roots and fruits, not only without injury, but actually with positive benefits to their health. And yet day after day King and his friends became weaker and more emaciated upon this diet. Their flesh wasted from their bones, their strength was reduced to an infant's feebleness, and they could only crawl painfully a mile or two a day. At last, when nearing the bourne of their hopes, they perished one by one of starvation; a solitary survivor being found in the last extremity under a tree, where he had laid him down to die, by a party sent out in search of the missing expedition. When analysed, the nardoo bread was ascertained to be destitute of certain nutritious elements indispensable to the support of a European, though an Australian savage might for a while find it beneficial as an alternative. And thus it happened that these poor unfortunate Englishmen perished of starvation even while feeding fully day by day upon food that served to satisfy their hunger. Is it not precisely so in the experience of those who are seeking and finding their portion in earthly things? They are contented with it, and yet their hunger is in reality unappeased. Their desires are crowned, and yet they are actually perishing of want. God gives them their request, but sends leanness to their souls.—H. Macmillan. Trusting the Promises.—Last winter a man crossed the Mississippi on the ice, and, fearing it was too thin, began to crawl on his hands and knees in great terror; but when he gained the opposite shore, all worn out, another man drove past him gaily, sitting upon a sled loaded with pig-iron. That is just the way most Christians go up to the heavenly Canaan, trembling at every step lest the promises shall break under their feet, when really they are secure enough for us to hold our heads and sing with confidence as we march to the better land.—Old Test. Anec.

4, 5. (4) given him, this vs. goes back to the promise made to David, but regards it as one destined to be fulfilled in the person of his son the Messiah. witness, or as one who delivers a testimony.^a Jno. xviii. 37. people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. all nations. (See note, ch. li. 4.) leader, prefect, or prince. commander, or supreme head. (5) thou shalt, etc. This is explained most easily as addressed to the regenerated people of Israel. Thou shalt call many a nation hitherto unknown to thee.^b (5) glorified thee, Acts iii. 13.

The Faithful Witness (vs. 4).—Christ is a witness—I. For the declaration of Gospel mysteries. 1. The covenant of salvation; 2. The mystery of Gospel righteousness; 3. The doctrine of providence. II. For the confirmation of Scripture truth. III. For the decision of practical controversies.

The Leadership of Christ.—The devotion of his soldiers to Napoleon Bonaparte was extraordinary; but that great commander, with all his egotism, acknowledged that this was nothing compared with the devotion of Christian men to the Person of Jesus Christ. The pity with which he pitied us in our low estate, the tender interest with which he has sought and rescued us, the shame and the sorrow which he bore for us, the death he died for us, the patient love with which he has been loving us,—all this will well account for the fact that, as no king, or general, or statesman has ever done before, Jesus Christ has shown himself the Leader of men by attaching them to his Person with a passionate and unwavering devotion.—Pul. Com. Christ, Our Leader.—Christ has a right to command us, not only as one who possesses us, but also as one who has absolute, unquestionable authority over us. We sing to this day of the glory of the "Charge of the Light Brigade." They knew perfectly well that no one was justified in giving them the order to ride to needless annihilation. No one would have blamed their refusal to obey that order. But without questioning the order they rode straight into the jaws of death, into the mouth of hell. If men in war will obey commands which they know to be unreasonable simply because given by those in authority, what shall be said of us who call Jesus Christ "Lord," who know it is impossible for Him to give us anything but loving and reasonable commands, and who still allow these commands to go unheeded and disobeyed? It is not our place to raise objections or postpone obedience by excuses. The Master will take care of things if we obey Him.—Robert E. Speer.

6, 7. (6) Seek ye, prob. addressed specially to the Jews.^a while . . . near, Je. vi. 8. The intimation is that God may withdraw His favor from the Jews. (7) wicked, etc., comp. ch. i. 16-20. abundantly pardon, or multiply to pardon. "God's graciousness is felt more and more the longer one knows Him."

Exhortation to the Wicked (vs. 7).—I. The counselled. 1. The wicked; 2. The unrighteous. II. The counsel. 1. To abandon their evil habits of action and thought; 2. To return to God in the way which He has appointed. III. The promise annexed to the counsel. 1. Of mercy; 2. Of pardon; 3. Of abundant pardon. Address the impenitent and unbelieving.—G. Brooks.

God's Merciful Pardon.—Every day, from my window, I see the gulls making circuits and beating against the north wind. Now they mount high above the masts of the vessels in the stream, and then suddenly drop to the water's edge, seeking to find some eddy unobstructed by the steady-blowing blast; till at length, abandoning their efforts, they turn and fly with the wind; and then how like a gleam of light do their white wings flash down the bay, faster than the eye can follow! So, when we cease to resist God's influences, and, turning towards him, our thought and feelings are upborne by the breath of the Spirit, how do they make such swift heavenward flight as no words can overtake!—H. W. Beecher.

^a "The term designates the prophetic office of the Messiah, in the discharge of which He communicates to mankind, and to His Church in particular, the saving knowledge of Divine things."—Henderson.

^b "The most natural supposition concerning this vs. is, that after speaking of the Messiah, the Prophet turns to Him, and addresses Him directly."—J. A. Alexander.

Let your desires be few and simple; then if they are not gratified, you will have less to regret.

"That sin which is not too great to be forsaken, is not too great to be forgiven."—Spurgeon.

^a Ps. xxxii. 6; Isa. lxx. 1; Mat. xxv. 1-13; Jno. vii. 34.

"Mercy in us, it is no more than a drop; but in God it is an ocean; in us it is no more than a little stream; in God it is a springing and flowing fountain. A spring continually runs, an ocean is never drawn dry. What is a little sparkle of fire, if it fall into the main sea? The same are the sins of a penitent person when dealt with by the mercy of God."—Thomas Horton.

b "This and foll. vss. reply to those objections that the natural man opposes to the new way of salvation proposed by God, vss. 1—3. It may be objected as inconceivable that man can obtain salvation simply by believing, and not by his own works." —Nagelsbach.

a "The hearts of men, once barren of spirituality, shall be made, by the outpourings of the Spirit under Messiah, to bear fruits of righteousness." —Fausset.

Samuel Longfellow, the poet-clergyman, brother of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, once gave so good a prescription for "the blues" that it deserves to be read every morning on setting out in the day. He said: "Whatsoever it be that disorders, annoys, grieves you, makes life look dark and your heart dumbly ache, or wets your eyes with bitter tears, look at it steadily, look at it deeply, look at it in the thought of God and His purpose of good, and already the pain and annoy of it will begin to brighten."

b So Vulg. "It is some prickly plant growing freely in the desert." —Wordsworth.

Dr. O. W. Holmes says, "Men, like peaches and pears, grow sweet a little while before they begin to decay." This is true; but Christian men should be sweet from the hour that they are re-

8, 9. (8) not your thoughts,^b "Jehovah's thoughts transcend those of man as much as the heaven is higher than the earth. The point of the contrast is not the moral quality of the Divine thoughts as opposed to those of the 'wicked'; the thoughts and ways of Jehovah are His purposes of redemption, which are too vast and sublime to be measured by the narrow conceptions of despairing minds (xl. 27 f.). Comp. Jer. xxix. 11. ('I know the thoughts that I entertain towards you, thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you a future and a hope'), Mic. iv. 12. The verses, therefore, furnish a motive not merely for repentance but also for eager and expectant hope."—Camb. Bib. (9) heavens, etc., comp. Ps. lviii. 10, lxxxix. 2, ciii. 11. The heaven-wide difference is in the fact that men's ways are fickle, unreliable and powerless.

God's Thoughts Superior to Ours (vs. 8, 9).—I. They are superior in reference to man, his being, his essence. II. God's thoughts respecting the perils of this being are higher than ours. III. God's thoughts respecting the perfection and restoration of our being are brighter than ours. 1. Man has deep wants, and God can supply them; 2. The same thing may be said of conscience; 3. His thoughts are of mercy.—Caleb Morris.

10, 11. (10) snow, wh. covers plants from frost in winter, and when melted in spring, waters the earth.^a returneth not, in the sense of failing to fulfil its gracious designs. (11) my word, of promise concerning Israel and Messiah. void, having achieved nothing, as 2 Sam. i. 22. I please, the plans of God if not the desires and plans of men will be accomplished.

Resemblance Between the Bible and the Snow and Rain (vss. 10, 11).—I. In their origin: African rain-makers, Livingstone, Bible, God's own Book, self-evidencing. II. In their importance: importance of rain, effects of drought, more important is the Bible. III. In the mode of their operation: gradually, nature does nothing at a bound, nor the Bible; influence of Bible truth on the hearts of men, according to nature of soil, need of preparation, connection with use of means, reign of law in the kingdom of grace. IV. In the certainty of their success: success of Bible seen sometimes at once, sometimes after an interval. Apply:—1. We never leave the Church as we enter it; 2. We have great encouragements to circulate the Bible.—G. Brooks.

12, 13. (12) go out, i. e. from Bab. captivity. led forth, by Jehovah himself. xl. 10, 11; lii. 12. mountains . . singing, representing nature as meeting the returning Jews with exulting joy. This conception of nature rejoicing in the redemption of the race is constant in O. T. and often repeated in Isaiah. clap . . hands, Ps. xcvi. 8. (13) thorn, etc., "nature is represented as undergoing a complete change to indicate the prosperous and happy condition of God's people." fir tree, or cypress. brier, perhaps nettle.^b—Fausset.

Figurative Use of Trees.—The thorn, the brier, and the thistle are generally used in Scripture to denote any kind of useless and noxious plants that grow spontaneously. In the following instances they are used figuratively:—To denote desolation (Prov. xxiv. 31); the visitation of Providence (Num. xxxiii. 55); and difficulties, hindrances, and troubles (Prov. xv. 19, xxii. 5). The fir tree is a well-known and valuable evergreen, and once grew with rich luxuriance on the now comparatively bare slopes of Lebanon. It was used in Palestine for ship-building, musical instruments, and parts of sacred edifices. It is generally a tall, fine-looking tree, and is used in Scripture to denote power and grandeur. Storks sometimes build their nests in the upper branches. The springing up of a fir is emblematical of verdure and plenty. The myrtle is a beautiful, fragrant, and ornamental evergreen: groves of which are still found in some parts of Palestine. The seeds of one species of myrtle are gathered and dried before they are ripe; and are then called pimento, or allspice. The myrtle in ancient times formed the wreaths for heroes and victors. At the Feast of Tabernacles it was used by the Jews to cover their tents. Thus we find a happy comparison between the thorn and brier, on one hand which denote desolation and trouble; and the fir tree and myrtle, on the other, which represent plenty and prosperity. This comparison is used by the Prophet to illustrate the prosperity and glory of the Church,—that Church which our Saviour proclaims His “well-beloved.”

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-SIXTH.

The prophecies (xiv. 1; xlv. 5) have begun to be fulfilled. Proselytes are offering themselves. But the strict Israelites raise objections against them. Some Hebrews, while in captivity, have been made eunuchs, and are distressed. (Ps. cxxvii. 3.) Vss. 1-8 are addressed to these classes especially. 1, 2. (1) judgment, or equity. justice, R. V., “righteousness.” near to come, comp. Matt. iii. 2.^a (2) layeth hold, R. V., “holdeth fast by it,” a promise made to every son of man, i. e. not to the Jew only but to all mankind. keepeth the sabbath, i. e. “so as not to profane it,” (so vs. 6). The same emphasis on Sabbath observance appears in ch. lviii. 13, and so in Ezek. xx. 12 ff., xxii. 8, 26 (cf. Jer. xvii. 19 ff.). Although one of the most ancient of Israel’s religious institutions (Ex. xx. 8; Deut. v. 15; Am. viii. 5) the Sabbath acquired peculiar significance during the Exile, “when the ordinances of public worship were suspended and the Sabbath and circumcision became the chief external badges of fidelity to the covenant of which it was the sign.”^b—Camb. Bib.

The Lord’s Day.—There are those who say that all days should be sacred,—a philosophy which we accept, if it is not followed by the immorality which neglects to keep any day. We never find that people are peculiarly observant of the Sabbath day who generalise their love over the whole week; and we never find that people are careless during the intervening time who conscientiously, intelligently, and adoringly receive the Sabbath day as a rich gift from God. There are those who say all money is God’s, and therefore they never set apart a Lord’s account. It is to be feared they may be deluded, and that the Lord may suffer on account of that generality which does not identify itself with peculiar and isolated sacrifice. Let every man examine himself herein. A blessing is pronounced upon those who do God’s commandments—not an external blessing. There is all the difference in the world between a reward that is added to a service and a reward that comes up out of the service itself. In the case of religious devotion the blessing is in the service. To serve is to be blessed.—Peop. Bib.

Sabbath-keeping and Sabbath-breaking.—The Isle of Man.—Between twenty and thirty years ago, the little Isle of Man was a bright example to the surrounding islands. The Manx people then highly revered the Sabbath, and their peaceful condition in those days, as contrasted with their present state, will abundantly prove the truth of the words, that in keeping of God’s commandments there is great reward. At that time a gentleman from England visited the island. On the Sabbath he walked to Peel, one of the principal towns, historically celebrated for its ancient castle. On arriving he found the streets deserted. An air of complete rest and Sabbath stillness reigned, and all things seemed to say, “In six days may work be done, but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest holy to the Lord.” At last he discerned two figures seated in the bottom of one of the boats, and on going nearer discovered two sailors busily engaged in reading; the one a Manx, the other an English Bible, which they were thus comparing. They would not, for any reward, put out the boat or row the few yards needful on the Sabbath day. But tourists increased and they could not withstand their offers of money. The change was described by an old resident: “Twenty years ago,” he said, “we slept in peace, none making us afraid. We thought not of locking or bolting a single door, for such things as house-breaking and robbery were unheard of.” Of late years how is the case altered! Thousands of visitors arrive yearly. Shops are now open on the Sabbath, boats on the bay and cars with pleasure parties break the calm of the Sabbath day. We can no longer say that locks and bolts are unneeded, for Sabbath-breaking and other crimes have gone hand-in-hand.—Bibl. Treas.

newed in heart. Yet even then maturity brings a special meekness.

^a “The Prophet designedly declares in the present passage that one should not suppose moral uncleanness is compatible with participation in the promised salvation.”—Nagelsbach.

“The nearer the manifestations of God’s mercy, whether in time or in eternity, the louder the call to righteousness of life.”—J. A. Alexander.

^b “During the exile all the services and sacrifices of the Temple had ceased, and the one testimony of faithfulness to their religion wh. the Jews among an idolatrous people could give was the observance of their Sabbath; their Sabbath was the one outward thing wh. brought their religion to their mind. Hence its observance acquired quite a special value.”—Mat. Arnold.

Ex. xxxi. 14, 16.
“O day of rest!
How beautiful,
how fair,
How welcome to the weary and the old!
Day of the Lord!
and truce to earthly care!
Day of the Lord, as all our days should be!”

—Longfellow.

Of twelve hundred and thirty-two convicts who had been committed to the Auburn State Prison previously to the year 1838, four hundred and forty-seven had been watermen, either boatmen or sailors—men who, to a great extent, had been kept at work on the Sabbath, and thus deprived of the rest and privileges of that day. Of those twelve hundred and thirty-two convicts, only twenty-six had conscientiously kept the Sabbath.

a De. xxiii. 1—8.

b "Phrase used still in the E. of a person of either sex who has no children." — Henderson.

c Je. ix. 24.

"Lovely flowers are the smiles of God's goodness." —Wilberforce.
"Where all are selfish, the sage is no better than the fool, and only rather more dangerous." — Froude.

d "Seven centuries had yet to elapse before the Levitical dispensation would terminate, so its language is retained." — Spk. Com.

e Mat. xxi. 13.

Whether in sorrow or success, he has learned the great lesson, that religious faith is the most valuable and most sacred of human possessions. — Hawthorne.

a "Some suppose a particular allusion to the murmuring or growling of a dog in its dreams." — J. A. Alexander.
Eze. iii. 17, 18.

b "The language here employed strikingly depicts the feelings of the voluptuous in every age." — Henderson.

Pr. xxiii. 32—35.

3—5. (3) stranger . . ennuch, by Mosaic law these were not to enter into the congregation of the Lord.^a This exclusion was henceforth to cease. dry tree,^b he could not become the head of a family in Israel, and therefore felt that he had no real and permanent share in the hopes of the nation. (4) please me, sacrificing their own pleasure for Mine. my covenant, ch. lv. 3.^c (5) a place, or memorial, monument. better . . daughters, who perpetuate to succeeding generations a father's name. everlasting name, illus. in Eunuch of Candace, Acts. viii. 27—39.

Acceptance of All True Worshipers (vss. 4—7).—I. The characters which God approves. 1. Their obedience to His will; 2. Their affiance to His covenant. II. The approbation with which He will honor it. God will—I. Accept him in all his services; 2. He will number him amongst His most favored children. Apply:—(1) We have an antidote to despondency; (2) A stimulus to exertion in the cause of Christ.

Note on vss. 4, 5.—It is supposed by the most competent annotators that the customs of Eastern temples and of later synagogues suggest that these words may refer primarily to the memorial tablets which were put up in such places in commemoration of distinguished benefactors.—Peop. Bib.

6—8. (6) sons . . stranger, R. V., "the strangers." vs. 3. Such had been united with the Jewish Ch. only as proselytes of righteousness. They were to become full members of the spiritual and Messianic Church. (7) holy mountain, Zion. burnt offerings, etc., including all kinds of religious services.^d house of prayer, a more spiritual title.^e people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. for all nations. (comp. note, ch. li. 4.) This is the emphatic point. (8) gather others, comp. Jno. x. 16: the Gentiles, in addition to the scattered Jews. beside, etc., R. V., "beside his own that are gathered."

The House of Prayer (vs. 7).—1. Need of revelation of Divine existence. 2. Does He take an interest in the affairs of this world? 3. Is He accessible? 4. Will He pardon? 5. Is He thus accessible and gracious to all? 6. Is there reason to conclude that this result shall be realized? 7. How may this sacred place be made effectually, more effectually, to subserve this great end? 8. Here then we are to come in the spirit of prayer. 9. Here everything is to be done with a view to lead to prayer.

A new section begins here, extending to lvii. 21. "A prophecy against the evil rulers of Jerusalem and against the Samaritans."—Pol. Bib. 9, 10. (9) beasts, etc., the apostrophe to the wild beasts is suggested by the following comparison of the people to an ill-guarded and therefore defenceless flock. (10) His watchmen, the negligent rulers and guides of Israel. blind, not discerning the signs of the times: dumb, not daring to speak against what they know to be evil. (Comp. Ezek. xxxiii. 1 ff.) sleeping,^f R. V., "dreaming," or Camb. Bib. "raving" as one delirious in illness.

Preaching Fruit and Flowers.—At Hampton Court Palace every one regards with wonder the enormous vine loaded with so vast a multitude of huge clusters; just outside the vine-house is as fine a specimen of the Wistaria, and when it is in full bloom the cluster-like masses of bloom cause you to think it a flower-bearing vine, as the other is a fruit-bearing vine. Fit emblems these two famous trees of two ministries, both admired, but not equally to be prized; the ministry of oratory, luxuriant in metaphor and poetry, and the ministry of grace, abounding in sound teaching and soul-saving energy. Gay as are the flower-clusters of the Wistaria, no one mistakes them for the luscious bunches of the grape; yet, there are many simpletons in spiritual things who mistake sound for sense, and seem to satisfy their hunger not on solid meat, but on the jingle of a musical dinner-bell.—Spurgeon.

11, 12. (1) greedy, lit. strong of appetite. shepherds . . understand, are unable to comprehend the spiritual wants of the people. own way, or selfish interests. from his quarter, or better, one and all of them. (12) fetch wine, i. e. when judgment is actually at hand, they are for revelry.^b and much more, etc., R. V., "a day great beyond measure."

Influence of Evil Habits.—The following will serve as a fearful illustration of the melancholy influence which drinking, gambling, and betting have in blunting and destroying the moral feelings:—Two fellows at a tavern having summoned the waiter, the poor man had scarcely entered, when he fell down in a fit of apoplexy. "He's dead!" exclaimed one. "He'll come to!" replied the other. "Dead for five hundred!" "Done!" retorted the second. The noise of the fall, and the confusion which followed, brought up the landlord, who called out to fetch a doctor. "No! no! we must have no interference; there's a bet depending." "But, sir, I shall lose a valuable servant." "Never mind! never mind! you can put him down in the bill."—Whitecross.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-SEVENTH.

1, 2. (1) righteous perisheth, reference is to early and untimely deaths removing those who were the strength of the nation. to heart, as if it were a national loss. merciful men, lit. "godly men." none considering, the purpose of Divine providence in graciously removing the righteous, that they might not share in the calamitous times.^c "From the writer's point of view the poor are the righteous, and the rich the wicked. Neh. v. 8 shows that even good men lent corn and money on usury and vss. 3-5 prove exorbitant charges."—Pol. Bib. (2) enter into, R. V., "He entereth into peace; they rest in their beds, each one that walketh in his uprightness."^d i. e. Every man who led a straightforward life would find rest only in the grave. Comp. Job. iii. 13 ff. beds, refers to the bier or coffin. Comp. 2 Chron. xvi. 14; Ezek. xxxii. 25.

The Death of the Good (vs. 1).—I. Their death is the perishing of the body. 1. Why then pamper the body? 2. Why centre interests on the wants of the body? II. Their death is generally disregarded by mankind. 1. The thought of death is repugnant to the heart; 2. The concerns of life are all-absorbing. III. Their death is a deliverance from all the evils that are coming on the world. IV. Their death is a step into a higher life. 1. Their bodies sleep. 2. Their souls march on.—Thomas.

The Christian's Death.—The Christian does not terminate his thought by the grave, for he lives in the light of a larger and nobler revelation. The grave is no longer a bed, a final resting-place; it is but a point to halt at; the spirit has gone beyond the boundaries of the tomb, and is already rejoicing in the dewy morning of eternal day. Thus we are lifted up in contemplation, thus we are strengthened in faith, thus we are ennobled in all intellectual thought, by coming into contact with the spirit and revelation of Jesus Christ. The grave is no longer a boundary line; it is but a transient shadow soon to be driven away by the rising light. Beyond it lies the garden of the Lord; one inch beyond, and all heaven glows in infinite summer.—Parker.

3-5. Invective against an idolatrous party, vss. 3-13. (3) adulterer, etc., "refers partly to the mixed origin of the Samaritans, partly to their impure religion. The prophet here attacks the Samaritans whose friendly relations to the Jews (Ezra ix. 1, 2; Neh. xiii. 28) were dangerous in the eyes of pious patriots."—Pol. Bib. (4) Against whom,^a it seemed to be against the Prophet, it really was against Jehovah. sport, in derisive mirth. wide mouth, Ps. xxxv. 21. (5) green tree, reference is to the consecrated groves of the false gods. slaying, etc., the most famous sacrifices of this kind were those in the valley of Hinnom.^b valleys, etc., probably weird and desolate places were chosen by preference for these revolting rites, although this is the only passage where such a thing is suggested.—Camb. B.

Verse 5.—The reference is, as Mr. Cheyne says, to the "orgiastic cults in the sacred groves of Palestinian heathenism." The nature of these cults is well stated by Professor Döllinger ('Jew and Gentile,' vol. i. p. 430): "At the spring festival, called by some the 'brand-feast,' by others that of torches, which was attended by streams of visitors from every country, huge trees were burnt, with the offerings suspended on them. Even children were sacrificed; they were put into a leathern bag, and thrown the whole height of the temple to the bottom, with the shocking expression that they were calves, and not children. To the exciting din of drums, flutes, and inspired songs, the Galli cut themselves on the arms; and the effect of this act, and of the music accompanying it, was so strong upon mere spectators, that all their bodily and mental powers were thrown into a tumult of excitement.

"The reason that many men want their desires is, because their desires want reason. He may do what he will that will do but what he may."—Warwick.

^e "His removal is a sign that the evil is near at hand."—Spk. Com.

^d "Each one who has walked in the way lying straight before him, instead of turning to the right hand or to the left."—Wordsworth.

"To die is landing on some silent shore,
Where billows never break
nor tempests roar.
Ere well we feel the friendly stroke, 'tis o'er."
—Garth.

"There is no Death! what seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life
clysian,
Whose portal we call Death."
—Longfellow.

^a "The righteous dies, and is at rest; but ye, what will ye make at last of your derision of the righteous, and of the follies and idolatries wherein ye trust?" Nothing."—Mat. Arnold.

^b Je. vii. 31; see also 2 Chr. xxviii. 3, xxxii. 6.

"Prune thou thy words, the thoughts control
That o'er thee swell and throng;
They will condense within thy soul,
And change to purpose strong."
—J. H. Newman.

c "In the earlier times, all the Greeks worshipped, in place of images of the gods, undressed stones." — Pausanias.

"There is a stone set up to the south of St. Columbus' Church, in the island of Eriska, about 8 ft. high and 2 ft. broad. It is called by the natives the bowing stone; for when the inhabitants had the first sight of the church, they set up this stone, and then bowed, and said the Lord's Prayer." — Martin.

a "Prob. small images like those of the Roman Penates, or household gods, which were in every private family, and were the objects of prayers and offerings." — Mat. Arnold.

"The weary traveler, unable to drag his tired limbs one step further through the leaden air and under the copper sky of the East, lies down to rest. When the sun fills the east with rosy light he is up and off again; freshened and cheered, he is young once more! So with grace, God has provided refreshment for us all. We need not despair of reaching the goal." — Pul. Com.

a Isa. xxxv. 8, xl. 3, 4.

"Men every day measure the Christ by themselves. How much better if we measured ourselves by the Christ!" — Lew Wallace.

"Progress — the stride of God!" — Victor Hugo.

6, 7. (6) smooth stones, of which the altars were builded.^c portion, as Jehovah is the portion of His people these altars to Moloch are the portion and lot of the idolaters. receive comfort, R. V., "Shall I be appeased for these things?" i. e. shall I overlook or forgive such offences? (7) high mountain, in allusion to worship in "high places." thy bed, carrying on the representation of idolatry as adultery.

Stones Used as Idols.—The stones here referred to were consecrated to the honor of certain deities, and supposed to be instinct with their presence. "I have," says Turner, in his work on Polynesia, "several 'smooth stones of the stream' from the New Hebrides, which were used as idols, and have heard of precisely similar stones being used in other parts of the Pacific. But what do they do with the stones? Very much like what the Earl of Roden says the people of Inniskea, off the coast of Mayo, do, or did, with their sacred stone. 'A stone, carefully wrapped up in flannel, is brought out at certain periods to be adored; and when a storm arises this god is supplicated to send a wreck on their coast.' Some of the Polynesian stone gods were prayed to for the removal of storms; and others were supposed to act as rain-makers and rain-stoppers. There was one of these rain-controlling stones in a district in Samoa. When there was too much rain, those who kept the stone put it to the fire to dry, and cause the rain to stop. If there was great drought, they took the stone to the water and dipped it, thinking that by wetting the stone, rain would be the consequence."

8, 9. (8) thy remembrance, "thy symbol," i. e. token of some deity in this false religion, set up in the home where it would be readily seen." (9) king, "to Melek", the name of a deity, probably same as Molech, or Milkom, the chief God of the Ammonites, with whom the Samaritans were in alliance (Neh. ii. 10; iv. 7, etc.) ointment, etc., presents to propitiate him; unto hell, or Hades: consulting the oracles of the Under-world.

10—12. (10) wearied . . way, R. V., "with the length of thy way." in the effort to gain rest and satisfaction by such idolatrous wilfulness. no hope, unwilling to believe such idolatry could be quite in vain. life . . hand, R. V., "thou didst find a quickening of thy strength; therefore thou wast not faint." i. e., she stirred up her remaining strength and persisted in her course. (11) of whom, of which of their helpless idols. held my peace, in gracious forbearance, which had been interpreted as indifference. (12) declare, i. e. show it up, prove how empty and hollow it is. thy works, R. V., "and as for thy works they shall not profit thee."

Weariness Comes With Unbelief.—It was so in the old world, and so it will be in the new. The Greeks had an underlying sadness in their outwardly beautiful life, as Luthardt so well shows in his volume on the Christian evidences. It is faith which gives life and zest. Thomas Carlyle says in his essay on Diderot, "All epochs, wherein unbelief, under whatever form soever, maintains its sorry victory, should they ever for a moment glitter with a sham splendor, vanish from the eyes of posterity; because no one chooses to burden himself with study of the unfruitful." So he shows us how French philosophism vanished into non-entity. Yes, that is it; there is non-entity, no-being in unbelief. What a glorious creed is the Christian creed—meeting all deepest necessities of sin, and want, and sorrow, and immortal instinct, by its doctrines of Divine atonement, fatherhood, sympathetic brotherhood, and eternal life! Who can be weary when he believes in One who is himself the revelation of the Father? Bringing life and immortality to light, Christ has made this world more beautiful. There is a deeper life even in human love. As Esther Lyon says, in 'Felix Holt,' "One likes a beyond everywhere." Men must be weary who have lost faith.—Pul. Com.

13, 14. (13) criest, in the time of thy calamity. companies, R. V., "them which thou hast gathered," "multitudinous troops of idols and idolaters." possess the land, comp. ch. lx. 21; Ps. xxxvii. 9. (14) Cast ye up, i. e. make a smooth highway for My returning people.^a Now the tone changes and the prophet sets forth the gracious will of Jehovah toward His repentant people.

The Ministry of Angels.—Without intruding it on the reader's attention, Isaiah is continually implying the interest which angels take in all God's dealings with his Church, and the assistance which they render.

Voices fill the heavenly sphere around him and about him, which can only be angelic utterances, and from time to time he records the sayings. Sometimes he records them openly as angelic; e. g. the seraph's words, when he took the live coal from the altar in the court of heaven, and therewith touched the prophet's lips (ch. vi. 7). But more often he names no speaker, but simply gives the words or introduces them impersonally with the phrase, "and one said" (see ch. xxi. 11; xxvi. 2; xl. 6, etc.).—Pul. Com.

15, 16. "They have been worshiping idols, creatures of their own fears and cruel passions. But He is the high and lofty one—two of the simplest adjectives in the language, yet sufficient to lift Him they describe above the distorting mists of human imagination. They thought of the Deity as sheer wrath and force, scarcely to be appeased by men even through the most bloody rites and passionate self-sacrifice.—G. A. Smith. (15) Holy, or Holy One. holy place, 1 Ti. vi. 16. contrite . . spirit, the new test of religion, see ch. lxvi. 2. The word contrite comes from a verb meaning to bruise, crush.^b (16) contend, prolonging even chastisements unduly. the spirit, of man, which cannot bear an overweight of even just Divine indignation. Souls, Gen. ii. 7. Refers to the creation. He will not undo His own work and annihilate those to whom His own breath was imparted.

The Greatness and Condescension of God (vs. 15).—I. The greatness of God. 1. His superiority to all others in the scale of being; 2. His eternity; 3. His holiness; 4. His self-manifestation. II. The condescension of God. 1. Its objects; 2. Its expression; 3. Its purpose. Apply:—(1) Are we contrite and humble? (2) Let not God's greatness prevent our coming to Him.—G. Brooks.

Jerusalem.—

Jerusalem, Jerusalem! enthroned once on high,
Thou favored home of God on earth, thou heaven below the sky!
Now brought to bondage with thy sons, a curse and grief to see,
Jerusalem, Jerusalem! our tears shall flow for thee.

Oh! hadst thou known thy day of grace, and flocked beneath the wing
Of Him who called thee lovingly, thine own anointed King;
Then had the tribes of all the world gone up thy pomp to see,
And glory dwelt within thy gates, and all thy sons been free.

"And who art thou that mournest me?" replied the ruin grey,
"And fear'st not rather that thyself may prove a castaway?
I am a dried and abject branch, my place is given to thee;
But woe to every barren graft of thy wild olive tree!

"Our day of grace is sunk in night, our time of mercy spent,
For heavy was my children's crime, and strange their punishment;
Yet gaze not idly on our fall, but, sinner, warned be,
Who spared not His chosen seed may send His wrath on thee!

"Our day of grace is sunk in night, thy noon is in its prime;
Oh turn and seek thy Saviour's face in this accepted time!
So, Gentile, may Jerusalem a lesson prove to thee,
And in the new Jerusalem thy home for ever be!"—Heber.

17, 18. (17) covetousness,^a ch. lvi. 11. The besetting sin of the time; strictly means unjust gain. hid me, hiding of face was a token of displeasure. frowardly, turning away, or backsliding. heart, or wilful heart. (18) ways, i. e. wilful ways. heal him, with restoring mercies. restore comforts, make consolations abound over his troubles. mourners, spiritual ones, ch. lxi. 2; lxvi. 10; Mat. v. 4.

Divine Mercy and Anger Contrasted (vs. 17).—1. A dispensation of health to those spiritually diseased; 2. A proclamation of peace to those who are far off and to those who are near; 3. A declaration of ruin to the impenitent.—R. Cecil.

19, 20. (19) fruit of . . lips, which is thankful praise. God makes it by giving His gracious healing and restoring mercies. "I make the lips blossom anew with speech." (Comp. Prov. x. 31; xii. 14).—Pol. Bib. far off . .

^b "The most sublime description of the Divine majesty and condescension to be found in the Scrip. The words require no comment, but they have a depth of meaning wh. no finite mind can fully comprehend." — Henderson.

"Isaiah encouraged those who were trodden down to perseverance, by reminding them that real dignity is something very different from present success." — F. W. Robertson.

"What God wants is men great enough to be small enough to be used." — H. W. Webb-Peploe.

"Lowliness is the base of every virtue, and he who goes the lowest, builds the safest." — Bailey.

"The peace of Christ is not something that He puts into your heart, and that you must keep, that it may keep you. If the peace of God is to rule in my heart it is because the God of peace Himself is there." — Andrew Murray.

^a "The terms indicate a rapacious person, one who breaks thro' all bounds in order to acquire gain." — Henderson.

"That which is intended to draw near, sometimes drives away. Godly sorrow works repentance; but sorrow, taken ill and treated wrongly, works death. If the heat does not melt, it hardens." — Pul. Com.

"When the im-temperate heats of the spirit
break out in scurrilous and abusive language, then the troubled sea casts forth mire and dirt."—Mat.
Henry.

"Thou troubled sea,
Oh, troubled,
fretful sea!
What can the causes be
That thy soft,
silvery breast
So rarely is at rest?"

"E'en when there wind is none,
And thou art let alone,
Thy heart, self-troubled, will Keep palpitating still.

"Ah, well may thy unrest Emblem the human breast;
Yea, the great
world around,
Where troubles
so abound!"

"Every lot is happy to a person who bears it with tranquillity." —Boethius.

"There will be a great change in men's characters; those that were as thorns and briers, good for nothing but the fire, nay,
hurtful and vexations, shall become graceful and useful as the fir tree and the myrtle tree." — Mat.
Henry.

a Isa. xl. 6.

b "Here is a warning to all,
that there may be much outward show of religion, in daily approaches to God in His house, while there is no vital piety." —
Wordsworth.

"Their words fly up, their thoughts remain below;
Words without thoughts never to heaven go."

near, with reference to Jerusalem (comp. Dan. ix. 7). Those "far off" are the Jews of the Dispersion. For all who are of the true Israel, (Ps. lxxiii. 1.) the day of realized ideals, of Messianic felicity has dawned. For all but the wicked there is perfect peace."—Pol. Bib. (20) cannot rest, better, "for it cannot rest." mire, etc., "Its waters work up mire and filth."—Lowth.

The Fruit of the Lips (vs. 19).—I. The nature of the blessing which is proclaimed in the Gospel. 1. There is war between God and man; 2. There is war between the higher and the lower principles of human nature. II. The persons to whom this blessing of peace is offered. 1. In respect of religious privileges; 2. Of social advantages; 3. Of moral character; 4. Local distance. III. The influence of this blessing upon its recipient. 1. Beneficial in its operation; 2. Individual in its efficiency; 3. Divine in its agency. IV. Its practical issue. 1. The fruit of the lips is thanksgiving; 2. God creates the occasion and the disposition.—G. Brooks.

21. no peace, ch. xlviii. 22. "Again this warning as to the sole condition upon which God's salvation can be had."—Mat. Arnold.

No Peace to the Wicked (vs. 21).—I. Who are the wicked? 1. Not only the openly ungodly, but those who have misconceptions of the nature of duty and of the character of God; 2. Those who reject Christ; 3. Those who reject the Spirit of God; 4. Those who live after the dictates of their own evil will. II. How it is that there is no peace to wicked men. 1. He loves that which must destroy his peace; 2. He is every moment under the wrath of his Maker; 3. He is especially without peace when he needs it most, as in the day of affliction, etc. Apply:—(1) Seek peace with God; (2) Now; (3) In the spirit of prayer; (4) Let those who have this peace rejoice in it, and make it known.—B. W. Noel.

Our Sin Finding us Out.—Audley was an old English usurer, who used to lend money to the thoughtless young men of his day, at ruinous rates of interest. He counted out the pounds for them, with many well-affected remonstrances on their extravagance, but his pity never led him away so far as to make him forget his securities. As long as he knew a debt to be safe, he was quite indifferent as to delay of payment, and many an unsuspecting victim was lulled into false security by the old usurer's apparent unconcern; and they were only awakened, on some dark and unfortunate day, by the terrible discovery that interest and principal had swallowed up all their estates. Such is the ruinous percentage which thousands will be called on to pay to the great Enemy of Souls, for what are commonly described as "the pleasures of sin." Fear of Death.—William the Conqueror, extremely alarmed on his death-bed, entreated the clergy to intercede for him. "Laden with many and grievous sins," he exclaimed, "I tremble; and being ready to be taken soon into the terrible examination of God, I am ignorant what I should do. I have been brought up in feats of arms from my childhood; I am greatly polluted with effusion of much blood; I can by no means number the evils I have done these sixty-four years, which I am now constrained, without stay, to render an account to the just Judge."

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-EIGHTH.

"How to fast aright." A prophecy against a popular religious error. Comp. Zech. vii. 8. The community is pre-occupied with the question of legal righteousness. By fasting and prayer they hope to hasten the coming of the Messianic kingdom. The prophet says moral reform is needed.—Pol. Bib. 1, 2. (1) aloud, lit. with the throat. This call is made to the Prophet. spare not, ch. liv. 2. trumpet, Ho. viii. 1. sins, esp. of hypocrisy. (2) seek me, reference is to the outward religious zeal shown, wh. God knew was not really the expression of inward feeling. ask . . . justice, "as if they were injured persons, whose rights God did not defend."—Spk. Com. approaching to God, while their hearts were far from Him.

Formalism (vs. 2).—I. Explain it. A form of religion includes—I. Some degree of religious knowledge; 2. Attendance on public ordinances; 3. Membership in the Christian Church; 4. Respectable moral character.

II. Expose its deficiencies. 1. It does not satisfy the great wants of human nature; 2. It does not yield the pleasure found in spiritual religion; 3. It tends to foster intolerance; 4. It is diametrically opposed to the spirit and precepts of the Gospel.—G. Brooks.

3—5. Many prophetic addresses have for their theme the fact that “the ceremonial law had no value except as the expression of a godly disposition.” Comp. 1 Sam. xv. 22; Hosea vi. 6; Amos v. 21 ff.; Isa. i. 11 ff.; Jer. vi. 20; vii. 21 ff. Mic. vi. 6 ff. (3) fasted, the religious act which seemed so suitable to their captive and humbled condition.^c The only fast-day appointed by the Mosaic law was the Day of Atonement.^d thou seest not, comp. Mal. iii. 14. afflicted, etc., by the fasting. find pleasure, rather “business,” i. e. you find opportunity to do a profitable stroke of business.—Camb. Bib. exact . . labors, make your dependents work while you fast. (4) smite, etc., indicating harsh, violent treatment of dependents. voice . . high, R. V., “ye fast not this day so much as to make your voice to be heard on high;”^e God does not hear it. (5) bow . . sackcloth, outward signs of humiliation. “One of the great surprises of the human heart is, that self-denial does not win merit or peace. But assuredly it does not, if love be not with it. Though I give my body to be burned and have not love, it profiteth me nothing. Self-denial without love is self-indulgence.”—G. A. Smith.

Philanthropic Piety (vs. 5).—I. Its ritual is philanthropic service. II. Its influence is gloriously beneficent. III. Its spirit is acceptable to God.—Thomas.

Formalism.—The tendency to turn Christianity into a religion of ceremonial is running with an unusually powerful current to-day. We are all more interested in art, and think that we know more about it than our fathers did. The eye and the ear are more educated than they used to be, and a society as “æsthetic” and “musical,” as much English society is becoming, will like an ornate ritual. So, apart altogether from doctrinal grounds, much in the condition of to-day works toward ritual and religion. We freely admit that the Puritan reaction was possibly too severe, and that a little more color and form might with advantage have been retained. But enlisting the senses as the allies of the spirit in worship is risky work. They are very apt to fight for their own hand when they once begin, and the history of all symbolic and ceremonial worship shows that the experiment is much more likely to end in sensualising religion than in spiritualising sense. The theory that such aids make a ladder by which the soul may ascend to God is perilously apt to be confuted by experience, which finds that the soul never gets above the steps of the ladder. The gratification of taste, and the excitation of æsthetic sensibility, which is the result of such aids to worship, is not worship, however it may be mistaken as such. All ceremonial is in danger of becoming opaque instead of becoming transparent, as it was meant to be, and of detaining mind and eye instead of letting them pass on and up to God. You are men in Christ; do not go back to the picture-book A B C of symbol and ceremony, which was fit for babes. You have been brought into the inner sanctuary of worship in spirit; do not decline to the beggarly elements of outward forms.—Maclaren.

6, 7. (6) loose, etc., i. e. “dissolve every tie wherewith one has unjustly bound his fellow men.”—Fausset. heavy burdens, R. V., “the bands of the yoke.” oppressed, lit. “broken” either with servitude or poverty. Comp. Neh. v. 1—13. (7) deal thy bread, fig. for charity and hospitality, wh. in the East are regarded as cardinal virtues.^b own flesh, “it is claim enough that they are Jews. The tribal divisions have been so much weakened that Israel is now one great clan. Comp. Neh. v. 5.—Pol. Bib.

8. light, the emblem of prosperity. “break forth” is the verb used in ch. xxxv. 6; Gen. vii. 11; Ps. lxxiv. 15, of the bursting of waters through a fissure in the earth’s surface; by a vivid metaphor the dawn was conceived as “splitting” the heavens and flooding the world with light. The same word occurs on the Moabite Stone (l. 15) in the phrase “from the splitting of the dawn.”—Camb. Bib. health, R. V., “healing.” go before thee, further fig. of a people marching, in reference to the return of Jerusalem. rereward, like a rearguard on the march.

Revelation of Light, a Morning.—Mornings have often come alike

^c “Besides the regular fasts of the Jewish religion, there were, during the captivity in Babylon, special fasts appointed as days of repentance and prayer for Israel.” — Mat. Arnold.

^d Le. xvi. 29, 31,

^e Matt. vi. 16—18.

Fasting, in the sense of a refusal of all food, belongs to ceremonial religion and had its origin in Eastern lands. Fasting in its most spiritual form, as personal self-restraint, will-mastery over habits and preferences, must ever be binding upon all Christians.—K. Tuck. “In these vs. the Prophet says nothing of bodily mortification. He only names the works of righteousness towards the oppressed, and beneficence towards the poor and needy.” — Nagelsbach.

^b Comp. Mat. xxv. 35, 36.

“Hospitality is a virtue wh. has always held the very first rank among the Oriental nations; and any symptom of indisposition to exercise it has ever met with execration.” — Henderson.

Desolate homes, starving children, patient women from whose hollow eyes the worm looks out already, men smitten from their manhood into feebleness until they have lost almost all remembrance of the bold and brave beings they were—these are our clients. "Inasmuch," etc.—that is our never-failing argument. "Ye know the grace," etc.—that is our example. "She hath done what she could"—that is our measure.—W. M. Punshon.

Ps. xcvi. 11, cxil. 4; Pr. iv. 18; Mal. iv. 2. "As the earth, either in its beauties or deformities, can only be seen by the light of the sun; so man can only discover his true moral character before God by the light which shines upon him from the Sun of righteousness." — J. Bate.

a "The pointing of the finger is a gesture of derision." — J. A. Alexander. "Indicative of mockery and insolence towards the pious and persisting part of the nation." — Mat. Arnold.

b "Draw it out of its narrow self-love, that it may go along with the dole wh. passes from thy hand." — Spk. Com.

a "When you go in at the gate of an Eastern house, you find a paved court, a piazza, and doors or windows opening upon it, or upon the garden in the rear. The ornament most prized in a garden is the marble tank. These tanks are often very tastefully cut and ornamented. It is the height of Oriental luxury to spread a carpet on the grass, sit cross-legged upon it, and draw the narghile, or sip a cup of coffee." — Van Lennep.

in Jewish and Christian history. Isaiah awakened the Hebrew nation to a new life. Mediavalism with its dark superstitions, the inquisition with its abhorrent cruelties, did not destroy Christianity. What has been well called the "morning of the Reformation" came. Look back now to Savonarola, and you will see what one man can do to herald a better day in darkest times. "Then"! Not by an accident in history, nor by an arbitrary decree of God; but by obedience to his Word and by the baptism of his Spirit. And beautiful as are all mornings, when the sun touches the clouds with gold, and fills the earth with splendor, and makes dancing sunshine on the sapphire sea, none are so beautiful as the mornings of new moral life for the world.—Pul. Com.

9, 10. (9) Then, when you have returned to righteousness, the yoke, the sign of their oppression, putting, . . . finger, "the finger of scorn pointed at simple-minded godly men." Sign of contempt.* vanity, R. V., "wickedly." (10) soul . . . hungry, probably error in text; should be, "bestow thy bread on the hungry."—Camb. Bib. So the Sept. and Syriac. light . . . obscurity, fig. for prosperity suddenly succeeding calamity.

Buying Heaven.—In Herefordshire there was one very rich man in my parish who had a sudden paralytic stroke when I was away from home for a holiday. He was a common, ignorant farmer, and had come into 80,000 pounds through the death of a brother. He had told me that he did not care for his brother's money because he had as much as he wanted before, and yet he had not given more than sixpence a year for charity. As soon as I returned home, I went down to see him and he said, "The Lord has stricken me and I am afraid I may die. I have sent for you at once that I may do what I suppose is right before God; I want to go to heaven, and I want you to take a hundred pounds for the poor." I looked him straight in the face and said, "Do you think you are going to buy your soul's way to glory by a paltry hundred pounds! Give your money where you like; I will not touch it!" That was rather strong; but blessed be God, the man lived seven years, and was a very different man before he died.—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

11, 12. (11) guide thee, such a man (filled with the spirit of love) will enjoy without intermission the guidance of divine grace."—Delitzsch. drought, "parched places." make fat, or "strengthen thee." watered garden, the Oriental conception of the beautiful and happy.* (12) "Thy sons shall build up the ancient ruins, thou wilt rear again the long deserted foundations, and men will call thee 'Reparer of Ruins, Restorer of Destroyed Places for Inhabiting.'"—Pol. Bib. The importance attached to the restoration of the ruined places shews that what the prophet has in view is chiefly the recovery of temporal and political prosperity. It may also throw some light on the date of the prophecy. The description of the ruins as "ancient" suggests a period considerably later than the Exile (which only lasted half a century), although the argument is not one that can be rigorously pressed.—Camb. Bib. foundations, etc., i. e. wh. for generations had lain bare and exposed.

Under Repairs (vs. 12).—I. Damage has been done.—I. To the Divine image in man; 2. To the relationship of man. II. Damaged man is under repairs. 1. The method is his; 2. The materials are his; 3. The ministries are his; 4. The memorial is his. III. These repairs must be done in time. 1. How much time has been absolutely wasted! 2. How little really improved! 3. The remaining portion is little enough for the work.—H. F. Miller.

A well-watered garden indicates the presence of life. To speak of a garden without life would be unmeaning and absurd, however much may be done by art and skill to create a pleasing scene. This thought has a real application for human souls. We are too apt to confine our ideas of life to the outward and superficial aspects of mere existence. We see around us a great deal of the machinery and parade of life. But the suspicion will force itself upon us that much of this is but the fencing in of uncultivated regions—useless labor bestowed upon barren and unproductive spots which are not "rich towards God." There is the secret of the well-watered garden. Christ emphasizes the life that is in it, and a life, too, which can be deep, and full, and abiding, only as it is centered in the Divine fullness itself. This suggests the value of the promise to ancient Israel. As long as they were a scattered flock, separated from God above all by their evil affections, they were losing life. Their spiritual strength was decaying, they were living in a wilderness where all their powers were parched and blighted, and they were doing what so many are doing now—they were losing their own souls in the mere materialism of a godless and undevout life. We may depend upon it that things are going badly, and even tragically with us, when the roots of a growth towards God are showing no signs. We are made for the achievements of faith: if that life of faith be not in us, "the world is too much with us." Only by being transformed as into "a watered garden" can our true life be secured.—W. Manning.

13, 14. (13) sabbath, see ch. lvi. 2.^a thy pleasure, "thy business" (vs. 3). a delight, source of real joy.^b own pleasure, i. e. business. Pol. Bib., "Not doing thy wonted things, nor minding thy business, nor speaking vain words." (14) ride . . earth, De. xxxii. 13; descriptive of conquest and triumphant possession.^a

The Sabbath (vs. 13).—I. In what light we should view the Sabbath. 1. Holy; 2. Honorable; 3. Delightful. II. In what manner we should employ it. 1. What is forbidden; 2. What is commanded. III. The benefits we may expect from a due observance of it. 1. Delight in God; 2. Victory over our spiritual enemies; 3. The full possession of the heavenly Canaan. Apply:—(1) How reasonable are the requirements of God in His Gospel; (2) How just will be the condemnation of those who disobey them.—G. Brooks.

An Arctic Explorer and Sabbath Keeping.—Dr. Scoresby, of Arctic fame, was a devoted Christian, and not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ amid the pursuits and honors of science. It was in the year 1820 that he introduced on board of his ship the regulation as to no fishing on the Lord's day, to the successful working of which he long after published an emphatic testimony. He always kept up the habit of reading prayers and sermons on board ship, and one of his own prayers, offered in name of the whole ship's company, on setting out on a voyage, has been preserved in his biography, and is singularly rich, and humble, and full of unction. We may notice that, during his stay in Edinburgh, on one occasion, he made the acquaintance of Sir Walter Scott, and, being invited to meet a party at his house on the Lord's Day, wrote in reply—"I fear I cannot have the honor of waiting upon you on Sunday at dinner, agreeably to the arrangement you were so kind and polite as to propose. For some years, indeed, I have declined visiting on that day of the week; though I readily and honestly acknowledge that in this instance the privation is greater than on any occasion that ever before occurred."—Old Tes. Anec.

CHAPTER THE FIFTY-NINTH.

1, 2. "The whole of this chapter is simply the expansion of the first two verses."—G. A. Smith. (1) not shortened, the answer to the question why deliverance was so long delayed. bear heavy,^c dulled with deafness. (2) your iniquities, etc., "instead therefore of finding fault with God, they should criminate themselves."^d hid his face, caused Him to withdraw His favor (viii. 17).

God's Hand Not Shortened (vs. 1).—I. Can Christ save in every part of our fallen world? II. Can the arm of the Lord save the most polluted and despicable of the human race? III. Can the Divine hand save the masses of the fallen? IV. Can the hand of God save men for ever? V. Can the hand of God save to the highest degree of purity and glory? Apply—1. It is of the Lord's salvation of which the text speaks; 2. It is His actual salvation; 3. His ear is open, and must be addressed by prayer; 4. God's omnific hand faith must grasp; 5. The Divine, inexhaustible ability of Christ should engage our grateful attention.—Burns.

3, 4. (3) hands . . blood,^e Is. i. 15. Reference is to the putting to death of the innocent, or to the violence with wh. crime was attended.^f (4) R. V., "None sueth in righteousness and none pleadeth in truth." calleth, i. e. none brings a just suit into court. they trust, etc., Camb.

^a Comp. Je. xvii. 12—27; Eze. xxii. 8, 26.

^b "The observance of the Sabbath has, in all ages, been found essential to the maintenance and prosperity of spiritual religion."—Henderson.

^a In early times and in the warfare of early times the high and rocky situations were also the strong and defensible situations, and therefore he who occupied them was formidable and powerful."—Mat. Arnold.

"A corruption of morals usually follows a profanation of the Sabbath."—Blackstone.

^b "The Prophet merely pauses, as it were, for a moment, to exonerate his Master from all blame, before continuing his accusation of the people."—J. A. Alexander.

^c Isa. vi. 10.

^d "They stood in their own light, and put a bar in their own door."—Mat. Henry.

^e "This, and what follows, is a picture of the sins of the unfaithful part of the Jewish nation during the captivity in Babylon, and in spite of the lessons taught by that captivity."—Mat. Arnold.

^f Pr. i. 11, 12.

* Job viii. 14.

"Opposition seems only to produce evil of a worse type." — Spk. Com.

"You pity the poorly-clad amid the biting frosts and snows of winter, but more to be pitied are they who advance into the winter of declining years, the chill region of death, and the storms of judgment, with no sufficient clothing for their defenceless souls!" — William Guthrie.

"A man protesting against error is on the way towards uniting himself with all men that believe in truth." — Carlyle.

"Truth is the summit of being; justice is the application of it to affairs." — Emerson.

† "Either in relation to God, to their own conscience, or to their fellow men." — Fausset.

Isa. lvii. 21; Ro. iii. 17, 18.

"It is no proof of a man's understanding to be able to confirm whatever he pleases; but to be able to discern that what is true is true, and that what is false is false; this is the mark and character of intelligence." — Emerson.

* "Divine judgments interposed to vindicate the cause of the nation." — Henderson.

"If I do what I may in earnest, I need not mourn if I work no great work on this earth." — George MacDonald.

Bib., "Trusting in emptiness and speaking vanity! Conceiving mischief and bringing forth evil!"

Human Sacrifices in Burmah.—The correspondent of the Daily News at Rangoon sends the following account of the massacres at Mandalay: When the city was built, he says, human sacrifices were offered up. A new monarch usually has a new capital, and the evil spirits are irritated that there has lately been no change of capital, the virtue of the old sacrifices being gone. They have, therefore, plagued the city with small-pox, and to appease them the astrologers declared it necessary to offer up 700 lives—men, women, boys, girls, pounhas, priests, and foreigners. A hundred each of all ranks were consequently buried alive under the towers of the city walls. An attack was made on the Roman Catholic convent unsuccessfully, and a frightful panic prevails at Mandalay, whence the people are leaving by hundreds.

5, 6. (5) cockatrice' eggs, R. V., "basilisk's eggs," refers to the injurious nature of all they undertake, see ch. xi. 8. spider's web,* "they spin vain, foolish schemes, which can only come to nought," eateth eggs, fig. for adopting their principles. crushed, etc., or, "if one is crushed there creeps out a viper," i. e. their words are all evil and their acts are directed to the injury of their neighbors.—Delitzsch. (6) not .. garments, things like "spiders' webs" are useless for garments.

Sin Universal.—The existence of sin; of sin as an acknowledged fact; of sin as an acknowledged evil, which has not only tainted the nature, but has poured its corruption upon every part of man; found everywhere,—alike in the crowded city streets, and among the scantier tribes of the savanna; alike where refinement and civilization gild and soften crime, and where, in the swarthy-bearded Druse, it reigns tameless as the pennon that flutters upon the lance of his djerrid; alike in sordid man and lost woman, in generous youth and smiling babe, in all circumstances, in all countries, in all parallels of latitude, in all diversities of language,—there is no escape, and there is no exception from this disastrous uniformity of evil. The fountain has been corrupted, and the streams of necessity must flow polluted and impure. Every mouth must be stopped, for all the world is guilty before God.—Punshon.

7, 8. (7) feet, etc., Pr. i. 16; Ro. iii. 15. "During the captivity the true believers were persecuted even to the death by their countrymen who had forgotten God." their paths, the ways they wilfully mark out for themselves. (8) way of peace,* which is ever identical with the way of righteousness. crooked paths, as opposed to the straight road of righteousness. Comp. Prov. ii. 15; x. 9, etc.

The Importance of a Man's Thoughts.—A man is as his thoughts. This is the fact and truth on which we may dwell. Any one who would truly judge his fellow-man must know his secrets and judge his thoughts. Therefore man's judgment of his fellow-man is always imperfect and uncertain. God alone can judge perfectly, because he is the "Discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." There is an impression resting on the minds of many religious persons that they have no control over the suggestions that are made to their minds, and no responsibility for the contents of their thoughts, only for the cherishing of the thought and dwelling upon it, and letting it take shape in action; or, as the Apostle James puts it, only when "lust is allowed to conceive, and bring forth sin." This, however, is true only within very narrow limits, and it is altogether healthier for us to accept a large measure of responsibility, even for the contents of our minds; for only then shall we be likely to watch over what goes in as over what goes out.—Pul. Com.

9, 10. (9) judgment,* "our right," i. e. Israel's, as against its enemies (xl. 27). "Redress does not overtake us." Have the self-righteous Jews become penitent? Or are these the words of the humble-minded poor? —Pol. Bib. justice, R. V., "righteousness." light, some sign of the coming redemption-day: but the night still lingers. (10) grope, "along the wall," seeking an outlet. Deut. xxviii. 29.—Camb. Bib. desolate .. dead, R. V., "among them that are lusty we are as dead men." We wander about like ghosts while others are fat and flourishing.

Spiritual Blindness.—It is one of the saddest consequences of sin that the power of spiritual perception continually lessens; the "eyesight" of the soul becomes weaker and weaker. Great truths are less clearly apprehended. Confusion takes the place of distinctness, until at length good is mistaken for evil, and evil for good: "the light that is in us becomes darkness;" the very organ of spiritual understanding misleads us. And the aggravating circumstance is that this failure of the soul's sight takes place "at noonday," when others are walking and rejoicing in the light of the Lord.—Pul. Com.

11-13. (11) roar, as expression of impatience,^b mourn, etc., the dove is noted for its plaintive note.^c "The language of dissatisfaction, grief, and despair." (12) multiplied, "the sense of guilt is so vivid, even in the case of the prophets who know themselves to be the servants of God, that they include themselves in the sinful mass of the people for whom an atonement is needed."—Oehler.^d with us, i. e. known to us, we are conscious of them. (13) transgressing, etc., the forms of sin against God, and men, are here detailed.

14, 15. (14) judgment . . backward, repelled from law court, and society. Better read, is thrust back. fallen . . street,^a i. e. "the market place, where justice is administered, and where she should be preserved upright."—Delitzsch. (15) faileth, R. V., "is lacking," not to be found anywhere. a prey, or would surely be plundered,^b and the Lord saw, "introduces the peroration of the discourse, in which the prophet describes the manner in which salvation shall at last 'overtake' the sinful and misgoverned community. The logical development of the argument seems to be arrested by the conviction that the existing situation is hopeless, and only to be terminated through the personal intervention of Jehovah. This conviction clothes itself first of all in a prophetic vision of Jehovah as He appears to judgment; which is followed by an announcement of the consequences of His interposition for the two classes within Israel and for mankind at large."—Camb. Bib. no judgment, i. e. no just judgment; no prevailing principles of righteousness.

The Righteous a Prey to the Wicked (vs. 15).—It is my intention—I. To establish this fact. 1. This will be found to be true in former ages; 2. Nor is it less true at the present hour. I come now to—II. Account for it. The righteous—1. Irritates and incenses Satan; 2. He reproves and condemns the world. Address—(1) Those who through fear of man are induced to continue in evil; (2) Those who are called to suffer for righteousness' sake.—C. Simeon.

Truth.—The royal diamonds of England cost much, but they are not for sale. The merchant-man who found the pearl of great price sold all he had that he might buy it, but it was never on the market again; he would not sell it. So with truth. The Christian, especially the preacher, should be willing to pay any price for it, but it should not be for sale. No inducement should lead him to give up one jot or tittle of truth, moral, religious, or experimental. It often costs no little for a man to be honest and truthful; to contend "for the faith once for all delivered to the saints;" to get the living truth, which he can learn only in the school of trial; but he should be willing to pay the price of it. It is worth all it costs.—A. C. Dixon.

16, 17. (16) no man, "possessing the disposition or the power to stem this corruption."—Delitzsch. intercessor,^c "because of the prophets' share in the people's sin (vs. 12) no valid intercession can proceed from them."—Oehler. his arm, ch. lxii. 5. In the return from the captivity God's power, not any man's plan, is exalted. righteousness, "zeal for the right, the steadfast purpose to establish righteousness on the earth."—Camb. Bib. (17) breastplate,^a "the inexorable justice of God is compared to an impenetrable coat of mail; His joyful salvation to a helmet which glitters from afar; His vengeance to the cloak worn over the mail, and His wrathful zeal to a mantle. No weapon is mentioned, for His own arm procures Him help."—Delitzsch.

Armor.—The helmet is of continual use. We shall need it as long as our war with sin and Satan lasts. The Christian is not beneath hope, so long as above ground; nor above hope, so long as he is beneath heaven. Indeed, when once he enters the gates of that glorious city, then farewell hope, and welcome love, for ever. He may say with the holy martyr: "Armor becomes earth, but robes heaven." Hope goes into the field, and waits on the Christian till the last battle be fought, and the field cleared; and then faith and hope together carry him in the chariot

"We can make no progress without the full use of all the intellectual powers that God has endowed us with."—Drummond.

^b "We complain loudly and obstreperously, and we complain with whining and moaning; in vain, because our heart is not right with God."—Mat. Arnold.

^c Isa. xxxviii. 14; Eze. vii. 16. ^d "To aggravate the guilt of sin, it is frequently spoken of in the Scriptures as being committed in the presence of, or before God."—Henderson.

^a "Or, in the forum, the place of judicature, usually at the gate of a city."—Fausset.

^b "He as good as surrenders himself to be plundered by all."—Spk. Com.

Ps. xii. 1.

"For sin, like unto a stone that is cast into the water, multiplies itself by infinite circles."—Basil.

^c Such as Aaron, Nu. xviii. 1, 2; of Phinehas, Nu. xxv. 7.

"In his usual anthropopathic style Isaiah represents God as filled with amazement at the discovery that no one should be found qualified to reform and save the nation."—Henderson.

^a Eph. vi. 10-17; 1 Th. v. 8.

"When the oppressors shall come in like an overflowing of the river Euphrates, they shall be broken by the word of the Lord."—Targum.

b "Does the Spirit of God remain, then also does His Word; does the Word remain, then preachers also remain; do preachers remain, then also hearers do; do hearers remain, then also remain believers; and therefore the Christian Church remains also."—Cramer.

He. viii. 10, x. 16.

a The Greek, the Vulg., and the Chaldaic insert the explanatory word Jerusalem.

b Isa. ii. 2-5.

c "The glory of Jehovah is His manifested presence, with allusion to the cloudy pillar and the Shechinah."—J. A. Alexander.

"To prayer, to prayer; — for the morning breaks, And Earth in her Maker's smile awakes."—H. Ware.

d "The kingdoms of the earth are breaking up amid gloom and misery."—Mat. Arnold.

Mat. ii. 1, 2, xii. 20-24, 32.

"God wants you to be ambitious to have good works that somebody can see; light travels faster than sound, and so, with Christians, you see the flash before you hear the report, if they are the right sort."—A. J. Gordon.

of the promise to heaven's door, where they deliver up his soul into the hands of love and joy, which stand ready to conduct him into the blissful presence of God.—Gurnall.

18, 19. (18) deeds, better deserts. islands, here for distant countries, whereon the rebellious Jews may be. No reference here to world judgment based on Israel's sin. (19) So, i. e. when the delivering and redeeming power of God has been so gloriously manifested. when the enemy, etc., R. V., "For he shall come as a rushing stream which the breath of the Lord driveth." "he," i. e. Jehovah, shall make so wonderful a display of His power that all nations shall recognize and acknowledge it.

The Enemy (vs. 19).—I. There is an enemy. II. That enemy has tremendous influence, "like a flood." III. That enemy is unable to overcome the resources of God. Apply:—1. This promise of the Spirit must not discourage watchfulness, but must—2. Inspire hope.—Parker.

20, 21. (20) the Redeemer, "He comes as a Redeemer for Zion." them . . . Jacob, moral preparation for His reception being necessary. (21) my covenant, the new covenant. The inward work of Divine grace, through the Messiah, should be continuous and unchanging.^b My spirit, "the new Church is to be a spiritual Church (comp. xlv. 3; Ezek. xxxix. 29; Joel ii. 28), no age or station is to be excluded from the possession of the spirit."—Oehler.

God's Word in the Home.—Mr. Philip Henry, in a sermon preached in 1659, mentioned it as the practice of a worthy gentleman, that in renewing his leases, instead of making it a condition that his tenants should keep a hawk or a dog for him, he obliged them that they should keep a Bible in their houses for themselves, and should bring up their children to learn to read, and be catechised. "This," said the gentleman, "will be no charge to you, and it may oblige them to that which otherwise they would neglect."—Whitecross.

CHAPTER THE SIXTIETH.

"Poem on Glorified Zion." "Ch. lx. is a prophecy as complete in itself as ch. liv. The City, which in liv. was hailed and comforted from afar, is in ch. lx. bidden rise and enjoy the glory that has at last reached her. Her splendors, hinted at in ch. liv., are seen in full and evident display. In chs. lxi.—lxii. her prophet, her genius and representative, rehearses to her his duties, and sets forth her place among the peoples."—G. A. Smith. 1 O arise, comp. ch. h. 17, lii. 2. Zion is here addressed as the restored city.^a thy light,^b the promised deliverance. glory . . . Lord, the Shechinah of the Godhead: figured as the morning sun, ushering in a new and joyous day.^c

Light in the World.—There is a little church on a lonely hillside where they have neither gas nor lamps, and yet on darkest nights they hold Divine service. Each worshiper, coming a great distance from village or moorland home, brings with him a taper and lights it from the one supplied and carried by the minister of the little church. The building is thronged, and the scene is said to be "most brilliant!" Let each one of our lives be but a little taper—lighted from the Life of Christ, and carrying His flame—and we shall help to fill this great temple of human need and human sin with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God.—Old Test. Anec.

2, 3. (2) people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. all nations (comp. note on li. 4). While Zion is in the light the rest of the world is yet in darkness.^d Lord . . . thee, as the sun rises to quicken and gladden the day. (3) Gentiles, R. V., "nations," so great shall be the attractiveness of Zion.

Light of Revelation in the Thought of God.—Even in the Old Testament that thought was most inaccurate. Even in the ancient nations that loved righteousness there was no entire conception of the nature and character of God. One cannot read the "Republic" of Plato, e. g., without being struck with the accuracy of the thoughts and the beauty of the pictures he brings out, with the power of the argument and the keenness of the criticism; and yet through it and above it all with the darkness, and sadness, and despair. God not known; no real grasp of the eternal goodness; no real thought of the eternal life. Christ came and taught men not only by His stately words, but by His loving life, that God is love. Surely when we feel that no rest can be found in a passing life unless we rest upon God, then we acknowledge the truth of the prophet's saying, "Thy light is come."—Hom. Com.

4. 5. (4) Lift, etc., ch. xlix. 18. Describing the flocking of the nations to the restored Zion, sons . . daughters, those who have been scattered during the exile, nursed . . side, "carried on the side." (5) flow together, R. V., "be lightened." The word which the A. V. translated "shall flow together," and our R. V. "lightened," means both of these. It is liquid light,—light that ripples and sparkles and runs across the face; as it best appears in that beautiful passage of the thirty-fourth Psalm, "they looked to Him and their faces were lightened." Here it suggests the light which a face catches from sparkling water.—G. A. Smith. fear, "shall throb," with a joy at the great deliverance. sea, put for the maritime forces of the Mediterranean. forces, R. V., "wealth."

The Church Triumphant.—With other eyes than ours the Jews must have read these glowing words. They saw in them a fascinating picture of a triumphant people; they saw the Jerusalem of their knowledge and of their love made strong and glorious in some coming time. Their patriotic hopes were kindled and must have been raised to a white heat of intensity as they dwelt on the gladdening, transporting promise. In the midst of surrounding darkness covering the whole earth (vs. 2), Zion shines forth with a light which proceeds from nothing less than the Divine Presence itself (vss. 1, 2). Attracted by its radiant beams, her exiled sons and daughters return from the strange lands whither they have gone into captivity, while from every quarter the wealth of Gentile nations flows to her feet. She trembles for very joy, her heart expands with the fullness of its emotion, as she welcomes her children to her heart, as she receives these treasures into her gates (vss. 4—6). The produce of other lands is laid on the altar of Jehovah, and brightens the lustre of that glorious house (vs. 7). Precious tribute is brought from distant coasts (vs. 9), and they who once contemptuously humiliated her, now build up the walls of her strength and find their safety in her service.—Pul. Com.

6, 7. "The next verses are simply the expansion of these two clauses, —about the sea's flood and the wealth of the nations. Vss. 6—9 look first landward and then seaward, as from Jerusalem's own wonderful position on the high ridge between Asia and the sea."—G. A. Smith. (6) camels, chief beasts of burden on the caravan routes. dromedaries, "young camels." Midian and Ephah, noted for their caravan trade. Sheba, or Arabia Felix; noted for its spices. (7) Kedar, ch. xxi. 17. Nebaioth, a tribe of Northern Arabia. come up, of their own accord. These animals are supposed to seek the altars of Israel. glorify . . glory, lit. "my house of beauty will I beautify."

How God glorifies the Church (vs. 7).—I. The place, the Church. 1. Planned by Divine wisdom, erected by Divine power; 2. Contains special manifestations of the Divine presence and glory. II. The promise. 1. By accepting the services and offerings which are there performed; 2. By making it a place for special communion and fellowship with Himself; 3. By protecting it permanently against all the efforts of hostile powers; 4. By extending its influence; 5. By consummating it finally in the splendor and happiness of heaven.

8, 9. "From the East the prophet turns to the West, and describes the ships of the Mediterranean 'like white doves upon the wing' converging on Jerusalem. These also bring from afar the exiled sons of Zion, as well as rich treasures from the nations."—Camb. Bib. (8) as a cloud, borne rapidly along by the wind. windows, dove-cotes. (9) isles, "yea, to me the ships gather, in the van of the vessels of Tarshish," etc.—Pol. Bib. Tarshish, Tartessus, a Spanish port used by the Phœnicians. the name, i. e. to Jehovah, the name standing for the Person.

The Cloud of Doves.—Everybody knows that large flocks of pigeons assemble at the stroke of the great clock in the square of St. Mark, Venice. Believe me, it is not the music of the bell which attracts them, they can hear that every hour. They come, Mr. Preacher, for food, and no mere sound will long collect them. This is a hint for filling your

* "The nations amongst wh. the Jews are scattered shall bring them back to the Holy Land, with offerings and treasures to restore the Temple service, and rebuild Jerusalem." — Mat. Arnold.

† "It is the custom in the E. to carry the children astride on the hip, with the arms around the body." — Fausset. "Hindu mothers may often be seen carrying a child seated on their hip." — Spk. Com.

• See ver 9.

b "The dromedary is not a two-humped camel but any camel wh. is used for riding purposes." — Van Lennep.

c Ge. xxv. 2, 4; 1 Chr. 1. 33.

"The sunshine, streaming through the windows of the old cathedral, fills the whole place with wondrous and solemnizing lights and shades; and the sunshine of the Divine presence fills the heart and the sanctuary with the only true glory and beauty and joy."

d Isa. xxiii. 10. "God's children love communion and fellowship one with another that they may mutually be comforted and edified in faith; they fly like a cloud, and as doves to their windows; that is, to the house or church of God." — Benj. Keach.

"It is only fire that kindles fire. It is only life that propagates life. It is only spiritual energy that stirs spiritual energy in other accessible and responsive souls." — R. S. Storrs.

"Birds of a feather flock together."

"Here the open gates have their special reason assigned: to admit the ever in-streaming world, with its offerings and homage." — Mat. Arnold.

"Animalism is nothing; inventive spiritualism is all." — Carlyle.

"Because perseverance is so difficult, even when supported by the grace of God, thence is the value of new beginnings. For new beginnings are the life of perseverance." — Pusey.

"I am so impressed with the importance that God attaches to sweet voluntariness that I am often tempted to resolve never to beg a cent for God again, but rather spend my energy in getting Christians spiritualized, assured that they will certainly become liberalized." — A. J. Gordon.

"Thou shalt draw to thyself, and enjoy, all that is valuable of the possessions of the Gentiles." — Fausset.

"The time shall come when every evil thing from being and meeting-house; it must be done not merely by that fine, bell-like voice of yours, but by all the neighborhood's being assured that spiritual food is to be had when you open your mouth. Barley for pigeons, good sir; and the gospel for men and women. Try it in earnest, and you cannot fail; you will soon be saying, "Who are they that fly as a cloud, and as doves to their windows?" — Spurgeon. A Lesson from the Birds.—A writer in "Nature" states that the small birds, that are unable to fly the three hundred and fifty miles across the Mediterranean Sea, are carried over on the backs of cranes. When the first cold weather comes, the cranes fly low, making a peculiar cry. Little birds of every species fly up to them, while the twittering of those already settled may be distinctly heard. But for this provision, many species of small birds would become extinct. So, many converts that are young and feeble need much assistance in seeking Christ. Let those that are strong help the weaker ones in their spiritual flight.

10-12. "The rest of the chapter is occupied with the rebuilding and adornment of Jerusalem, and with the establishment of the people in righteousness and peace. There is a very obvious mingling of the material and the moral. The Gentiles are to become subject to the Jew, but it is to be a voluntary submission before the evidence of Jerusalem's spiritual superiority. God Himself, in evident presence, is to be her light and glory." — G. A. Smith. (10) build . . . walls, gladly rendering service to the Lord's people. (11) gates . . . open, comp. Re. xxi. 25. The continual stream of people will compel the gates to be kept open.^a forces, "wealth," vs. 5. (12) not serve thee, the prosperity of every nation will depend upon its service of the kingdom of God.

Character and Doom of a Corrupt Nation (vs. 12).—I. The character of a corrupt nation. Text implies two things. 1. That there is a certain course of human life which the Bible recognizes as serving the Lord; 2. That nations as well as individuals are bound to pursue that course. II. The doom of a corrupt nation. 1. It is most calamitous; 2. It is most certain. Our subject explains.—(1) National convulsions; (2) The true method of promoting national stability.—Thomas.

13, 14. (13) glory of Lebanon, etc., "a reminiscence of the building of Solomon's temple." (14) sons, the children of those who were their enemies shall recognize the power and righteousness of their God.

Humility.—We have come so much to regard humility a cardinal virtue of Christianity that we may have forgotten that the Christian should be ambitious. I think he should be the most ambitious person on the earth. To whom is the promise of eternal life spoken but to those who, in patient endurance, in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, than which there cannot be a much higher ambition? Humility is sometimes only pride turned wrong side out, just as you turn a garment, and dye it, and refit it. A person says, "If I can get into heaven at last I am willing to occupy a back seat." But Scripture very certainly indicates that you are to seek not only barely to get into heaven, but you are to seek "an abundant entrance," which "shall be given you unto the kingdom of God." The back seats are all spoken for, and God wants us to get as near the throne as possible.—A. J. Gordon.

15-17. "Instead of being shunned and hated by all nations, Zion shall become the joy of the whole earth, her wants being abundantly supplied from the best that the nations can bestow." — Camb. Bib. (15) no . . . thee, i. e. no traveler, trader, or caravan. eternal excellency, "an everlasting pride, a joy for age upon age." — Pol. Bib. (16) suck,^a as in a previous passage kings and queens were to be her foster-parents (Is. xlix. 23), so here she is "to suckle at the breast of nations and their monarchs sustained by their riches." — Briggs. (17) brass . . . gold, the days of poverty, when iron and brass and stone were her only possessions are past. thy officers, etc., "and I will make peace thy governor, and righteousness thy magistrate." — Camb. Bib., Pol. Bib., etc.

The Golden Age (vs. 17).—Morally this will include three things. 1. That for practical atheism there will be godliness; 2. That for dominant materialism there will be spirituality; 3. That for controlling selfishness there will be benevolence.—Thomas.

18-20. (18) wasting, etc., the image of the most perfect security and peace. gates Praise, comp. ch. iii. 26.^a "And thou wilt call thy walls Deliverance, and thy gates Renown." The Deliverance of God is its fortification, and its Fame the gateway of the nations. (19) sun,^b etc., comp. Rev. xxi. 23: "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof;" and xxii. 5. It is not implied that the sun and moon shall cease to exist; all that is said is that the new Jerusalem shall not be dependent on these natural luminaries. But that an actual physical illumination of the city by the glory of Jehovah is contemplated by the prophet can hardly be doubted. The basis of the conception is perhaps to be found in Ezek. xliii. 2.^b—Camb. Bib. (20) days .. mourning, the time of the Divine hiding, and Divine judgment.

Gone into the World of Light.—Never since the great minstrel of the border was borne from Abbotsford to Dryburgh Abbey has the valley of the Tweed been so moved as when the sage of Allerly, Sir David Brewster, was carried to his tomb in the old abbey of Melrose, amidst sorrowing crowds of friends and neighbors, and representatives from the seats of learning and science. There he rests till the resurrection morn, and the stone that marks the spot where he lies bears the simple and appropriate words—"The Lord is my Light."—Old Test. Anec. An Inscription on a Tombstone.—Of all the inscriptions in the metropolis of Glasgow, none strikes a visitor so much as the texts of Scripture inscribed on the monument of Dr. Beattie, who died in his fortieth year. One gives the mortal side: "Thy sun shall go down while it is yet day;" the other turns the medal, and we read the inscription, full of immortality: "Thy sun shall no more go down: for the Lord God shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."—Old Test. Anec.

21, 22. (21) all righteous emphasis on "all."^a the branch,^b the righteous people planted again in the old and sacred soil. glorified, by the goodness and abundance of the fruit.^c For the figure of the vs. comp. ch. v. 1, 2. (22) strong nation, "the smallest will become a clan; the least a large nation."—Pol. Bib. in his time, "as this point of time is known to Him only, the predicted glory will burst at once with startling suddenness upon the eyes of those who have waited for Him."—Delitzsch.

Benevolence of Christianity.—The erection of hospitals and infirmaries for the poor is one of the distinguishing ornaments and fruits of Christianity. You might have traversed the Roman empire in the zenith of its power, from the Euphrates to the Atlantic, without meeting with a single charitable asylum for the sick. Monuments of pride, of ambition, of vindictive wrath, were to be found in abundance; but not one legible record of commiseration for the poor. It was reserved for the religion whose basis is humility, and whose element is devotion, to proclaim with authority, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."—R. Hall.

CHAPTER THE SIXTY-FIRST.

In this passage the idea of the Servant of Jehovah reaches its climax. With its description, comp. xlii. 1—7. "Ch. lx. presented the external glory of God's people. Ch. lxi. opens with the program of their inner mission."—G. A. Smith. 1. The Spirit, etc., used by Messiah of Himself, Lu. iv. 18. anointed, the term is used here, as often in a metaphorical sense. preach, or proclaim. meek, or afflicted. Comp. terms used in Mat. v. 3, 5, xi. 5, 29. liberty, etc., figures takes from the Jewish year of Jubilee.^d opening, etc., or "to those that are bound, complete deliverance."—Henderson.

The Gospel of the Poor.—We shall more clearly see how it is that Christ's gospel is for the poor, if we contrast it with some of the many human schemes which we are assured are an excellent substitute for the gospel of Christ. 1. There is that parody of the gospel of Christ which I will call the gospel of philanthropy. This gospel says educate the poor, refine their tastes, open your museums on the Sunday. These things have softening and humanizing influence, so long as they are not rememberance both shall die. The world is one solid temple of pure gold."—Bailey.

"An ill man is always ill; but he is then worst of all when he pretends to be a saint."—Lord Bacon.

a "The most natural explanation of the last clause is that which makes it mean that the walls shall afford safety, and the gates occasion of praise."—J. A. Alexander.

b Re. xxi. 25.

"These prophecies are already daily fulfilled in part in the Christian Church; but they wait for their perfect accomplishment in the end of the world, and in the second coming of Christ."—S. Jerome.

a Isa. lvi. 13, lvii. 13.

b Or, "the shoot from My plant."

c Jno. xv. 8.

"The Dutch endeavored to monopolize the spice trade, by confining the nutmeg tree to the narrow limits of Bonda, and extirpating it from all other islands where it naturally grew; but the wild pigeons scattered the nuts over the Moluccas and adjoining islands, thus propagating the tree, and defeating the selfishness of the Dutch."

d Le. xxv. 10; Je. xlv. 8, 9.

"A little pebble placed near the eye will intercept the light of the sun; and a little object may keep away from us the smile of God and the sweet sanction of our own conscience."

"If the end of one mercy were not the beginning of another, we were undone." —Philip Henry.

"We cannot serve God by accident. We must want to do it and plan to do it." —Melancthon.

"Liberty is always the child of discipline. They alone are free who are most helplessly bound, but whose chains and fetters do not chafe them." —Edward D. Rand.

^a Is. lix. 18, 19.

"In the multitude of our thoughts within us the Divine comforts do delight our souls; and it is they only that can do it. Miserable are all other comforters, and vain is all the comfort that they administer." —Norris.

^b "To make firm and stable arrangements for securing to them all that follows." —Spk. Com.

^c "The ashes of lamentation for sin will be taken from their heads, and they will be crowned with a bridal diadem." —Wordsworth.

^d Ps. xlv. 6, 7; He. i. 9.

^a Double is used indefinitely to denote a large proportion." —J. A. Alexander.

^b "It is a truth much to the honor of God that ritual services will never atone for the violation of moral precepts, nor will it justify any man's robbery to say, 'it was for burnt-offerings,' or 'Corban,' it is a gift." —Mat. Henry.

made substitutes for religion. But there is a refined sensuousness as well as brutal. These things will not save man. 2. There is the gospel of science. This gospel says to the poor man, "Your condition is the result of inevitable laws. It is the rule of nature that in the struggle for existence the weakest shall go to the wall. If therefore you are weak you must submit to the common lot." This gospel gives no comfort. 3. There is the gospel of socialism. This says, "All men have equal rights. The rich are your oppressors; your poverty is the result of cruel laws made by the rich for their benefit." Wreck these and you will soon correct the inequality. This is a gospel of hate. But the gospel of Jesus Christ is the gospel of power, for it is the gospel of good tidings; of Him who was poor. And what makes this gospel so strong and attractive is that it is a gospel of sympathy. It is also a gospel of hope, because it is the gospel of the resurrection. It is a gospel of brotherhood.—Dean Perowne.

The True Ministry.—The great appeal which Christianity makes to the world is this:—"I come to make human life freer, grander, purer; I come to open worlds in which human life can be more perfectly developed; I come to set man towards man in the relation of brother towards brother; to break the chains of human captivity; to dispel intellectual and moral darkness, and to bring in an unending summer day." —Parker.

2. acc-^{pt}able year, "a year of Jehovah's favor."—Camb. Bib. A year for joy—a day for vengeance. day of vengeance, the day of Divine vengeance upon their enemies.^a that mourn, for the fall of Zion, comp. Mat. v. 4.

3. To appoint, settle, arrange, as a permanent thing.^b mourn in Zion, lit. the mourners of Zion; ch. lviii. 18. beauty,^c R. V., "a garland." for, i. e. "instead of." oil of joy, in time of suffering or grief the oil of the toilet was not used^d garment of praise, the robe suited for a festive season. spirit of heaviness, or a despondent spirit, for which sackcloth might be suitable. trees of righteousness, lit. "oaks," the evergreen being a natural emblem of the righteous (Jer. xvii. 8; Ps. i. 3; xcii. 3).

4—6. (4) build .. wastes, ch. lviii. 12, because not room enough in the former places of habitation. (5) strangers, etc., ch. xiv. 1, 2. (6) priests .. Lord, "as standing between Jehovah and the heathen who have now to be shown how to worship the true God." (Comp. 2 Ki. xvii. 27, 28.) Pol. Bib. "a kingdom of priests," Ex. xix. 6. eat, etc., comp. ch. lx. 6. glory, etc., or "to their glory shall ye succeed."—Camb. Bib.

The True Preacher.—

He was humble, kind, forgiving, meek;
Easy to be entreated, gracious, mild;
And, with all patience and affection, taught,
Rebuked, persuaded, solaced, counsell'd, warn'd,
In fervent style and manner. All Saw in his face contentment, in his life
The path to glory and perpetual joy.

... A skillful workman he

In God's great mortal vineyard: what to prune With cautious hand he knew, what to uproot;
What were mere weeds, and what celestial plants,
Which had unfading vigor in them, knew;
Nor knew alone, but watch'd them night and day,
And rear'd and nourish'd them, till fit to be Transplanted to the Paradise above.—Pollok.

7—9. (7) "Because their contumely was in double measure and shame and spitting was their lot, therefore in their land they shall possess double," their joy will be everlasting."—Pol. Bib., ch. xl. 1, 2. (8) love judgment, this is given as the reason for His gracious dealings when Israel returns to righteousness. robbery,^b R. V., "with iniquity." direct their work, R. V., "give them their recompense in truth." (9) seed, the Orientals valued so highly the retention of blessings through succeeding generations. seed .. blessed, Ge. xxii. 17, 18.

Mosque Built by Fraud.—An incident mentioned by Mrs. Poole, in her work, The Englishwoman in Egypt, shows that even a follower of the false prophet can feel the impropriety of such conduct as the text (according to the Authorized Version) condemns. Speaking of the mosques at Cairo, she says, "Many of these buildings are doubtless monuments of sincere piety; but not a few have certainly originated in ways far from creditable to their founders. I passed by one, a handsome building, respecting which I was told the following anecdote. The founder, on the first occasion of opening his mosque for the ceremonials of the Friday prayers, invited the chief 'Ulama to attend the service, and each of these congratulated him before the congregation, by reciting some tradition of the prophet, or by some other words of an apposite nature, excepting one. This man the founder addressed, asking wherefore he was silent. 'Hast thou nothing to say,' he asked, 'befitting this occasion?' The man thus invited readily answered, 'Yes. If thou hast built this mosque with money lawfully acquired, and with a good intention, know that God hath built for thee a mansion in Paradise, and great will be thy felicity. But if thou raised this temple by means of wealth unlawfully obtained, by money exacted from the poor by oppression and tyranny, know that there is prepared for thee a place in hell, and evil will be the transit thither.' The latter was the case; and within a few hours after he had thus spoken, the only one among the company of 'Ulama who had dared to utter the language of truth on this occasion—to do which, indeed, required no little courage—suddenly died, a victim, as was well known, of poison."

10, 11. (10) I . . rejoice, Jerusalem, or perhaps the prophet in the name of righteous Israel, speaks as anticipating and even already possessing the promised blessings. For the figures comp. vs. 3,^a ornaments, R. V., "with a garland." bride, ch. xlix. 18.^b (11) For, etc., Ps. lxxii. 3, lxxxv. 11; Isa. xlv. 8, lv. 10, 11. bud, or springing shoots. all the nations, or universally.

Conversion of the World (vs. 11).—I. The comparison here instituted between the natural and the moral world—barren if not cultivated, fruitful when brought under cultivation. 1. So are those countries that are destitute of spiritual cultivation; 2. By the Gospel a great change is wrought; 3. This effected by the instrumentality of man; 4. But the power that effects it is God's alone. II. The change itself which is predicted in it. 1. The change described; 2. The excellency of it. Apply:—(1) What you should seek for yourselves; (2) What you should desire for the world at large.—C. Simeon.

Joy in the Divine Adornings.—A lady once took me into her garden, and I found there beds filled with all kinds of beautiful flowers; but at the end of the garden I came to the edge of a steep precipice, and as I stood looking down at the great black rock beneath, I thought what a dreadful place that would be to fall down. "Come with me," said the lady, "and I will show you something beautiful." She led me round to the foot of the rock and desired me to look up, and when I did I could see no rock, it was completely covered with beautiful white roses. Oh, thought I, that is just a picture of a poor sinner; he is a black, unsightly thing like that rock, but the "Rose of Sharon" comes and covers him; and when God looks, he cannot see the sinner, for between is Christ, and He covers him with the spotless robe of His own righteousness.—Richard Weaver. Christ Covering the Sinner.—An American citizen had been condemned in a Spanish court, and was to die; but the consul interposed and declared that the Spanish authorities had no power to put him to death. Being determined to save him, he was wrapped round in the flag, the stars and stripes. "Now fire if you dare," he said. "If you do, you defy the great nation represented by this flag." There stood the man, and before him the soldiers, and yet he was invulnerable as though in a coat of mail. So is the sinner wrapped round by the blood-red robe of Christ.—Old Test. Anec.

CHAPTER THE SIXTY-SECOND.

Intercession for the Salvation of Zion, with further Predictions of Her Glory. Although the chapter is commonly treated as forming along with ch. lxi. a single discourse, it has a distinct character of its own, and "Satan was the first that practiced falsehood under saintly show, deep malice to conceal, couch'd with revenge."

—Milton.

"Oh, to drop all lying and craftiness! to lay the ear to the heart of dear old Earth, and then rise up and speak her murmured truths!"—Ferdinand Blanchard.

"It seems impossible to understand

How joy and sorrow may be hand in hand.

Yet God created when the Earth was born

The changeless paradox of night and morn."

—William H. Hayne.

a "Jerusalem may be here personified. Instead of any longer sitting in the dust, in squalid attire, and with a downcast look, she is decked in the most splendid festal garments." —Henderson.

b Re. xix. 7, 8. xxi. 2.

"The dear Lord's best interpreters

Are humble human souls."

—Whittier.

"Providence throws a veil of obscurity over its deepest designs, and the seed of glorious futures lies slumbering in the rough husk until the appointed time for its germination and growth."

"Corrupted human nature is not made to yield the fruits of holiness without toll. Every conversion represents more labor than can be made to appear to the eye."—

Wm. Jackson.

^c "For these blessings (of ch. lxi.) the Prophet will not cease to pray and wrestle until they arrive, and the glorious salvation of the renewed Zion shines forth."—Mat. Arnold.

^d "Until her Just One go forth as brightness, and her Saviour be lighted as a lamp."—Vulgate.

^a Azubah was the name of Jehoshaphat's mother, 2 Chr. xx. 31.

^b Hephzibah, or "My delight in in her," was the name of Hezekiah's wife, 2 Ki. xxi. 1.

^c Isa. ltv. 4—6; Re. xxi. 2—4.

"Let death do what it will, there is just one thing it cannot destroy, and that is life."—George Macdonald.

^d "It bodes well to a land when its own natives and inhabitants are pleased with it, prefer it before other lands, when its princes marry their country, and resolve to take their lot with it."—Mat. Henry.

"Both prosperity and adversity tend to make us forgetful of our God. Even the steady ongoing, that has no ups and downs, makes the thought of God fade in our minds. So we need the witness of our watchers, our praying men, and their muzzlin, or call to prayer."—R. Tuck.

^a "The enemies of Israel having all been swept away by the powerful judgments of God, is perhaps better regarded as the last member of the Trilogy commencing with ch. lx. There are three clearly marked sections: 1—5; 6—9; and 10—12.—Camb. Bib. 1, 2. (1) will I, the speaker is apparently the Prophet,^c from the work described in lxi. 1—3. as brightness, or light shining out of darkness.^d (2) new name, symbol of a new character and a new relation to God. Rev. ii. 17, iii. 12; Isa. lxxv. 15. This new name is a mystery yet to be disclosed.—Camb. Bib.

The Prevailing Inefficiency of the Church and the Remedy (vs. 1). —I. The prevailing inefficiency of the means employed for promoting the cause of religion. 1. Not doctrinal unsoundness; 2. Not strife; 3. Not lack in the system; 4. But power, earnestness. II. The means by which we may be aroused to that high earnestness which properly belongs to the Christian profession. 1. We must be impressed with the sin of apathy; 2. We must have a due sense of our mission; 3. We must individually possess an interest in the cross of Christ.

3, 4. (3) in the hand, not his chief crown, but yet a crown, which he has wrought and glories in. (4) Forsaken, Heb. Azubah,^a wh. strikingly contrasts with Hephzibah.^b Beulah, or married.^c

The Church a Royal Diadem (vs. 3).—I. In what estimation God holds His Church and people. 1. As an emblem of His power; 2. As a monument of His love; 3. As an object of His peculiar care. II. The interest which we also, from this consideration, should take in their welfare.—Simeon.

The Music of a Promise.—When Ulysses passed by the island of the syrens, the classic story tells us that, to save himself from their snares, he bound himself with mighty thongs to the masts, and secured his sailors' safety by filling their ears with wax, that they might not be bewitched. But when the sweet singer, when Orpheus, voyaged by the same syren island, he bound himself to no mast. He started a sweeter, nobler music than the syrens could ever reach, and so sailed by in triumph. If we are to win men and keep men—men who have been charmed with the syren voices of the world all the week—our melody must be one that comes down from heaven; the music of forgiveness and mercy, of grace and help, of God's love, and God's care, and God's everlasting throne.—Pul. Com.

5. sons marry, etc., the harshness of the conception is obvious; and it is hardly relieved by pointing to the double meaning of the verb ba'al ("marry" and "possess"). Lowth and others, by a slight emendation of the text, read "so shall thy Builder (Jehovah) marry thee." (So Cheyne, who refers to Ps. cxlvii. 2: "Jehovah is the builder up of Jerusalem.")—Camb. Bib.⁴

God's Delight in His People (vs. 5).—I. God's relation to His people. 1. The words primarily relate to the Jewish Church; 2. They may also be applied to the Church of Christ. II. His delight in them. 1. No earthly joy superior to that which a bridegroom feels on his wedding day; 2. Such is God's delight in the objects of His choice. Apply:—(1) Let us all desire this high honor; (2) Let those who stand in this near relation walk worthy of it.—C. Simeon.

6, 7. (6) watchmen, "Jehovah gives to the restored Jerusalem faithful prophets, whom he stations upon the walls of the city, that they may see far and wide and be heard afar off."—Delitzsch. make mention, R. V. "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take ye no rest." not silence, i. e. never cease from urgent intercession. (7) no rest, lit. silence. "Constrain Him to utter His decree for Zion's salvation."

Note on vs. 6.—The image in this place is taken from the temple service, in which there was appointed a constant watch day and night by the Levites. Now the watches in the East, even to this day, are performed by a loud cry from time to time by the watchmen, to mark the time, and that very frequently, and in order to show that they themselves are constantly attentive to their duty. "The watchmen in the camp of the caravans go their rounds, crying one after another, 'God is one, He is merciful,' and often add, 'Take heed to yourselves.'"—Tavernier.

8, 9. (8) arm, etc., Ps. lxxxix. 10. The instrument of accomplishing His will and purpose. sons . . stranger, members of foreign nations. (9) gathered . . eat, the indication of national security and tranquility.^a holiness, R. V. "sanctuary," they will enjoy again the sacred harvest feasts. Deut. xiv. 22—27.

10, 11. (10) Go through, comp. ch. xl. 3. In imagination, the triumphant return seems already begun. prepare, etc., the few, but now thoroughly earnest inhabitants of Zion are commanded to "go out and make level the way for the return of the great mass of the people."—Pol. Bib. a standard, for the people to rally round.^b (11) daughter of Zion, here meaning the rightful inhabitants of Jerusalem. his work, R. V. "his recompence."

Go Through the Gates (vs. 10).—I. There are gates which we cannot help going through,—the gate of life and the gate of death. II. There are gates through which we should escape,—the gate out of sin; out of temptation; out of bondage. III. There are gates through which we should strive to enter into the kingdom of grace,—by the gate of repentance; by the gate of faith; by the gate of obedience. IV. There are gates which shut us in for eternity,—there is the gate of hell and the gate of heaven. —J. Bolton.

Hinderers.—The point of interest here is that, so far as Jehovah was concerned, all things were arranged for the return of the exiles, and the restoration of the long-depressed nation. But some men were hindering the return by their hesitations and doubtings and selfishnesses. Therefore Jehovah pleads with all who trust his Word, urging them to clear the way of the people, and get these hindrances moved out of their path. There are always hinderers to every good work, and there is always the Lord's call to us not to let these hinderers do their evil work. They take the heart out of all good schemes, and often do much worse mischief than the active opponents, because they are a foe within the city, and have deceptive ways which are seldom fully recognized. Removers of Hindrances.—Men of firmness and persistency are needed in every sphere of Christian enterprise; and it is all the better if they have some pleasantness and even humor, and can remove hindrances without offending hinderers. Men of faith are always needed, who, clearly seeing what God would have done, go steadily on towards its accomplishment, refusing to turn aside either to the right hand or to the left. If we cannot, or will not, help toward the on-coming of Christ's kingdom, at least we can get out of the way of those who will work.—Pul. Com.

12. holy people, vs. 2, ch. lxi. 6. redeemed, ch. xxxv. 9, 10. sought out, "much sought after, a city in which men will gladly settle and which never again will be without inhabitants."—Delitzsch. "Men would resort to her to see her glory and to examine into the wonders which God had wrought for her."—Spk. Com.

The Constitution of the Church.—Jerusalem was a glorious city, the pride of every pious Jew, the yearly resort of the tribes. It was the centre of the nation's religious life, the rallying-point of their religious affections. Such the Church of Christ ought to be to us. It is a society of men and women regulated by the laws of Jesus Christ, and it goes in Scripture under the figure of a city, because God is its Architect and Ruler. "The one Lawgiver in the Church is the Lord Jesus Christ, and its one statute-book is the Bible." It exists for the mutual benefit of its members and the defence and propagation of the truth (1 Tim. iii. 15). The Church, then, is a witness for Christ, wherein He displays the wonders of His redeeming grace. How distinguished the honor! how lofty the privileges! how great the obligations of those who are citizens of the spiritual Jerusalem!—Wm. Guthrie.

CHAPTER THE SIXTY-THIRD.

Oracle of vengeance on Edom, representing the final triumph of Jehovah. 1. Who is this, a conqueror, with blood-stained garments, is supposed to appear. Edom, "is specially brought forward as an object of judgment (Jer. xlix. 7; Isa. xxxiv.; Ezek. xxxv.) as a type of those nations which are nearest to the kingdom of God, but only oppose that kingdom with the more deadly hatred."—Oehler. Bozrah? a place in Edom. speak in righteousness, or speak truly. "This conqueror is the most perfect tranquillity shall reign throughout the land, and those who may go up to worship at Jerusalem shall enjoy unmolested the fruit of their labor." — Henderson.

^b Isa. lx. 3.

"I like the man who faces what he must. With step triumphant and a heart of cheer, Who fights the daily battles without fear; Sees his hopes fall, yet keeps unflinching trust That God is God; that somehow, true and just His plans work out for mortals."

"True to thyself and others; swerving not From what the voice within pronounces good.

Who lives well, dies well." —R. H. Stoddard.

"When we find anything particularly well done, we may be sure that the worker is broader and taller than the work." —Julian Hawthorne.

"Hypocrites do the devil's drudgery in Christ's livery." —Matthew Henry.

"Self reverence, self knowledge, self control, These three alone, lead life to sovereign power." —Alfred Tennyson.

"And not by our flaws will God judge us; His love keeps our noblest in sight." —Lucy Larcom.

a Ps. xlv. 3, 4.

"Who treads the path of love and loss,
With humble steps and head bowed down,
May bear on earth the heaviest cross,
But wears in heaven the brightest crown." —
George Arnold.

"We must all rise so high into the Spirit of the eternal God that we can take men, straw and chaff and all, and gather them with the many imperfec-tions of the vehicles in which they grow." — Beecher.

"Life is joy and
love is power,
Death all fetters doth un-
bind; Strength and wisdom only flower
When we toil for all our kind." — James Russell
Lowell.

"Deep, unspeak-able suffering may well be called a baptism, a regeneration, an initiation into a new state." — George Elliot.

"He loved much! — that is gospel good,
Howe'er the text you handle;
From common wood the cross was hewed,
By love turned priceless sandal." —
J. R. Lowell.

"Let us only take care that,
by the glance
being turned inward or strained
onward or lost
in vacant reverie, we do not

Jehovah and Rev. xix. 13 in its representation of the triumph of the Messianic Word of God has this passage in view."—Briggs.

A Mighty Saviour (vs. 1).—I. What are we to understand by the words, "to save"? II. How can we prove that Christ is mighty to save? III. Why is Christ mighty to save? 1. Because of the infinite efficacy of His atoning blood; 2. By the infinite energy of the Holy Spirit. IV. What are the inferences that are to be derived from the fact that Jesus is mighty to save? 1. That ministers should preach in faith, nothing wavering; 2. That those who pray should pray on; 3. That those who are not saved should at once hope in His mercy.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Edom on the Skirts of Palestine.—Sin hangs on the borders of goodness everywhere, as just across her southern boundary-line Edom always lay threateningly upon the skirts of Palestine. We open any page of human history and what do we see? There is a higher life in man. It is imperfect, full of mixture, just like that mottled history of Hebrewdom. But always right on its border lies the hostile Edom, watchful, indefatigable, inexorable, as the redoubtable old foe of the Jews. Always it is the higher life pressed, watched, haunted by the lower; always it is Judah with Edom at its gates. No one great battle comes to settle it for ever; it is an endless fight with an undying enemy. But "who is this that cometh from Edom?" Is it possible that this One that we see coming, this One on whose step, as he moves through history, the eyes of all the ages are fastened—is it possible that he is the Conqueror of the enemy and the Deliverer of the soul? He comes out of the enemy's direction. The whole work of the Saviour has relation to and issues from the fact of sin. If there had been no sin there would have been no Saviour. He comes from the right direction, and he has an attractive majesty of movement as he appears. He seems strong. What does he say to the anxious questioner; what account of himself does he give; what has he done to Edom; and what mean those blood-stains on his robes?—Pul. Com.

Able to Save.—

A lowly Man—He takes my sins, and bears the heavy load;
A lowly Man—He takes my hand, and leads me up the road;
And when I know this lowly Man is my Creator! God!
Oh, this hath solved me much dark speech; and loosed tongues that were dumb!

For all creation round me now a gospel has become;
And what had seemed to me before mere wild, confused Babel,
Is now a fire-tongued Pentecost proclaiming,—Christ is able!
The thunders, in the crashing skies, announce it as they roll;
The lightnings, on the black storm wall, write it in vivid scroll;
And stars repeat it, down the dark, in mystic jewelled light,
The Urim and the Thummim on the breastplate of the night;
And strong Orion shouts to me what slumbered in old fable,
And echoes from eternal night-vaults answer, Able! Able!
And comet, cresting bended heavens, waves echo to the word,
Like waving white plume in the star-mailed helmet of the Lord:
For all creation its evangel utters forth abroad,
Into mine ear, when now I know my Saviour Christ is God!

—W. B. Robertson.

2—4. (2) red, it was noticeable that his garments were deeply dyed or stained. (3) alone, "the keynote of the piece is the loneliness of the Hero. The avenging Saviour has a fierce joy in being alone. We see One great form in the strength of one great emotion."—G. A. Smith. tread them, R. V. "I trod them," past tense all through, to verse 7. (4) day of vengeance, announced in lxi. 2. The time, known beforehand to God alone, has come, a time for annihilation of foes and final deliverance of the true Israel.

The Symbol of the Blood.—This symbol of the blood—and by-and-by, when we turn from the Old Testament to the New, from the prophecy to the fulfillment, we find that it was not only the enemy's blood, but his own blood too, that stained the victorious Deliverer's robes—this symbol of the blood bears this great truth, which has been the power of salvation to millions of hearts, and which must make this Conqueror the Saviour of your heart too, the truth that only in self-sacrifice and suffering could even God conquer sin. Sin is never so dreadful as when we see the Saviour with that blood upon his garments. And the Saviour himself, surely he is never so dear, never wins so utter and so tender a love, as when we see what it has cost him to save us. Out of that love born of his suffering comes the new impulse after a holy life; and so when we stand at last purified by the power of a grateful obedience, it shall be said of us, binding our holiness and escape from sin close to our Lord's struggle with sin for us, that we "have washed our robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."—Phillips Brooks.

5, 6. (5) none to help, against these enemies. Notice that this whole passage does not refer to the suffering of the Messiah, but to the awful victory of Jehovah over His enemies. The blood is theirs, not his own on His garment. (6) tread, "and I stamped upon the peoples in my wrath, and broke them to pieces in my fury, and spilled their juice on the ground."—Pol. Bib. There was a fulfilment of this vision in the days of the Maccabæans, also upon the enemies of Messiah in the destruction of Jerusalem A. D. 70.

Supernatural Assistance.—The belief of a supernatural assistance is so reasonable, so consonant to our ideas of the Divine goodness and of human frailty, that philosophers, even in the heathen world, were sensible how much it was wanted, and have expressly asserted that, without Divine assistance, no man could make progress either in wisdom or virtue. What reason suggested to them, revelation has ascertained to us, which represents us as temples and habitations of the Holy Spirit.—G. Carr.

7. mention, here begins a new section, extending to lxiv. 12. Israel's Prayer: "A liturgical composition of great historical and theological interest."—Pol. Bib. according to all, "as is seemly for all," etc.

Loving-Kindness of the Lord (vs. 7).—I. What there is in the loving-kindness of the Lord that deserves particular attention. 1. Its freeness and sovereignty; 2. Its richness and variety; 3. Its constancy and continuance. II. In what manner and for what ends we should notice it.—Simeon.

8, 9. (8) for he said, "the retrospect goes back to the beginning of the nation's history, when Jehovah's affection for the people was unimpaired." Comp. Hos. xi. 1; Ex. xv. 2. children . . lie, R. V. "deal falsely," and He became to them a Saviour."—Pol. Bib. (9) he was afflicted, nearly all commentators now reject this reading and accept, "No angelic messenger, but His own presence delivered them."—Pol. Bib. in his love, De. vii. 7, 8.

The Love of God.—Mr. Spurgeon, a few years before he died, went to visit a friend who had built a new barn on which was a weather-vane and on that weather-vane the text, "God is love." Mr. Spurgeon said, "Do you mean that God's love is as changeable as the wind?" "No," said his friend; "I mean to say that God is love whichever way the wind blows."—D. L. Moody.

The Kingdom of God.—

I say to thee, do thou repeat
To the first man thou mayest meet,
In lane, highway, or open street,—

That he, and we, and all men move
Under a canopy of love
As broad as the blue sky above;

That doubt and trouble, fear and pain

And anguish, all are shadows vain;
That death itself shall not remain;

That weary deserts we may tread,
A dreary labyrinth may thread,
Through dark ways underground be led,

Yet if we will one Guide obey,
The dreariest path, the darkest way,
Shall issue out in heavenly day.

And we on divers shores now cast,
Shall meet, our perilous voyage past,
All in our Father's house at last.

And e'er thou leave him, say thou this Yet one word more; they only miss

The winning of that final bliss,

miss our turn of service, and pass by those to whom we might have been sent on an errand straight from God." — Elizabeth Charles.

"A loving spirit is its own reward. Its love may not be returned, but its love cannot be lost. The gain of loving and its reward is—in loving"—
Sunday School
Times.

"The casting down of our spirits in true humility is like throwing a ball
on the ground, which makes it
rebound the higher towards heaven." — John Mason.

a "From this vs. to the end of the foll. ch.
God's people are provided with a formulary of confession and supplication, couched in the
elegiac form, pathetic and elegant." — Henderson.

a "The expression of a reasonable expectation of what the Jewish nation would have proved, considering the peculiar relation into wh.
they had been brought to Jehovah." — Henderson.

b "In all their affliction He did not afflict them,"
i. e., so as to abandon them to it, or leave them in it,
without pity or deliverance." —
So the Targums.
"If there is a right thing to be done, and we seem to pass through a wrong thing on our way to it,
depend upon it
there's another way to it and a better one, and it is our own fault, and not God's, that we do not find it."
—Edward Gannett.

"God knows forever the thoughts of His creatures; knows their true value. Therefore before Him it were but vain that a pretense were offered for true devotion."—Tracy Robinson.

^c Ex. xv. 24; Nu. xiv. 11; Ps. lxxviii. 56, xcv. 3.

^d Ac. vii. 51.

"A man who is filled with the Holy Spirit will have an undoubted assurance of his sonship; moreover he will be cleansed from the power and love of in-dwelling sin; he will be tempted, but will find that his inner nature is like a tinder-box which has become damp. The devil will still try to strike his matches upon him, but the man will not respond. He will be so saturated with the Holy Spirit that there will be no response as in other days."—F. B. Meyer.

^a "As the cattle go instinctively down to sheltered places for their rest, so Israel was led to places of rest and security."—Mat. Arnold.

"A man who would have God's guidance must be willing to make spiritual things his main 'business.'"—H. C. Mabie.

"When God beckons you forward he is always responsible for the transport."—F. B. Meyer.

"Every regenerated soul sets out on its voyage with an invisible Captain

Who will not count it true that Love,
Blessing, not cursing, rules above,
And that in it we live and move.

And one thing further make him know That to believe these things are so,—

This firm faith never to forego,
Despite of all which seems at strife
With blessing, all with curses rife,—
That this is blessing, this is life.
—R. C. French.

10, 11. (10) rebelled: in all their history down to and including the exile. (Comp. xlii. 24, 25). holy Spirit,^c "implies that in the Spirit Jehovah acts as a person. The way is prepared in the O. T. by the doctrine of the Malakh and the Spirit for the N. T. doctrine of the Trinity."—Oehler.^d (11) he remembered, i. e. Israel remembered. where is he, for under judgment God seems to men as if He had forsaken them. shepherd, here Moses.

Vexing the Spirit (vs. 10).—The Spirit of God is styled—1. The Spirit of truth; 2. Of grace; 3. Of faith; 4. Of contrition and repentance; 5. Of love; 6. Of power and life; 7. Of holiness; 8. It is a heavenly Spirit. Show how in each case a man may vex the Spirit of God.—J. Howe.

Grieving the Spirit.—Among the weapons of the spiritual warfare we read of the "sword of the Spirit," as though the activity of the Christian depended on the Spirit. The highest attainments of Christian life have been made, not by quiet folk, who set themselves only on personal culture, but by active folk, who have gone forth to witness for God, taking their lives in their hands. Wherever there is shrinking back from active service—which is virtual rebellion—the Spirit is grieved. We are grieved when we see a man with great powers abusing or neglecting to use them. The Spirit would act through our energies, and is checked if we hold our powers back from him. And we suffer ourselves. The spiritual sluggard's garden will surely be like the natural sluggard's. Thorns and thistles will spring up and riot there. If he would but toil, and sow, and weed, and train, the dews and rains and sunshine would help on his work. This is the reason of our barrenness, not that we have had no dews from heaven, no Spirit of God with us, but that we have neglected our part of the work, and, withholding our loving obedience and active service, have grieved his Holy Spirit.—Pul. Com.

12—14. (12) that led them, etc., R. V. "that caused his glorious arm to go at the right hand of Moses," i. e. enabled him to work miracles. dividing, etc., Ex. xiv. 21. (13) deep, of the Red Sea. wilderness, i. e. prairie, flat pasture land, comp. Ps. cvi. 9. (14) as a beast, who goes down into the sheltered and fertile valleys for food and rest. caused him to rest, i. e. brought him (the nation) to the resting place, the promised Land.

God's Constant and Personal Supervision of His People.—The following is an incident of travel in which light is thrown upon a beautiful expression of Isaiah, "That led them as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble." Two English gentlemen were conveying their horses across the wilderness to be used in Palestine. The journey lasted for more than six weeks, and during all that time these horses were only occasionally mounted; they were led by hand almost every step of the way, being watched over with particular care by special attendants, that they might take no harm from the somewhat rude ordeal to which their owners thought it well to expose them. And when I saw those two horses led thus carefully through the rocky desert, and marked how carefully the guides picked out the easiest tracks for them, and paid continual attention to their food, and to their health, and to the state of their hoofs, which were sorely tried by the hard and burning soil on which they trod, I could neither help recalling this passage in Isaiah, nor recognizing in the picture an illustration of the prophet's idea. Each master would take the bridle of his steed upon his arm, and would walk beside him, encouraging him with kindly words. Especially when the track led over one of the frightful passes of the Sinaitic region, where a sort of staircase of slippery rock leads up or down on the edge of a yawning ravine, the master would be sure to give his personal aid in guiding his terrified favorite safely over so perilous a place. I can fancy I see the picturesque group at this moment; the skilful Arab groom and the affectionate English master busied in restraining the snorting, rearing creature whose reluctance taxed all their patience and gentle force. One time they would cover his eyes, that he might not see all the danger that lay in front of him; at another they would urge him forward with mingled caresses and blows; sometimes they would stoop down to plant his feet in the securest spots, and when safe ground was reached at length, they would lavish a thousand endearments upon him, as though he had verily done something worthy of reward and praise, instead of owing all his success to the wisdom and care of his anxious guides.—Old Test. Anec.

15, 16. (15) Look down, Ps. lxxx. 14. zeal, R. V., where is thy zeal and thy mighty acts? The yearning of thy bowels* and thy compassions are restrained toward me. (16) Abraham, etc., though in exile, and seeming aliens, they yet were God's people. They humbly cling to their relationship, "Thou art our Father." our redeemer, R. V. "our redeemer from everlasting is thy name."

God's Relation to the Good (vs. 16).—Consider this as a fact—I. Most encouraging under trial. The word Father implies—1. Spiritual causation; 2. Spiritual resemblance; 3. Spiritual education; 4. Spiritual providence. Redeemer implies—(1) Original captivity; 2. Present deliverance. II. As a fact independent of man's acknowledgment, whether by—I. Politically; 2. Scientifically; 3. Ecclesiastically great men.—Thomas.

17—19. (17) made us to err, "by His great anger, revealed in these calamities, Jehovah had hardened the character of the people and made it seem vain to serve God."—Pol. Bib. (18) possessed, held possession of the promised land and holy city. adversaries, Babylon, and the other heathen nations. (19) R. V. "we are become as they over whom thou never bearest rule; as they that were not," etc., so far as the manifestation of God is concerned it would be hard to distinguish between Israel and the nations round about."

Origin of a Wicked Heart.—A caviller once asked Dr. Nettleton of America, "How came I by my wicked heart?" "That," he replied, "is a question that does not concern you so much as another, namely, how you shall get rid of it. You have a wicked heart, which renders you entirely unfit for the kingdom of God; and you must have a new heart, or you cannot be saved; and the question which now most deeply concerns you is, how you shall obtain it." "But," said the man, "I wish you to tell me how I came by my wicked heart." "I shall not," replied Dr. Nettleton, "do that at present; for if I could do it to your entire satisfaction, it would not in the least help you towards obtaining a new heart. The great thing for which I am solicitous is, that you should become a new creature, and be prepared for heaven." As the man manifested no wish to hear anything on that subject, but still pressed the question how he came by his wicked heart, the doctor told him that his condition resembled that of a man who is drowning, while his friends are attempting to save his life. As he rises to the surface of the water, he exclaims, "How came I here?" "That question," says one of his friends, "does not concern you now; take hold of this rope." "But how came I here?" he asks again. "I shall not stop to answer that question now," replies his friend. "Then I'll drown," says the infatuated man, and, spurning all proffered aid, sinks to the bottom.—Whitcross.

CHAPTER THE SIXTY-FOURTH.

1—3. Prayer for a manifestation of God in His might. (1) rend the heavens, as at Sinai. "The heavens appear to be regarded as an outspread tent." flow down, better, tremble, quake. (2) melting fire, R. V. "as when fire kindleth the brushwood, and the fire," etc. (3) terrible things, such were the signs at Sinai, and in the Exodus. camest down, on board, who knows the nature of our sealed orders from the outset, and who will shape our entire voyage accordingly if we will only let him."—A. J. Gordon.

"So much we miss

If love is weak, so much we gain

If love is strong, God thinks no pain

Too sharp or lasting to ordain

To teach us this."

—H. H. Jackson.

a "A powerful argument is here drawn from the tenderness of parental affection, as formerly displayed in so signal a manner in behalf of the nation." —Henderson.

"It was a hard icy winter with them, because the sun had withdrawn." —Spk. Com.

"After all, God best knows what is best for us, and will assuredly do what is best for us. We are safe in His hands. In his own good time he will give us all that we need. Let us not be impatient, or imagine ourselves wiser than he. If he delays to give us that which we desire, we may be sure there is a reason for the delay. In quietness and confidence should be our strength." —Pul. Com.

a Ps. lxviii. 7, 8; comp. Ex. xix. 18.

"By the action of fire on dry twigs or brushwood, as also on water, noise is produced, and thereby the effect of the phenomena heightened." — Henderson.

MI. 1. 4; 2 Pe. XI. 10; Na. 1. 5, 6.

b 1 Co. II. 9.

"That is, although the miracles and miracles of the Exodus and of Sinai were great, yet God has greater in store for His ancient people the Jews. The Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, teaches us that these words refer to the miracles and miracles of the Gospel." — Wordsworth.

"The poets fabulously fancied that the giants scaled heaven by heaping mountain upon mountain. What was their fancy is the Gospel truth. If you would get to heaven, you must climb thither by putting Mount Zion upon Mount Sinai." — Bp. Hopkins.

a Ps. xcvii. 12.

b "The way of God's commandments, and of His providential dispensations." — J. A. Alexander.

Isa. lviii. 2, xlii. 17.

c "The meaning of the whole is this: though we are now punished on account of our transgressions, yet as the ways in which God manifests His goodness are everlasting, we may confidently hope for deliverance." — Henderson.

"Unbroken continuity of mercy for the penitent." — Spk. Com.

d Le. xiii. 45, 46.

i. e. Thy working for us was Thy coming to us, and such coming we ask again.

Prayer for Manifestations of God.—Men do not pray for "lightning" who duly recognize what the "light" is doing. Yet the silent forces are the mighty ones. Atmosphere does more than wind; dew does more than storms; moisture does more than rains. God works his best work silently, quietly. We think big things must make a big noise. It is true of our everyday lives; the things that make our happiness and success are not prominent things that happen occasionally, but the ten thousand little things that pass almost unheeded, and that seem to us too small to hold God. It is true of our spiritual life. Living in the warmth of the smile of God does more for us than any special times of manifestation. It is true of the kingdom of God in the world. It cometh on secretly, no man knoweth how.—Pul. Com.

4. eye seen, etc.,^b R. V. "neither hath the eye seen a God beside thee, which worketh for him that waiteth for him," i. e. from the beginning no man hath heard or seen a God to be compared with Jehovah, who gives His aid to those who wait upon Him. waiteth, implying faith, hope, and patient acquiescence.

The Unknown Blessedness of Heaven (vs. 4).—I. The subject of this declaration. 1. What God hath prepared; 2. For whom God hath prepared this; every one who waits upon God, none who are destitute of true godliness; 3. How God has prepared this; by His ordination and appointment, by the redeeming work of Christ, and the whole process of salvation. II. The declaration itself. 1. How far are these things known? we know the moral state, and the substance of the enjoyment; 2. Wherein are they so great a secret? we cannot conceive the mode and conditions of our future being. III. There are some means by which we may conceive the grandeur of the glory. 1. The cost of preparation; 2. The character of God; 3. What He actually gives of spiritual enjoyment now.

Man's Ignorance of God's Goodness to Him.—A very old weakness of humanity it is to try and find somebody who may be preferred to God, and this comes out of the fact that God is so very imperfectly known, or else is so very strangely misunderstood. A hint is here given us of the reason why there is so much misunderstanding of God—he has to be waited for. It is quite true of him that he is always working for us; but it is also true that he is often a long time in the working out of his purposes. Then, because men cannot get what they want done, done quick, they foolishly begin to think that God cannot do it for them, or will not do it for them. They fail to see the Lord's goodness. The point of impression may be, that in all the reviews we can take of the past, God has surely wrought good things, even if he has been long at the working. We may, therefore, cherish trustful thoughts concerning him, and be quite willing to leave the unfoldings of all the future in his supreme control.—Pul. Com.

5, 6. . . (5) meetest, as a friend,^a remember . . ways,^b instead of walking in their own ways. behold, etc., "behold, thou wast wroth, and we sinned: in them have we been of long time, and shall we be saved?" in those, i. e. in the sins. Can we, who have so long lived in sins, yet be saved?^c (6) R. V. "for we are all become as one that is unclean," etc., in the universal sin the prophet includes himself, comp. Ps. cxxx. 3; Isa. xliii. 27; vi. 5; Dan. ix. 4 ff. 18. unclean, i. e. as those excluded from the congregation.^d fade, Ps. xc. 5, 6.

Human Mortality (vs. 6).—I. Consider the certainty and universality of death. II. Review the various phases of death. 1. Marvellous diversity in death-bed scenes; 2. Fading leaf reminds us of beauty in death. III. Reflect on the gradual approach of death. IV. Observe the season of death. The mission of the leaf is—I. To shelter the weary; 2. Delight the eye of beauty; 3. Nourish and bless the tree of humanity; 4. Proclaim the wisdom of the Creator. V. Ponder the cause of death. Apply:—1. A word of recapitulation; 2. A word of encouragement.—Stems and Twigs. Life as a Leaf.—The leaf has been a recipient from the trunk, drinking in its vital juices, but it has been giving as well as receiving; it has been absorbing sunshine and air and moisture, and has been passing these on to the trunk, doing this in the very act of decaying, so that when the leaf has fallen its most precious part remains behind. We are large recipients from the society to which we belong, but we should be continually giving as well as taking. Before we fall, and even as we fade, we may be, and should be, imparting wisdom and truth, all wholesome and helpful principles, a reverent and holy spirit, by which the community will be the better and the richer when we are no longer seen or even remembered.—Pul. Com.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all—
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death."—Mrs. Hemans.

7, 8. (7) stirreth, etc., rouseth himself from spiritual drowsiness. consumed, Heb. "melted." "Not Thy wrath, but our sin, is the fire which has consumed us." (8) The prayer closes (8—12) with a supplication that God will cause His wrath to cease. our father, 1 Chr. xxix. 10; Isa. lxiii. 16. clay, ch. xiv. 9; Ro. ix. 20, 21.*

The Neglect of Prayer (vs. 7).—I. The nature of prayer. 1. It is calling upon God; 2. It is taking hold of God; 3. It is stirring up oneself to take hold of God. II. The general neglect of prayer. 1. There are some who never pray; 2. Others who only occasionally lift up their hearts in prayer; 3. Others who maintain with constancy an external regard to this duty. III. The consequences of this neglect of prayer; those who are chargeable with this neglect will be visited with the tokens of God's displeasure. 1. He will not reveal to them His glory; 2. He will not manifest to them His love; 3. He will not communicate to them His blessings.—G. Brooks.

The Averted Face.—We are made to enjoy nature and men. We are constituted for every variety of joy. But as one nerve in agony can destroy all the rest of night, so a sin that separates us from God can darken all other joy. Even in the sweet summer-time, when holiday comes, we still need him. The golden-sanded bay, the landscape full of greens and greys, the iridescence of light through the clouds above the mountains, the scent of the pines, the delicate harmonies of color in the fields, the mossy carpet of the woods, the russet roofs of cottages half hidden in the blossoms of summer,—all these, so restful and refreshing, lose their charm if the Saviour's smile be absent, if we cannot hear his voice amid the groves and hills, and at evening feel "we have walked with God to-day." It was true in the old dispensation, when the revelation was through patriarchs, and prophets, and symbols, and sacrifices; but it is intensely true now, that we have seen God in the face of Jesus Christ—that God's averted face is the soul's severest punishment. We have come very near to God. No human priesthood intervenes now. We have boldness of access by faith to the throne of God. No veil is over the holy of holies now. We draw near through the rent veil—that is to say, Christ's flesh. Consequently enjoyment deepens; consequently also the sorrow deepens when I sin. Why? Because the more clearly I have seen the face, the more I feel its averted glance.—Pul. Com.

9—12. (9) wroth very sore, Ps. lxxix. 8. all thy people, this is reminding God of the covenant. (10) cities, plural bec. "if the land is holy all its cities are holy." The phrase does not occur elsewhere. wilderness, or ruin.* (11) house, or temple. pleasant things, or objects of desire. "Our homes, our cities, and all our dear associations." (12) refrain, from redeeming and restoring them.^b

Intercessory prayer.—

When hearts are full of yearning tenderness
For the loved absent, whom we cannot reach
By deed or token, gesture, or kind speech,
The spirit's true affection to express;
When hearts are full of innermost distress,
And we are doomed to stand inactive by,
Watching the soul's or body's agony,
Which human effort helps not to make less,—
Then, like a cup capacious to contain
The overflowings of the heart, is prayer;

"The greater and more original a character is, the less dependent is it on the peculiarities of its environment. It is fed from deep wellsprings within itself." — James Stalker.

e "Unable to mold the m-selves aright, they beg the sovereign will of God to mold them unto salvation, even as He made them at the first, and is their Father." — Fausset.

Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right.

Pray if thou canst, with hope; but ever pray, Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay:

Pray in the darkness, if there be no light.

—Hartley Coleridge.

"And we may always be sure, whatever we are doing, that we cannot be pleasing Him if we are not happy ourselves." — John Ruskin.

a "The picture exhibited of the state of Palestine, in this and the following vs. is still faithfully correct, as it has been for numerous ages past." — Henderson.

b Ps. lxxiv. 10, 11, lxxxiii. 1.

"Humility, like darkness, reveals the heavenly lights." — Thoreau.

"Full oft the lips that never part Hold deeper prayers within the heart."

—Holahan.

The longing of the soul is satisfied,
The keenest darts of anguish blunted are;
And though we cannot cease to yearn or grieve,
Yet we have learned in patience to abide.—French.

CHAPTER THE SIXTY-FIFTH.

• Ro. x. 20.

d "He has called His people, but in vain; they have been obstinately deaf to Him, unfaithful and superstitious. The unfaithful shall be punished; but a faithful remnant shall be saved and restored to Zion, and from them the promises shall take effect." — Mat. Arnold.

• Mat. xxiii. 37, 38.

2 "The gardens and sacred groves of the false gods." — Mat. Arnold.

"From the very nature of salvation it is plain that the only thing necessary to make it of no effect is neglect. Hence the Bible could not fail to lay strong emphasis on a word so vital." — Drummond.

"It is well to organize charity to relieve destitution, but it is a thousand times better to practice charity, — kindness is the true rendering—Love thy neighbor as thyself." — Albion W. Tourgee.

"Heaven's gates are wide enough to admit of many sinners, but too narrow to admit of any sin."—Howells.

Pol. Bib. thinks this chap, parallel to lxvi. 1-5, as an attack upon the Samaritans. G. A. Smith, Delitzsch and others think it God's reply to prayer in lxiv. 1. am sought,^c He has been nigh to His people,^d ready to be sought of them and to answer them, but they have not responded. Present tenses in A. V. should be past. "Render: 'I was to be enquired of by those that asked not, I was to be found by them that sought me not,' etc. The first verb in each line is of the form Niphal, which is to be understood not as a simple passive, but in its tolerative sense: 'I let myself be enquired of,' i. e. 'I was ready to answer,' exactly as Ezek. xiv. 3, xx. 3, 31, xxxvi. 37: 'I let myself be found,' as ch. lv. 6. Jehovah's readiness to hear is contrasted with the people's unwillingness to pray." — Camb. Bib. not . . name, "that did not call on my name."

Good Out of Evil.—Some years ago a young man, in one of the civil wars in Syria, was out on a marauding expedition, and took, for his share of the plunder in an enemy's house, a Bible, which happened to be there; and on reading it he became enlightened, and in the end found the way of life and peace, and was afterwards the means of bringing many of his neighbors to a knowledge of the truth. A church is very soon to be organized in his native village (one of the highest on the range of Lebanon), and that young man is to be ordained its pastor.—F. H. Calhoun.

2, 3. (2) spread . . hands,^e the attitude of invitation; Pr. i. 24. rebellious, see Ro. x. 21. (3) gardens,^f ch. i. 29. altars of brick, lit. "upon bricks," perhaps with ref. to the flat tiled roofs of the houses.

"I Have Spread Out My Hands."—It is a thought full of deep pathos and Divine beauty, that God no less seeks men than they seek him. He in a sense prays them to be reconciled to him. While, therefore, prayer is in one aspect the going forth of active desires after God, on the other hand it is the response to his action upon us. Not a day passes but the gentle mercy and love expressed in his providence offers its silent plea to heart and conscience: "Child of man! I love thee; come to me, and be at peace."

4, 5. (4) graves, custom of worship of ancestors. the monuments, R. V. "the secret places," sacred caves, where familiar spirits were thought to dwell. swine's flesh, in sacrificial meals, a custom of all nations except Jews. broth, in wh. the meat was boiled, and having fragments of the abominable meat in it. (5) holier than thou, should be, "else I sanctify thee." "The words express no Pharisaic sense of superior virtue: they are addressed by a Mystagogue (see on lxvi. 17), or at least a member of a special religious fellowship, to the uninitiated, warning them against the dangerous degree of holiness (taboo) which would be incurred by contact with the initiated (cf. Ezek. xliv. 19). The situation becomes perhaps still more intelligible if we suppose the description to apply to descendants of the colonists settled by Assyrian kings in Samaria."—Camb. B.

Verse 5.—A deep insight is here given us into the nature of the mysterious fascination which heathenism exercised on the Jewish people. The Law humbled them at every turn, with mementoes of their own sin, and of God's unapproachable holiness. Paganism freed them from this, and allowed them (in the midst of moral pollution) to cherish lofty pretensions to sanctity. The man who had been offering incense on the mountain-top despised the penitent who went to the temple to present a "broken and contrite heart." If Pharisaism led to a like result, it was because it, too, had emptied the Law of spiritual import, and turned its provisions into intellectual idols.—W. Kay.

6, 7. (6) written before me, indicating that the sentence against the wrongdoers has actually been pronounced and recorded. their bosom, fig. taken from the E. custom of carrying things in the ample folds of the hyke or cloak. (7) incense . . mountains, this is so often mentioned as a characteristic feature of idolatry.^a measure, R. V. "therefore will I first measure their work," etc., i. e. appropriate punishment to their sin.

Men's Sins Recorded in God's Book.—As far back as the time of Moses, God announced through him that men's sins were "laid up in store with him, and sealed up among his treasures" (Deut. xxxii. 34). The later prophets (Mal. iii. 16), with the Psalms (Ps. lvi. 8), and the Revelation of St. John (xx. 12—15), speak of "a book," or "books, of remembrance," which contain the record of human frailty. The heavenly registers record the acts of men, both good and bad; and in one register seem to be written the names of those whom God regards as "living ones" (ch. iv. 3). This register is called "the book of life" (Rev. iii. 5; xiii. 8; xx. 12, 15). Such are the biblical statements on the subject. The expressions used are doubtless accommodations to human modes of thought, and are not to be taken literally. The great truth, however, which they convey is to be understood in the most absolute literalness. Men's sins will not be forgotten, even when they are forgiven. They are all registered in God's memory; and perhaps it may be found that each man's sins are also registered in some secret place of his own memory, though at present he is unable to recall the greater part of them.—Pul. Com.

8—10. "In spite of the gross idolatries denounced in the preceding section, there is that in Israel which makes it precious in the sight of Jehovah, and ensures for it a brilliant future."—Camb. Bib. (8) new . . cluster, "The juice that shall one day be wine is in the grape-cluster, and the grape cluster is preserved for its sake;" so Israel shall be preserved for the sake of the faithful remnant. (9) my mountains, Palestine regarded as a hilly country. (10) Sharon, the western coast from Joppa to Casarea.^b valley of Achor, on the east side, by Jericho.^b

The Plea of Faith and Pity.—That root that looks dead is not dead, and under careful nourishment it will revive. That soul that seems dead is not dead; there is a seed of life in it still; beneath all its folly, its waywardness, its vice, its guilt, there is a possibility of true repentance; there is a sensibility which will respond to patient, human love; there is a spiritual capacity which the truth of God, made mighty by the Spirit of God, will touch with renewing power, and from which unsuspected beauties and graces will arise. Within the ugliest and most worthless souls there may lie concealed germs of real nobility. Wait long, very long, before you abandon to destruction. Over them, and of them, the Divine voice may be whispering, "There is a blessing in them for the loving, patient, prayerful workman."

11, 12. A renewed threat against the apostates. (11) forsake the Lord, ch. i. 4. troop, R. V. "that prepare a table for Fortune, and that fill up mingled wine unto Destiny;" Heb. Gad, or luck. number, Heb. Meni, or fate, destiny. Babylonian names of two star deities.^c The rites described are the lectisternia, well known throughout the ancient world, in which a table was spread, furnished with meats and drinks as a meal for the gods, cf. Jer. vii. 18, xix. 13, xlv. 17, 1 Cor. x. 21. A parallel in the O. T. religion is the Shewbread in the Temple (or Tabernacle). (12) number you, R. V. "I will destine you unto," etc. called, Pr. i. 24.

Neglect.—A man who has been poisoned only need neglect the antidote and he will die. It makes no difference whether he dashes it on the ground, or pours it out of the window, or sets it down by his bedside and stares at it all the time he is dying. He will die just the same, whether he destroys it in a passion or coolly refuses to have anything to do with it. And as a matter of fact, probably most deaths, spiritually, are gradual dissolutions of the last class rather than rash suicides of the first.—Drummond.

13, 14. (13) eat . . hungry, forcible contrast of the two lots, based upon the two characters. (14) vexation, lit. breaking. Contrast the truly broken and contrite heart.

Contrasted Lots.—Trust in God brings peace and heart-rest. Those who know what soul-rest is, find it easy to sing and give thanks. "The joy of the Lord is their strength." There is good cheer and high hope

^a Isa. lvii. 7, etc.
"The earth is our workhouse, but heaven is our storehouse. This is a place to run in, and that is a place to rest in." — Secker.

"The kingdom of heaven is large enough when you get into it, but the gate is so low that you cannot come in save on your knees." — Talmage.

"The pure in heart not only see God themselves, but they become a medium for transmitting His thoughts to others. It is at last as if God were thinking through every look and movement of the purified soul." — Lucy Larcom.

^a Isa. xxxiii. 9.

^b Jos. vii. 24; Ho. ii. 15.

"The vine-dresser, as he is about to cut down a degenerate vine, espies a rich cluster on one part, and gives orders that the plant shall not be wholly destroyed; so shall it be now with the vines of Jacob and Judah." — Spk. Com.

^c "The description admirably suits worldly and infidel characters, who not only have no regard for, but laugh at religion; have no god but riches, and regard human affairs as governed by chance." — Henderson.

Jer. xlv. 17, 18.
"Noble deeds are held in honor, but the wide world sorely needs Hearts of patience to unrave this, — the worth of common deeds." — Edmund C. Stedman.

"Striving to be good is a very direct road toward Goodness; and if life be so tempered by high motive as to make actions always good, Faith is unconsciously won."
— Donald G. Mitchell.

"Yet blessed, though neglected and despised—

Who for the world himself hath sacrificed,
Who hears unmoved her witless mockery,

While to his spirit, slighted and misprised, Whisper the voices of eternity."
— Coates.

"We think of heaven as something that must visit us from afar, . . . But the new heaven and the new earth will only be the unavailing to us of what already is. . . . To-day, or never—here, or nowhere—is eternity." — Lucy Larcom.

Isa. lxxvi. 22;
2 Pe. iii. 13; Re. xxi. 1.

"The creation of the new heavens and the new earth began with the Gospel, and is consummated at the Second Advent." — Vitrina.

"Consider it (this outerworld we tread on) as a harp,—
A gracious instrument on whose fair strings

We learn those airs we shall be set to play
When mortal hours are ended."
— Jean Ingelow.

"The things of earth
Are copies of the things in heaven, more close, in their souls. "God's servants shall rejoice and sing for joy of heart; they have constant cause for joy, and there is nothing that may be an occasion of grief to them but may have an alloy sufficient for it. But, on the other hand, they that forsake the Lord shut themselves out from all true joy, for they shall be ashamed of their vain confidence in themselves, and their own righteousness, and the hopes they had built thereon. When the expectations of bliss, wherewith they had flattered themselves, are frustrated, oh, what confusion will fill their faces!"—Matthew Henry. Man is so constituted that nothing short of his highest good contents him. Earthly blessings, health, wealth, success, fame, power, glory, leave a void in the heart which nothing earthly can fill up. The worldling is always dissatisfied; always desires more than he has, craves some fresh excitement, desires some "new pleasure." "Hungry and thirsty, their souls faint in them" (Ps. cviii. 5). With God's servants the case is different. A Divine contentedness fills their hearts. They have been given to drink of a water of which "whosoever drinketh shall never thirst," but it "shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life" (John iv. 14). They have God for their Saviour; they are at one with him; and in this communion they rest satisfied; they neither hunger nor thirst.—Pul. Com.

15, 16. (15) slay thee, put generally for "bring judgments on thee." another name "the names of their leaders will survive only in the speech of those who curse, but Israel will receive a new name as much greater than its present name as Israel was greater than Jacob."—Pol. Bib. (comp. Jer. xxix. 22.) (16) God of truth, "using such expressions as, "May the God of truth bless me." By the fulfillment both of His threatenings and His promises Jehovah will have shown Himself to be the God of truth, so that a blessing uttered in His name is certainly effective."

Hindrance to Receiving Blessings.—Why is there no water in the pipes of some of our houses in winter? It is not because the city has no water supply; it is not because the streets are not threaded all through their length from the great reservoirs with a perfect system of piping; it is not that the system of piping does not go into every house. Then why do we turn the tap in vain in our houses? Because there is a block of ice in the pipes. Why is the blessing not leaping and laughing like bubbling water through humanity? It is not because the great ocean and fountain of fullness is not there; it is not because the links of communication between Divine fullness and our emptiness are not formed. Christ is there, and his church is here, and all the channels and tubes and pipes of prayer and promise and supplication are there. What is wrong? There is ice in the pipe. That is the trouble. The frost has come on our hearts—we are frozen and need to be thawed out by the fire of the Holy Spirit.—John McNeill.

17. new heavens, etc., a poetical description of a great moral and spiritual renovation. "With the breaking up of the heathen kingdoms and the restoration of Israel begins a new epoch."

New Heavens and New Earth (vs. 17).—I. The glorious prospect that is here set before us. 1. The event itself will be most glorious; 2. It may be fitly called a new heaven and a new earth. II. The feelings with which it should be contemplated. We should rejoice—1. For the benefits that will accrue to God's ancient people; 2. To the whole world; 3. For the honor that will arise to God Himself. Address—(1) Those who never yet have tasted of this joy; (2) Those who have reason to hope that this new creation is already begun in them.—C. Simeon.

The Divine Exultation on the New Creation.—It was said of the Creator at the beginning that he looked with complacent joy upon his works. All was very good. It was the "joy of God to see a happy world." How much deeper the Divine complacency in moral renewal! Note the emphasis and iteration of the thought. Rejoicing, exultation, is the very key-note of the passage; weeping and the sound of crying is to be as unheard as at the gayest scene of festival. And may we not feel that beneath all the sadness, the discord, the gloom of this enigmatic world, the prophetic pulse of the Divine creation, love, is ever exultantly beating? May we not believe that there is ever before his eye the picture, rising to clearness of outline and brilliancy of color out of Erebus and Chaos, of eternal day, of the new heavens and earth wherein dwell righteousness? There should be in every heart a prophetic sympathy, which should vibrate in unison with these oracles of God.—Pul. Com. The End of the Solar System.—When all the phenomena in the heavens indicate a law of progressive creation, in which revolving matter is distributed into suns and planets, there are indications in our own system that a period has been assigned for its duration, which, sooner or later, it must reach. The medium which fills universal space, whether it be a luminiferous ether, or arise from the indefinite expansion of planetary atmospheres, must retard the bodies which move in it, even were it 360,000 millions of times more rare than atmospheric air; and, with its time of revolution gradually shortening, the satellite must return to its planet, the planet to its sun, and the sun to its primeval nebula. The fate of our system, thus deduced from mechanical laws, must be the fate of all others. Motion cannot be perpetuated in a resisting medium; and where there exist disturbing forces, there must be primarily derangement, and ultimately ruin. From the great central mass, heat may again be summoned to exhale nebulous matter; chemical forces may again produce motion, and motion may again generate systems; but, as in the recurring catastrophes which have desolated our earth, the great First Cause must preside at the dawn of each cosmical cycle; and, as in the animal races which were successively reproduced, new celestial creations of a nobler form of beauty and of a higher form of permanence may yet appear in the sidereal universe. "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered."—N. Brit. Rev.

18—20. (18) Jerusalem, the new, regenerate Jerusalem. (19) rejoice, etc., a beautiful description of the millennial happiness of the Jewish people. (20) infant . . . days, child and man shall alike attain to a patriarchal age. hath not filled, i. e. has become prematurely old. shall be accursed, "premature death, and even death in a moderate old age, shall be unknown; he who dies a hundred years old shall be considered as dying in childhood, or as cut off by a special malediction. The whole is a highly poetical description of longevity."—Alexander.

The Aged Sinner (vs. 20).—I. See the shortness of human life; a man a hundred years old is a wonder. II. See the long-suffering of God; He sees and hates sin, and yet delays the stroke for a hundred years. III. See the malignity of sin; there is no self-restoring power in the soul as is in the body. IV. See the inexhaustibleness of the curse; it is not exhausted by a century. V. See the claims of religion on the aged; depict the dangers of aged sinners.—G. Brooks.

Old Age.—Many an aged saint can testify to the continued goodness of God. Is old age a second childhood? God is a tender parent, unwearied in His attention. Is it a time of diminished comforts? One great comfort is still left, all the more soothing when others are gone. Is the old man lonely, like the last leaf which the storm has left clinging to the tree? The life-long Friend still remains, "when other helpers fail and comforts flee." And the result is that the aged believer is often a "grand old man" still bringing forth fruit, counselling others from his ripe experience, cheered by happy memories and glowing hopes, not frowning on the happiness of others, contented, trustful, loving, kind.

"On he moves to meet his latter end,
Angels around befriending virtue's friend:
Sinks to the grave with unperceived decay,
While resignation gently slopes the way.
And all his prospects brightening to the last,
His heaven commences ere the world be past."—Goldsmith.

21—23. (21) and inhabit them, not be cut off by death from enjoying their dwellings which they have erected. (22) another inhabit, they shall live long enough to enjoy the fruits of the vineyards they have planted. days of a tree, Ps. xcii. 12, 13. (23) "They shall not labor for nothing, or bring forth children to see them perish."—Pol. Bib.

Life a Fine Art.—We grow up at random, carrying into mature life the merely animal methods and motives which we had as little children. And it does not occur to us that all this must be changed; that much of it

More clear, more near, more intricately linked, More subtly, than men guess."

—Edwin Arnold.

"A little Swedish girl was walking with her father one night under the starry sky, intently meditating upon the glories of heaven. At last, looking up to the sky, she said, 'Father, I have been thinking if the wrong side of heaven is so beautiful, what shall the right side be!'"

"The matter is not great whether our lives on earth be long or short, but whether we live the lives of saints, or the lives of sinners." — Mat. Henry.

"To resist with success the frigidity of old age, one must combine the body, the mind, and the heart; to keep these in parallel vigor, one must exercise, study and love." — Bonstetten.

We do not count a man's years, until he has nothing else to count."—Emerson.

a "Man's life shall have, instead of its present brief term, the far longer term allotted to the life of trees."—Mat. Arnold.

"A tree may flourish undisturbed in its home in Lebanon for one thousand years." — Spk. Com.

^b Ps. xxxii. 5; Da. ix. 20, 21. "My altars are the mountains and the ocean, Earth, et, sea, all that springs from the Great Whole,

Who hath produced and will receive the soul."

"God hath sworn to lift on high Who sinks himself by true humility."

—Kebble.

Humility, that low, sweet root, From which all heavenly virtues shoot."

—Moore.

"The means that Heaven yields must be embraced,

And not neglected; else, if Heaven would, And we will not, Heaven's offer we refuse,

The proffered means of succor and redress."

—Shakespeare.

"It is a serious thing to live to have responsibility not only for your own life, but for your conscious and unconscious influence. No act and no word can be known to be without future consequences." — Mary Lyon.

"Faith is the root of all blessings. Believe, and you shall be saved. Believe, and you must needs be satisfied. Believe, and you cannot choose but be comforted and happy." — Jeremy Taylor.

must be reversed; that life is the finest of the Fine Arts; that it has to be learned with life-long patience, and that the years of our pilgrimage are all too short to master it triumphantly.—Drummond.

24, 25. (24) before . . answer,^b contrast ch. lxiv. 7. (25) wolf, etc., ch. xi. 6, 7. "All that can harm is to be done away. (comp. Hos. ii. 18, 23 ff; Amos ix. 13; Ezek. xxxiv. 25 ff, etc.). The nature of wild beasts is to be changed, comp. Isa. xi. 6-8."—Oehler. dust . . meat, i.e. serpents shall become harmless, and instead of preying upon beasts, or birds, or reptiles, shall be content with the food assigned them in the primeval decree, "dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life," Gen. iii. 14.

Swift Answers to Prayer.—One of the wonderful revelations of the day that is coming will be God's showing us the many answers he sent to prayers of ours that never took shape in human words, that were no more than the outlook and uplook of our souls. The point impressed by the prophet here is that, by reason of man's sinfulness, delays in answering his prayers are often necessary, delay doing a very essential disciplinary and corrective work. But if a man were holy—in full harmony with God's will—there would never be any question about his prayers, never any need for delay in answering them. God could respond at once. "In man's experience of men, often, as things are now, in his relations with God, there is an interval between prayer and answer. In the new Jerusalem the two would be simultaneous, or the answer would anticipate the prayer."—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE SIXTY-SIXTH.

"The eternal blessedness of the True Israel; the doom of the apostates." The Pol. Bib. regards vss. 1-5, 17, 18, as addressed to the Samaritans. 1, 2. (1) Thus . . Lord, "winding up the prophetic discourse with an express prediction of the change of dispensation, and a description of the difference between them."—F. A. Alexander. my throne, ch. vi. 1; Ac. vii. 48-50. my footstool, ch. lx. 13, "place of my feet." house . . me, R. V. "what manner of house will ye build," etc., comp. 1 Ki. viii. 27. (2) hand made, R. V. "hand made, and so all these things came to be;" he created the heavens and the earth. poor, etc., ch. lviii. 15. trembleth . . word, Ezr. ix. 4, x. 3. "These two verses contain one of the most explicit declarations of the spirituality of religion to be found in the O. T., anticipating the principle enunciated by our Lord in John iv. 24."—Camb. Bib.

God's Compassion for the Poor and Contrite (vs. 2).—I. Let us look into the import of each of these characters. 1. The poor, sensible of his own insufficiency, deep humility and self-abasement, sensible of his need of the Holy Spirit, an importunate beggar at the throne of grace; 2. Contrite, broken, bruised, heartbroken with fears; 3. Trembleth at My word. II. The Divine blessing bestowed upon them: He does not look as a careless spectator, but as a Father, Friend, Benefactor; His looks are efficacious, compassionate, discriminating. Consider—1. The perfection and condescension of God as illustrated by this subject; 2. What must it be to be out of His favor!—Pres. Davies.

God Revealing Himself.—A star in the far depths attracted the attention of an observer. It seemed to be a single star, but to his educated eye it resolved itself into two stars. Those two proved to be each a star, centre of a planetary system like our own. Those two stars, which seemed but one, were really distant from each other five hundred times the distance separating our earth and the sun. Who of us can conceive such sublime spaces as are thus unfolded? What must he be who walketh among the shining lights, whose throne rises higher than these stars, whose canopy is gemmed with myriad suns! And if the telescope can put such meaning into the figure of the heavens, the microscope puts equal meaning into the figure of the earth. God needs this whole earth for a "footstool." This great earth, with its giant trees, and inaccessible mountains, and unfathomable waters, and millionfold forms of life, cannot hold God; it is but a resting-place for his foot.—Pul. Com.

3, 4. (3) killeth an ox, merely as a formality. as if, i. e. he is as offensive before God as if his act were a direct violation of law. lamb, or kid. dog's neck,^a refers to a form of heathen sacrifice. In each couplet a legitimate form of worship is connected with some idolatrous habit, and the meaning may be that certain Jews did both. (4) choose their delusions,^b these are what they have chosen (vs. 3). "And I will choose troubles that will harass them and the things which they dread will I bring on them, because," etc.—Pol. Bib.

Words to the Faithful (vs. 5).—"Men who tremble at his Word." It is another way of describing those of humble and contrite heart. They are hated by their brethren; they have suffered in the cause of true religion. They are exposed to taunts—Where is their God? Let Jehovah show himself glorious! Nevertheless, his fiat has gone forth, "They shall be ashamed." Shame and pain are the inseparable effects of sin; the "wages assigned to it by the laws of Heaven;" the rightful inheritance of the sinner. Nor is there anything which the nature of man does so abhor as these. They are destructive of all our enjoyments. They touch both soul and body—shame being the torment of the one, and pain of the other. "The mind of man can have no taste or relish of any pleasure in the world while it is oppressed and overwhelmed by shame. Nothing does so intolerably affect the soul as infamy; it drinks up and consumes the quickness, gaiety, and activity of the spirit; it dejects the countenance made by God to look upwards; so that this noble creature, the masterpiece of the creation, dares not so much as lift up either his head or his thoughts, but it is a vexation to him even to look upon others, and yet a greater to be looked upon by them."—South.

"And still there are sweet souls who tread earth's ways

With peaceful hearts and faces strangely bright;

Some secret gladness seems to fill their days,

Some wondrous vision charms their inward sight;

Heedless of aught that hinders or delays,

They seek till death this Prince of Love and Light."

—Hunter.

5. tremble... word, vs. 2, addressed to the faithful part of the nation. said, Let the Lord, etc., Camb. B. "have said, Let Jehovah show Himself glorious that we may see your joy"—a sarcastic allusion to the enthusiastic hopes entertained by the pious Jews of a manifestation of Jehovah to their joy. Cf. ch. v. 19. and they, R. V. "but they."

6, 7. (6) voice of noise, the Prophet here supposes the Divine deliverance and restoration to be taking place, and notes its suddenness and rapidity.^a (7) A new section begins here, of the sudden restoration of the city. man child, "the sudden repopulation of the city by her children. The figure is taken from ch. xlix. 17—21, liv. 1; the fact set forth being the instantaneous return of the exiled Israelites, by which, without effort, the poor and struggling Jewish community becomes at once a great nation."—Camb. Bib.

The Call of God.—The one lesson God has taught me, if he has taught me anything in connection with the grace of God, is that there is such a thing as a divine plan in a man's life, and that the only wisdom in this world is to find out what that plan is and to be led into it step by step, and not to mind what is the end of it. There is much said about the divine call, little said about the end of it. Why? Because no tongue, not even the divine tongue, will attempt to tell what is the outcome of a life that is led of God. Even the Bible with all its majesty and divinity does not undertake to tell how great that life is which takes its way into the life of God; it only gives a clue by which we can find the way step by step. Only two patterns are possible. The Bible does not present a third. Every man must live the life of Cain, the first rejector of the gospel, or the life of Abel, the first believer. A man must live the life of Jacob the supplanter, or of Israel, the prince of God. He must live the life of Saul, the persecutor of the church, and of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, or the life of Paul, apostolic in its tone, and spirit, and temper, and outcome. He will live the life of the old man, or the life of the new man.—H. C. Mabie.

^a De. xxiii. 18

"The dog was an abomination according to Jewish law, possibly bec. it was venerated in Egypt." —Fausset.

^b "Their wayward, childish follies, which in the end would mock them with grievous disappointment." —Spk. Com.

"We know not how much we love the world till we find pain and difficulty in parting with its good things." —Wilson.

"The higher a man is in grace the lower he will be in his own esteem." —Spurgeon.

"Extremes meet, and there is no better example than the haughtiness of humility." —Emerson.

"The humble man lives according to a rule, and with compliance to public customs, without any affectation of singularity." —Jeremy Taylor.

"Humility is the Christian's greatest honor; and the higher men climb the farther they are from heaven." —Burrows.

^a "Four years before the Roman siege of Jerusalem, one Jesus, the son of Aunus, cried out in the temple and through the streets of Jerusalem — 'A voice from the East, a voice from the West, a voice from the four winds; a voice against Jerusalem and the sanctuary; a voice against bridegrooms and brides, a voice against the whole people.'" —Josephus.

"What was it that gave the Apostles power to come forth into the light themselves, and shed the light in such effulgence upon a benighted world? Christ the Sun of Righteousness risen in their own souls."—W. E. Boardman.

"I believe there was a legislature that made a law and forgot to attach a penalty, and it was the laughing stock of the day. Do you suppose God has made a law without a penalty? What an absurd thing it would be! If God turned Adam out of Eden for that one sin, do you think he is going to allow us into heaven with ten thousand sins?"—D. L. Moody.

"It is the great design of the Gospel to restore us to holiness as well as to happiness. Hence the law, in the commands of it, runs through all the gracious dispensations of God to fallen man. Nor will God have any regard to them in a way of grace, who have no regard to His law in a way of obedience. The Gospel is not prepared for such as knowingly and willfully renounce the law of God, which is holy, and just, and good."—Watts.

"Friends should not only live in harmony, but in melody."—Thoreau.

"You cannot stop the rivers. Dam them up a little while, and they are sure to gather, and flood the land until they can find the stream again and flow

8, 9. (8) earth . . day, R. V. "shall a land be born in one day?" comp. Ro. viii. 22. (9) bring to the birth. Should I arrange all the preliminary circumstances for the restoration of my people and stop there?—Cheyne. "The God by whom every thing has been already so far prepared, will suddenly cause Zion to become a mother; a boy, viz., a whole people after Jehovah's own heart, will suddenly lie in her lap, and this new Israel will build a temple for Jehovah."—Delitzsch.

The Restoration of Israel.—With great energy the thought is put before us that Israel in these last days has sprung into new birth and life. The gift of male children was especially dear to the Israelitish heart. Now there is to be a great and sudden increase of Zion's children. Something unlike the usual course of nature and of human affairs is hinted. Slow is the growth of vegetation, slow the growth of human institutions. Here an event as startling as the breaking forth of the tree out of the seed in a single day is contemplated; "a nation born at once!" In fact, Christianity is such a wonder. A plant out of a dry ground, mysterious in its origin, despised in its professors, humble in its early associations, yet speedily, almost suddenly, overshadowing the lands with its branches, and yielding fruit and healing for the nations. "The expansiveness of Zion is such that nought but Omnipotence will be able to check it; and as Omnipotence has no motive for checking it, Zion has nothing to fear in heaven or earth."—Pul. Com.

The Blessedness of the Restored Church.—Though the Church is frequently, if not even continually, oppressed and downtrodden by the world, yet a glory attaches to her, whereof no persecution, no contempt, no contumely, can altogether deprive her. She is, whatever the world may think or say, "the holy Catholic Church," with Christ as her Founder, with Christ as her Lord and Master, with Christ as her King, the oldest and most venerable society in the Western world at any rate, and one in which membership cannot but ever be a high honor.—Pul. Com.

10, 11. (10) Rejoice, etc., "then comes a call to the children, restored, or about to be restored, to congratulate their mother and to enjoy her. The prophet reawakens the figure, that is ever nearest his heart, of motherhood,—children suckled, borne and cradled in the lap of their mother fill all his view; nay, finer still, the grown man coming back with wounds and weariness upon him to be comforted of his mother."—G. A. Smith. (11) consolations, those granted so abundantly to her, in the mercy of her God.

God Delights to Comfort His People (vs. 10—13).—I. A general view of the consolations which God has prepared for His people. 1. In the work and offices of His Son; 2. In the fulness and stability of His covenant; 3. In the richness and variety of His ordinances; 4. In the gifts and trials of His ministers. II. A more particular view of them as represented in the image before us. 1. His attention to our wants; 2. His sympathy with us in our troubles; 3. His forbearance towards us in our perverseness; 4. His affectionate endearments. Address—(1) Those who are strangers to our Jerusalem; (2) Those who love and mourn for her.—C. Simeon.

12—14. (12) peace, wh. carries with it the assurance of prosperity. The word extend means turn, and it suggests that Israel had herself hindered the flowing of the stream of peace towards her. glory . . Gentiles, ch. lx. 4, 5. her sides, and her knees, should be "the side," "the knees," referring to the Gentiles who are to serve Israel, comp. lx. 4, xlix. 22. (13) mother comforteth, i. e. with an infinite tenderness. (14) like an herb, R. V. "like the tender grass."

God's Love and a Mother's (vs. 13).—I. God has a mother's simplicity of instruction. II. God has more than a mother's favoritism. III. God has more than a mother's capacity for attending to little cares. IV. God has more than a mother's patience for the erring. V. God has more than a mother's way of putting a child to sleep.—Talmage.

Carrying Children in the East.—Labor in the East, as in all uncivilized countries, falls principally to the lot of the women. It is possible that from this cause they cannot so well carry their young children in their arms, and hence the custom of their sitting across their mothers' hips, or, as rendered in Bible words, being "borne upon her side." For example, in India the women grass-cutters are out the whole day, searching for the fine grass required for the horses of the regiments. Towards evening they may be seen returning with their bundles on their heads. One hand is generally up to keep their burden in its right position, while the vacant arm is round the waist of a young child, seating across its mother's hip. It is astonishing, the ease and comfort with which, in this manner, they are enabled to carry their little ones; and how, with their arms comparatively unemployed, they can the more easily, and with less fatigue, perform the duties allotted them.

The Love of God.—

Like a cradle, rocking, rocking,
Silent, peaceful, to and fro,
Like a mother's sweet looks dropping
On the little face below,— Hangs the green earth, swinging, turning,
Jarless, noiseless, safe, and slow;
Falls the light of God's face bending
Down and watching us below.

And as feeble babes that suffer,
Toss and cry, and will not rest
Are the ones the tender mother
Holds the closest, loves the best,—
So when we are weak and wretched,
By our sins weighed down, distressed,
Then it is that God's great patience
Holds us closest, loves us best.

O great heart of God! whose loving Cannot hindered be nor crossed;
Will not weary, will not even
In our death itself be lost—
Love divine! of such great loving Only mothers know the cost,—
Cost of love, which, all love passing,
Gave a son to save the lost.—Saxe Holm.

15, 16. "In fire and tempest—the accompaniments of the theophany—Jehovah will appear to take vengeance on His enemies. There is a connection with the last clause of vs. 14; but the passage reads like a continuation of vs. 6. Comp. ch. xxix. 6, xxx. 27 ff.; Ps. 1. 3."—Camb. Bib. (15) with fire, the symbol of avenging wrath. (16) plead, or enter into judgment.* all flesh, not the Jews only, but all humanity.

The Purging of the Earth by the Destruction of the Wicked.—The kingdom of Christ cannot be fully set up in all its blessedness until the earth is prepared for its reception; and the main preparation required is the elimination from it of those wicked persons who, while they remain, must always constitute a disturbing element, inimical to the earth's peace and a hindrance to the Church's happiness. The teaching of Scripture is that, before the Church is finally established in the blissful position which it is intended to occupy, the removal of this element will have taken place. Partly by wars and tumults, by their swords being turned against each other, but still more completely by some miraculous outpouring of God's wrath, typified under the figure of fire, the wicked will be cleared out from all parts of the earth's surface, and only the godly will remain. The description of the day of vengeance is given, with the greatest fullness, in the Revelation of St. John (xix. 11—21), where, however, it is difficult to determine how much is imagery, how much literal description.—Pul. Com.

17, 18. (17) behind one tree, etc., Camb. B. "after one in the midst," i. e. following the actions of a hierophant or mystagogue, who stands in the midst of the brotherhood and regulates the important ceremony of purification. Comp. Ezek. viii. 11, ". . . seventy men of the elders of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of

on. So the cares and sorrows of life may seem to stop the good man's peace. But it cannot be; over and under the Divine waters will flow, find their way back to their channel, and flow on again."
—R. Tuck.

"Our Father rules! Why should we shrink in fear? Why should we mourn because our path is drear? Why heed the petty ills that line life's way? Mere wayside weeds, they flourish for a day; Immortal life is ours! and heaven is near!" — Julia A. F. Carney.

a Lu. xix. 27; Re. xix. 21.

"If thou desire rest unto thy soul, be just; he that doth no injury fears not to suffer injury; the unjust mind is always in labor; it either practises the evil it hath projected, or projects to avoid the evil it hath deserved."—Quarles.

"What greater calamity can fall upon a nation than the loss of worship." —Emerson.

"A contented spirit is the sweetness of existence." — Dickens.

"Oh, make us Thine! Teach us who waits best sues;

Who longest waits of all most surely wins.

When Time is spent, Eternity begins." — Helen Hunt Jackson.

b "Swine are always spoken of in the Old and New Testaments with horror and disgust; partly on account of their dirty habits, the supposed unwholesomeness of their flesh, their occasional carnivorous ferocity, and, above all, their association with many forms of paganism."—Bib. Things.

c "A banner on a high place, to indicate the place of meeting for the dispersed Jewish exiles preparatory to their return to their land."—Fausset.

d "Phul is the country mentioned with Lud in Exe. xxvii. 10, and by him there called Phut, where the Greek and the Vulgate translate Libyans. An African people is meant, and an African people famous for the use of the bow, wh. the Ethiopians, for example, were."—Mat. Arnold.

"The Gentiles are here represented as using their modes of conveyance in bringing the Jews back to Jerusalem."—Fausset.

"The gift to be true, must be the flowing of the giver unto me, correspondent to my flowing unto him."—Emerson.

"The gift without the giver is bare."

"The church is weighed down to earth by bags of gold, and cannot lift itself heavenward. You will have to give an account of that which God has intrusted to you to be kept for Himself and not for yourself."—David Baron.

Shaphan, with every man his censer in his hand." swine's flesh, vs. 3.^b the abomination, a general term for unclean things, "swarming creatures."—Pol. Bib. mouse, an unclean animal acc. to Lev. xi. 29. "A dainty bit with epicures; was fattened by the Romans."—Delitzsch. (18) gather all nations, see Joel iii. 2; Zep. iii. 7—9.

The Jews to Convert the Gentiles (vss. 18—20).—I. God's purpose respecting the Gentile world—1. Proclaimed by all the Prophets; 2. Assuredly to be fulfilled in its season. II. The instrumentality by which He will effect it. 1. By the ministry of the Jews; 2. The success that shall attend their labor. Apply:—Of what importance the conversion of the Jews is to the whole world.—C. Simeon.

19. a sign,^c i. e. perform a miracle which shall convince them of Jehovah's divinity. that escape, out of this general slaughter (vs. 16) of the enemies of Israel some shall be spared, and those Jehovah will send as his heralds to the yet other nations of the world. Delitzsch. Pul, perhaps Libya.^d Lud, Eze. xxx. 5. Javan, i. e. "the Ionians, the Hebrew name for the Greek race." Camb. Bib., Ge. x. 2. isles, western lands of the Gentile world.

The Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. For its attestation we need not go back to the first century. It cast the devil out of Saul and transformed the persecutor into the Christian missionary; out of Augustine, and made the graceless libertine the father of Christian theology; out of Calvin the "accusative," and made of the young lawyer the thinker of the reformation; out of John B. Gough, and made of the ruined drunkard, the apostle of temperance; out of Jerry McAuley, and made of the jail-bird the bishop of the fourth ward.—Peloubet. God's Glory.—What could the world give Christ that was not already His? What could it add to the position of one of whom it was said, "By Him were all things made, and without Him was not anything made that was made"? What could the world add to the glory of Him, who had been by the Father seated at His own right hand, far above principalities and powers and thrones and dominions with a name above every other name? There was but one new glory Christ could acquire—that of service and sacrifice. All crowns were already His, save one—the crown of thorns. His whole life was a ministry of love, of instruction to the ignorant, pardon to the penitent, healing to the sick, and comfort to the suffering.—M. D. Hoge.

20, 21. (20) brethren, Gentiles who accept the Christian faith. offering, "in gratitude for their deliverance the nations which have not suffered in the recent judgment bring the Jews of the Dispersion with reverential care to the spot upon which Jehovah's glory has so brilliantly risen, viz. Jerusalem (lx. 3, 9)."—Pol. Bib. (21) of them, i. e. of the Gentiles. priests, breaking down the barrier that confined the ministerial office to the sons of Aaron, and family of Levi.

Offerings to God.—Too often man has offered his temples as an act of sacrifice. He has given them to God in the vain hope that, satisfied with them, God would cease to ask for higher and holier things. We, indeed, in these days, flood no altars with the blood of sacrifices, yet do we not think to offer God rest in the beauty of our churches and the charm of our services? Are we not, even under this spiritual dispensation, offering God things instead of persons? And yet even we men cannot be satisfied with things; then how can we expect our God to be? Our hearts cannot rest in the artistic fittings of our dwellings, the creations of genius, or the associations of culture. We want love; we must have persons. We are "the figures of the true;" shadows in our feeling of the feeling of God. He, too, puts aside all the things we offer him, be they temple, or gold, or work, and persuasively pleads thus with us, "My son, give me thy heart." We may give him our things, if we have given him ourselves. Things dead cannot please him. Things alive with holy love, quickened by the humble, contrite, thankful heart, may find for him the rest he seeks. We may give him our buildings when they are alive with the spirit of consecration, our services when they are filled with the spirit of reverential worship, our works when they are animated with gratitude and devotion.—Pul. Com.

22—24. (22) new heavens, ch. lxv. 17. your seed . . name, as the restored ones, the holy people. (23) "Month by month and week by week all flesh shall come to Jerusalem to worship, while the dead bodies of the rebellious Israelites shall remain as a fearful spectacle and an abhorring to all flesh."—Camb. Bib. all flesh, the new dispensation, in Christ, being in no sense exclusive, but embracing all humanity.^b (24) go forth outside of the New Jerusalem. worm not die, Mk. ix. 44. "The resurrection of the ungodly first appears in Dan. but the transition to it is in this verse, where "it is evidently assumed that the corpses of the wicked are still endued with sensation."—Oehler. "The idea is that 'the mutilation of the body will have a corresponding effect upon the soul,' (Tylor,) hence this passage implies spiritual suffering, and unending."

Beauty of Earth and Heaven.—

I praised the earth, in beauty seen
With garlands gay, of various green,
I praised the sea, whose ample field
Shone glorious as a silver shield;
And earth and ocean seem'd to say,
"Our beauties are but for a day."

I praised the sun whose chariot roll'd
In wheels of amber and of gold;
I praised the moon, whose softer eye
Gleamed sweetly through the summer sky,
And moon and sun in answer said,
"Our days of light are numbered."

O God! O Good beyond compare!
If thus thy meaner works are fair,
If thus thy bounties gild the span
Of ruin'd earth and sinful man,
How glorious must the mansion be,
Where thy redeemed shall dwell with Thee!

Bp. Reginald Heber.

It is a perilous thing to separate feeling from action, to have learned to feel rightly without acting rightly. Feeling is given to lead to action. If feeling be suffered to awake without passing into duty, the character becomes untrue."
—F. W. Robertson.

"For our idols are made from great fundamental desires and pleasures, which, so long as they are rooted and grounded in Christ, are good trees, bringing forth good fruit. It is the axe of selfishness that cuts them down, and makes from them idols, dead and deadening."
—A. Mos. E. Wells.

^b "Every part irradiated by the glory of the throne of grace."
—Spk. Com.

Introduction.

I. Title. So called from the name of the—II. Author. Jeremiah, a priest of Anathoth (i. 6) in Benj. He was son of Hilkiah, perhaps the Hilkiah who was high priest in the 18th year of Isaiah and discovered the Book of the Law in the house of the Lord (2 Ki. xxii. 8). Jeremiah was called to proph. office 70 yrs. aft. d. of Isa., in 13th yr. of K. Josiah (i. 1). Some yrs. later Jer. came to Jerus., visited cities of Judah, prophesying about 40 years (ii. 6). Jehoiakim spurned his predictions, cut the roll in pieces, and burned it. Jer. rewrote it with additions (xxxvi.). Falsely accused, in the reign of Zedekiah, of deserting to Chaldeans, he was imprisoned. By order of Nebuchadnezzar he had the choice of going to Babylon, but preferred to remain with his own people. They, disobeying his message, went to Egypt, taking him and Baruch with them (xliii. 6), there he still sought to turn the people (xliv.), but we have no further acc. of him. Trad. says the Jews put him to death at Tahpanhes (Jerome). Jer. was contemp. with Zeph., Hab., Eze., and Dan. "The hist. of Jer. brings before us a man forced, as it were in spite of himself, from obscurity and retirement into the publicity and peril which attended the prophetic office. Naturally mild, susceptible, and inclined rather to mourn in secret for the iniquity which surrounded him than to brave and denounce the wrong-doers, he stood forth at the call of God and proved himself a faithful, fearless champion of the truth, amidst reproaches, insults, and threats. In Eze., on the other hand, we see the power of Divine inspiration acting on a mind naturally of the finest texture, and absorbing all the powers of the soul" (Angus). III. Time. B. C. 629-586. "The style of Jer. corresponds with the character of his mind; it is peculiarly marked by pathos. He delights in expressions of tenderness, and gives touching descriptions of the miseries of his people" (Angus). "His style, though inferior to that of Isaiah in power and sublimity, is marked by pathos and tenderness, in accordance with what seems to have been the cast of his mind. He excels in expressing and awakening the softer emotions" (Litton, Lowth). "On many occasions he is very elegant and sublime, especially in chaps. xlvi-li. 58, which are wholly poetical, and in which the Prophet approaches very near the sublimity of Isaiah" (Horne).

The character of Jeremiah is reflected in his writings. His speech is clear and simple, incisive and pithy, and though generally speaking somewhat diffuse, yet ever rich in thought. If it lacks a lofty strain, the soaring flight of an Isaiah, yet it has beauties of its own. It is distinguished by a wealth of new imagery which is wrought out with great delicacy and deep feeling, and by a "versatility that easily adapts itself to the most various objects, and by artistic clearness" (Ewald). In the management of his thoughts Jeremiah has more recourse than other Prophets to the law and the older sacred writings; and his style is rich in repetitions and standing phrases. These peculiarities are not, however, to be regarded as signs of the progressive decline of the prophetic gift, but are to be derived from deeper foundations, from positive and fundamental causes. The continual recurrence to the law and the frequent application of the prophetic parts of Deuteronomy, were prompted by the circumstances of the time. The wider the people's apostacy from the law of God extended itself, so much the greater became need for a renewed preaching of the law, that should point to the sore judgments there threatened against hardened sinners, now about to come into fulfilment. And as against the guile of false prophets, whose influence with the infatuated people became ever greater, the true witnesses of the Lord could have no more effective means of showing and proving the Divineness of their mission and the truth of their testimony than by bringing strongly out their connection with the old Prophets and their utterances (Delitzsch).

Synopsis.

(According to Horne.)

Introduction—Title, i. 1—3. Call of Jer. 4—10.

PART I.—PROPHECIES DELIVERED IN

REIGN OF JOSIAH.....ii.—xii.

Discourse 1ii.—iii. 5.

Discourse 2iii. 6—vi.

Discourse 3vii.—x.

Discourse 4xi., xii.

PART II.—PROPHECIES DELIVERED IN

REIGN OF JEHOIAKIM.

Discourse 1xiii.

Discourse 2xiv., xv.

Discourse 3xvi., xvii., 1—18.

Discourse 4xvii. 19—27.

Discourse 5xviii.

Discourse 6xix., xx.

Discourse 7xxii., xxiii., 1—8.

Discourse 8xxiii. 9—40.

Discourse 9xxv.

Discourse 10xxvi.

Discourse 11xxv.

Discourse 12xxvi.—xlv.

Discourse 13xvi.—xlix. 6.

PART III.—PROPHECIES DELIVERED IN

REIGN OF ZEDEKIAH.

Discourse 1xlix. 34—39.

Discourse 2xxiv.

Discourse 3xxix. 1—32.

Discourse 4xxx.—xxxi. 38.

Discourse 5xxvii.—xxviii. 16.

Discourse 6i., ii. 1—58.

Discourse 7xli. 1—14.

Discourse 8xxxiv. 1—22.

Discourse 9xxvii. 1—21.

Discourse 10xxxi.

Discourse 11xxxiii.

Discourse 12.....xxxviii., xxxix. 1—18.

PART IV.—EVENTS IN JUDAH FROM

TAKING OF JERUS. TO RETREAT

INTO EGYPT.

Discourse 1xl.—xlii.

Discourse 2xlii.—xlv.

Conclusionlii.

APPROXIMATION TO A CHRONOLOGICAL ARRANGEMENT OF THE CONTENTS OF THE BOOK.

(Cambridge Bible.)

Chaps.

1—12.....Josiah.

14—20.....Jehoiakim.

28.....1st year of Jehoiakim.

25.....4th “ “

46—49.....do. “ “

35, 36.....do. “ “

45.....do. “ “

13.....Jehoiachin.

29.....(? 1st year of) Zedekiah.

27.....do. “

¹ Except 46, 13—28.....Period of exile.

49, 34—39.....1st year of Zedekiah.

² But originally spoken at various times. See 22, 1.

Chaps.

50, 51.....4th year of Zedekiah.

28.....do. “ “

21—24.....9th “ “

34.....do. “ “

37.....9th (10th) “ “

30—33.....10th “ “

38.....10th “ “

52.....11th “ “

39—44.....Period of exile.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

^a Josephus says this town is 20 stadia distant fr. Jerusalem, and Jerome describes it as three Rom. miles north of that city.

^b "Dr. Robinson considers the present Anāta to occupy the site of this ancient town, portions of the wall of which, as also the foundations of some of the houses, still remain."—Henderson.

^c "The first and last of the kings under whom each Prophet prophesied are often thus specified in the general title."—Fausset.

Plato, seeing a child do mischief, went and corrected the father for it.—Hom. Com.

^d "Joy is a prize unbought, and is freest, purest in its flow when it comes unsought."—Horace Bushnell.

^e "This call was part of Jeremiah's first address to the people. It was no afterthought, but a public proclamation, by wh. from the first he stood forth, claiming to act by an external authority, and to speak not his own words, but those of Jehovah."—Spk. Com.

^f Is. xlix. 1, 5.

^g It is supposed that at his call Jeremiah was under 25 years of age.

^h For the reluctance of men to do God's work, comp. Ex. iv. 10, vi. 12, 30; Jno. i. 3.

"We must be little children in our own sight, in order to be prophets."—Wordsworth.

1-3. (1) The words, not the usual introduction ("the word of the Lord which came," etc.) Eccles. i. 1 and Amos i. 1 are the only similar passages. Jeremiah, variously interpreted, Gesenius says "appointed of Jehovah"; Simonis, "the Lord's exalted one." Hilkiah, poss. the well-known high-priest of this name. Anathoth, Jos. xxi. 13, 18.^a (2) came, lit. was, or began to come, from this time onward. thirteenth year, B.C. 629, the year after Josiah began his national reformatoms. (3) Jehoiakim, etc., Jehoahaz and Jehoiachin are omitted in this reference, for they reigned only three months each.^b fifth month, when the city was burned by the captain of Nebuchadnezzar, and the walls torn down.

The young Christian.—The young Christian, trembling on the threshold of life of service, is equipped and comforted by his Master. I. The young Christian's fears, arising from sense of—1. Weakness, "a child," without influence, experience, stability; 2. Ignorance: how comprehend a theme into which angels desire to look? 3. Unworthiness: might not some one better known do the work required of him better? 4. Human opposition: he saw how men hate the truth. II. The young Christian's encouragements. 1. God sends him to work: "I ordained thee:" God will aid whom He sends; 2. Disclosure of God's purpose: no less God's purpose to send him than to save Israel; God's plan to use us, as well as to save others; 3. Promise of Divine presence: "I am with thee:" Wesley's saying, "the best of all is, God is with us;" 4. The message should be supplied, vs. 9: His words are spirit and life; wisdom and power of God. Learn:—(1) Advance courageously; (2) Expect opposition: "they hated Me before they hated you;" (3) Look constantly for Divine aid.—Hive.

Anathoth.—A poor village of some twenty houses, built among white rocks and white ruins, on a bare, grey mountain side. No trees, no verdure, no richness, nor grandeur, nor beauty; here, amid mountain solitudes and rocky dells, Jeremiah mourned and wept over the foreseen calamities of his beloved country. One can trace in nearly all the images and illustrations with which his writings abound, the influence of those wild scenes amid which he passed his boyhood. Mountains, rocks, wild beasts, shepherds, are again and again introduced.—Porter.

4-6. (4) word came,^c the way in which Divine messages came to the Prophets is never described. Probably they heard an inward voice; or felt an impulse to utter certain things. (5) formed thee, the figurative assertion of God's predestination of Jeremiah to the prophetic office, in fulfilment of the Divine plan.^d knew thee, in the sense of "approved of thee" as a fit agent for My purpose, comp. Ps. i. 6; Gen. xviii. 19; Nahum i. 7. sanctified thee, in the sense of "set thee apart," dedicated thee to God's service, Judg. xvii. 3; 1 Ki. ix. 3; Lev. xxvii. 14. ordained thee, R. V., "I have appointed thee." nations, to other beside the Jewish nation, an O. T. prophet to the Gentiles. (6) child, either as young in years,^e or as inexperienced.^f This vs. emphasizes the fact that Jeremiah did not himself choose, but shrank from the office. Comp. Ex. iii. 11; iv. 10, 13.

Fears and comforts in prospect of labor for God (vss. 5-9).—I. The fears of God's servant in prospect of labor. 1. He feels his weakness, having no influence, no experience, being unstable; 2. He feels his ignorance; 3. His unworthiness; 4. He dreads the enmity of man. II. The comforts of God's servants in the prospect of labor. 1. The assurance they are called to the work; 2. The knowledge of the purpose of God; 3. The promise of the presence of God; 4. The fact that the message is from God.—Stems and Twigs.

Jeremiah.—

I am the man sore smitten with the wrath
Of Him who fashion'd me; my heart is faint,

And crieth out, Spare, spare, O God! Thy saint;
But yet with darkness doth He hedge my path.

My eyes with streams of fiery tears run down
To see the daughter of my people slain,
And in Jerusalem the godless reign.
Trouble on trouble are upon me thrown;

Mine adversaries clap their sinful hands
The while they hiss and wag their heads, and say,
"Where is the temple but of yesterday—
The noblest city of a hundred lands?"
We do confess our guilt; then, Lord, arise, Avenge, avenge us of our enemies!

—G. Smith.

7—10. (7) Say not, etc., comp. Ex. vi. 30, vii. 1, 2. thou shalt go, he would need to go only where he was sent, and speak what he was commanded. (8) of their faces, R. V., "because of them," kings, and priests, foreigners and evil men at home, to whom, he knew, the word of prophecy must be spoken. I am with thee, the usual and all sufficing assurance. (9) touched my mouth,^a as a symbol of the gift of prophetic speech. (10) set thee over, lit. "made thee an over-seer," Hebrew term corresponding to "Episcopos" in N. T. a bishop of the nations, to consider their moral and spiritual life, build .. plant, that which God is to do, the prophet, His messenger, is said to do; to "pull down" and to "build up."

Obedience.—We can have no idea what we should be able to do if we were completely lost in accord with God; if we sought no will but His; if not a word of our mouths, not a beat of our hearts, not a thought of our minds, not a movement of our souls or bodies but were turned to Him obediently, in the spirit of Samuel, "Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth." There have been men who have shown what a man can do, —a Luther, a Calvin, a St. Paul, a Moses—these men have shown what a man can do when he only seeks to obey the will of God.—A. Monod.

11—16. The call is enforced by two visions. (11) seest thou, this indicates that God guided the Prophet by visions, rod, or branch, almond tree, "the Hebrew used here (shākēd) is not the ordinary word for an almond tree, but a poetical expression, meaning that which is awake, and referring to the blossoming of this tree as taking place while others are still in their winter sleep. Accordingly the almond tree is made the subject of this vision—an 'emblem of wakefulness and activity,' as is shewn by the interpretation given in vs. 12." Camb. Bib.^a (12) hasten, R. V. "I watch over," i. e. this is my emblem. I am awake to my word, and will perform it. The day of the revelation of Jehovah is near at hand. (13) toward, R. V. "from," i. e. leaning to the south, and will presently spill out its contents. north, the district of the Chaldeans.^b (15) families .. north, all the clans, or races of the kingdoms. The great empire is composed of many provinces. his throne, as in a judicial act, the princes of the north will place their thrones over against Jerusalem and judge her for her crimes.^c (16) judgments, by this means (vss. 14, 15) I will voice my condemnation upon Judah.

The Almond Tree in Blossom.—A little after sunrise, went out by the Jaffa gate, and, turning to the left, took the path that winds down the slope of Zion. As I went along, the pleasant sound of bees, "the wild bees of Palestine," clustering over the pink blossoms of an almond tree on the left, greeted me. The tree itself, all flower, without a single leaf, was a gay contrast to the dark olives below. A few days ago it was brown and bare; to-day it is all brightness; and to this sudden change reference is made when Jeremiah is taken to one of the orchards of Anathoth and bidden look at the "rod of the almond tree," for it is added, "I will hasten My word to perform it."—Bonar.—Note on vs. 13.—To compensate in some measure for the scarcity of fuel, the Orientals endeavor to consume as little as possible in preparing their "Selfdistrust is the first proof we give of having obtained a knowledge of ourselves."—Zimmerman.

^a Ex. iii. 12; De. xxxi. 8; Jos. i. 6.
^b Comp. Is. vi. 7, li. 16.

"The sign-posts that point the way by the side of the road, never have a quotation of poetry upon them, or sentences from Isocrates or Sophocles. There is just the word, and that is enough."—C. H. Spurgeon.

^a It is the first of trees to blossom, and hence the Romans applied to it the epithets "vigilant" and "watchful." Its blossoms, which are white and plentiful, burst forth in January, even before the leaf-buds appear.

^b The seething pot is a figure of the Chaldeans; and the conception seems to be that it will boil over, and the contents pour down to the desolation of Jerusalem.

Lit., from the face of the region situated towards the north.

^c "Or 'Each prince shall pitch his royal pavilion, with all the marks of sovereignty belonging to it, in token of having obtained a complete victory, and taken entire possession of the city.'"—Lowth.

"In the destruction of Jerusalem the Chaldeans would but fulfil the purposes and councils of God."—Henderson.

"Even the world honors consistency and courage, and the plainest speaker will have, in general, the most hearers. The only part by which a bull can be safely taken is the horns."—Power.

^a Job xxxviii. 3; 1 Pet. i. 18.

"And how can man die better than facing fearful odds, For the ashes of his fathers, and the temple of his gods."—Macaulay.

"He holds no parley with unmanly fears; Where duty bids he confidently steers, Faces a thousand dangers at her call, And trusting in his God, surmounts them all."—Cowper.

^b Comp. Eze. iii. 9. Also Je. xv. 20, xxiii. 18, etc., xxvi. 10, xxxv. 15, xxxviii. 16.

^c Eze. xvi. 9; Ho. ii. 20; Joel i. 8.

^d "Prob. the vs. is intended to set forth the zeal and piety they had evinced at that early period, and which were as strikingly contrasted with their idolatrous practices at the time of the Prophet."—Henderson.

virtuals. For this purpose they make a hole in their dwellings, about a foot and a half deep, in which they put their earthen pots, with the meat in them, closed up, about the half above the middle, three fourth parts they lay about with stones, and the fourth part is left open, through which they fling in any combustible substances they can procure, which burn immediately, and produce so great a heat, that the pot becomes as hot as if it stood over a strong fire of coals; so that they boil their meat with greater expedition and much less fuel than it can be done upon the hearth. The hole in which the pot is set has an aperture on one side, for the purpose of receiving the fuel, which seems to be what Jeremiah calls the face of the pot. "I see," said the Prophet, "a pot, and the face thereof is towards the north," intimating that the fuel to heat it was to be brought from that quarter. This emblematical prediction was fulfilled when Nebuchadnezzar, whose dominions lay to the north of Palestine, led his armies against Jerusalem, and overturned the thrones of the house of David.—Paxton.

"Out of the North."—The swelling waters of a flood, are a usual type of an overwhelming calamity (Ps. lxxix, 1, 2), and especially of a hostile invasion (Isa. viii. 7, 8); but this is a flood of scalding waters, whose very touch is death. The caldron represents the great military empires upon the Euphrates. . . . The tide of passion and carnage is sure finally to pour itself upon Judea. The caldron looks ominously towards Jerusalem, but it has not yet overturned; and if Judah repent, God may make it exhaust its fury upon itself (Nineveh and Babylon being in conflict), or a defeat instead of victory at Charchemish may alter the whole tide of events. But if Judah remain impenitent, it must become the prey of whosoever conquers in the plains of Mesopotamia.—Speaker's Com.

17—19. (17) gird . . loins, the sign of earnest preparation for work.^a confound, marg., "break to pieces." (18) a defenced city, i. e. like one, guarded well round with Divine defences.^b iron pillar, symbol of his Divinely strengthened will. the kings, viz.: Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, Zedekiah. (19) not prevail, "they shall no more prevail against thee, than they could against an impregnable wall or fortress." Reference is made to this again, xv. 20, 21. Comp. Ps. cv. 15.

Opposition (vs. 19).—In proportion as we are faithful to God we are assailed by man. I. The vehemence of our foes, "fight against thee;" they do not fight against principle so much as against persons. II. The certainty of our security, "they shall not prevail." Saints may be weary, maimed, fearful; but not, in the end, defeated. III. The source of our confidence. 1. The abiding presence of the Lord; 2. The constant manifestation of the power of the Lord.—Stems and Twigs.

Courage before Kings.—Said the Roman emperor to Chrysostom, "I will banish thee." "Thou canst not," was his answer, "for the world is my Father's house." "Then will I kill thee." "That is not in thy power, for my life is hid with Christ in God." "I will deprive thee of all thou possessest." "Nay, for my treasure is in heaven, and my riches are within me." "But I will exile thee, that thou shalt not have a friend or companion left." "Neither canst thou do that; for my Friend is He who will never leave me, and from whom none can sever me. I defy thee, proud emperor; thou canst do me no harm at all!"

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—4. (1) Moreover, this first prophecy is recorded in chapters ii.—vi. given (iii. 6) during the reign of Josiah. (2) ears of Jerusalem, i. e. in the most public places where audience is to be gained. remember thee, or, for thee; what thou hast so strangely forgotten. kindness, i. e. Israel's early affection for Jehovah. "Israel is here represented as a young bride."^c The reference is to the forty years in the wilderness of Sinai.^d (3) holiness, i. e. a consecrated thing. (Lev. xxii. 10, the same word is used.) devour him, i. e. Israel who has just been spoken of as

"consecrated," and "first fruits." Those who "devour him" are the enemies of Israel when they attacked Israel. offend, R. V., "be held guilty," as one, not a priest, who should eat of the sacred "first-fruits." (4) Jacob . . . Israel, the whole nation is addressed.

The Ingratitude of Men (vss. 4-6).—Here we are called to consider—I. The complaint he makes; it may be urged against us, for there is—I. The same folly; 2. The same ingratitude. II. His challenge in relation to it. 1. Have you ever found Him a hard master? 2. Or less gracious or merciful than He professed to be? Tell me then—(1) What will ye say in justification of yourselves? 2. What line of conduct will ye henceforth pursue?—Simeon.

"I remember thy youth."—The retrospect on youth is too often like looking back on what was a fair and promising country, but is now desolated by an overwhelming torrent. Or it is like visiting the grave of a friend whom we have injured, and are precluded by his death from the possibility of making him an atonement.—J. Foster.

5-8. (5) What iniquity, R. V., "unrighteousness," What act of mine explains this unfaithfulness? Comp. Isa. v. 4. vanity, the usual description of idols, and idolatrous worship.^a become vain, its worshipers acquiring its character,^b Ps. cxv. 8. (6) Led . . . wilderness, comp. De. viii. 15, 16, xxxii. 10.^c deserts, etc., they seem to have forgotten and to be ungrateful for God's past wonderful goodness.^d (7) plentiful country, lit. a Carmel-land. The fertile district of Carmel being made to represent the whole land.^e (8) handle the law, i. e. Levites comp. Deut. xxxiii. 10. pastors, R. V. "rulers," i. e. kings. prophets, i. e. those who received and communicated special Divine messages.

Three Shameful Possibilities of Human Life (vss. 6-8).—I. The possibility of dishonoring the great memories of life. 1. As when the vividness of their recollection fades; 2. When their moral purpose is overlooked or misunderstood; 3. When their stimulating and strengthening function is suspended. II. The possibility of under-estimating the interpositions of God. 1. Remember the Deliverer; 2. And the Giver. III. The possibility of the leading minds of the Church being darkened and perverted. 1. Such men should watch themselves with constant jealousy; 2. Such men should never be forgotten by those who pray.—J. Parker.

Note on vs. 6.—When the Prophet describes this wilderness, according to our version, as the land of the shadow of death, his meaning has been differently understood by different people. Some have supposed it to mean a place where there were no comforts or conveniences of life, but this seems too general; and to explain it as a particular and distinct member of the description, pointing out some quality different from the other circumstances mentioned by Jeremiah, seems to be a more just, as it is undoubtedly a more lively way of interpreting the Prophet. Others have accordingly understood this clause as signifying, it was the habitation of venomous serpents, or destroying beasts; some as endangering those that passed through it, as being surrounded by the hostile tribes of Arabs; some as being overshadowed by trees of a deleterious quality. They might better have introduced the whirlwinds of those southern deserts than the last particular, which winds, taking up the sand in great quantities, darken the air, and prove fatal to the traveler. This last would be giving great beauty and energy to the expression (the shadow of death), since these clouds of dust, literally speaking, overshadow those that have the misfortune to be then passing through those deserts, and must, at the same time, give men the utmost terror of being overwhelmed by them, and not unfrequently do in fact prove deadly. Another clause, a land of pits, is also a part of the Prophet's description. Irwin affords a good comment on this part of our translation: in the one place he says, "The path winded round the side of the mountain, and to our left, a horrid chasm, some hundred fathoms deep, presented itself to our view. It is surprising no accident befell the loaded camels." In another, "On each side of us were perpendicular steepes some hundred fathoms deep. On every part is such a wild confusion of hanging precipices, disjointed rocks, and hideous

^a Mi. vi. 3.

^b Je. x. 15, xiv. 14, 22, xvi. 19; 1 Co. viii. 4.

^c "A people's character never rises above that of its gods, wh. are its 'better nature.'"—Bacon.

^d Is. lxiii. 9, 11, 18; Ho. xiii. 4, 5.

^e "A more frightful desert it had hardly been our lot to behold. The mountains beyond presented a most uninviting and hideous aspect; precipices and naked conical peaks of chalky and gravelly formation, rising one above another, without a sign of life or vegetation."—Robinson.

^f Is. x. 18, xvi. 10, xxxvii. 24.

"Unthankfulness is a monster in nature, a solecism in manners, a paradox in divinity, a parching wind to dry up the fountain of further favor."—Trapp. "The Dead Sea drinks in the Jordan, and is never the sweeter; and the ocean all rivers, and is never the fresher; thus, we take all God's mercies with insensibility."

"After we had passed the salt desert, we came to the Malek-el-moat-dereh, or the valley of the angel of death. This extraordinary appellation, and the peculiar nature of the whole of this tract of land, broken into deep ravines, without water, of a dreariness without example, will, perhaps, be found forcibly to illustrate Jer. ii. 6." —Mörner.

"Gratitude is the fairest blossom, which springs from the soul; and the heart of man knoweth none more fragrant." —Hosea Ballou.

"A common lamp may go out, but if the light on a light-house goes out or is misplaced, it leads great ships on to the rocks."

^a "The expression is taken from the pleas of plaintiff and defendant, used in a court of justice." —Lowth.

^b "This expression is designedly used, to intimate that the final judgment on the nation would be suspended for many generations." —Horsley.

^c See Kittim, Ge. x. 4.

^d Ge. xxv. 18; Ps. cxx. 5; Cant. i. 5.

^e "The usual plan is to dig a tank in the ground, build round with stonework, sometimes raising this several feet above the ground, and putting on it a roof. These cisterns are very liable to crack and leak, esp. those near the surface of the ground and unscientifically constructed; and no more expressive fig. of unchasms, that we might well cry out with the poet, 'Chaos is come again.' Omnipotent Father! to Thee we trust for our deliverance from the perils that surround us. 'It was through this wilderness that Thou didst lead Thy chosen people.' It was here Thou didst manifest thy signal protection, in snatching them from the jaws of destruction which opened upon every side." And in the next page, "At two o'clock we came suddenly upon a dreadful chasm in the road, which appears to have been the effect of an earthquake. It is about three hundred yards long, one hundred yards wide, and as many deep; and, what is a curiosity, in the middle of the gulf, a single column of stone raises its head to the surface of the earth. The rudeness of the work, and the astonishing length of the stone, announce it to be lusus naturæ, though the robbers declared to us that beneath the column there lies a prodigious sum of money; and added, with a grave face, they have a tradition, that none but a Christian's hand can remove the stone to come at it. We rounded the gulf, which was called Somah, and leaving it behind us, we entered a valley where we found a very craggy road." The first clause in this passage, through a land of deserts, is the most obscure and difficult to ascertain. Instead of traveling in the night, as he had proposed, to avoid the burning heat of the sun, he says, "At seven o'clock we halted for the night. The Arabs tell us that the roads are too rugged and dangerous to travel over in the dark." Under the next day, "we reached the foot of a prodigious high mountain, which we cannot ascend in the dark." The following day, he tells us, "by six o'clock we had accoutred our camels, and leading them in our hands, began to ascend the mountain on foot; as we mounted the steep, we frequently blessed ourselves that we were not riding, as the path was so narrow, the least false step must have sent the beast down the bordering precipice." Under another day he remarks that the greatest part of that day's journey was "over a succession of hills and dales, where the road was so intricate and broken, that nothing but a camel could get over it. The appearance of the road is so frightful in many places, that we do not wonder why our people have hitherto lain by in the night." —Harmer.

9—13. "In these five verses, the apostasy of Israel from his own God is held up as a fact unique in history—unexampled and inexplicable. Whether you look westward or eastward, across the sea to Cyprus, or beyond Gilead to the barbarous tribes of the Cedrei (Ps. cxx. 5), nowhere will you find a heathen people that has changed its native worship for another." Exp. Bib. (9) plead, as in a court of law, "children's children," who will further develop the idolatry and rebellion. (10) isles of Chittim,^e coast lands of the Mediterranean. Kedar, fig. for the Eastern lands.^d (11) changed their gods, the tenacity with which men keep hold of national religions has always been very marked. their glory, Him who, because the only true God, was their chief glory. (12) very desolate, or dry. The heavens are called on to shrivel up in horror at such conduct. (13) broken cisterns,^e such as have cracks or rents, through which the water wastes away.

The Fountain and the Cistern (vs. 13).—In these two evils we have all the sins of the people summed up,—apostasy and self-sufficiency. I. The fountain forsaken. 1. Its nature; 2. Its contents,—God, a Fountain of cleansing influence—of cheering influence—of reviving power—of fertilising results. This fountain is forsaken when men cease to think of God as the chief end of their life—when they overlook the law of God—when they do not cleave to the word of God—when they are beginning to look back to old times of bondage—when they look away from the cleansing fountain to their own works. II. The cistern preferred. 1. Domestic happiness; 2. Professional life; 3. Intellectuality; 4. Social life. III. The disappointment involved. 1. That of one who has spent his best time and strength to no purpose; 2. Of one who must after all go to the rejected fountain; 3. Who finds that his past life has been a grievous sin.

Idolatry.—We perceive, as much from the words of the prophet as from the history, that this idolatry has now become deep and radical. The state of mind latent in them is the utter incapacity for acknowledging a God not appealing to the senses, which Jeremiah discovers in his contemporaries. He boldly sets up the faith of the heathen as a lesson to the Israelites.—“Kings and Prophets,” Maurice.

“A long course of sin was needed so to deaden and blind the heart of man as to make idolatry possible. Age after age gave in its contribution, so that, besides the original sin of each man, there was a sinful tradition of mankind. Every generation bequeathed to the next a further measure of declension from God.”—Manning.

14-19. (14) slave? God called him to be son, not slave, Ex. iv. 22. why . . spoiled? R. V., “become a prey.” The answer must be on account of his sins, so he must not charge God with his calamities. (15) young lions, when the land was depopulated it actually became the haunt of lions. (2 Ki. xvii. 25.) (16) Noph, Tahapanes,^a places in Egypt. broken . . crown, marg. “feed on thy crown,” or devour the best part of thy country; refers to the tax which Egypt levied on Judah during the alliance with Jehoiakim. (17) unto thyself, by thy own doings. (18) way of Egypt, in vss. 18-28 the people are reproached with seeking help alternately of Assyria and Egypt and of devotion to gods which cannot aid them. (Driver.)^b (19) correct, i. e. chastise, the natural consequences of wrong-doing prove to be Divine judgments.

Sin its Own Punishment.—Look for the man who has practised a vice so long that he curses it and clings to it; that he pursues it because he feels a great law of his nature driving him on towards it, but, reaching it, knows it will gnaw his heart and tear his vitals, and make him roll himself in the dust with anguish.—Sidney Smith. When Nicophorus Phocas had built a strong wall about his palace for his own security in the night-time, he heard a voice crying to him, “O Emperor! though thou build thy walls as high as the clouds, yet, if sin be within, it will overthrow all!”

20-22. (20) “For long ago didst thou break thy yoke [i. e. cast off allegiance to Jehovah], didst thou burst thy bonds, and saidst, I will not serve: for upon every high hill and under each evergreen tree thou wast crouching,” etc. Exp. Bib.^c (21) noble vine, see Is. v. 1, etc. right seed, fructified and of good quality. unto me, or to my grief. (22) nitre, R. V., “lye,” the natron of Egypt, a mineral alkali.^d sope, Heb. borith, a plant which was burned and from the ashes lye was made. marked, as a stain that cannot be got out.

“Thine iniquity is marked.”—Let a blot lie a while on a pure sheet of white satin paper; try to remove it erasure may ultimately rid the sheet of that “one dark spot,” but the paper is injured, the satin gloss is gone, and if you try to write on the place again, the lines smear. Sin effects permanent injury, cannot be removed by most careful efforts; the “mark” remains when all is done. Holiness is not mere cleanness; it has no mark of injury. It is pure light; the concentration of all the prismatic colors into unity.

23-25. (23) say, in self-defence.^e valley, of Hinnom, ch. vii. 32.^f swift dromedary, a “young female wh. has never had a foal.” traversing, running this way and that. (24) wild ass, “symbol of an untamed and reckless nature.” her occasion, the pairing season. (25) thirst, refers “to the shameless doings and insatiable cravings of lust.” Exp. Bib. no hope, “Thou saidst, It is vain,” (so i. e. to urge me.) No! for I love the strangers and after them I will go.” Exp. Bib.

“Swift dromedary.”—The camels of the Bible are of two kinds, the difference being the result simply of breeding and training. The first kind, used as a beast of burden, will carry from 500 to 1,000 pounds twenty-four miles a day. The second, used to convey intelligence, will travel upwards of 100 miles in twenty-four hours; this kind is called the dromedary.—Gray.

26-30. (26) house of Israel, the whole Heb. people, “The Shame” is the title of opprobrium which the prophets apply to Baal. Accordingly, the point of vs. 26 sqq. is, that as Israel has served the Shame, the idol-gods, instead of Iahvah, shame has been and will be her reward: in the hour of bitter need, when she implores help from the One true God, she is put to shame by being referred back to her senseless trustworthiness could be found than a leaky tank.” — Thomson.

^a “Noph, or Memphis, capital of Lower Egypt, on the W. bank of the Nile. Tahapanes, or Daphne, on the Tanitic branch of the Nile. These two cities stand for the whole of Egypt.” —Fausset.

^b “The two rivers are the two empires, and to drink their waters is to adopt their principles and religion.” —Spk. Com.

^c Ex. xix. 8; Jos. xxiv. 18; Ju. x. 16; 1 Sa. xii. 10. ^d “It was an incrustation at the bottom of the lakes, after the summer heat has evaporated the water. It was used for washing. (Job. ix. 30; Pr. xxv. 20.) —Fausset.

^e “The people prob. appealed to the maintenance of the daily sacrifice, and the Mosaic ritual. All such pleas availed little as long as the rites of Molech were still privately practised.” —Spk. Com.

^f 2 Ki. xxiii. 10.

^a Josephus tells us that both the prophets, and religious men generally, were put to death in large numbers by this relentless king.

"As there is a foolish wisdom, so there is a wise ignorance, in not prying into God's ark, not inquiring into things not revealed. I would fain know all that I need, and all that I may: I leave God's secrets to Himself. It is happy for me that God makes me of His court, though not of His council."—Bp. Hall.

"A man is never astonished or ashamed that he doesn't know what another does, but he is surprised at the gross ignorance of the other in not knowing what he does."—Haliburton.

"One of the ancient fathers replied to a clamorous disputant who shouted, 'Hear me, hear me,' 'I will neither hear thee, nor do thou hear me, but let us both hear Christ.'—Dict. of Illus.

^a "So far was Jehovah from proving a nigardly and austere sovereign to the Jews, that He had evinced Himself to be their most liberal benefactor. Nothing but wantonness could have induced them to renounce their subjection to Him."—Henderson.

"A hypocrite is in himself both the archer and the mark, in all actions shooting at his own praise or profit."—Fulcr.

"Sincerity! thou first of virtues, let no mortal idols.—Expos. Bib. (27) back unto me, a token of contempt. (28) where . . gods, why do not they comfort and help you? Comp. Judges x. 10—14. cities . . gods, not because your gods were few. For you had one in every city. (29) plead with me, remonstrate at the reproaches and warnings of Jehovah. (30) sword . . prophets, with prob. allusion to the violent persecutions of Manasseh.^a

The folly of neglecting God (vss. 27, 28).—I. The conduct of sinners towards their God. 1. It is a state of ease; 2. Of trouble. II. The folly and danger of it. 1. The disappointment it will occasion; 2. The reflections to which it will give rise. Address—(1) Those that are at ease in their sins; (2) Those who are brought into any kind of trouble; (3) Those that have already begun to seek the Lord.—C. Simeon.

Folly of idolatry shown.—The following incident occurs in the life of the Anglo-Saxon missionary, Winfrid, afterwards called Boniface. On his recommencing his missionary work in Hessia, he found that, during his absence (at Rome), many of the converts had relapsed into their old superstitions, and therefore he resolved to destroy one of the chief objects of veneration in the neighborhood in which he was laboring; this was an eminent oak near Giesmar, in Upper Hesse, which for ages had been sacred to Thor, the god of thunder. Many times had the zealous missionary declaimed against this idolatry, but without effect. He determined, therefore, to strike a blow at the object itself, and remove, if possible, the stumbling-block from their midst. Mr. Maclear (Missions of the Middle Ages) thus describes the scene:—"One day, accompanied by all his clergy, he advanced, axe in hand, to cut down the offending monarch of the forest. The people assembled in thousands to witness the great controversy between the new and the old belief, many enraged at the interference of the stranger preacher, many more confident that an instant judgment would strike down so daring an offender. But scarcely had the missionary begun to ply his axe than it was apparent that Thor could not defend his own. If he was a god, he was certainly either 'gone on a journey,' or was 'asleep and needed awaking,' for in vain his votaries supplicated his vengeance. After a few blows of the axe, a crashing was heard in the topmost boughs; a mighty rushing wind, says the chronicler, seemed to shake every branch, and then the leafy idol came down to the ground, and split into four quarters. 'The Lord, He is the God!' the people shouted, thus acknowledging the superior might of the new faith."—Hassell.

31—34. (31) "Have I been to you like a land without food—like a way without light?"^a are lords, R. V., "We are broken loose," going where we will, unbridled. (32) ornaments, Oriental females pride themselves on their ornaments. attire, the marriage girdle, in the E. taking the place of the marriage ring with us. (33) trimmest, etc., guiding your course to seek idolatry. wicked . . ways, R. V., "therefore even the wicked women hast thou taught thy ways." (34) souls, used simply in the sense of persons. poor innocents, R. V. "innocent poor," (comp. 2 Ki. xxi. 16, xxiv. 4.) not able to defend themselves from tyrannical rapacity. not . . secret, "not at house-breaking didst thou catch them." The allusion, which is completely obscured in the English Version, is to the law (Ex. xxii. 2) by which it was permitted to slay a thief caught in the act of breaking into a house. The persons whom Israel had thus treated were in no such position, but such was nevertheless their fate. Camb. Bib. but upon all these, better, "but because of all these things," i. e. not for any crime, but bec. of thy zeal for the false gods.

Judah's corrupt condition.—Not only had the nation refused warning and despised instruction, and defeated the purposes of the Divine discipline. They had slain their spiritual monitors, the prophets, with the sword; the prophets who had founded upon the national disasters their rebukes of national sin, and their earnest calls to penitence and reform (1 Kings xix. 10; Neh. ix. 26; St. Matt. xxiii. 37). And so when at last the long deferred judgment arrived, it found a political system ready to go to pieces through the feebleness and corruption of the ruling classes; a religious system, of which the spirit had long since evaporated, and which simply survived in the interests of a venal priesthood, and its intimate allies, who made a trade of prophecy; and a kingdom and people ripe for destruction.—Exp. Bib.

35-37. (35) innocent, "thou saidst, I am innocent; surely his anger hath turned from me." The people "were generally prosperous and went on with their medley of religious rites trusting that Jehovah, at any rate, had no longer any complaint against them."—Cheyne. plead, as a judge. (36) gaddest, turning now to Egypt and now to Assyria. (37) from him, i. e. from Egypt. hands . . . head, the sign of failure and despair.

The Egyptian alliance, like the former one with Assyria, was destined to bring nothing but shame and confusion to the Jewish people. The prophet urges past experience of similar undertakings, in the hope of deterring the politicians of the day from their foolish enterprise. But all that they had learnt from the failure and loss entailed by their intrigues with one foreign power was, that it was expedient to try another. So they made haste to "change their way," to alter the direction of their policy from Assyria to Egypt. King Hezekiah had renounced his vassalage to Assyria, in reliance, as it would seem, on the support of Taharka, king of Egypt and Ethiopia (2 Kings xviii. 7; cf. Isa. xxx. 1-5); and now again the nation was coquetting with the same power. An Egyptian force lay at this time on the confines of Judah, and the prophet may be referring to friendly advances of the Jewish princes toward its leaders.—Exp. Bib.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1-3. (1) They say, connect with ii. 37, "hath rejected," . . . "saying. If a man," etc. shall . . . again,^c see the law, De. xxiv. 4. that land, in wh. such people dwelt as could take back an adulteress. yet return, better, "and thinkest thou to return unto Me?"—Spk. Com. (2) high places, R. V., "the bare heights," the scenes of idolatries, which are regarded as spiritual adulteries. in the ways, illus. by Ge. xxxviii. 14. Arabian, or desert robber, watching for prey." (3) showers, etc., see De. xxviii. 24, as a token of divine displeasure. But you paid no heed.

"No latter rain."—Because we obstruct God's access to us, His beneficence does not reach us. We throw heaven and earth into confusion by our sins. For were we in right order as to our obedience to God, doubtless all the elements would be conformable. But as our lusts tumultuate against God, as we provoke Him by our pride, perverseness, and obstinacy, it must needs be that all things above and below should be in disorder. This is to be ascribed to our sins.—Calvin.

4, 5. (4) from this time, i. e. the time of Josiah's reformation. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3; xxxv. 19. Will you not now repent and cry out Jehovah "My Father," etc. the guide,^b "husband." Prov. ii. 17. (5) spoken, etc., "thou hast spoken thus, but hast done evil things," as thou couldest, R. V. "and hast had thy way." "Her words were fair, but her deeds were false."

The proper prayer of youth.—Relate some story to illustrate the usefulness of guides to travelers in foreign lands, as among the mountains of Switzerland, etc. I. The journey of life. 1. Things unknown—length, trials, enemies, temptations, etc.; 2. Things desired—prosperity, length of days, friends, happiness, to "rejoice and be glad all our days," etc. 3. Things certain—a journey to be only once made, will certainly end; the end will answer to the way. "What will ye do in the end?" II. The pilgrim of life. A youthful traveler is supposed. 1. Such are inexperienced; 2. Think they know more than they really do; 3. Often wilful and wayward; 4. Traveling through unknown land; 5. Need help and provision of a spiritual kind for the journey. III. The guide of life. Many false guides—custom, fashion, human reasons, etc. Only one safe Guide—God. He has all that a good guide should have. 1. Knowledge of way; 2. Sympathy with the traveler; 3. Strength and vigilance to meet leave thy onward path, although the earth should gape, and from the gulf of hell destruction cry, to take dissimulation's winding way.—Home.

Be truly religious, and do not care to seem to be so.

^c "Contrary to all precedent in the case of adultery, Jehovah offers a return to Judah, the spiritual adulteress." — Fausset.

^a "The Arabs of the desert to the east and south of Palestine were notorious for their habit of robbing travelers, as they still are at the present day."—Henderson.

^b "As having espoused them in the days of their youth, before their manners were corrupted by idolatry. Je. ii. 2; Ho. ii. 15." — Lowth.

"As the first-fruits of the ground were offered up to the Lord in the olden time, so offer up to Him your youthful affections and your youthful service."—Mogridge.

"Youth what man's age is like to be, doth show: We may our ends by our beginning's know." — Denham.

"It is a truth but too well known, that rashness attends youth, as prudence does old age."—Cicero.

^a Comp. Eze. xxiii. 4, etc.

^b Comp. Je. vii. 18, xix. 4; and also 2 Chr. xxxiv. 33.

^c Eze. xvi. 51.

The one determining question is not: "Have you a label outside?" but, "Have you the grace of God in your heart?"—Joseph Parker.

^d Not receive you with averted looks. So LXX., Syr., and Vulg.

^e Ps. lxxxvi. 15, ciii. 8, 9.

^f "However few the converts might be, Jehovah would not despise them, but would restore them to their own land. Or that, should there only be one found in a foreign city, or two in any of the nations, they should not be forgotten."—Henderson.

^g "Because the tabernacle of God will be one 'made without hands' (Heb. ix. 11), even the heart of His believing people."—Spk. Com.

^h Ro. ix. 25, 26.

ⁱ "Most of the prophecies which mention the restoration of the Jews join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that blessing. (See Je. xxx. 3, xxxi. 1; Is. xi. 13; Eze. xxxvii. 16, 22; Ho. i. 11; Zec. x. 6)."—Lowth.

and defeat danger; 4. Constant presence. If we say "yes" to the text, then—(1) The start will be in the right direction; (2) The way will be in the safe path; (3) The end will be in the best place.—Hive.

Lady Huntingdon.—It is recorded of the late Countess of Huntingdon, who afterwards so warmly espoused the cause of God and His truth, that in her early youth, when about nine years old, the sight of a corpse about her own age carried to the grave induced her to attend the funeral, when the first impressions of deep seriousness respecting an eternal world were made on her conscience.

6—11. (6) said also, on another occasion. backsliding, not an adjective, but a substantive, "Hast thou seen Backsliding, even Israel?" (7) turn thou, R. V. "She will return unto me." treacherous sister, Judah was as bad as Israel, but Judah made a good outward show. (8) R. V., "And I saw, when, for this very cause that backsliding Israel had committed," etc. bill of divorce, a fig. for God's putting away the ten tribes. (9) stones, etc., ch. ii. 27. (10) feignedly, Heb. "in falsehood." (11) justified herself, R. V., "shewn herself more righteous." more.. Judah, bec. Judah had the additional warning of the fate of Israel, and disregarded even that.^e

External reform.—We make beautiful churches more often than we do beautiful Christians. We carve marbles, and rear fine proportions in stone; we decorate walls and altars; but these are only physical representations, material symbols, while the quality of beauty is in holiness. The beauty of love in all its infinite inflections, the beauty of justice and of truth, these languish.—H. W. Beecher.

12—15. (12) toward the north, the region to wh. the "ten tribes" had been carried by Shalmaneser. anger to fall,^d R. V., "I will not look in anger upon you." merciful, this is the highest and most moving of all incentives to repentance. (13) acknowledge thine iniquity, penitence being the essential condition of restoration. (14) married unto you, R. V. "I am a husband unto you." one . . family, prob. a prophetic fig. of the fact that only a few will ever return, but for even the few God will care.^f (15) pastors, as before, temporal rulers.

Pardon—conditional.—Pardon can only be secured by the consent of both parties. I may have offended you. You may come to me and say, "You have deeply grieved me; but I forgive." I can snap my fingers in your face and say, "Take your forgiveness away; I don't want to be forgiven by you." Observe, therefore, that you have not the power to forgive me. You can forgive the crime, but you cannot forgive the sinner. But if I come to you and say, "I have injured you; I see I must have given you pain; I did you wrong; I am sorry in my heart," and you then say, "With my heart I forgive you," then the transaction is based on moral principles. It is so with God. God cannot pass an act of universal amnesty: He cannot open all the prison-doors of the universe and say to the criminals, "Come forth; I forgive you all." But if they in their condemned cells would but heave one sigh of penitence, and utter one cry for God's forgiving mercy, every bolt would fall off, every lock fly back, and there would be no prison in all the universe of God.—Parker.

16—19. (16) in those days, the recognized formula for the times of Messiah. The ark, etc., regarded as the centre of the Mosaic system. It appears that the ark was finally lost in the Babylonish captivity. visit it, better, "neither shall it be missed." that be done, or, "neither shall it be made, or repaired."^g (17) Jerusalem, the whole city, not specially the temple. nations, i. e. the Gentiles.^h imagination, R. V. "stubbornness." (18) with . . Israel, clearly intimating that the return was to be a united one.ⁱ (19) How, i. e. how gloriously!

God's relations to His people (vs. 19).—I. The honors which God desires to confer upon us. 1. To make us members of His family; 2. To make us heirs of heaven. II. The difficulties that beset the conferring these honors upon us. 1. Arising from God's character; 2. From our own character; 3. From the greatness of the blessings. III. The effect which uniformly follows the conferring of these honors—a filial spirit towards God. 1. Reverence; 2. Love; 3. Obedience.

Apply:—Encourage those who doubt the possibility of their salvation; (2) Warn those who see no difficulties in the way of their salvation; (3) Exhort those who profess to be in the way of salvation.—G. Brooks.

20—23. (20) Israel, the whole nation. (21) weeping, etc., the signs of real penitence on the part of the people. High places the customary places of lamentation, also the places where idolatry had been practiced. (22) Return, etc.,^a comp. the similar passage, Ho. xiv. 1. (23) hills, R. V., "Truly in vain is the help that is looked for from the hills,^b the tumult on the mountains."

Backsliders reclaimed (vs. 22).—I. God inviting backsliders to return to Him. 1. The characters addressed; 2. The sin and consequence of backsliding; 3. God's message to such characters. II. Backsliders complying with God's invitations. 1. The ready compliance they manifest; 2. The way they return to God.

Man's Restoration.—I have read of one who was for ever reclaimed from the deadly sin of drunkenness by the deep anguish of heart which he experienced when he found that one day, when brutalized by drink, he had smitten to the ground his own dear child, and wounded her with a wound the scar of which she would never lose; and that he had done this whilst she was lovingly seeking to lead him away from the place and the people who were tempting him to his ruin. When he came to himself and knew what he had done, his horror and remorse had no bounds. "The drink! ay, it was all the drink!" he exclaimed when, years after, telling the story. "Could I ever touch it again? I kept my finger lightly on the little maid's forehead, and lifted my face to heaven, and vowed that I would never touch the murderous thing again as long as I lived, and with a broken heart I prayed the Lord to help me." That well-known story serves to illustrate how, in this great matter of man's restoration to God, he who once was a godless rebel becomes filled with another heart, and God can, as he desires to, place him amongst the children. For when I clearly see the wounds which I in my mad sin have inflicted on him who sought to save me, and who tenderly loves me still notwithstanding all I have done, the sight of his cross and of those wounds will fill my soul with such a hatred of sin and love of God that I am no longer what I was; I am born again, I have passed from death unto life.—Pulp. Com.

24, 25. (24) shame, etc., R. V. "But the shameful thing hath devoured," i. e. Baal, hath devoured us. (25) We lie down, R. V., "Let us lie down in our shame and let our confusion cover us." The miseries of the captivity were recognized as Divine judgments on the national sins. The expressions are taken from those who cast themselves down upon the ground, and cover themselves with dust or ashes out of grief and anguish of mind.

God the salvation of Israel (vs. 23).—Let me ask if this be not—I. A mighty salvation? 2. A merciful salvation? 3. A free salvation? 4. An unchangeable salvation? 5. A soul-satisfying salvation?—W. Wilkinson.

Shame is a great restraint upon sinners at first; but that soon falls off; and when men have once lost their innocence, their modesty is not like to be long troublesome to them. For impudence comes on with vice, and grows up with it. When men have the heart to do a very bad thing, they seldom want the face to bear it out.—Tillotson. The legend says, that a sinner being at confession, the devil appeared, saying that he came to make restitution. Being asked what he came to restore, he said. "Shame; for it is shame that I have stolen from this sinner, to make him shameless in sinning; and now I have come to restore it to him, to make him ashamed to confess his sins."—Dict. of Illus.

^a "The whole description is most graphically conceived. The people weeping upon the hills; God's gracious voice bidding them return; the glad cry of the penitents proclaiming that they come; the profession of faith won from them by the Divine love; these form altogether a most touching picture of a national repentance." — Spk. Com.

^b "The altars wh. were erected on high places to the heathen gods abounded to such a degree, that they were seen in every direction." — Henderson.

^c Ezr. ix. 7.

"Though Satan be endeavoring to bind his chains fast about thee, though thy heart quake and be ready to fail for the many sins that encompass it, though destruction and death be in thy way, yet fear not; 'behold thy King cometh,' trust Him; He will restrain, He will defend." — Bogatsky.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

"This chapter should begin with vs. 3. Verses 1, 2, belong to the preceding prophecy."—Cheyne. 1, 2. (1) put away, this would be the

^a "Swearing by the name of God is mentioned elsewhere as a solemn part of religious worship, and opposed to the custom of swearing by false gods, which was practised among idolaters."—Lowth.

^b "The unhumiliated heart is like ground wh. may be improved, being let out to us for that purpose, but wh. is as yet fallow, overgrown with weeds, its natural product."—Fausset.

^c De. x. 16.

"Happy those who are able in truth to say, 'My Lord and my God!' Here is the noblest inspiration for life, strength for work, comfort in trouble, hope in death."—William Forsythe.

A poor man told Rowland Hill that the way to heaven comprised three steps: "Out of self, unto Christ, into heaven."

"As it is never too soon to be good, so it is never too late to amend: I will, therefore, neither neglect the time present, nor despair of the time past. If I had been sooner good, I might perhaps, have been better; if I am longer bad, I shall, I am sure, be worse."—Warwick.

outward sign of the necessary repentance, then.. remove, "and not stray," these words do not complete the sentence which runs on in vs. 2. (2) swear, "then thou shalt swear," etc., i. e., you will be able to because you will realize it." The Lord liveth, better, "as the Lord liveth."

From the Eng. Version we might suppose that this is itself the subject, and not simply the form, of the oath. The Living God is "not the thing sworn to, but the thing sworn by." Oaths by other gods are to be dismissed from their mouths.

Sin banished, or no heaven. The first physic to recover our souls is not cordials, but corrosives; not an immediate stepping into heaven by a present assurance, but mourning, lamentation, and a bitter bewailing of our former transgressions. With Mary Magdalene, we must wash Christ's feet with our tears of sorrow before we may anoint His head with the 'oil of gladness.'—Browning. When Ben's master died, they told him he had gone to heaven. Ben shook his head. "I 'fraid massa no gone there." "But why, Ben?" "Cos when massa go North, or go journey to the Springs, he talk about it long time, and get ready. I never hear him talk about going to heaven, never see him get ready to go there."

3—6. (3) Break.. ground, "it is a condensed parable, borrowed from his favorite Hosea (x.12), with which he begins the prophecy of the northern invasion."—Cheyne. "Repent of your idolatry."^b thorns, as they were doing now. (4) Circumcise,^c i. e., put away all impurity, your idolatries, etc. fury, or vengeance. fire, with a consuming power. (5) The verse pictures the fright of the people at the presence of a hostile army. (6) standard, or signal round which to rally the people.

The plough for the fallows (vs. 3).—I. The hearts of unregenerate men are like fallow ground. II. It is their duty to break up their fallow ground.—S. Tomlyns. The life of the sinner a foolish agriculture (vs. 3).—Notice here two things. I. A grand evil. 1. Loss of seed; 2. Loss of labor; 3. Loss of hope. II. An urgent duty, evangelical repentance for sin. 1. Hard work; 2. Indispensable work.—Thomas.

Verse 5.—With this verse begins a group of addresses here given in substance, and reaching to the end of chap. x. The general subject is the same throughout, a declaration of the coming evil. The words as we have them, in all probability, formed a part of the roll as read in the ears of Jehoiakim, or afterwards enlarged, and represent the gist of Jeremiah's preaching during the latter part of Josiah's reign, that of Jehoahaz, and the beginning of that of Jehoiakim. During the greater part of this time it was still possible for the people to avert calamity by repentance and amendment of life. After Jehoiakim's reign had fairly begun and he had shewn that even the check which Josiah's personal character and influence had put upon idolatry was now removed, the condition of the nation became desperate. The near approach or actual arrival of that condition therefore was present to Jeremiah's mind throughout this section and colored all his utterances. He speaks of the hostile army and of the destruction which it is about to deal. Judgment comes from the north, like the hot blast of the tempest not to be warded off by any human devices. At the beginning of chap. vii. there is a break caused by a new heading, and that with the three chapters that follow probably give us the exact words spoken by Jeremiah on a special occasion during this period. This and the subsequent verses are connected with the preceding as being an expanded description of the punishment there threatened. They give us a graphic picture of the excitement and dismay caused throughout the defenseless portions of the land by the approach of the enemy, and the hasty retreat to walled towns on the part of the country people.—Camb. Bib.

7—10. (7) lion, "not certain who is meant. Herodotus speaks of an invasion of Scythians at this time."—Driver. destroyer, "a destroyer of nations," not an ordinary conqueror. on his way, lit. has broken up his encampment. (8) gird, etc., ch. vi. 26. is not turned back from us, the wickedness of the days of Manasseh has not been repented of. Any reformation has been merely on the surface, and those who imagine that it has been sufficient to recover God's favor towards His people will find their mistake. (9) heart of the king, i. e. his courage. "Great calamities often deprive men of their presence of mind." astonished . . wonder, bec. both these had joined in persuading the people that no such troubles should come upon them. (10) God is represented as having done the evil which in point of fact He only permitted to occur. A mode of thought and speech familiar to the Jew. (Comp. 1 Ki. xxii, 21-23.)—Camb. Bib.^a Helplessness of Israel's leaders. The lion out of the thicket is manageable enough if the man against whom he advances happens to have a loaded rifle in his hand, and the power of using it with unerring aim; but what if he has nothing more than a cudgel? Kings and princes, priests and prophets, might successfully join in counsel to mislead and keep down their own people; but a strong and proud army, that has come forth like a mighty wild beast intent on prey, is not to be turned back by mere counsels. In the last resort strength must be opposed to strength. The sole virtue of skill lies in this, that it can make the most of strength. But where the strength is lacking, skill can do nothing. No amount of skill can make a walking-stick do the work of a rifle, and the great peril of most human lives lies just in this, that they go on in the contented use of ordinary resources for ordinary needs. Practically speaking, extraordinary needs are not thought of till they come. There are voices to us, even as to these kings, princes, priests, and prophets of old; but we do not heed them, and meanwhile the lion out of the thicket, all unsuspected, is coming nearer and nearer to us.—Pul. Com.

11—14. (11) At that time, the time of the Babylonian invasion. dry wind, or hot pestilential wind: the simoom.^b fan, for such purposes the husbandman uses the wind; but he would not use the simoom. (12) full wind . . places, R. V. marg. "a wind too strong for this shall come for me," stronger, than winds that fan or cleanse. unto me, i. e. to perform my will. (13) he, the enemy. as clouds,^c gathering for a storm. whirlwind, swiftly moving, and overwhelming, comp. Isa. v. 28; lxvi. 15. eagles, De. xxviii. 49. (14) thine heart, for this after all was the source of the evil.

Vain thoughts (vs. 14).—I. The characteristics of vain thoughts. 1. Cannot reap any good from them; 2. They cannot associate with good and useful thoughts; 3. Must be driven out to attend to serious matters; 4. They dwell largely and habitually on trifles; 5. They trifle with important things; 6. They are fickle; 7. Those pertinaciously fixed upon an unworthy object; 8. Will again and again return to it; 9. Such as are on speculative fancies; 10. Those bent on schemes of worldly felicity. II. The correctives of vain thoughts. 1. The substantial state of the mind must be cured of vanity; 2. We should have specific subjects of serious interest to employ thought; 3. Self-detection in the act of sin; 4. Recourse to acts of devotion; 5. Practical employment; 6. Communion with thoughts of wise and good.—J. Foster.

15—18. (15) Dan, the border-town of Palestine on the north. mount Ephraim, within ten miles of Jerusalem. "The language intimates the rapid approach of the enemy. But now they were at Dan. Already they are on the mountains at Ephraim."—Camb. Bib. (16) Make mention, "the nations are summoned to witness the vengeance about to fall." watchers,^a or besiegers. (17) keepers of a field, who watch to frighten away the wild beasts. 18) this . . wickedness, this final siege is the issue of thy wickedness.

Bitterness of sin (vs. 18).—I. Sin is bitter. 1. It is so comparatively; 2. Absolutely. II. It reaches to thine heart. 1. It defiles it; 2. It disquiets it; 3. It ruins it. Apply:—(1) Since sin is bitter, bitter remedies must be taken; (2) It is a mercy that grace reaches to the heart as well as sin.—Beddome.

Note on vs. 17.—In Arabia, and probably in other parts of the East, instead of a solitary watchman in the middle of the plantation, they place guards at certain distances round the whole field, increasing or diminishing their numbers according to the supposed danger.—Saxton.

^a "Deeply affected by this state of things, the Prophet cannot restrain his feelings, but gives them utterance in what, at first sight, appears to be a blasphemous charge against Jehovah. It is, however, but a strong Orientalism."—Henderson.
"Nazianzen compares the soul to a pair of writing-tables, out of which must be washed whatsoever was written with sin, and instead thereof must be entered the writing of grace; both these are necessary in true repentance."

^b It generally blows from the southeast across the dry sandy deserts to the east of Palestine. "This simoom extends its ravages all the way fr. the extreme end of the Gulf of Cambaya up to Mosul; it carries along with it flakes of fire like threads of silk; instantly strikes dead those that breathe it, and consumes them inwardly to ashes."—Col. Campbell.

^c Joel ii. 2.

"'Tis not in things o'er thought to domineer. Guard well thy thought: our thoughts are heard in heaven."—Young.

^a "Scouts to warn men of the approach of an enemy. Here the Prophet, by way of irony, calls the Chaldean army, by that name."—Lowth.

"'Tis very true, my grief lies all within; And these external manners of lament

Are merely shadows of the unseen grief
That swells with silence in the tortured soul:
There lies the Substance.”
—Shakespeare.

“God’s ministers must have their hearts fired, not with passion but with love. The thunderbolt may crash, but the sun melts.
It is better to love as a pastor
than speak as an angel.”—Watson (1649).

“The efforts of men to explain
the origin of sin,
this throws no
more light upon it than a candle
upon a widely extended landscape veiled in mists, and wrapped in midnight darkness.”
—Guthrie.

“Ah! when the means are gone
that buy this praise,
The breath is gone whereof this praise is made.
Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter
showers,
These flies are
couch’d.”
—Shakespeare.

a “The use of their paint was to contract the eyelids, and make their eyes appear more large and full, which they thought a great beauty.”—Lowth
“What is needed is that, even in the days of youth and strength, of unimpaired faculties of sense and intellect, one should remember that far other days are coming. What sadder sight can there be than an old man, clinging to the worn, torn,
weather-beaten,
age-marked sides of his earthly tabernacle, and

Bitter at heart.—

Through many a clime ’tis mine to go,
With many a retrospection curst;
And all my solace is to know
What’er betides, I’ve known the worst.
What is that worst? Nay, do not ask.
In pity from the search forbear;
Smile on, nor venture to unmask
Man’s heart, and view the hell that’s there.

—Byron.

19—22. (19) bowels, regarded as the seat of emotion. Most deeply is the Prophet moved by his vision of the coming woes of the land. maketh a noise, R. V., “is disquieted.” (20) Destruction, etc., or complete, utter destruction. tents . . . curtains, poetical for the dwellings. (21) standard, vss. 5, 6. (22) wise . . . evil, vs. 21 was an appeal to God. This is His answer, “they have studied all the arts of sin and wickedness, but are strangers to the obligations of religion and virtue.”—Spurgeon.

“Sottish children.”—This was the sad thought that, even while Jerusalem was going down, lower, lower, towards the hour of its capture and desolation, there were yet in it many men who had the power, if only their hearts had been right, to do much towards saving and blessing their country. But all their thoughts, their utmost acuteness of mind, were given to build and enrich self.—Pul. Com.

23—26. (23) I beheld, “in this, and the following vss., the Prophet sees in vision the desolate condition of Judæa during the Babylonish captivity.”—Spk. Com. The imagery is highly poetical. without form, R. V., “waste,” Gen. i. 2. This is a return to primitive chaos. (24) moved lightly, R. V., “to and fro.” (25) birds . . . fled, bec. in the desolate land they could not find their food. (26) fruitful place, “the garden land,” i. e. all this fertile country.

Sin, its wide consequences.—Sages of old contended that no sin was ever committed whose consequences rested on the head of the sinner alone; that no man could do ill and his fellows not suffer. They illustrated it thus: “A vessel sailing from Joppa carried a passenger who, beneath his berth, cut a hole through the ship’s side. When the men of the watch expostulated with him, “What doest thou, O miserable man?” the offender calmly replied, “What matters it to you? The hole I have made lies under my own berth.” This ancient parable is worthy of the utmost consideration. No man perishes alone in his iniquity; no man can guess the full consequences of his transgressions.—Spurgeon.

27—31. (27) thus, Jeremiah now puts the message into plainer language. full end, “the overthrow shall not be such as that which sooner or later befalls all other kingdoms. The contrast between the chosen people and the rest of the nations is thus very remarkable, as is also the frequency and consistency with which the promise of final deliverance appears even in the midst of the severest threatenings. This feature of prophecy is found as early as Lev. xxvi. 44. Compare chap. v. 10; also Is. vi. 13, xi. 11, 16; Ezek. xx. 34; Amos ix. 8; Mic. ii. 12.”—Camb Bib. (28) not repent, bec. the iniquity of Judah could now only be met by judgments. (29) horsemen, etc., the cavalry and archers of Chaldæa. (30) renew thy face, R. V., “enlarge thine eyes,” trying to make yourself attractive, seeking alliances. (31) bewail, R. V., “gaspeth for breath.” Woe is me, for the hopelessness of the calamity. is wearied, etc., R. V., “fainteth before the murderers.”

Woe-stricken.—The world affords not a sadder sight than a poor Christless soul shivering upon the brink of eternity. To see the poor soul that now begins to wake out of its long dream, at its entrance into the world of realities, shrinking back into the body and crying, “O I cannot, I dare not die!”—Flavel. Come home, wandering, tired, grieved soul! Love where thy love shall not be lost. Love Him that will not reject thee, nor deceive thee, nor requite thee with injuries as the world doth. God will receive thee when the world doth cast thee off, if thou cast off the world for Him!—Baxter.

Painting the eyes.—Almost all writers and travelers in the East afford us proof of the unchanging character of Oriental fashions. A gentleman, describing his visit to a Jewish family in Damascus, says: "They were rich, stylish people, consequently we may conclude that their dress and ornaments were consistent with all that was thought proper or fashionable. The gentlemen of the family being from home, the ladies received me in a handsome apartment, with the utmost courtesy and kindness. The ceiling and walls of the room were highly ornamented with painting and gilding; the walls similarly decorated and hung with looking-glasses. The dress of the ladies was splendid: they wore loose Eastern robes of silk, stomachers covered with gold, and jewelled ornaments on their heads. But one decoration attracted my attention from all the others, and seemed to my unaccustomed eyes to mar their beauty in a high degree. From the outer corner of each eye a black line was painted upon the cheek, which gave exactly the appearance of two slits or rents. Now you will no longer be at a loss to understand what was the singular custom alluded to by Jeremiah, of which there can be little doubt that this fact affords an interesting illustration."

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1, 2. (1) Run, etc., "one of those exaggerations to which from his temperament this prophet was peculiarly liable."—Cheyne. Jeremiah refers to the mass of the people, or more particularly to the leaders of the people. executeth, R. V., "doeth justly," who is just in his dealings toward his fellows. truth, good faith; not simply truthfulness. it, i. e. Jerusalem. Comp. Ge. xviii. 32. (2) the Lord liveth, the most solemn form of oath. swear falsely, though not by false gods, they swear in a false spirit. They were hypocrites when not idolaters, see vs. 7.

Right kind of men (vs. 1).—I. In the estimation of God the true excellence of man is moral and religious. 1. A strict obedience to the Divine will as far as it is known; 2. An earnest endeavor to attain an accurate acquaintance with the Divine word. II. There are states of society in which men of this description are exceedingly rare. 1. They may be removed by death; 2. They may be withdrawn into concealment; 3. They may be reduced in numbers by the progress of degeneracy. III. In the worst states of society such men are very valuable. 1. They avert Divine judgments; 2. Draw down Divine blessings; 3. Promote the work of reformation.—G. Brooks.

"Seek, if ye can find a man." Diogenes, the cynic, having lighted a lamp, ranged the streets peering about as if searching for something. Being asked what he looked for, he answered, "A man;" or, as is usually recorded, "An honest man!" But the words in Laertius are, "I seek a man." He sought not alone a man with honesty and truth in his character, but a man in whom all right and noble qualities were combined. He constantly reviled the society of Greece with its lack of manhood.

The host of Nola being bid to summon the good men of the town to appear before the Roman censor, gat him to the church yard, and there called at the graves of the dead; for he knew not where to call for a good man alive.—Trapp.

Streets in Jerusalem.—In ancient times the streets of Jerusalem seem to have had their names; and it is worth our while to notice how many of these are mentioned in Scripture. There was the Bakers' Street, from which King Zedekiah ordered Jeremiah's food to be sent to him (Jer. xxxvii. 21). There was "East Street," into which Hezekiah gathered the priests and Levites, when exhorting them to cleanse the house, and to carry forth the filthiness that had been allowed to lie there in heaps in the reign of Ahaz (2 Chron. xxix. 4). There was the "Street of the House of God," into which the men of Judah and Benjamin came together in the days of Ezra (Ezra x. 9). There was the "Water-gate Street," where the people came together in the days of Nehemiah (Neh. viii. 1, 3, 16). There was "Ephraim-gate Street," where they met to doing his best to resist every incursion from the forerunners of death; simply because he knows of no better mansion, because he is utterly ignorant of the "house of God not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!"—Pul. Com.

"The true sense of this passage is that Josiah's reforms were frustrated by the immorality prevalent among all classes; which, though checked for a time, yet was too deeply ingrained to be really eradicated by all that good king could do."—Spk. Com.

"Ghislerus reminds us of a story which Pliny relates of King Demetrius who retired from the city of Rhodum because he could not take it on its accessible side without destroying some celebrated paintings of Protogenes. This one man's merits saved the city."—Lange.

"There are some men who, like pictures, would be perfect in their moral characters were it not for some blemish which you discover on the eye, or the ear, or the mouth, or some other part of the exposed person."—John Bate.

Actions, looks, words, steps, form the alphabet by which you may spell character."—Lavater.

^a De. xxxii. 4.

^b Is. ix. 13; Je. ii. 30.

^c "The Prophet supposes that such evil could only exist among the mass of the uneducated vulgar, and then he goes on to express his hope that he would find things in a very different state among those constituting the higher ranks of society, who had enjoyed superior advantages." — Henderson.

^d "They bid open defiance to God's laws, and cast off all obligations of duty and conscience; like headstrong oxen that will not be brought under the yoke, but break through any bonds whereby you would restrain them, or bring them under discipline." — Lowth.

Ignorance of the price of pearls makes the idiot slight them. Ignorance of the worth of diamonds makes the fool choose a pebble before them. Ignorance of the satisfaction learning affords makes the peasant despise it. So with religion. — Anthony Horneck.

"No man has a right to do as he pleases except when he pleases to do right."

celebrate the feast of tabernacles (Neh. viii. 16). Nor were these streets few, for Jeremiah, when warning Israel against the increase of her false gods, says, "According to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing," Jer. xi. 13. In the days of that Prophet the idolatry seems to have been more open than before, and the public streets were the place where altars and idols were set up. Hence there are more allusions to the "streets of Jerusalem" in his prophecies than in all the other Prophets together (Jer. v. 1, vii. 17, 34, ix. 21, xi. 6, 13, xiv. 16, xxxiii. 10, xlv. 6, 9, 21). He was specially the prophet of the street, the "out-door" preacher; and he was thus brought more keenly and frequently into collision with the inhabitants than any of his "fellow-servants the Prophets." — Christian Treas.

3—6. (3) eyes .. truth, i. e. thou lookest for and knowest the truth. God is the God of truth;^a and desireth truth in the inward parts. stricken, with chastisements that were designed for correction.^b faces .. rock, fig. for an obstinate unwillingness to receive Divine instruction. (4) poor, etc.,^c they must belong to those classes which, in all ages, are found least susceptible of religious impressions. (5) great men, men of education and position. altogether, R. V., "with one accord," these were even worse. The rich were more wicked than the poor.^d (6) "The beasts here mentioned are literally meant, and are not figurative of the enemy. This is shewn by the different sorts which are enumerated. Compare for this form of punishment Lev. xxvi. 22; 2 Kings xvii. 25; and so Ezek. xiv. 15." — Camb. Bib. But many commentators take the beasts to be figurative of the Babylonians. evenings, better, "deserts."

Comparison of the rich and the poor.—When I compare different classes as existing at this moment in the civilized world, I cannot think the difference between the rich and the poor in regard to mere physical suffering so great as is sometimes imagined. That some of the indigent among us die of scanty food is undoubtedly true, but vastly more in this community die from eating too much than from eating too little, vastly more from excess than starvation. So as to clothing: many shiver from want of defences against the cold; but there is vastly more suffering among the rich from absurd and criminal modes of dress, which fashion has sanctioned, than among the poor from deficiency of raiment. So the poor are often overworked; but they suffer less than many among the rich, who have no work to do, no interesting object to fill up life, to satisfy the infinite cravings of man for action. According to our present modes of education, how many of our daughters are victims of ennui—a misery unknown to the poor, and more intolerable than the weariness of excessive toil! The idle young man, spending the day in exhibiting his person in the street, ought not to excite the envy of the overtaken poor; and this cumberer of the ground is found exclusively among the rich.—Channing. Chastening.—Suppose that away in South Africa, there is a woman whose husband has gone on a long journey into the interior. He is to be away for months, cut off from all postal communication. The wife is very anxious to receive news. In months she has had no letter or tidings from him. One day, as she stands in her door, there comes a great savage Kafir, carrying his shields and spears, and with a terrible face. The woman is frightened, and she rushes into the house, closing the door. He knocks at the door; she is in terror. She sends her servant, who comes back and says, "The man says he must see you." She goes all affrighted. He takes out an old newspaper, which he has brought from her husband, and inside the dirty newspaper, she finds a letter from her husband, telling her of his welfare. How that wife delights in that letter! She forgets the face that has terrified her. Weeks pass away again, and she begins to long for that ugly Kafir messenger. After a long waiting, he comes again and this time she rushes out to meet him, because he is the messenger from the beloved husband, and she knows that with all his repelling exterior, he is the bearer of a message of love. Beloved, have you learned to look at tribulation and vexation and disappointment as the dark, savage-looking messenger, with a spear in his hand that comes straight from Jesus?—Andrew Murray.

7—9. (7) How, or why. What reason can be offered for any expectation of pardon? sworn . . gods, again and again the "swearing" is noticed as a solemn act of religion. fed . . full, should read, "though I made them to swear (allegiance to me), yet they committed adultery;" comp. Ps. lxxiii. 27, which favors reference to a relapse into heathenish worship. —Cheyne. harlots' houses, idol temples, with allusion to the unclean rites of idol worship. (8) fed, etc., Eze. xxii. 11. (9) visit,^a in severe judgments.

Blessings changed to curses.—The noblest physical gifts may be shattered, wrecked, by sins against the body. The mind—capable of such high service and a channel of such vast blessing—men may, do, pollute, corrupt, and pervert and so curse their blessings. The moral nature—this a great gift of God, the power to judge, choose, resolve; but see how soon man cursed that and turned his blessing into a curse. The gifts of providence are also abused in the same way. The home. Oh, what joy comes to men through the blessings that were designed to be forever associated with that word! But how often men, by self-indulgence, neglect, evil example, utter failure in parental duty, turn the blessing of home into a curse! And even the gospel of Christ itself—God's unspeakable gift—men may make the knowledge of it to be "a savor of death unto death" for themselves. "This Child is set for the fall of many in Israel," said Simeon of our Lord.—Pul. Com. Sin a hindrance to our receiving blessings.—When our spiritual supplies fail, the channel is sometimes at fault, and not the stream; the hindrance to their coming lies with us and not with our heavenly Father. The supply of fuel to our city in midwinter sometimes fails, not because the coal-fields are exhausted, but because the weather has frozen our rivers, detained our colliers in the channel, and blocked up our railways. The supply of water or of gas to our houses is sometimes insufficient, not because the reservoirs are low, but because the pipes which connect our dwellings with the main service are choked up or broken. News fails to reach us, not because our correspondent has neglected to write, but because the means of transmission have been imperfect.—S. Martin.

10—13. (10) Go ye, an apostrophe addressed to the Babylonians. They were, to execute the Divine judgment. full end, final and complete destruction, vs. 18. battlements, R. V., "branches," it is not the vine that is to be destroyed. not the Lord's, He having withdrawn from their defence, by reason of their iniquities. (12) belied, R. V., "denied."^a not he, i. e. "he is not the true lord of the world, a denial of God's moral government."—Cheyne. (13) a continuation of the speech of the unbelieving Jews. word, i. e. any word or message from God.^b thus . . them "may the evil which the Prophets threaten fall upon their own head."

Vain defences (vs. 10).—I. The sinner's consciousness of danger. 1. His danger is real; 2. He has a deep-seated apprehension of it. II. His inadequate means of defence. 1. Sometimes in an absolute denial of the moral government of God; 2. In mistaken views of the Divine character; 3. In a false estimate of personal merit or excellence.—G. Brooks.

14—18. (14) words . . mouth, ch. i. 9. Because ye (the people) deny that the word is from me, I will make thy (Jeremiah's) words to come to pass and their fulfilment to devour the people as fire devours wood."—Camb. Bib. (15) from far, Is. xxxix. 3. language . . not,^c as threatened, De. xxviii. 49, a people to whom it would be useless to appeal for mercy in a tongue not understood. (16) quiver, see ch. iv. 29. (17) bread, here put for bread-corn. impoverish, R. V., "beat down," with the battering-ram. sword, here in a general sense for the instruments of siege. (18) R. V., "But even in those days." full end, as vs. 10, ch. iv. 27.

God's word a thorn to unbelievers.—An infidel said, "There is one thing that mars all the pleasure of my life." "Indeed!" replied his friend, "what is that?" He answered, "I am afraid the Bible is true. If I could know for certain that death is an eternal sleep, my joy would be complete. But here is the thorn that stings me, the sword that pierces to my very soul: if the Bible is true, I am lost forever."

19—24. (19) Like as, etc., retribution in kind.^d They had given themselves up to worship foreign idols, they should now be given up to ^aJe. v. 29, ix. 2. xlv. 22.

vs. 8. "The same term is used in the East to denote a similar thing. It is said, 'Listen to that evil man, he is always sneighing.' 'O that wicked one, he is like the horse in his frenzy.' 'The men of that family are all neighbors.' 'Heathenism is ever true to itself; impurity is its inseparable companion.' — Roberts.

"What is remote and difficult of access we are apt to over-estimate; what is really best for us lies always within our reach, though often overlooked." — Longfellow.

^a "They denied the Divine government over human affairs; ascribing His judgments to chance or fortune, and disbelieving all threatenings of sword or famine which the Prophets have denounced in His name, wh. is, in effect, to give Him the lie." — Lowth.

^b Ho. i. 2.

^c "This would render them more pitiless, as they would not understand their cries for mercy." — Spk. Com.

"Our actions are our own; their consequences belong to heaven." — Francis.

^d "All God's promises were made upon condition of your obedience, and if you forsake God, you are not to expect that the promise of dwelling in this land should be made good to you any longer."—Lowth.

• De. xxi. 18, 20.

* "In metaphors taken fr. bird-catchers, the Prophet describes the cunning of the more abandoned part of the nation, and the great wealth wh. they had unjustly acquired."—Henderson.

b "Both priests and prophets agree to speak pleasing things to the people, thereby to keep up their interest and authority with them; and what can this end in but a total corruption of manners? the consequence of wh. must be utter ruin and destruction."—Lowth.

